17. For, behold, I create new heavens, and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind. 18. But be you glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create: for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy. 19. And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people: and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her; nor the voice of crying. 20. There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die a hundred years old; but the sinner, being a hundred years old, shall be accursed. 21. And they shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. 22. They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat: for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands. 23. They shall not labour in vain, nor bring forth for trouble: for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them. 24. And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear. 25. The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock: and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord.

If these promises were in part fulfilled when the Jews, after their return out of captivity, were settled in peace in their own land, and brought as it were into a new world, yet they were to have their accomplishment in the gospel-church, militant first, and at length triumphant; The Jerusalem that is from above is free, and is the mother of us all. In the graces and comforts which believers have in and from Christ, we are to look for this new heaven and new earth. It is in the gospel that old things are fast away, and all things are become new, and by it that those who are in Christ are new creatures, Cor. v. 26. It was a mighty and happy change that was described by the apostle, Rom. viii. 20. Things were forgotten; but here it rises much higher, even the former world shall be forgotten, and shall no more come in mind. They that were converted to the Christian faith were so transported with the comforts of it, that all the comforts they were before acquainted with, became as nothing to them; not only their foregoing griefs, but their foregone joys, were lost and swallowed up in this. The glorified saints will therefore have forgotten this world, because they will be entirely taken up with the other. For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth. See how inexhaustible the divine power is; the same God that created one heaven and earth, can create another. See how entire the happiness of the saints is: it shall be all of a piece; with the new heavens God will create them (if they have occasion for it to make them happy) a new earth too. The world is yours, if you be Christ's, 1 Cor. iii. 22. When God is reconciled to us, which gives us a new heaven, the creatures too are reconciled to us, which gives us a new earth. The future glory of the saints will be so entirely different from what they ever knew before, that it may well be called a new heaven and a new earth. Behold, I make all things new, Rev. xxi. 3.

1. There shall be new joys. For, (1.) All the church's friends, and all that belong to her, shall rejoice; (v. 18.) You shall be glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create. The new things which God creates in and by his gospel, are, and shall be, matter of everlasting joy to all believers. My servants shall be joyful; (v. 13.) at least they shall be through now they mourn. Enter them into the joy of your Lord. (2.) The church shall be the matter of their joy; so pleasant, so prosperous, shall her condition be: I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy. The church shall not only rejoice, but be rejoiced in. Those that have sorrowed with the church, shall rejoice with her. (3.) The prosperity of the church shall be a matter of joy to himself, who has pleasure in the prosperity of his servants; (v. 19.) I will rejoice in Jerusalem's joy, and will joy in my people; for in all their affliction he was afflicted. God will not only rejoice in the church's well-doing, but will himself rejoice to do her good, and rest in his love to her, Zech. iii. 17. What God rejoices in, it becomes us to rejoice in. (4.) There shall be no alloy of this joy, nor any alteration of this happy condition of the church; The voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her. If this relate to any state of the church in this life, it means no more than that the former occasions of grief shall not return, but God's people shall long enjoy an uninterrupted tranquility. But in heaven it shall have a full accomplishment, and both of the perfection and the perpetuity of the promised joy; there all tears shall be wiped away.

2. There shall be new life, v. 20. Untimely deaths by the sword or sickness shall be no more known as they have been, and by this means there shall be no more the voice of crying, v. 19. When there shall be no more death, there shall be no more mourning, crying, and sighing—Rev. 21. 4. As death is the end of all life, so life shall reign by righteousness, Rom. v. 14, 21. (1) Believers through Christ shall be satisfied with life, though it be ever so short on earth. If an infant end its days quickly, yet it shall not be reckoned to die untimely, for the shorter its life is, the longer will its rest be; though death reign over them that have not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, yet they, dying in the arms of Christ, the second Adam, and belonging to his kingdom, are not to be called infants of days, but even the child shall be reckoned to die a hundred years old, for he shall rise again at full age, shall rise to eternal life. Some understand it of children who in their childhood are so eminent for wisdom and grace, and by death nipt in the blossom, that they may be said to die a hundred years old for others, that think that they shall fill their days with the fruits of righteousness, which they shall bring forth in old age; to show that the Lord is upright, and then it is a good old age. An old man, who is wise, and good, and useful, may truly be said to have filled his days. Old men, who have their hearts upon the world, have never filled their days, never have enough of this world, but would still continue to live and be day in day out, and se satur dierum—full of days, who, with Simeon, having seen God's salvation, desires now to depart in peace. (2) Unbelievers shall be unsatisfied and unhappy in life, though it be ever so long. The sinner, though he live to be a hundred years old, shall be accursed; his living so long shall be no token to him of the divine favour and blessing, nor shall it be any shelter to him from the divine wrath and curse; the sentence he lies under will certainly be executed, and his long life is but a long reprobation. Nay, it is itself a curse to him, for the longer he lives, the more wrath he treasures up against the day of wrath, and the more sins he will have to answer for. So that the matter is not great, whether our lives on earth be long or short, but whether we live the lives of saints or the lives of sinners.

3. There shall be a new enjoyment of the comfort of life; that, whereas before it was very uncertain and precarious, their enemies inhabited the houses which they built, and ate the fruit of the trees which they planted, now it shall be otherwise; they shall build houses, and inhabit them, shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them, v. 21, 22. This intimates that the labour of their hands shall be abundant and fruitful, they shall fill their days with the fruits of righteousness, which they shall bring forth in old age; and God's people shall live in ease and plenty. They shall be defended and protected by God, and he shall make them a name, and give them glory, which they aimed at; and what they have gained shall be preserved and secured to them; they shall enjoy it comfortably, and nothing shall imbride it to them, and they shall live to enjoy it long. Strangers shall not break in upon them, to expel them, and plant themselves in their room, as sometimes they have done; Mine elect shall wear out, or long enjoy, the vineyard of their fathers, is a promise of a perpetual and sure possession. It is fair; it is the work of their hands, which they themselves have laboured for, and it is most comfortable to enjoy that, and not to cut the bread of idleness or bread of deceit; if we have a heart to enjoy it, that is the gift of God's grace; (Ecc. iii. 13) and if we live to enjoy it long, it is the gift of God's providence, for that is here promised; as the days of a tree, are the days of my people; as the days of an oak, (ch. vi. 13) whose substance is in it, though it cast its leaves; though it is stripped every year, it is rooted down to the earth, and is as the days of the tree of life; so the LXX. Christ is to them the tree of life, and in him believers enjoy all those spiritual comforts which are typified by the abundance of temporal blessings here promised; and it shall not be in the power of their enemies to deprive them of these blessings, or disturb them in the enjoyment of them.

4. The vineyard of God's church shall be a new generation rising up in their stead, to inherit and enjoy these blessings; (v. 23.) They shall not labour in vain, for they shall not only enjoy the work of their hands themselves, but they shall leave it with satisfaction to those that shall come after them, and not with such a melancholy prospect as Solomon did; (Eccl. i. 18, 19.) They shall not beget and bring forth children for trouble; for they shall be the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and there is a blessing entailed upon them by descent from their ancestors, which their offspring with them shall partake of, and shall be, as well as they, the seed of the blessed of the Lord. They shall not bring forth for trouble; for, (1) God will make their children that rise up come, and be a comfort to them; they shall have the joy of seeing them walk in the paths of righteousness; (Ps. lxxii. 14.) And (2) He will make the times that come after and accompany their children better than they shall be good, so it shall be well with them; they shall not be brought forth to days of trouble; nor shall it ever be said, Blessed is the womb that bare not. In the gospel-church Christ's name shall be borne up by a succession; A seed shall serve him, (Ps. xxii. 50.) the seed of the blessed of the Lord.

5. There shall be a good correspondence between the things that are said in this, the good things of the gospel, and the things that are called, I will answer. God will prevent their prayers with the blessings of his goodness: David did but say, I will confess, and God forgave, Ps. xxxii. 5. The father of the prodigal met him in his return; While they are yet speaking, before they have finished their prayer, I will give them the thing they pray for, or the assurances and earnest of it. These are high expressions of God's readiness to hear prayer; and this appears much more in the grace of the gospel than it did under the law; we owe the comfort of it to the mediation of Christ as our Advocate with the Father, and are obliged in gratitude to give a ready ear to God's calls.

6. There shall be a good correspondence between them and their neighbours; (v. 23.) The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, as they did in Noah's ark. God's people, though they are as sheep in the midst of wolves, shall be safe and unhurt; for God will not so much break the power, and tie the hands, of their enemies, as formerly; but he will turn their hearts, will alter their dispositions by his grace. When Paul, who had been a persecutor of the disciples, who, being of the tribe of Benjamin, roused as a wolf, (Gen. xlix. 27.) joined himself to them, and they were of one mind, and with good grace, the wolf fed together. So also when the enmity between the Jews and Gentiles was slain, all hostilities ceased, and they fed together as one sheepfold under Christ the great Shepherd, John x. 16. The enemies of the church ceased to do the mischief they had done, and its members ceased to be so quarrelsome with, and injurious to, one another as they had done; and they were not thought of or heard of without or from within to hurt or destroy, none to disturb it, much less to ruin it, in all the holy mountain; as was promised, ch. xi. 9. For, (1.) Men shall be changed; the lion shall no more be a beast of prey, as perhaps he never would have been if sin had not entered, but shall eat straw like the bullock, shall know his owner, and his master's crib.
or does. When those that lived by spoil and rapine, and coveted to enrich themselves, right or wrong, are brought by the grace of God to accommodate themselves to their condition, to live by honest labour, and to be content with such provisions as they have; when they that stole steale no more, but work with their hands the thing that is good, then this is fulfilled, that the lion shall eat straw like the bullock. (2.) Satan shall be chained, the dragon bound; for dust shall be the serpent's meat again.

That great enemy, when he has been let loose, has gloried and exalted himself with the precious blood of the saints, in having been their persecutor; and with the precious souls of sinners, who by his instigation have become persecutors, and have ruined themselves for ever; but now he shall be confined to dust, according to the sentence, On thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat, Gen. iii. 14.

All the enemies of God's church, that are subtle and venomous as serpents, shall be conquered and subdued, and be made to lie the dust. Christ shall reign as Zion's King, till all the enemies of his kingdom be made his footstool, and theirs too. In the holy mountain above, and there only, shall this promise have its full accomplishment, that there shall be none to hurt or destroy.

CHAP. LXVI.

The scope of this chapter is much the same as that of the foregoing chapter, and many expressions of it are the same; it therefore looks the same way, to the different state of things, and had among the Jews, at their return out of captivity; but that typifying the rejection of the Jews in the days of the Messiah, the conversion of the Gentiles, and the setting up of the gospel-kingdom in the world. The chapter appears to be chiefly opened to the dismantling of the temple by the planting of the Christian church; (Acts vii. 49, 50.) which may serve as a key to the whole chapter. We have here, I. The practice of the church, upon this branch, in comparison with moral duties, and an intimation therein of his purpose shortly to put an end to the temple and sacrifice, and reject those that adhered to them, v. 1. to 4. 11. The salvation God will in due time work for his people, out of the hands of their oppressors, (v. 5.) speaking terror to the persecutors, (v. 6.) and comfort to the persecuted, a speedy and complete deliverance, (v. 7. to 9.) a joyful settlement, (v. 10. 11.) the accession of the Gentiles to them, and abundance of satisfaction therein, v. 12. 14. 11. The terrible vengeance which God will bring upon the enemies of his church and people, v. 15. 18. 11. The happy establishment of the church upon large and sure foundations, its constant attachment on God, and triumph over its enemies, v. 19. 25. And we may well expect that this evangelical prophet, here, in the shadow of prophecy, should (as he does) look as far forward as to the latter days, to the last day, to the days of eternity.

1. THUS saith the Lord, The heaven is my throne; and the earth is my footstool: where is the house that ye build unto me? and where is the place of my rest? 2. For all those things hath my hand made, and all those things have been, saith the Lord: but to this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word. 3. He that killeth an ox is as if he slew a man; he that sacrificeth a lamb, as if he cut off a dog's neck; he that offereth an oblation, as if he offered swine's blood; he that burneth incense, as if he blessed an idol: yea, they have chosen their own ways, and their soul delighteth in their abominations. 4. I also will choose their delusions, and will bring their fears upon them; because when I called, none did answer; when I spake, they did not hear: but they did evil before mine eyes, and chose that in which I delighted not.

Here. 1. The temple is slighted in comparison with a gracious soul, v. 1, 2. The Jews in the prophet's time, and afterward, in Christ's time, gloried much in the temple, and promised themselves great things from it; to humble them therefore, and to shake their vain confidence, both the prophets and Christ foretold the ruin of the temple, that God would leave it, and then it would soon be desolate. After it was destroyed by the Chaldeans, it soon recovered itself, and the ceremonial services were revived with it; but by the Romans it was made a perpetual desolation, and the ceremonial law was abolished with it. That the world might be prepared for this, they were often told, as here, of what little account the temple was with God.

1. That he did not need it. Heaven is the throne of his glory and government; there he sits, infinitely exalted in the highest dignity and dominion, above all blessing and praise. The earth is his footstool, on which he stands, overruling all the affairs of it according to his will. If God has so bright a throne, so large a footstool, where is the house the church can build unto God, that can be the residence of his glory, or, where is the place of his rest? What satisfaction is there in building the church; Eternal truth and beauty, all made with men's hands? What occasion has he, as we have, for a house to repose himself in, who fains not, neither is weary, who neither slumbers nor sleeps? Or, if he had occasion, he would not tell us, (Ps. I. 12.) for all these things hath his hand made, heaven and all its courts, earth and all its borders, and all the hosts of both. All these things have been, by him who, looking forward to the coming of God, who was happy from eternity before they were, and therefore could not be benefited by them. All these things are; so some read it; they still continue, upheld by the same power that made them; so that our goodness extends not to him. If he would have had a house for himself to dwell in, he would have made one himself when he made the world; and had made it, it would have been his, this day, as other creatures do, according to his ordinances; so that he had no need of a temple made with hands.

2. That he would not need it, so as he would a humble, penitent, gracious heart. He has a heaven and earth of his own making, and a temple of man's making; but he overlooks them all, that he may look with favour to him that is poor in spirit, humble and serious, self-abasing and self-denying, whose heart is truly contrite for sin, penitent for it, in pain to get it pardoned, and that trembles at God's word, not as Felix did, with a transient qualm that was over when the sermon was done, but with an habitual awe of God's majesty and purity, and an habitual dread of his justice and wrath such a heart is a living sanctuary. Where God dwells there, and it is the place of his rest; it is like heaven and earth, his throne and his footstool.

II. Sacrifices are slighted when they come from ungracious hands; the sacrifices of the wicked is not only unacceptable, but it is an abomination to the Lord; (Prov. xv. 8.) this is largely shown here, v. 3. 4. Observe,

1. How detestable their sacrifices were to God. The carnal Jews, after their return out of captivity, though they relapsed not to idolatry, grew very careless and loose in the service of God; they brought the thorn, and the lame, and the sick, for sacrifice, (Mal. I. 8.) and this made their services abominable to God; they had no regard to their sacrifices, and therefore how could they think God should have any regard to them? The unbelieving Jews, after the gospel was preached, and in it notice given of the offering up of the great Sacrifice, which put an end to all the ceremonial services, continued to offer sacrifices, as if the law of Moses had been still in force, and could have made the camera thereunto perfect: this was an abomination; He that kills an ox for his own table, is welcome to do it; but he that now kills it, and thus kills it for God, as an offering and a meat-offering, offers it not to God as murder itself: he that does it, does it in effect set aside Christ's sacrifice, treats under-foot the blood of the covenant, and makes himself accessory to the guilt of the body and blood of the Lord; setting up what Christ died to abolish.

He that sacrifices a lamb, if it be a corrupt thing, and not the male in his flock, the best he has, if he think to bring the offering, the branch of the tree, instead of pleasing him; it is as if he cut off a dog's neck; a creature in the eye of the law so vile, that whereas an ass might be redeemed, the price of a dog was never to be brought into the treasury; Deut. xxiii. 18. He that offers an oblation, a meat-offering, or drink-offering, as if he thought to make atonement with swine's blood; a creature that makes itself unacceptable, (ch. lxv. 4.) much more the blood of it. He that burns incense to God, and so puts contempt upon the incense of Christ's intercession, is as if he blessed an idol; it was as great an affront to God as if they had paid their devotions to a false god. Hypocrisy and profaneness are as provoking as idolatry.

What their wickedness was, which made their sacrifices thus detestable; it is because they have chosen their own ways, the ways of their own wicked hearts, and not only their hands do, but their soul delights in, their abominations; they were vicious and immoral in their conversations, chose the way of sin rather than the way of God's commandments, and took pleasure in that which was provoking to God; this made their sacrifices so offensive to God, ch. 1. 11—15. Those that pretend to honour God by a profession of religion, and yet live wicked lives, put an affront upon him, as if he were the Patron of sin. And that which was an aggravation of their wickedness, was, that they persisted in it, notwithstanding the frequent calls given them to repent and reform; they turned a deaf ear to all the warnings of divine justice, and all the offers of divine grace; Wherefore, saith the Lord, I will not answer, (ch. 2.)

And the same follows here that did there; They did evil before mine eyes. Being dext to what he said, they cared not what he saw, but chose that in which they knew he delighted not. How could they expect to please him in their devotions, who took no care to please him in their conversations, but, on the contrary, designed to provoke him?

They chose their own ways, therefore, says God, I also will choose their delusions; They have made their choice, (as Mr. Gataker paraphrases it,) and now I will make mine; they have taken what course they pleased with me, and I will take what course I please with them. I will choose their illusions, or mockeries; They have mocked God, and disdained his wrath; the Lord will give them up to their enemies, to be trampled upon and insulted by them. Or, They shall be deceived by those vain confidences with which they have deceived themselves. God will make their sin their punishment; they shall be beaten with their own rod, and hurried into ruin by their own delusions. (2.) The doom passed upon them for this; They chose their own ways, therefore, says God, I also will choose their delusions; They have made their choice, (as Mr. Gataker paraphrases it,) and now I will make mine; they have taken what course they pleased with me, and I will take what course I please with them. I will choose their illusions, or mockeries; They have mocked God, and disdained his wrath; the Lord will give them up to their enemies, to be trampled upon and insulted by them. Or, They shall be deceived by those vain confidences with which they have deceived themselves. God will make their sin their punishment; they shall be beaten with their own rod, and hurried into ruin by their own delusions. (3.) The doom passed upon them for this; They will bring upon them, which shall be a terror to them, that which they themselves have been afraid of, and thought to escape by sinful shifts. Unbelieving hearts, and unpurified, unpacificed consciences, need no more to make them miserable, than to have their own fears brought upon them.

5. Hear the word of the Lord; ye that tremble at his word; Your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name's sake, said, Let the Lord be glorified: but he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed. 6. A voice of noise from the city, a voice from the temple, a voice of the Lord that rendereth recompense to his enemies. 7. Before she travailed, she brought forth; before her pain came, she was delivered of a man child. 8. Who hath heard such a thing? who hath seen such things? Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? or shall a nation be born at once? for as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children. 9. Shall I bring to the birth, and not cause to bring forth? saith the Lord; I shall cause to bring forth, and shut the womb? saith thy God. 10. Rejoice ye with Jerusalem, and be glad with her, all ye that love her: rejoice for joy with her, all ye that mourn for her: 11. That ye may suck, and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolations, that ye may milk out, and be delighted with the abundance of her glory. 12. For thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will extend peace to her like a river, and the glory of the Gentiles like a flowing stream: then shall ye suck, ye shall be borne upon her sides, and be dallied upon her knees. 13. As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you; and ye shall be comforted in Jerusalem. 14. And when ye see this, your heart shall rejoice, and your bones shall flourish like an herb; and the hand of the Lord shall be known toward his servants, and his indignation toward his enemies.

The prophet, having denounced God's judgments against an hypocritical nation, that made a jest of God's word, and would not answer him when he called to them, here turns his speech to these that trembled at his word, to comfort and encourage them; they shall not be involved in the judgments that are coming upon their unbelieving nation. Ministers must distinguish thus, that, when they speak terror to the wicked, they may not make the hearts of the righteous sad. Bone Christianae, hoc nihil ad te—Good Christian, this is nothing to thee. The prophet having assured those that trembled at God's word, of a gracious look from him, (v. 2.) here brings them a gracious message from him. The word of God has comforts in store for those that by his word are brought to God, and are brought to him. There were those (v. 4.) who, when God spake, would not hear; but if some will not, others will. If the heart tremble at the word, the ear will be open to it. Now what is here said to them? 1. Let them know that God will plead their just but injured cause against their persecutors; (v. 5.) Your brethren that hated you, said, Let the Lord be glorified. But he shall appear to your joy. This perhaps might have reference to the case of some of the Jews at their return out of captivity; but nothing like it appears in the history, and therefore it is rather to be referred to the first preachers and professors of the Gospel to the Jews; and as to the case it is very applicable. Observe, 1. How the faithful servants of God were persecuted; their brethren hated them. The apostles were Jews by birth, and yet even in the cities of the Gentiles, the Jews they met with there were their most bitter and implacable enemies, and stirred up the Gentiles against them. The sparse complains, (Cant. i. 6.) that her name was not loved, is here made good; and that alacrity with which they embraced our Lord Jesus with this, Thine own nation have delivered thee unto me, John xviii. 33. Their brethren, who should have loved them, and encouraged them, for their work's sake, hated them, and cast them out of their synagogues, excommunicated them, as if they had been the greatest blenishes, who really were the greatest blessings of their church and nation. This was a fruit of the old enmity in the seed of the serpent against the seed of the woman. They that hated Christ hated his disciples, because they supported his kingdom and interest; (John xv. 18.) and they cast them out for his name's sake, because they were called by his name, and called upon his name, and laid out themselves to advance his name. Note, It is no new thing for church's enemies to misapply the grace and spirit, that was intended for her defence, to be turned against her best friends, by the treachery of her governors. And they that did this said, Let the Lord be glorified; they pretended conscience, and a zeal for the honour of God and the church in it, and did it with all the formalities of devotion. Our Saviour explains this, and seems to have reference to it, John xvi. 2. They shall put you out of your synagogues, and whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service. In nomine Domini iniquit omne matutum—In the name of the Lord commences evil of every kind. Or, we may understand it as spoken in defence of God. "You say God will be glorified in your deliverance, let him be glorified then; let him make speed, and hasten his work; (ch. v. 19.) let him deliver him, seeing he delighted in him." Some take it to be the language of the profane Jews in captivity, bating their brethren that hoped for deliverance, and ridiculing the expectations they often comforted themselves with, that God would shortly be glorified in it. They thus did what they could to shame the counsel of the poor, Ps. xiv. 6.

2. How they were encouraged under these persecutions; and what a fruit they brought. When they were driven abroad a little while; your enemies hate you and oppress you, your brethren hate you and cast you out, but your Father in heaven loves you, and will appear for you when no one else will or dare. His providence shall order things so as shall be for comfort to you, he shall appear for your joy, and for the confusion of those that abuse you and trample on you; they shall be ashamed of their enmity to you. This was fulfilled, when, upon the signals given of Jerusalem's approaching ruin, the Jews' hearts failed them for fear; but the disciples of Christ, whom they had hated and persecuted, lifted up their heads with joy, knowing that their redemption drew nigh, Luke xxi. 26, 28. Though God seem to hide himself, he will in due time show himself.

Of the Great appearances for the future there will be such as will make a great noise in the world; (v. 6.) There shall be a voice of noise from the city, from the temple. Some make it the joyful and triumphant voice of the church's friends; others the frightful, lamenting voice of her enemies, surprised in the city, and fleeing in vain to the temple for refuge. These voices do but echo to the voice of the Lord, who is now rendering a recompense to his enemies; and those that will not hear him speaking this terror, shall hear them returning the alarming family with children, which was to be named from Jesus Christ. When the Spirit was poured out, and the gospel went forth from Zion, multitudes were converted in a little time, and with little pains, compared with the vast product. The apostles, even before they traveled, brought forth, and the children born to Christ were so numerous, and so suddenly and easily produced, that they were rather like the dew from the morning's womb, like the son from the mother's womb, Ps. cx. 3.

The success of the gospel was astonishing; that light, like the morning, strangely diffused itself till it took hold even of the ends of the earth. Cities and nations were born at once to Christ. The same day that the Spirit was poured out, there were three thousand souls added to the church. And when this glorious work was once begun, it was carried on wonderfully, beyond what could be imagined; so mightily grew the word of God and prevailed.

He that brought to the birth in conviction of sin, caused to bring forth in a thorough conversion to God.

IV. Let them know that their present sorrows shall shortly be turned into abundant joys, vi. 10, 11.

Observe,

1. How the church's friends are described; they are such as love her, and mourn with her and for her. Note, All that love God love Jerusalem: they love the church of God, and lay its interest very near their heart. They admire the beauty of the church, take pleasure in communion with it, and heartily espouse its cause. And they that have a sincere affection for the church, have a cordial sympathy with her in all the cares and sorrows of her mercant state. They mourn for her, all her grievances are their griefs; if Jerusalem be in distress, their harps are hung on the willow-trees.

2. How they are encouraged: Rejoice with her, and again and again, I say, Rejoice. This intimates that Jerusalem shall have cause to rejoice; the days of her mourning shall be at an end, and she shall be comforted according to the time that she has been afflicted. It is the will of God, that all her friends should join with her in her joys, for they shall share with her in these blessings that will be the matter of her joy. If we suffer with Christ, and sorrow with his church, we shall reign with him, and rejoice with her. We are here called, (1.) To bear our part in the church's praises: "Come, rejoice with her, rejoice for joy with her, rejoice greatly, rejoice and know why you rejoice; rejoice on the days of your mourning. You shall be comforted for her in her sorrows, cannot but from the same principles rejoice with her in her joy." (2.) To take our part in the church's comforts. We must suck and be satisfied with the breasts of our consolations; the word of God, the covenant of grace, especially the promises of that covenant, the ordinances of God, and all the opportunities of attending on him, and conversing with him, are the breasts of her church which she recommends to us all, "Take the breasts of her consolations, where her comforts are laid up, and whence by faith and prayer they are drawn; with her therefore we must suck from these breasts, by an application of the promises of God to ourselves, and a diligent attendance on his ordinances; and with the consolations which are drawn hence we must be satisfied, and not be dissatisfied, though we should be driven from her bosoms."

It is the glory of the church, that she has the Lord for her God, that to her pertain the adoption and service of God; with the abundance of this glory we must be delighted. We must take more pleasure in our relation to God, and communion with him, than in all the delights of the sons and daughters of men. Whatever is the glory of the church, must be our glory and joy, particularly her purity, unity, and increase.

V. Let them know that he who gives them this call to rejoice, will give them cause to do so, and hearts to do so, vi. 12—14.

1. He will give them cause to do so. For, (1.) They shall enjoy a long, uninterrupted course of prosperity; I will extend, or am extending, peace to her, all good to her, like a river that runs in a constant stream, still increasing till it be swallowed up by the sea. And I will pour upon her joy, and she shall be her joy, and she shall be joy to the whole world. It is hereby is it received in its proper place, such a peace as this, which shall go on like a river, supplying souls with all good, and making them fruitful, as a river does the lands it passes through, such a river of peace as the springs of the world's comforts cannot send forth, and the dams of the world's troubles cannot stop or drive back, or its sands rather; such a river of peace as can carry the ocean of boundless and endless bliss.

(2.) They shall make advantageous additions made to them; The glory of the Gentiles shall come to them like a flowing stream. Gentle converts shall come pouring into the church, and swell the river of her peace and prosperity; for they shall bring their glory with them; their wealth and honour, their power and interest shall all be devoted to the service of God, and employed in the advancement of his kingdom. If you suck from the breasts of her consolations, when you see such crowding for a share in those comforts, you shall be the more solicitous and the more vigorous to secure your share; not for fear of having the less for others' coming in to partake of Christ, (there is no danger of that, he has enough for all, and enough for each,) "but their zeal shall prove to a deadly jealousy." It is well when it does so, Rom. xi. 14. 2 Cor. ix. 2. (3.) God shall be glorified in all; and that ought to be more the matter of our joy than any thing else. (v. 14.) The hand of the Lord shall be known toward his servants, the protecting, supporting hand of his almighty power, the supplying, enriching hand of his inexhaustible goodness, the benefit which his servants have by both these, shall be known to his glory as well as theirs. And to make this the more illustrious, he will at the same time make known his indignation toward his enemies. God's mercy and justice shall be both manifested and for ever magnified.

2. God will not only give them cause to rejoice, but will speak comfort to them, will speak it to their hearts; and it is he only that can do that, and make it fasten there. See what he will do for the comfort of his people, when he speaks to them, "You shall be as a child, as a little child, under her arms, she shall be carried upon her sides, under her arms, as little children are, and shall be dandled upon her knees, as darlings are, especially when they are weary and out of humour, and must be got to sleep. Those that are joined to the church, must be treated thus affectionately; the Great Shepherd gathers the lambs in his arms, and carries them in his bosom;" and "I will be her shepherd, they may not be discouraged. Proselytes should be favourites. (2.) God will himself be their powerful Comforter; as one whom his mother comforts, when he is sick or sore, or upon any account in sorrow, so will I comfort you; not only with the rational arguments which a prudent father uses, but with the tender affections and Compassions of a loving mother, that carries her child when it is fast fallen hurt itself, that she may quiet it and make it easy, or endeavours to pacify it after she has chidden it and fallen out with it; Jer. xxxi. 20. Since I spake against him, my bowels are troubled for him; he is a dear son, he is a pleasant child. Thus the mother comforts. Thus you shall be comforted in Jerusalem, in the favours bestowed on the church, which you shall partake of, and in the thanksgivings offered by the church, which you shall concur with. (3.) They shall feel the blessed effe2 of this comfort in their own souls; (v. 13.) When you see this, what a happy state the church is restored to, not only your tongues and your countenances, but your hearts shall rejoice. This was fulfilled in the wonderful satisfaction which Christ's disciples had in the success of their ministry. Christ, with an eye to that, tells them, (John xvi. 22.) Your hearts shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you. Then your bowels, that were dried and withered, (the marrow of them quite exhausted,) shall recover a youthful strength and vigour, and shall flourish like an herb. Divine comforts reach the inward man, they are marrow and measting to the bones, Prov. iii. 8. The bones are the strength of the body; these shall be made to flourish with these comforts: The joy of the Lord will be your strength, Neh. viii. 10.

15. For, behold, the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. 16. For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh: and the slain of the Lord shall be many. 17. They that sanctify themselves, and purify themselves in the gardens, behind one tree in the midst, eating swine's flesh, and the abomination, and the mouse, shall be consumed together, saith the Lord. 18. For I know their works and their thoughts: it shall come, that I will gather all nations and tongues; and they shall come, and see my glory. 19. And I will set a sign among them, and I will send those that escape of them unto the nations, to Tarshish, Pul, and Lud, that draw the bow, to Tubal and Javan, to the isles afar off, that have not heard my name, neither have seen my glory; and they shall declare my glory among the Gentiles. 20. And they shall bring all your brethren for an offering unto the Lord, out of all nations, upon horses, and in chariots, and in litters, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts, to my holy mountain Jerusalem, saith the Lord, as the children of Israel bring an offering in a clean vessel into the house of the Lord. 21. And I will also take of them for priests, and for Levites, saith the Lord. 22. For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain. 23. And it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord. 24. And they shall go forth, and look upon the carcases of the men that have transgressed against me; for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh.

These verses, like the pillar of cloud and fire, have a dark side towards the enemies of God's kingdom, and all that are rebels against his crown, and a bright side towards his faithful, loyal subjects. Probably, it refers to the Jews in captivity in Babylon, of whom some are said to have been sent thither for their hurt; and those are they with whom God here threatens to proceed in his controversy, who hated to be reformed, and therefore should be ruined by the calamity, Jer. xxiv. 9. Others were sent thither for their good, and they should have the trouble of being sent thither as a mark of God's mercy through it, and see many a good day after it. Divers of the expressions here used are accommodated to that glorious dispensation; but doubtless it looks further, to the judgment for which Christ did come once, and will come again, into this world; and to the distinction which his word in both makes between the precious and the vile.

Christ will appear to the confusion and terror of all those that stand it against him; sometimes in temporal judgments. The Jews that persisted in infidelity were cut off by fire, and by his sword; the ruin was very extensive, the Lord then pleaded with all flesh and it being his sword with which they are cut off, they are called his slain, sacrificed to his justice: and they shall be many. In the great day, the wrath of God shall be against him; and, if he will cut off and consume all the impudent; and his word, when it takes hold of sinners' consciences, burns like fire, and is sharper than any two-edged sword. Idolaters will especially be contended with in the day of wrath, v. 17. Perhaps some of those who returned out of Babylon, retained such instances of idolatry and superstition as are here mentioned; had their idols by the way of a garnering, and clamored to set them up publicly in the high places: and there purified themselves, as the worshippers of the true God used to do, when they went about their idolatrous rites, one after another, or, as we read it, behind one tree in the midst; behind Ahab, or Eth, some idol that they worshipped by that name; and in honour of which they ate swine's flesh, which was expressly forbidden by the law of God; and other abominations, as the mouse, or some other like animal. But it may refer to all those judgments which the wrath of God, according to the word of God, will bring upon provoking sinners, that live in contempt of God, and are devoted to the world and the flesh—they shall be consumed together. From the happiness of heaven we find expressly excluded all idolaters, and whatsoever worketh abomination, Rev. xxi. 7. 27. xxii. 15. In the day of vengeance the wrath of God shall be laid to the account; for, (v. 18.) I know their works, and their thoughts; God knows both what men do, and from what principle, and with what design they do it; and therefore is fit to judge the world, because he can judge the secrets of men, Rom. ii. 16.

He will appear to the comfort and joy of all that are faithful to him in the setting up of his kingdom in this world, the kingdom of grace, the earnest and first-fruits of the kingdom of glory. The time shall come that he will gather all nations and tongues to himself, that they might come and see his glory as it shines in the face of Jesus Christ, v. 18. This was fulfilled when all nations were to be discipled, and the gift of tongues bestowed in order thereto. The church had had him in the setting up of his kingdom at one time, and in one tongue only God was worshipped: but in the days of the Messiah the partition-wall shall be taken down, and those that had been strangers to God shall be brought acquainted with him, and shall see his glory in the gospel, as the Jews had seen it in the sanctuary. As to this, it is here promised.

That some of the Jewish nation should, by the grace of God, be distinguished from the rest, and marked for salvation: I will not only set up a gathering ensign among them, to which the Gentiles shall
The time of a solemn feast, when all the males from all parts of the country were to attend there, and to appropriate to the Temple a share of the national diet. Observers (that had the privilege and the right to the enjoyment of the public feasts) the pleasant and the respectful attendance of the multitude. Though they were a corrupt, degenerate nation, yet God will set apart a remnant of them, that shall be devoted to him, and employed for him, and a mark shall be set upon them, with such certainty will God own them, Ezek. ix. 4. The servants of God shall be sealed in their foreheads, Rev. vii. 3. The Lord knows them that are his; Christ's sheep, the ransomed, are distinguished by grace from the world, by faith and signification. They are a people who are distinguished thus by the grace of God, shall be commissioned to invite others to come and take the benefit of that grace: those that escape the power of those prejudices by which the generality of that nation is kept in unbelief, they shall be sent unto the nations, to carry the gospel among them, and preach it to every creature. Note, Those who themselves have escaped the wrath to come, should do all they can to snatch others also as brands out of the burning. God chooses to send those on his errands that can deliver their message feelingly and experimentally, and warn people of their danger by sin, as those who have themselves narrowly escaped the danger. (1.) Those who themselves have escaped the wrath to come, should do all they can to snatch others also as brands out of the burning. God chooses to send those on his errands that can deliver their message feelingly and experimentally, and warn people of their danger by sin, as those who have themselves narrowly escaped the danger. (1.) They shall be sent unto the nations, divers of which are here named, Tarshish, Javan, Chittim, and others: these shall be as it were interpreters, agreed, what couriers are here intended; Tarshish signifies in general the sea, yet some take it for Tarshus in Cilicia; Puri is mentioned sometimes as the name of one of the kings of Assyria, perhaps some part of that country might likewise bear that name; Lud is supposed to be Lybia, a warlike nation, famed for archers; the Lydians are said to handle and use the bow. Gen. x. 17. Tabul, some think, is Italy or Spain; and Javan most agree to Greece, the Ionians; and the isles of the Gentiles, that were peoples by the posterity of Japhet, (Gen. x. 5.) probably, are here meant by the isles afar off, that have not heard my name, neither have seen my glory. In Judah only God was known, and there only his name was great for many ages; other countries sat in darkness, heard not the joyful sound, saw not the joyful light. This deplorable state of theirs seems to be spoken of here with compassion; for it is pity that any of the children of men should be at such a distance from their Maker as not to hear his name and see his glory. In consideration of this, (2.) Those that are sent to the nations shall go upon God's errand, to declare his glory among the nations, (Isa. xlix. 6.) and by this means the sacrifice of the Gentiles shall be likewise among the nations shall declare the glory of God's providence concerning their nation all along, by which many shall be invited to join with them, as also by the appearances of God's glory among them in his ordinances; some out of all languages of the nations shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, entreat- ing him to take notice of them, to admit them into his house, to stay a while with them, till they are ready, for we will go with you, having heard that God is with you, Zech. viii. 23. Thus the glory of God was in part declared among the Gentiles; but more clearly and fully by the apostles and preachers of the gospel, who were sent into all the world, even to the isles afar off, to publish the glorious gospel of the blessed God. They went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, Mark xvi. 20. 3. That many converts shall hereby be made, v. 20. They shall bring all your brethren (for proselytes ought to be owned and embraced as brethren) for an offering unto the Lord. God's glory shall not be in vain declared to them, but by it they shall be drawn, not merely by the promise of it, but, by the manifestation of it, to the Lord. They that are sent to them shall succeed so well in their negotiation, that the more thereupon shall be as great a flocking to Jerusalem, as used to be at
That a gospel-ministry shall be set up in the church, it being the enlargement of such a Gentile, of another people to it: (v. 21.) I will take of them, of the prophets, of the Gentile church, for priests and for Levites, to minister in holy things, and to preside in their religious assemblies, which is very necessary for doctrine, worship, and discipline. Hitherto the priests and Levites were all taken from among the Jews, and were all of one tribe; but in gospel-times God will take the Gentiles as well as the Jews, and will give them to him in holy things, to teach the people, to bless them in the name of the Lord, to be the stewards of the mysteries of God as the priests and Levites were under the law, to be pastors and teachers, or bishops, to give themselves to the word and prayer; and deacons to serve tables, and, as the Levites, to take care of the outward business of the church of God; Phil. ii. 1. Acts vi. 2. The apostles were all Jews, and so were the seventy disciples; the great apostle of the Gentiles was himself a Hebrew of the Hebrews; but when churches were planted among the Gentiles, they had ministers settled, who were of themselves elders in every church, (Acts xiv. 23. Tit. i. 5.) which made the ministry to spread the more easily, and to be the more familiar, and if not the more venerable, yet the more acceptable to the Gentiles; and though I cannot but wish that there would come people of these corruptions which kept a prophet from having honour in his own country. God says, I will take, not all of them, though they are all in a spiritual sense made to our God kings and priests, but of them, some of them. It is God's work originally to choose ministers by qualifying them for, and inclining them to, the service, as well as to qualify them for it, that they may be capable of it for appointment. I will take them, I will admit them, though Gentiles, and will accept of them and their ministrations. This is a great honour and advantage to the Gentile church, as it was to the Jewish church, that God raised up of their sons for prophets, and their young men for Nazarites, Amos iii. 11.

5. That the church and ministry, being thus settled, shall continue and be kept up in a succession from one generation to another, v. 22. The change that will be made by the setting up of the kingdom of the Messiah, is here described to be, (1.) A very great and universal change; it shall be a new world, the new heavens, and the new earth, promised before, ch. lv. 17. Old things are passed away, behold, all things are become new, (2 Cor. v. 17.) the old covenant of peculiarity is set aside, and a new covenant, a covenant of grace, established, Heb. viii. 13. We are now to serve in newness of the spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter, Rom. vii. 6. New commandments are given relating both to heaven and earth, and new promises relating to both, and both together make a New Testament; so that they are new heavens and new earth, that God will create, and these a preparative for the new heavens and new earth, and the millennium of time, 2 Pet. iii. 12. (2.) A change of God's own making; he will create the new heavens and the new earth. The change was made by him that had authority to make new ordinances, as well as power to make new worlds. (3.) It will be an abiding, lasting change; a change never to be changed; a new world that will be always new, and never old, or that does with time wear out. It shall remain before me unalterable; for the gospel dispensation is to continue to the end of time, and not to be succeeded by any other. The kingdom of Christ is a kingdom that cannot be moved; the laws and privileges of it are things that cannot be shaken, but shall for ever remain, Heb. xii. 27, 28. It shall therefore remain, because it is before God; it is under his eye, and care, and special protection. (4.) It will be maintained in a seed that shall serve Christ; Your seed, and in them, your name, shall be called; a seed of ministers, a seed of Christians; as one generation of born pass over before another generation shall come, and thus the name of Christ with that of Christians, shall continue on earth while the earth remains, and his throne as the days of heaven. The gates of hell, though they fight against the church, shall not prevail, neither enter into the saints of the Most High.

7. That the public worship of God in religious assemblies shall be carefully and constantly attended upon by all that are thus brought as an offering to the Lord, v. 23. This is described in expressions suited to the Old Testament dispensation, to show that though the ceremonial law should be abolished, and the temple-services should come to an end, yet God should be still as regularly, constantly, and acceptably worshipped as ever. Herefore Jews only went up to appear before God, and they were bound to attend only three times a year, and the males only; but now all flesh, Gentiles as well as Jews, men as well as women, shall come and worship before God in his presence, though not in his temple at Jerusalem, but in religious assemblies dispersed all the world over, which shall be to them as the tabernacle of meeting was to the Jews. God will in them set up his name, and though there be but two or three come together, he will be among them, will meet them, and bless them. And they shall have the benefit of these holy congregations frequently, every new moon, and every sabbath, not, as formerly, at the three annual feasts only. There is no necessity of one certain place, as the temple was of old. Christ is our Temple, in whom by faith all believers meet, and therefore the name of God may be set up there, and it is possible that all should meet at one place; but it is fit that there should be a certain time appointed, that the service may be done certainly and frequently, and a token thereby given of the spiritual communion which all Christian assemblies have with each other, by faith, hope, and holy love. The new moons and the sabbaths are mentioned, because, under the law, though the annual feasts were to be celebrated at Jerusalem, yet the new moons and sabbaths were religiously observed all the country over, in the schools of the prophets first, and afterward in the synagogues, (2 Kings iv. 23. Amos viii. 5.) according to the model of which Christian assemblies seem to be performed. Where the Lord's day is weekly sanctified, and the Lord's Supper monthly celebrated, and both duly attended on, there this promise is fulfilled, there the Christian new moons and sabbaths are observed. See here, that God is to be worshipped in solemn assemblies, that it is the duty of all, as they have opportunity, to wait upon God in those assemblies; all flesh must come; though flesh, weak, corrupt, and sinful, let them come that the flesh may be mortified. In worshipping God, we present ourselves before him, and offer a sacrifice acceptable in his sight. For doing this, there ought to be stated times, and are so; and we must see that it is our interest as well as our duty constantly and conscientiously to observe these times.
against God, not only broken his laws, but broken covenant with him, and thought themselves able to contend with him. It may be meant especially of the unbelieving Jews that rejected the gospel of Christ. (2.) What their misery is; it is here represented by the frightful spectacle of a field of battle, covered with the carcases of the slain, that lie rotting above ground, full of worms crawling about them, and feeding on them; and if you go to burn them, they are so scattered, and it is such a noisome piece of work to get them together, that it would be endless, and the fire would never be quenched; so that they are an abhoring to all flesh, nobody cares to come near them. Now this is sometimes accomplished in temporal judgments, and perhaps never nearer the letter than in the destruction of Jerusalem and the Jewish nation by the Romans, in which destruction it is computed that above two millions, first and last, were cut off by the sword, beside what perished by famine and pestilence. It may refer likewise to the spiritual judgments that came upon the unbelieving Jews, which St. Paul looks upon, and shows us, Rom. xi. 8, &c. They became dead in sins, twice dead; the church of the Jews was a carcase of a church, all its members were putrid carcases, their worm died not, their own consciences made them continually uneasy; and the fire of their rage against the gospel was not quenched, which was their punishment as well as their sin; and they became, more than ever any nation under the sun, an abhoring to all flesh. But our Saviour applies it to the everlasting misery and torment of impenitent sinners in the future state, where their worm dies not, and their fire is not quenched; (Mark ix. 44.) for the soul, whose conscience is its constant tormentor, is immortal, and the God, whose wrath is its constant terror, is eternal. (3.) What notice shall be taken of it; they that worship God shall go forth, and look upon them, to affect their own hearts with the love of their Redeemer, when they see what misery they are redeemed from. As it will aggravate the miseries of the damned, to see others in the kingdom of heaven, and themselves thrust out, (Luke xiii. 28.) so it will illustrate the joys and glories of the blessed, to see what becomes of them that died in their transgression, and it will elevate their praises to think that they were themselves as brands plucked out of that burning. To the honour of that free grace which thus distinguished them, let the redeemed of the Lord with all humility, and not without a holy trembling, sing their triumphant songs.

WITH

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,

OF THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET

JEREMIAH.

The Prophecies of the Old Testament, as the Epistles of the New, are placed rather according to their bulk than their seniority; the longest first, not the eldest. There were divers prophets, and writing ones, that were contemporaries with Isaiah, as Micah; or a little before him, as Hosea, and Joel, and Amos, or soon after him, as Habakkuk and Nahum are supposed to be: and yet the prophecy of Jeremiah, who began many years after Isaiah had finished, is placed next to his, because there is so much in it: where we meet with most of God's word, there let the preference be given; and yet those of lesser gifts are not to be despised or excluded. Nothing now occurs to be observed further concerning prophecy in general; but concerning this prophet Jeremiah we may observe,

I. That he was betimes a prophet; he began young, and therefore could say it from his own experience, that it is good for a man to bear the yoke in his youth, the yoke both of service and of affliction, Lam. iii. 27. Jerome observes, that Isaiah, who had more years over his head, had his tongue touched with a coal of fire, to purge away his iniquity; (ch. vi. 7.) but that when God touched Jeremiah's mouth, who was yet but young, nothing was said of the purging of his iniquity, (ch. i. 9.) because, by reason of his tender years, he had not so much sin to answer for.

II. That he continued long a prophet; some reckon fifty years, others above forty. He began in the 13th year of Josiah, when things went well under that good king, but he continued through all the wicked reigns that followed; for when we set out for the service of God, though the wind may be fair and favourable, we know not how soon it may turn and be tempestuous.

III. That he was a reproving prophet, was sent in God's name to tell Jacob of their sins, and to warn them of the judgments of God that were coming upon them; and the critics observe, that therefore his style and manner of speaking is more plain and rough, and less polite, than that of Isaiah and some other of the prophets. Those that are sent to discover sin, ought to lay aside the enticing words of man's wisdom. Plain dealing is best when we are dealing with sinners, to bring them to repentance.

IV. That he was a suffering prophet; so he is commonly called, not only because he penned the Lamentations, but because he was all along a mournful spectator of the sins of his people, and of the desolating judgments that were coming upon them. And for this reason, perhaps, those who imagined our Saviour to be one of the prophets, thought him of any of them to be most like to Jeremiah, (Matth. xvi. 14.) because he was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief.

V. That he was a suffering prophet; he was persecuted by his own people more than any of them, as we shall find in the story of this book: for he lived and preached just before the Jews' destruction by the Chaldeans, when their character seems to have been the same as it was just before their destruction by the Romans, when they killed the Lord Jesus, and persecuted his disciples, pleased not God, and were contrary to all men, for wrath was come upon them to the uttermost, 1 Thess. ii. 15, 16. The last account we have of him, in his history, is, that the remaining Jews forced him to go down with them into Egypt; whereas the current tradition is, among Jews and Christians, that he suffered martyrdom. Hottinger, out of Elnakin, an Arabic historian, relates, that he, continuing to prophesy in Egypt against the Egyptians and other nations, was stoned to death; and that long after, when Alexander entered Egypt, he took up the bones of Jeremiah where they were buried in obscurity, and carried them to Alexandria, and buried them there. The prophecies of this book, which we have in the nineteen first chapters, seem to be the heads of the sermons he preached in a way of general reproof for sin, and denunciation of judgment; afterward they are more particular and occasional, and mixed with the history of his day, but not placed in the order of time. With the threatenings are intermixed many gracious promises of mercy to the penitent, of the deliverance of the Jews out of their captivity, and some that have a plain reference to the kingdom of the Messiah. Among the Apocryphal writings, an epistle is extant, said to be written by Jeremiah to the captives in Babylon, warning them against the worship of idols, by exposing the vanity of them, and the folly of idolaters. It is in Baruch, ch. vi. But it is supposed not to be authentic; nor has it, I think, any thing like the life and spirit of Jeremiah's writings. It is also related concerning Jeremiah, (2 Mac. ii. 4.) that when Jerusalem was destroyed by the Chaldeans, he, by direction from God, took the ark and altar of incense, and carrying them to mount Nebo, redirected them in a hollow cave there, and stopped the door; but some that followed him, and thought that they had marked the place, could not find it; he blamed them for seeking it, telling them that the place should be unknown till the time that God should gather his people together again. But I know not what credit is to be given to that story, though it is there said to be found in the records. We cannot but be concerned, in the reading of Jeremiah's prophecies, to find that they were so little regarded by the men of that generation; but let us make use of that as a reason why we should regard them the more: for they are written for our learning too, and for warning to us and to our kind.
CHAP. I.

In this chapter we have, 1. The general inscription or title of this book, with a time and place of Jeremiah's public ministry, v. 1., 3. 2. The call of Jeremiah to the prophetic office, his modest objection against it, and an ample commission given him for the execution of his office, v. 4-10. 3. The vision of the wood of mourning and a seething-pot, signifying the approaching ruin of Judah and Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, v. 11-16. 4. Encouragement given to the prophet to go on undaunted in his work, the assurance of God's presence with him, v. 17-19. Thus is he set to work by one that will be sure to bear him out.

1. The words of Jeremiah the son of Hilkiah, of the priests that were in Anathoth, in the land of Benjamin: 2. To whom the word of the Lord came in the days of Josiah the son of Amon king of Judah, in the thirteenth year of his reign. 3. It came also in the days of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, unto the end of the eleventh year of Zedekiah the son of Josiah king of Judah, unto the carrying away of Jerusalem captive in the fifth month.

We have here as much as it was thought fit we should know of the genealogy of this prophet, and the chronology of his prophecy.

1. We are told what family the prophet was of. He was the son of Hilkiah: not that Hilkiah, it is supposed, that was High Priest in Josiah's time, (for then he would have been called so, and not, as here, one of the priests that were in Anathoth,) but another of the same name. Jeremiah signifies one raised up by the Lord. It is said of Christ, that he is a prophet whom the Lord our God raised up unto us, Deut. xviii. 15, 18. He was of the priests, and, as a priest, was authorized and appointed to teach the people; but to that authority and appointment God added the extraordinary commission of a prophet. Ezekiel was also a priest. Thus God would support the honour of the priesthood at a time when, by their sins and God's judgments upon them, it was sadly collapsed. He was of the priests in Anathoth; a city of priests, which lay about three miles from Jerusalem. Abiathar had his country house there, 1 Kings ii. 26.

2. We have the general date of his prophecies; the knowledge of which is requisite to the understandings of the prophecy. (1.) He began to prophesy in the thirteenth year of Josiah's reign, v. 2. Josiah, in the twelfth year of his reign, began a work of reformation, applied himself with all sincerity to purge Judah and Jerusalem from the high places, and the groves, and the images, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 3. And very seasonably then was this young prophet raised up to assist and encourage the young king in the work of the Lord. (2.) Jeremiah was raised up to him; not only a charge and commission to him to prophesy, but a revelation of the things themselves which he was to deliver. As it is an encouragement to ministers to be contented and protected by such pious magistrates as Josiah was, so it is a great help to magistrates, in any good work of reformation, to be advised and animated, and to have a prophet in the midst of them, by whom the faithful, zealous ministers as Jeremiah was. Now, one would have expected when these two united forces, such a prince, and such a prophet, (as in a like case, Ezra v. 1, 2.) and both young, such a complete reformation would have been brought about and settled, as would have prevented the ruin of the church and state; but it proved quite otherwise. In the eighteenth year of Josiah we find there was not a general at many of the relics of idolatry, that were not purged out: for what can the best princes and prophets do to prevent the ruin of a people that hate to be reformed? And therefore, though it was a time of reformation, Jeremiah continued to foretell the destroying judgments that were coming upon them; for there is no symptom more threatening to any people than fruitless attempts of reformation. Josiah and Jeremiah would have healed them, but they would not be healed by them. (3.) Jeremiah hearkened to prophecy through the reigns of Jehoiakim and Zedekiah, who reigned eleven years apiece; he prophesied to the carrying away of Jerusalem captive, (v. 3.) that great event which he had so often prophesied of. He continued to prophesy after that, ch. xl. 1. But the computation here is made to end with that, because it was the accomplishment of many of the predictions made. The kingdom of Josiah to the captivity was just forty years. Dr. Lightfoot observes, that as Moses was so long with the people, a teacher in the wilderness, till they entered into their own land; Jeremiah was so long with their own land a teacher, before they went into the wilderness of the heathen; and he thinks that therefore a special mark is set upon the last forty years for the iniquity of Judah, which Ezekiel was forty days there, the 25th. day of the second month, at that time, they had Jeremiah prophesying among them, which was a great aggravation of their impenitency. God, in this prophet, suffered their manners, their ill manners, forty years, and at length swared in his wrath that they should not continue in his rest.

4. Then the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, 5. Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee; and I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations. 6. Then said I, Ah, Lord God! behold, I cannot speak; for I am a child. 7. But the Lord said unto me, Say not, I am a child: for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak. 8. Be not afraid of their faces: for I am with thee to deliver thee, saith the Lord. 9. Then the Lord put forth his hand, and touched my mouth: and the Lord said unto me, Behold, I have put my words in thy mouth. 10. See, I have this day set thee over the nations, and over the kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build, and to plant.

Here is,

1. Jeremiah's early designation to the work and office of a prophet, which God gives him notice of as a reason for his early application to that business; (v. 4, 5.) The word of the Lord came to him, with a satisfying assurance to himself that it was the word of the Lord, and not a delusion; and God told him, 1. That he had ordained him a prophet to the nations, or, against the nation, and for the nation. He is the voice, who are therefore now reckoned among the nations, because they had learned their works, and mingled themselves with them in their idolatries, which otherwise they should not have been, Num. xxii. 9. Yet he was given to be a prophet, not to Jews only, but to the neighbouring nations; to whom he was to send scribes, (ch. xxviii. 5.) and whom he must make to drink of the cup of the Lord's anger, ch. xxv. 17. He is still in his writings a prophet to the nations (to cwr nations cannot. Let it be said, I am a child: I speak for such; and though they mock me, and Let him not object that he shall meet with many enemies and much opposition; God will be his protector; (v. 8.) JEREMIAH, I.

bute from them, or to enrich himself with their spoils, but to root out, and pull down, and destroy, and yet withhold that word and plant. [1.] He must attempt to reform the nations, to root out, and pull down, and destroy idolatry and other wickedness among them, to extirpate those vicious habits and customs which had long taken root, to throw down the kingdom of sin, that religion and virtue might be planted and built among them. And to the introducing and establishing of that which is good, it is necessary that which is evil be removed. [2.] He must tell them that it would be well or ill with them, according as they were, or were not, reformed. He must set before them life and death, good or evil, according to God's declaration of the method he takes with kingdoms and nations, ch. xviii. 7, 10. He must assure those who persisted in their wickedness, that they should be rooted and destroyed, and those who repented, that they should be built and planted. He was authorized to read the doom of nations, and God would ratify it, and fulfill it, (Isa. xliv. 26,) would do it according to his word, and therefore is said to do it by his word. It is thus expressed, partly to show how sure the word of prophecy is—it will as certainly be accomplished as if it were done already; and partly to put a hindrance upon the prophetic office, and not to look truly great, that others may not despire prophets, nor they disparage themselves. And yet more honourable does the gospel-ministry look, in that declarative power Christ gave his apostles, to remit and retain, (John xx. 23,) to bind and loose, Matth. xviii. 18.

11. Moreover, the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Jeremiah, what seest thou? And I said, I see a rod of an almond-tree. 12. Then said the Lord unto me, Thou hast well seen: for I will harden my word to perform it. 13. And the word of the Lord came unto me the second time, saying, What seest thou? And I said, I see a seething-pot, and the face thereof is toward the north. 14. Then the Lord said unto me, Out of the north an evil shall break forth upon all the inhabitants of the land. 15. For lo, I will call all the families of the kingdoms of the north, saith the Lord; and they shall come, and they shall set every one his throne at the entering of the gates of Jerusalem, and against all the walls thereof round about, and against all the cities of Judah. 16. And I will utter my judgments against them touching all their wickedness, who have forsaken me, and have burnt incense unto other gods, and worshipped the works of their own hands. 17. Thou therefore gird up thy loins, and arise, and speak unto them all the words that I command thee: be not dismayed at their faces, lest I confound thee before them. 18. For, behold, I have made thee this day a defended city, and an iron pillar, and brazen walls, against the whole land; against the kings of Judah, against the princes thereof, against the priests thereof, and against the people of the land. 19. And they shall fight against thee, but they shall not prevail against thee; for I am with thee, saith the Lord, to deliver thee.

Here,

1. God gives Jeremiah, in vision, a view of the principal errand he was to go upon, which was to foretell the destruction of Judah and Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, for their sins, especially their idolatry. This was at first represented to him, in a way proper to make an impression upon him, that he might have it upon his heart in all his dealings with the people.

2. He intimates to him that the people were ripening fast for ruin, and that ruin was hastening fast toward them. God, having answered his objection, that he was a child, goes on to initiate him in the prophetical learning and language; and, having promised to enable him to speak intelligibly to the people, he here teaches him to understand what God says to him; for prophets must have eyes in their heads as well as tongues, must be seers as well as speakers; he therefore asks him, "Jeremiah, what seest thou? Look about thee, and observe now." And he was soon aware of what was presented to him: I see a rod, denoting affliction and chastisement; a correcting rod hanging over us; and it is a rod of an almond-tree, which is one of the forerustess trees in the spring, is in the bud and blossom in winter, which, when the snow is broken out, it flourishes, says Pliny, in the month of January, and by March has ripe fruits; hence it is called in the Hebrew, Shakedh, the hasty tree, whether this rod that Jeremiah saw had already budded, as some think, or whether it was stripped and dry, as others think, and yet Jeremiah knew it to be of an almond-tree, as Aaron's rod was, is unreasonable. Jeremiah explained. (v. 12.) Thou hast well seen. God commanded him that he was so observant, and so quick of apprehension, as to be aware, though it was the first vision he ever saw, that it was a rod of an almond-tree; that his mind was so composed as to be able to distinguish. Prophets have need of good eyes; and those that see well shall be commanded, and those that do not speak shall be warned. "Then hast seen a hasty tree, which signifies that I will hasten my word to perform it." Jeremiah shall prophecy that which he himself shall live to see accomplished. We have the explication of this, Ezek. vii. 10, 11. "The rod hath blossomed, pride hath budded, violence is risen up into a rod of wickedness. The measure of Jerusalem's iniquity fills very fast; and as if their destruction shambled not too long, they break it, they hasten it, and I will hasten to perform what I have spoken against them." 2. He intimates to him whence the intended ruin should arise; Jeremiah is a second time asked, What seest thou? He sees a seething-pot upon the fire, (v. 13.) representing Jerusalem and Judah in great commotion, like boiling water, by reason of the descent which the Chaldean army made upon them; and we see the vapour of smoke, or smoke of the fire, that is wasting away as boiling water does, and sensibly evaporating and growing less and less; ready to boil over, to be thrown out of their own city and land, as out of the pan into the fire, from bad to worse. Some think that those scoffers referred to this, who said, (Ezek. xi. 3.) The city is the caldron, and we be the flesh. Now the mouth or face of the Lord is toward the north; for there is the fire and fuel were to come, that must make the pot boil thus. So the vision is explained, v. 14. Out of the north an evil shall break forth, or shall be opened. It had been long designed by the justice of God, and long desired by the sin of the people, and yet hitherto the divine patience had restrained it, and held it in, as it were;
the enemies had intended it, and God had checked them; but now all restraints shall be taken off, and the evil shall break forth; the direful scene shall open, and the enemy shall come in like a flood.
It shall be a universal calamity, it shall come upon all the inhabitants of the land, from the highest to the lowest, for they have all corrupted their way. Lord, let my name be numbered among those who shall for, or hinder thee in, this service; buckle to it with readiness and resolution; and be not entangled with doubts about it.” He must be quick—Arise, and lose no time; he must be busy—Arise, and speak unto them in season, out of season; he must be bold
—Be not dismayed at their faces, as before, v. 8.
In a word, he must be faithful; it is required of ambassadors that they be brave.

In two things he must be faithful. 1. He must speak all that he is charged with. Speak all that I command thee. He must forget nothing as minute, or foreign, or not worth mentioning; every word of God is weighty. He must conceal nothing for fear of offending; he must utter nothing under pretence of being afraid of an awkward or unpopular charge, but without addition or diminution, declare the whole counsel of God. 2. He must speak to all that he is charged against; he must not whisper it in a corner to a few particular friends that will take it well, but he must appear against the kings of Judah, if they be wicked kings, and bear his testimony against the sins even of the princes thereof; for the greatest of men are not exempt from the judgments, either of God’s hand, or of his mouth. Nay, he must not spare the priests thereof; though he himself was a priest, and was concerned to maintain the dignity of his order, yet he must not therefore flatter them in their sins. He must appear against the people of the land, though they were his own people, as far as they were against the Lord.

And two things are here given why he should dius the (1.) Because he had reason to fear the wrath of God, if he should be false: “Be not dismayed at their faces, so as to desert thine office, or shrink from the duty of it, lest I confound and dismay thee before them; lest I give thee up to thy faint-heartedness.” Those that consult their own credit, ease, and safety, more than their work and duty, are justly left to God’s mercy themselves, and bring upon themselves the shame of their own cowardliness. Nay, lest I reckon with thee for thy faint-heartedness, and break thee to pieces; some read it.
Therefore this prophet says, ch. xvii. 17.
Lord, Be not thou a terror to me. Note, The fear of God is the best antidote against the fear of man.

Let us always be afraid of offending God, who after he has killed his power to cast into hell, and then he will not be willing to spare any of these false men that can but kill the body, Luke xxi. 4, 5. See Neh. iv. 14. It is better to have all the men in the world our enemies than God our Enemy.

(2.) Because he had no reason to fear the wrath of man if he were faithful; for the God whom he served, would protect him, and bear him out, so that they should neither sink his spirits, nor drive him off from his work, should neither stop his mouth, nor take away his life, till he had finished his testimony, v. 18. This young stripping of a prophet is made by the power of God, as an impregnable city, fortified with iron pillars and surrounded with walls of brass; he sallies out upon them in reproofs and threatenings, and keeps them in awe. They set upon him on every side; the kings and princes better him with their power, his priests thunder against him with their church-councils, and the people of the land shoot their arrows at him, even slanderous and bitter words; but he shall keep his ground, and make his part good with them; he shall still be a curb upon them; (v. 19.)
They shall fight against thee, but they shall not prevail to destroy thee, for I am with thee to deliver thee out of their hands: nor shall they prevail to defeat the word that God sends them by Jeremiah, nor to deliver themselves, it shall take hold of them, for God is against them to destroy them. Note, Those who are sure that they have God with them, (as he is if they be with him,) need not, ought not to be afraid, whoever is against them.

CHAP. II.

It is probable that this chapter was Jeremiah's first sermon after his ordination; and a most lively, pathetic scene it is. Is it not so we have in all the books of the prophets? Let him not say, I cannot speak, for I am a child; for, God having touched his mouth, and put his words into it, none can say that he is not a prophet. The first part of the chapter is a laudation of God's people, their transgressions, even the house of Jacob their sins; it is all by way of reproof and conviction, that they might be brought to repent of their sins, and so prevent the ruin that was coming upon them. Then the least up against them is very high, the aggravations black, the arguments used for their conviction very close and pressing; and the expositions very pregnant and affecting. For they are not charged with here, is idolatry, forsaking the true God, their own God, for other false gods. Now they are told, 1. That this was ungrateful to God, who had been so kind to them, v. 18. II. That it was without precedent, that a nation should change their god, v. 9. 13. III. That hereby they had dispersed and ruined themselves, v. 14. 19. IV. That they had broken their covenants, and degenerated from their good beginnings, v. 20. 21. V. That their wickedness was too plain to be concealed, and too bad to be excused, v. 22. 23. 25. VI. That they persisted willfully and obstinately in it, and were irreclaimable and unalterable in their idolatries, v. 24. 25. 36. VII. That they shamed themselves, especially by their idolatry, and should shortly be made ashamed of it when they should find their idols unable to help them, v. 26. 29. 37. VIII. That they had not merely been convinced of the rebukes of Providence, that had been conveyed to them by their idolatries, but had mixed the most unnatural murders, shedding the blood of the poor and distressed, v. 31. Those hearts were hard indeed, that were untouched and unhumbled when their sins were thus set in order before them. O that by meditating on this chapter we might be brought to repent of our spiritual idolatries, giving that place in our souls to the world and the flesh, which should have been reserved for God only!

1. MOREOVER, the word of the Lord came to me, saying, 2. Go, and cry in the ears of Jerusalem, saying, Thus saith the Lord, I remember thee, the Kindness of thy youth, the love of thine espousals, when thou wastest after me in the wilderness, in a land that was not sown. 3. Israel was holiness unto the Lord, and the first-fruits of his increase: all that devour him shall offend; evil shall come upon them, saith the Lord. 4. Hear ye the word of the Lord, O house of Jacob, and all the families of the house of Israel: 5. Thus saith the Lord, What iniquity have your fathers found in me, that they are gone far from me, and have walked after vanity, and are become vain? 6. Neither said they, Where is the Lord that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, that led us through the wilderness; through a land of deserts, and of pits; through a land of drought, and of the shadow of death, through a land that no man passed through, and where no man dwelt? 7. And I brought you into a plentiful country, to eat the fruit thereof; and the goodnes thereof: but when ye entered, ye defiled my land, and made my heritage an abomination. 8. The priests said not, Where is the Lord? and they that handle the law knew me not: the pastors also transgressed against me, and the prophets prophesied by Baal, and walked after things that do not profit.

Here is, 1. A command given to Jeremiah to go and carry a message from God to the inhabitants of Jerusalem. He was charged in general (ch. i. 17.) to go, and speak to them; here he is particularly charged to go, and speak this to them. Note, It is good for ministers by faith and prayer to take out a fresh commission, when they address themselves solemnly to any part of the people. Their business is to show the man of God that he has to deliver with the word of God, and see that it agrees with it, that he may be able to say, not only The Lord sent me, but, He sent me to speak this. He must go from Anathoth, where he lived in a pleasant retirement, spending his time (it is likely) among a few friends, and in the study of the law, and must make his appearance at Jerusalem, that noisy, tumultuous city, and cry in their ears, as a man in earnest, and that would be heard; Cry aloud, that all may hear, and none may plead ignorance. Go close to them, and cry in the ears of these that have stopped their ears.

II. The message he was commanded to deliver. He must upbraid them with their horrid ingratitude, in forsaking a God who had been so kind and merciful to them; that this might either make them ashamed, and bring them to repentance, or, might justify God in changing his hand against them.

1. God here puts them in mind of the favours he had of old bestowed upon them, when they were first formed into a people; (v. 2.) I remember for thy sake, and I would have thee to remember it, and improve the remembrance of it for the future; if I can not forget the kindness of them with; and, the love of things spirituals. This may be understood, (A.) Of the kindness they had for God; it was not such indeed as they had any reason to boast of, or to plead with God for favour to be shown them: (for many of them were very unkind and provoking, and when they did return, and inquire early after God, they did but flatter him) yet God would not forget them, to mention it, and plead it in their case; for though it was but a short time that they showed him, he took it kindly. When they believed the Lord and his servant Moses, when they sang God's praise at the Red sea, when at the foot of mount Sinai, they promised, All that the Lord shall say unto us we will do, and will be obedient; then was the kindness of their youth, and the love of their espousals. When they seemed so forward for God, he said, Surely they are my people, and will be faithful to me, children that will not lie. Note, Those that begin well, and promise fair, but do not perform and persevere, will justly be upbraided with their hopeful and promising beginnings. God remembers the kindness of our youth, and the love of our espousals, the zeal we then seemed to have for him, and the affection wherewith we made our covenants with him, the buds and blossoms that never came to perfection, and it is good for us to remember them, that we may remember whence we are fallen, and return to our first love, Rev. ii. 4, 5. Gal. iv. 15.

In two things appeared the kindness of their youth. [1.] That they followed the direction of the pillar of cloud and fire in the wilderness; though sometimes they spoke of Egypt, or pushed forward into Canaan, yet they did neither; forty years together went after the pillar of cloud and fire, through the wilderness, and trusted him to provide for them, though it was a land that was not sown. This God took kindly, and took notice of it to their praise long after, that though much was amiss among them, yet they never forsake the direction they were under. Thus, though Christ often chid his disciples, yet he commanded them, at parting, for ought I have done did you? ch. xxii. 28. It must be the strong affection of the youth, and the espousals, that will carry us on to follow God in a wilderness, with an implicit faith, and an entire resignation; and it is a pity that those who have so followed him, should ever leave him. [2.] That they entertained divine institutions, set up the tabernacle among them, and attended the service of it. Israel was taught of God, ch. xxvii. 22; so the Jews were taught him in covenant as a peculiar people. Thus they began in the Spirit, and God puts them in mind of it, that they might be ashamed of ending in the flesh. Or, it may be understood, (2.) Of God’s kindness to them; of that he afterwards speaks largely, When Israel was a child, then I loved him, Hos. xi. 1. He then espoused that people to himself with all the affection with which a young man marries a virgins, (ch. iii. 5.) for the time was a time of love, Ezek. xvi. 8.

[1.] God appropriated them to himself; though they were a sinful people, yet by virtue of the covenant made with them, and the church set up among them, they were holiness to the Lord, dedicated to his honour, and taken under his special tuition: they were, as it were, first-fruits of his Israel church he had in the world; these were the first-fruits, but the full harvest was to be gathered from among the Gentiles. The first-fruits of the increase were God’s part of it, were offered to him, and he was honoured with them; so were the people of the Jews; what little tribute, rent, and homage God had from the world, he had it chiefly from them; and it was their honour to be thus set apart from God. This honour have all the saints, they are the first-fruits of his creatures, Jam. i. 18.

[2.] Having espoused them, he espoused their cause, and became an Enemy to their enemies, Exod. xxii. 22. Being the first-fruits of his increase, all that devoured him, (so it should be read,) did offend, they trespassed, they contracted guilt, and evil befell them; as those were reckoned offenders, that devoured the first-fruits, or any thing else that was holy to the Lord, that embrazed them, or converted them to their own use, Lev. v. 15. Whoever offered any injury to the people of God, did it at their hirel; their God was ready to avenge their quarrel, and said to the proudest of kings, Touch not mine anointed, Ps. cv. 14. Exod. xxvii. The God of God’s people, he was in that manner united with those that attempted to devour them, and draw them off from being holiness to the Lord; witness his quarrel with the Midianites about the matter of Peor, Numb. xxxv. 17, 18.

[3.] He brought them out of Egypt with a high hand and great terror, (Deut. iv. 34.) and yet with a kind hand and great tenderness led them through a vast howling wilderness, (v. 31.) that they might see the hand of God in giving them to drink of the fulchul land, where there was ground, not to feed them, but to bury them; where there was no good to be expected, for it was a land of drought, and all manner of evil to be feared, for it was the shadow of death; in that darksome valley they walked forty years; but God was with them, his rod, in Moses’s hand, and his fire, in the wilderness; God was a guide for them, (Ps. xix. 5.) gave them bread out of the clouds, and drink out of the rocks. It was a land abandoned by all mankind, as yielding neither road nor rest; it was no thoroughfare, for no man passed through it; no settlement, for no man dwelt there; for God will teach his people to tread untrodden paths, to dwell alone, and to be singular. The difficulties of the journey are thus insisted on, to magnify the power and goodness of God in bringing them, through all, safe to their journey’s end at last. All God’s spiritual Israel must own their obligations to him for a safe conduct through the wilderness of the world, no less dangerous to the soul than that was to the body.

[4.] At length he settled them in Canaan; (v. 7.) I brought you into a plentiful country; which would be the more acceptable after they had been for so many years in a land of drought. They did eat the fruit thereof, and the goodness thereof, and were allowed so to do. I brought you into a land of Carathum’s possession, but you make it a place of extraneous and ordinary fruitfulness; Canaan was as great fruitful field, Deut. viii. 7.

[5.] God gave them the means of knowledge and grace, and communion with him; this is implied, v. 8. They had priests that handled the law, read it, and expounded it to them; that was part of their business, Deut. xxxii. 8. They had pastors to guide them, and take care of their affairs, magistrates and judges; they had prophets to consult God for them, and to make known his mind to them.

2. He upbraids them with their horrid ingratitude, and the ill returns they had made him for these favours; let them all come, and answer to this charge; (v. 4.) it is exhibited in the name of God against all the families of the house of Israel, for they were not as the other nations: Have you, in your highest estate, done such injuries, or that you might not have done? Have you, upon trial, found God a hard Master? Have his commands put any hardship upon you, or obliged you to any thing unfit, unfair, or unbecoming you? Have his promises put any cares upon you, or raised your expectations of things which you were afterward disappointed of? You that renounce your covenant with God, can you say that it was a hard bargain, and that which you could not live upon? You that forsake the ordinances of God, can you say that it was because they were a wearisome service, or work that there was nothing to be got by? No, the disappointments you have met with, were owing to yourselves, not to God. The yoke of his commandments is easy, and in keeping of them there is great reward. Note, Those that forsake God’s commandments, become judges of their own case, and determine for themselves what provocation to do so for; for this we may safely appeal to the consciences of sinners; the slotful servant that offered such a plea as this, had it overruled out of his own mouth, Luke xix. 22. Though he afflicts us, we cannot say that there is iniquity in him, he deoth us no wrong; the ways of the Lord are undoubtedly equal, all the iniquity is in our ways.

[1.] They had quitted his service; "They are gone from me, nay, they are gone far from me." They studied how to estrange themselves from God and their duty, and got as far as they could out of the reach of his commandments and their own convictions. Those that have deserted religion, commonly set themselves at a greater distance from it, in a greater opposition to it, than those that never knew it.

[2.] They had quitted it for the service of idols, which was so much the greater reproach to God and his service; they went from him, not to mend themselves, but to cheat themselves; they have walked after vanity, that is, idlery; for an idol is a vain thing; it is nothing in the world, 1 Cor. viii. 4. Deut. xxxii. 21. Jer. xiv. 22. "Mischievous worships are vanities, Acts xiv. 15. Idolaters are vain, for they that make idols are like unto them, (Ps. cxv. 8.) as much stocks and stones as the images they worship, and good for as little.

[5.] They had with idolatry introduced all manner of wickedness. When they entered into the good land which God gave them, they defiled it, (v. 7.) by defiling themselves, and disfiguring themselves for the service of God. It was God's land, they were his tenants to him, sojourners in it, Lev. xxv. 23. It was his heritage, for it was a holy land, Immanuel's land; but they made it an abomination, even to God himself, who was wroth, and greatly abhorred Israel.

9. Wherefore I will yet plead with you, saith the Lord, and with your children's children will I plead. 10. For pass over the isles of Chittim, and see; and send unto Kedar, and consider diligently, and see if there be such a thing; 11. Hath a nation changed their gods, which are yet no gods? but my people have changed their glory for that which doth not profit. 12. Be astonished, O ye heavens, at this, and be horribly afraid, be ye very desolate, saith the Lord. 13. For my people have committed two evils; they have forsaken me, the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water.

The prophet having shown their base ingratitude in forsaking God, here shows their unparalleled fickleness and folly; (v. 9.) I will yet plead with you. Note, Before God punishes sinners, he pleads with them, to bring them to repentance. Again, When much has been said of the evil of sin, still there is more to be said, when one article of the charge is made good, there is another to be urged; when we have said a great deal, still we have yet to speak on God's behalf, Job xxxvi. 2. Those that deal with sinners, for their conviction, must urge a variety of their defects, and the more they have had before pleaded with their fathers, and asked why they walked after vanity, and became vain, v. 5. Now he pleads with them, who persisted in that vain conversation received by tradition from their fathers, and with their children's children, with all that in every age tread in their steps. Let those that forsake God know that he is willing to argue the case fairly with them, so it may be justified when he speaks. He pleads that with us, which we should plead with ourselves.

1. He shows that they acted contrary to the usage of all nations; their neighbours were more firm and faithful to their false gods than they were to the true God. They were ambitious of being like the nations, and yet in this they were unlike them. He challenges them to produce an instance of any nation that had changed their gods, (v. 10, 11.) or were apt to change them. Let them survey either the old records, or the present state, of the isles of Chittim, Greece, and the European islands, the countries that were more polite and learned; and of Kedar, that lay south-east, (as the other north-west from them,) which were more rude and barbarous; and they should not find an instance of a nation that had changed their gods; though they had never done them any kindness, nor could do, for they were no gods. Such a veneration had they for their gods, so good an opinion of them, and such a respect for the choice their fathers had made, that though they were gods of wood and stone, they would not change them for gods of silver and gold, no not for the living and true God. Shall we praise them for this? We praise them not. But it may be urged, to the reproach of Israel, that they who were the only people that had no cause to change their God, were yet the only people that had changed him. Note, Men are with difficulty brought off that religion which they had been brought up in, though ever so absurd and grossly false. The zeal and constancy of idolaters should shame Christians out of their carelessness and profession.

II. He shows that they acted contrary to the dictates of common sense, in that they not only changed, (it may sometimes be our duty and wisdom to do so,) but that they changed for the worse, and made a bad bargain for themselves. 1. They parted from a God who was their Glory; who made them truly glorious, and every way put honour upon them, one whom they might with a humble confidence name as theirs, who is himself a glorious God, and the glory of those whose God he is; he was particularly the glory of his people Israel, for his glory had often appeared on their tabernacle. 2. They closed with gods that could do them no good; gods that do not profit their worshipers. Idolaters change God's glory into shame, (Rom. i. 23.) and so they do their own; in dishonouring God, they destroy their own glory; and dishonouring themselves, are enemies to their own interest. Note, Whatever they turn to who forsake God, it will never do them any good; it will flatten them and please them, but it cannot profit them.

Heaven itself is here called upon to stand amazed at the sin and folly of these apostates from God; (v. 12, 13.) Be astonished, O ye heavens, at this! He is compared with the heavens, because the heavens are such objects as must be expected to take no notice of it; but let the heavens and heavenly bodies be astonished at it. Let the sun blush to see such ingratitude, and be afraid to shine upon such ungrateful wretches. They that forsook God, worshipped the host of heaven, the sun, moon, and stars, but these, instead of being pleased with the adora-ions that were paid to them, were astonished and horribly afraid; and would rather have been very lovable, utterly exhausted, as the word is, and derived of their lightness, that it should give occasion to any to worship them. Some refer it to the angels of heaven; if they rejoice at the return of souls to God, we may suppose that they are astonished and horribly afraid at the revolt of souls from him. The meaning is, that the conduct of this people toward God was such as, (1.) We may well admire and wonder at, that ever men, who pretend to do the thing so very absurd, (2.) Such as we ought to have a holy indignation at as impious, and a high affront to our Maker, whose honour every good man is jealous for. (3.) Such as we may trembling to think of the consequences of; what will be in the end hereof. Be horribly afraid to think of the wrath and curse which will be the portion of those, who thus throw themselves out of God's grace and favour. Now what is it that is to be thought of with all this horror? it is this; “My people, whom I have taught, and should have ruled, have committed two great evils, ingratitude and folly; they have acted contrary both to their duty and to their interest. [1.] They have affronted their God, by turning their back upon him, as if he were not worthy their notice; “They have forsaken me, saith the Lord, the fountain of living waters, and have a child shall be charged, and sent to bed, and when he wakened, there was a goodly child standing by the bed. They have an abundant and constant supply of all the comfort and relief they stand in need of, and they have it freely.” God is their Fountain of life, Ps. xxxvi. 9. There is in him an all-sufficiency of grace and strength; all our springs are in him, and our streams from him; to forsake him is, in effect, to deny this; he has been to us a bountiful Benefactor, a Fountain of living waters, overflowing, every flowing, in the gifts of his favour; to forsake him is to refuse to acknowledge his kindness, and to withhold that tribute of love and praise, which his kindness calls for. [2.] They have cheated themselves; they forsook their own mercies, but it was for lying vanities; they took a great deal of pains to have them out cisterns, to dig pits or pools in the earth or rock, which they would carry water to, or which should receive the rain; but they proved broken cisterns, also at the bottom, that they could hold no water. When they came to quench their thirst there, they found nothing but mud and mire, and the filthy sediment of a standing lake. Such idols were to their worshippers, and such a change did they experience, who turned from God to them. If we make an idol of any creature, seeking or pleasure, or honour, if we place our happiness in it, and promise ourselves the comfort and satisfaction in it which are to be had in God only, if we make it our joy and love, our hope and confidence, we shall find it a cistern, which we take a great deal of pains to have cut and fill, and at the best it will hold but a little water, and that dead and flat, and soon corrupted; the cistern that cracks and cleaves in hot weather, so that the water is gone when we have most need of it, Job vi. 15. Let us therefore with purpose of heart cleave to the Lord only, for whither else shall we go? He has the words of eternal life.

14. Is Israel a servant? is he a home-born slave? why is he spoiled? 15. The young lions roared upon him and yelled, and they made his land waste: his cities are burnt without inhabitant. 16. Also the children of Noph and Tahapanes have broken the crown of thy head. 17. Hast thou not procured this unto thyself, in that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God, when he led thee by the way? 18. And now, what hast thou to do in the way of Egypt, to drink the waters of Sihon? Or what hast thou to do in the way of Assyria, to drink the waters of the river? 19. These own wickedness shall correct thee, and thy backslidings shall reprove thee: know, therefore, and see, that it is an evil thing and bitter, that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God, and that my fear is not in thee, saith the Lord God of hosts.

The prophet further to evince the folly of their forsaking God, shows them what mischief they had already brought upon themselves by it; it had already cost them dear, for to this we are owing all the calamities their country was now groaning under; which were but an earnest of more and greater if they repented not. See how they smarted for their folly.

1. Their neighbours, who were their professed enemies, prevailed against them, and that was in consequence of their sin.

2. They were enslaved, and lost their liberty; (v. 4.) Is Israel a servant? No, Israel is not so, my first-born; (Exod. iv. 22.) they are children, they are heirs; nay, their extraction is noble, they are the seed of Abraham, God's friend, and of Jacob his chosen. Is he a home-born slave? No, he is not the son of the bond-woman, but of the free; they were designed for dominion, not for servitude. Every thing in their constitution carried on it the marks of freedom and honour; why then is he spoiled of his liberty? Who is he used as a servant, as a home-born slave? Why does he make himself a slave to his lusts, to his idols, to that which does not profit? v. 11. What a thing is this, that such a birth-right should be sold for a mess of pottage? Such a crown profaned, and laid in the dust! Why is he made a slave to the oppressor? God provided that a Hebrew servant should be free the seventh year, and that their slaves should be of the heathen, not of their brethren, Lev. xxv. 44, 46. But, notwithstanding this, the princes made slaves of their subjects, and masters of their servants, (eb. xxxiv. 11.) and so made their country mean and miserable, which God had made happy and honourable. The neighbouring princes and powers broke in upon them, and made some of them slaves given in to other countries, and perhaps sold others for slaves into foreign countries. And how came they thus to lose their liberties? For their iniquities they sold themselves, Isa. lxii. 1. We may apply this spiritually; Is the soul of man a servant? Is it a home-born slave? No, it is not; why then is it spoiled? It is because it has sold its own liberty, and enslaved itself to divers lusts, and to self-deceit, which is a lamentation, and should be for a lamentation.

2. They were impoverished, and had lost their wealth. God brought them into a plentiful country, (v. 7.) but all their neighbours made a prey of it. (v. 15.) young lions roar aloud over him, and yiel; they are a continual terror to him; sometimes one potent enemy, and sometimes another, and sometimes many, which often shatters down the confidence and triumph over him. They carry off the fruits of his land, and make that waste, burn his cities, when first they have plundered them, so that they remain without inhabitant, either because there are no houses to dwell in, or because those that should dwell in them are carried into captivity.

3. They were abused, and insulted over, and beaten by every body; (v. 16.) "Even the children of Noph and Tahapanes, desppicable people, not famed for military courage or strength, have broken the crown of thy head, or fed upon it. In all their struggles with thee they have been too hard for thee, and thou hast always come off with a broken head. The principal part of thy country, that which lay next Jerusalem, this been, and is, a prey to thine enemies, whereas the condition of Judah had been of late, in the reign of Manasseh, we find, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11. and perhaps it had not now much recovered itself. 4. All this was owing to their sin; (v. 17.) Hast thou not procured this unto thyself? By their sinful confederacies with the nations, and especially their conformity to them in their idolatrous customs and usages, they had made themselves very mean and contemptible, as all those do that have made a profession of religion, and afterward throw it off. Nothing now appeared of that, which, by their constitution, made them both honourable and formidable, and therefore nobody either respected them or feared them. But this was not all; they had provoked God to give them up into the hands of their enemies, and to make them a snare to them, and give them success against them; and thus thou hast procured it to thyself, in that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God, revolted from thine allegiance to him, and so thrown thyself out of his protection; for protection and allegiance go together. Whatever trouble we are in at any time, we may thank ourselves for it; for we bring it upon our own heads, by forsaking God. "Thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God, at the time that he was leading thee by the way;" (so it should be read) "then, when he was leading thee on to a happy peace and settlement, and thou wast within a step of it, thou forsookest him, and so didst put a bar in thine own door." 11. Their neighbours, that were their pretended friends, deceived them, distressed them, and helped them not; and God did whom they others would not. 1. They did in vain seek to Egypt and Assyria for help; (v. 18.) "What hast thou to do in the way of Egypt? When thou art under apprehensions of danger, thou art running to Egypt for help, Isa. xxx. 1-2.—xxxl. 1. Thou art for drinking the waters of Sihon," that is, Niblus. "Thou refuest upon their multitude, and refreshest thyself with the fair promises they make thee; at other times thou dost go about to seek after the same, or going with all speed to fetch recruits thence, and thinkest to satisfy thyself with the waters of the river Euphrates; but what hast thou to do there? What wilt thou get by applying thyself to them? They shall help in vain, shall he broken reeds to thee, and what thou thoughtest would be to thee as a river, will be but a broken cistern." 2. This also was because of their sin; the judgment shall unavoidably come upon them which their sin has deserved; and then to what purpose is it to call in for help against it? (v. 19.) "Thine own wickedness shall correct thee, and it is impossible for them to save thee; known and see therefore, upon the whole matter, that it is an evil thing that thou hast forsaken God, for that is, that most of thine enemies enemies indeed, and thy friends false friends in vain." Observe here, (1.) The nature of sin; it is forsaking the Lord as our God; it is the soul's alienation from him, and aversion to him. Cheating to sin is leaving God. (2.) The cause of sin; it is because his fear is not in us. It is for want of a good principle in us, particularly for want of the fear of God, that we are made enemies, not only to God, but to one another. Therefore men forsake their duty to God, because they stand in no awe of him, nor have any dread of his displeasure. (3.) The malignity of sin; it is an evil thing and a bitter. Sin is an evil thing, an evil that has no good in it, an evil that is the root and cause of all other evil; it is evil inproofed upon them, and thay had frount enough to deny it. In this, as in other things, thair way was like that of the adulterous woman, that saus, I have done no such thing.

2. Notwithstanding all their evasions, thay are convicted of it, and found guilty; "How canst thou deny the fact, and say, I have not gone after Baalim? How canst thou deny the fault, and say, I am not polluted?" The prophet speaks with wonder at their impudence; "How canst thou put on a face to say so, when it is certainly, Ps. (xxvii. 12) that unrighteousness is marked before me, saith the Lord God; it is laid up and hidden, to be produced against thee in thie day of judgment; sealed up among his treasures," Deut. xxxii. 34. Job xxi. 19. Hos. xiii. 12. "It is imprudent deep, and stained before me;" so some read it.

Though then endeavour to wash it out, as murderers to get the stain of the blood of the person slain out of their clothes, yet it will never be got out; God's eye is upon it, and we see that his judgment is according to truth. (2.) "Thine own conscience is a witness against thee. See thy way in the valley;" (they had worshipped idols, not only on the high hills, but in the valleys, (Isa. livi. 3, 6,) in the valley over against Beth-peor, (so some;) there they had worshipped Bal-peon; (Deut. xxxiv. 6. Numb. xxx. 3.) this is put before us as the iniquity of Peor; but if it mean any particular valley, surely it is the valley of the son of Hinnom, for that was the place where they sacrificed their children to Moloch, and which therefore witnessed against them more than any other; "look into that valley, and thou canst not know what thou hast done."

III. The aggravations of this sin with whieh they are charged, which speak it exceeding sinful.

1. God had done great things for them, and yet they revoluted from him, and rebelled against him; (v. 20.) Of old time I have broken thy yoke, and burst thy bands; this refers to the bringing of them out of the land of Egypt, and the house of bondage, which they would not remember, (v. 6.) but God did; for when he told them that they should have no other gods before him, he prefixed this as a reason, I am the Lord thy God that brought thee out of the land of Egypt! These bonds of theirs, which God had loosed, should have bound them for ever to him; but they had ungratefully broken the bonds of duty to that God who had broken the bonds of their slavery.

2. They had promised fair, but had not made good their promise; "Thou saidst, I will not transgress; then when the mercy of thy deliverance was fresh, thou wast so sensible of it, that thou wast willing to lay thyself under the most sacred ties to continue faithful to thy God, and never to forsake him." Then they said, Nay but we will serve the Lord, Josh. xxiv. 14. Here it is observable that we would not transgress, we would not offend any more, and yet we have started aside, like a deceitful bow, and repeated and multiplied our transgressions.

3. They had wickedly degenerated from what they were when God first formed them into a people; (v. 21.) I had planted thee a noble vine. The constitution of their government both in church and state was excellent. Like the other laws, statutes ordinances instructive, and very significant; and a generation of good men there was among them when they first settled in Canaan; Israel served the Lord, and kept close to him, all the days of Joshua, and the elders that out-lived Joshua; (Josh. xxiv. 31.) they were then wholly a right seed, likely to remain true, the vines we were planted in with choice vines; but it proved otherwise; the very men of this generation knew not the Lord, nor the works which he had done, (Judg. ii. 10.) and so they were worse at last, that great provocation which they were so notoriously guilty of. 1. They frequented the places of idol worship; (v. 20.) upon every high hill, and under every green tree. Profane shrines, such as the heathen had a foolish faintheartedness and venomed for; thou wast first to one and then to another, like one unsettled, and still uneasy and unsatisfied; but, in all, playing the harlot, worshipping false gods, which is spiritual whoredom, and was commonly accompanied with corporeal idol worship. They had done so in the name of God, wander endlessly, and a vagrant list is inevitable.

They made images for themselves, and gave divine honour to them; (v. 26, 27.) not only the common people, but even the kings and princes, who should have restrained the people from doing ill, and the priests and prophets, who should have taught them to do well, were themselves so wretchedly sottish and stupid, and under the power of such a strong delusion, as to say to a stock, "Thou art my father, thou art my god, the author of my being, to whom I owe duty, and on whom I have a dependence;" saying to a stone, to an idol made of stone, "Thou hast begotten me, or brought me forth; therefore protect me, provide for me, and bring me up." What greater affront could men put upon God who is our father and sustainer? For that he had wrought their disowning of their obligations to him. What greater affront could men put upon themselves and their own reason, than to acknowledge that which is in itself absurd and impossible, and by making stocks and stones their parents, to make themselves no better than stocks and stones? When these were first made the objects of worship, they were supposed to be animated by some celestial power or spirit; but by degrees the thought of this was lost, and so vain did idolaters become in their imagination, even the princes and priests themselves, that the very idol, though made of wood and stone, was supposed to be their father, and adored accordingly.

5. They multiplied these dunghill-deities endlessly; (v. 28.) According to the number of thy cities art thou gods, O Judah. When they had forsaken that God who is one, and all-sufficient for all, (1.) They were not satisfied with any gods they had, but still desired more; that idolatry being in this respect of the same nature with covetousness, which is spiritual idolatry, that the more men have the more they would have; which is a plain evidence, that what men make an idol of they find to be insufficient, and that they will never be satisfied till they come to unto perfect. (2.) They could not agree in the same god; having left the Centre of unity, they fell into endless discord; one city fancied one deity, and another another, and each was anxious to have one of its own, to be near them, and to take special care of them. Thus did they in vain seek that in many gods, which is to be found in one God.

II. The proof of this; no witnesses need be called, it is proved by the notorious evidence of the facts.

1. They went about to deny it, and were ready to plead Not guilty. They pretended that they would acquit themselves from this guilt, they washed themselves with nitre, and took much soap, offered many things in excuse and extenuation of it, v. 22. They pretended that they did not worship the god, but as demons, and mediators between the immortal God and mortal men; or, that it was not divine honour that they gave them, but civil respect; that they sought to evade the condemnation of God's word, and to screen themselves from the dread of his wrath. Nay, some of them had the impudence to deny the thing altogether; they say, "I have not gone after Baalim, v. 23. Because it was done secretly, and industriously concealed, (Ezek. viii. 12.) they thought it could never be and worst till they became the degenerate plants of a strange vine; they were now the reverse of what they were at first; their constitution was quite broken, and there was nothing in them of that good which one which might have expected from a people so happily formed, nothing of the purity and piety of their ancestors. Their vine is as the vine of Sodom; Deut. xxxii. 32. This may fitly be applied to the nature of man; it was planted by its great Author, and sustained by his preservative influences (God has graced and governed them) but it is so universally corrupt, that it is become the degenerate plant of a strange vine, that bears gall and wormwood, and it is so to God, it is highly distasteful and offensive to him.

4. They were violent and eager in the pursuit of their idolatries, dotted on their idols, and were fond of new ones, and they would not be restrained from them, neither by the word of God, nor by his providences; so strong was the impetus with which they were carried out after this sin. They are here compared to a swift dromedary traversing her ways, a female of that species of creatures hunting about for a male, (v. 23.) and, to the same purport, a wild ass used to the wilderness, (v. 24.) not tamed by labour, and therefore very wanton, snuffing up the wind at her pleasure when she comes near the herd ass. Let the reader ask himself, if he would be such in the like case? Who can hinder her from that which she lusts after? They that seek her then, will not weary themselves for her, for they know it is to no purpose; but will have a little patience till she be big with young, till that month comes which is the last of the months that she fulfills, (Job xxxix. 2.) when she is heavy and unwieldy, and then they shall find her, and she cannot outrun them. Note, (1.) Egger lust is a brutish thing, and those that will not be turned away from the gratifying and indulging of it by reason and conscience and honour, are to be reckoned as brute beasts and no better; such as were born, and still are, like the wild ass's colt, let them not be looked upon as rational creatures. (2.) Idolatry is strangely intoxicating, and those that are addicted to it will with great difficulty be cured of it. That lust is as headstrong as any other. (3.) There are some so violently set upon the prosecution of their lusts, that it is to no purpose to attempt to give check to them: they that do it, weary themselves in vain. Ephraim is joined to idols, let him alone. (4.) The time will come when the most fierce will be tamed, and the most wanton will be manageable; when distress and anguish come upon them, then their cars will be open to the discipline that is in that month in which you may find them. Ps. cxlii. 5, 6.

5. They were obstinate in their sin, and, as they could not be restrained, so they would not be reformed, v. 25. Here is, (1.) Fair warning given them of the ruin that this wicked course of life would certainly bring them to at last, with a caution therefore not to persist in it, but to break off from it; he would certainly bring them into a miserable captivity, and make them a reproach and a byword and they should be forced to travel barefoot, and when they would be denied fair water by their oppressors, so that their throat should be dried with thirst; this will be in the end hereof. They that affect strange gods, and strange ways of worship, will justly be made prisoners to a strange king in a strange land. Take up in time therefore thy hand from these fierce ones of thy feet, and thy mouth after them will bring thy throat to thirst; withhold therefore thy foot from these violent pursuits, and thy throat from these violent desires. One would think that it should effectually check us in the career, to consider what it will bring us to at last. (2.) Their rejecting of this fair warning; they said to those that would have persuaded them to repent and return, There is no hope, no, never expect to work upon us, or prevail with us to cast away our idols, for we have loved strangers, and after them we will go; we are resolved we will, and therefore trouble not yourselves or us any more with your admonitions, it is to no purpose. There is no hope that we shall ever break the corrupt habit and disposition we have got, and therefore we may as well yield to it as go about to get the mastery of it.

Note, Their case is very miserable, who have once tasted the sweets of a sensual life, for therefore they cannot, and therefore resolve they will not. But as we must not despair of the mercy of God, but believe that sufficient for the pardon of our sins, though ever so heinous, if we repent, and sue for that mercy, so neither must we despair of the grace of God, but believe that able to subdue our corrupt desires ever so strong, if we pray for and improve that grace. A man must never say, There is no hope, as long as he is on this side hell.

6. They had shamed themselves by their sin, in putting confidence in that which would certainly deceive them in the day of their distress, and putting him away, that would have helped them; (v. 26—28.) As the thief is ashamed when, notwithstanding his arts and his flattery, and all the wiles he can use, he is caught and brought to punishment, So are the house of Israel ashamed, not with a penitent shame for the sin they had been guilty of, but with a penal shame for the disappointment they met with in that sin. They will be ashamed when they find, (1.) That they are forced to cry to the God whom they had put contempt upon. In their prosperity they had turned the back to God, and the face from him; they had slighted him, acted as if they had forgotten him, or did what they could to forget him, would not look toward him, but looked another way; they went from him as fast and as far as they could; but in the time of their trouble they will find no satisfaction but in applying themselves to him; then they will say, Arise, and save us. Their fathers had many a time taken this shame to themselves, (Judg. iii. 9—14.) yet they would not be persuaded to cleave to God, that they might have come to him in their trouble with the more confidence.

(2.) That they have no relief from the gods they have made their court to. They will be ashamed when they perceive that the gods they have made cannot serve them, and that the God who made them will not serve them. To bring them to this discovery, if they will not do this by nature, when they have shown themselves so high with pride, penitence, they are here sent to the gods whom they served, as Judg. x. 14. They cried to God, Arise, and save us, God says of the idols, "Let them arise, and save thee, for then hast no reason to expect that I should. Let them arise, if they can, from the places where they are fixed; let them try whether they can save thee; but then will he be ashamed when they findest that they cannot save thee no good, for though the gods be gods, yet the God who made all things art thou without inhabitant. They are gods of sinners to please themselves with that which will certainly be their grief, and pride themselves in that which will certainly be their shame.

29. Wherefore will ye plead with me ye all have transgressed against me, saith the Lord. 30. In vain have I smitten your children: they received no correction: your own sword hath devoured your prophets, like a destroying lion. 31. O generation, see ye the word of the Lord: Have I been a wilderness unto Israel? a land of darkness? Wherefore say my people, We are lords; we will come no more unto thee? 32. Can a maid forget her ornaments, or a bride her attire? yet my people have forgotten me days without number. 33. Why trimmest thou thy way to seek love? therefore hast thou also taught the wicked ones thy ways. 34. Also in thy skirts is found the blood of the souls of the poor innocents: I have not found it by secret search, but upon all these. 35. Yet thou sayest, Because I am innocent, surely his anger shall turn from me: behold I will plead with thee, because thou sayest, I have not sinned. 36. Why gaddest thou about so much to change thy way? thou also shalt be ashamed of Egypt, as thou wast ashamed of Assyria. 37. Yea, thou shalt go forth from him, and thy hands upon thy head: for the Lord hath rejected thy confidences, and thou shalt not prosper in them.

The prophet here goes on in the same strain, aiming to bring a sinful people to repentance, that their destruction might be prevented.

1. He avers the truth of the charge; it was evident beyond contradiction, it was the greatest absurdity imaginable in them to think of denying it; (v. 29.) "Wherefore hast thou put me upon the proof of it, or wherefore will you go about to plead any thing in excuse of the crime, or to obtain a mitigation of the sentence? Your plea will certainly be overruled, and judgment given against you: you know you have all transgressed, one as well as another; why then do you quarrel with me for contending with you?" He aggravates it from the consideration both of their incorrigibleness and of their ingratitude.

(1.) They had been wrought upon by the judgments of God which they had been under; (v. 36.) In vain have I smitten your children, the children or people of Judah. They had been under divine rebukes of many kinds. God therein designed to bring them to repentance, but it was in vain, they did not receive it, nor did they plead with me, and put me upon the proof of it, or wherefore will you go about to plead anything in excuse of the crime, or to obtain a mitigation of the sentence? Your plea will certainly be overruled, and judgment given against you: you know you have all transgressed, one as well as another; why then do you quarrel with me for contending with you?

(2.) They had not been wrought upon by the word of God, which he had sent them in the mouth of his servants, and in affliction; they had not been smitten in vain, they were so soundly before repentance, that they were as untractable as the old ones that had been long accustomed to do evil.

(3.) They had not been wrought upon by the favours God had bestowed upon them; (v. 31.) O generation, (the) does not call them, as he might, O foolishness and perverse generation, O generation of fools, but speaks gently, O ye men of this generation, see ye the word of the Lord, do not only hear it, but consider it diligently, apply your minds closely to it. As we are bid to hear the rod, (Micah vi. 9.) for that has its voice, so are we bid to hear the word, for that has its visions, its views. It intimates, therefore, that he will not be hid but is clearly deniable; you may see it to be very evident; it is written as with a sun-beam, so that he that runs may read it: Have I been a wilderness to Israel, a land of darkness? Note, None of those who have had any dealings with God ever had reason to complain of him as a wilderness, or a land of darkness.

32. They were blessed with the fruits of the earth, and therefore cannot say that he has been a wilderness to us, a dry and barren land, that (as Mr. Gataker expresses it) he has held us to hard meat, as cattle fed upon the common; no, his sheep have been led into green pastures. He has also blessed us with the lights of heaven, and has not withheld them, so that we cannot say, He has been to us a land of darkness. He has caused his sun to shine, as well as his rain to fall, upon the evil and the good. Or, the meaning is, in general, that the service of God has not been to any either as an unpleasant or an unprofitable service. God sometimes has led his people through a wilderness, and a land of darkness, but he himself was then to them all that which they needed, he so fed them with manna, and led them by a pillar of fire, that it was to them a holy field and a land of light. The world is to be such, where none make it their home and their portion, a wilderness, and a land of darkness, vanity and vexation of spirit; but those that dwell in God, have the lives fallen to them in pleasant places.

(4.) Instead of being wrought upon by these, they were grown intolerably insolent and impious. They say, We are lords, we will come no more unto thee. Now that they were become a potent kingdom, or thought themselves such, they set up for themselves, and shock off their dependence upon God. This is the language of presumptuous sinners, and it is not only very impious and profane, but very unreasonable and foolish. (1.) It is absurd for us, who are subjects, to say, We are lords, (that is, rulers,) and we will come no more to God to receive commands from him. None is King of old, so he is King for ever, and we cannot set up for ourselves, and speak from under his authority. (2.) It is absurd for us, who are beggars, to say, We are lords, that is, We are rich, and we will come no more to God, to receive favourers from him, as if we could live without him, and need not to be beholden to him. God justly takes it ill, when those to whom he has been a bountiful Benefactor, say not only not for hearing from him or speaking to him.

3. He lays the blame of all their wickedness upon their forgetting God; (v. 32.) They have forgotten me; they have industriously banished the thoughts of God out of their minds, justly those thoughts cut with thoughts of their idols, and avoided all these things that would put them in mind of God. (1.) They have left him far away, for they are in covenant with him, and professing relationship to him, and had the tokens of his presence in the midst of them, and of his favour to them, yet they forget him. (2.) They have long neglected him, days without number, time out of mind, as we say. They had not for a great while entertained any serious thoughts of him; so that they seem quite to have forgotten him, and received never any comfort from him. How many days of our lives have passed without suitable remembrance of God? Who can number these empty days? (3.) They had not had such a regard and af fection to him, as young ladies generally have to their fine clothes; Can a maid forget her ornaments, or a bride her attire? No, their hearts are upon them, they value them so much, and the beholders upon them, that they are ever and anon thinking and speaking of them; when they are to appear in public, they do not forget any of their ornaments, but put every one in its place, as they are described, Is. iii. 18, &c. And yet my people have forgotten me. It is sad that any should be more in love with their fine clothes than with their God, and will fasten with them, and the beholders upon part with that, than leave any of their ornaments behind them, or part with them. Is not God our Ornament? Is he not a Crown of glory, and a Diadem of beauty, to his people? Did we look upon him to be so, and upon our religion as an ornament of grace to our head, and chains about our neck, (Prov. i. 9.) we should be as mindful of them as every maid was of her ornaments, or a bride of her attire; we should be as careful to preserve them, and as fond to appear in them.

4. He shows them what a bad influence their sins had had upon others; the sins of God's professing people harden and encourage those about them in their evil ways, especially when they appear forward and ringleaders in sin; (v. 33.) Why tristimn thou thy way to seek love? There is an allusion here to a barren woman, who can not conceive, and are reminded themselves by their olging looks and gay dresses, as Jezabel, who painted her face, and tired her head. Thus had they courted their neighbours into sinful confederacies with them, and communion in their idolatries, and had taught the wicked ones their ways, their ways of mixing God's institutions with their idolatrous customs and usages, which was not only an insult upon God, but the subversion of the ways of his people. They were all the more hardened, and made the ways of their idolatry worse than that of others. Those have a great deal to answer for, who, by their fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, make wicked ones more wicked than otherwise they would be.

5. He charges them with the guilt of murder added to the guilt of their idolatry; (v. 34.) Also in thy skirts is bled the blood of the poor innocents, which cried to heaven, and for which God was now making inquisition. The reference is to the children that were offered in sacrifice to Moloch; or, it may be taken more generally for all the innocent blood which Manasseh shed, and with which he had filled Jerusalem, (2 Kings xxiv. 16.) the righteous blood, especially the blood of the prophets and others that witnessed against their impieties. This blood was found not by secret search, nor by digging, (so the word is,) but upon all their was above ground. This intimates that the guilt of this kind, which they had contracted, was certain and evident, not doubtful, or which would bear a dispute; and that it was avowed and barefaced, and which they had not so much sense either of shame or fear as to endeavour to conceal; which would appear at the sight of such an aspect.

6. He overrules their plea of Not guilty. Though this matter be so plain, yet thou sayest, Because I am innocent, surely his anger shall turn from me; and again, Thou sayest I have not sinned, (v. 35.) therefore I will plead with thee, and will convince thee of thy mistake. Because they deny the charge, and stand upon their own justification, therefore God will deal with them, and plead with them, both by his word and by his rod. Those shall be made to know how much they deceived themselves. (1.) Who say that they have not offended God, that they are innocent, though they have been guilty of the grossest enormities. (2.) Who expect that God will be reconciled to them, though they do not repent and reform. They own that they had been under the tokens of God's anger, but they think that it was causeless, and that they by pleading innocence had proved it to be so, and therefore they may conclude that God will immediately set his face against them, and his anger shall be turned from them. This is very provoking, and God will plead with them, and convince them that his anger is just, for they have sinned and he will never cease his controversy, till they, instead of justifying themselves thus, humbly, and judge, and condemn themselves.

7. He upbraids them with the shameful disownments that they had attached to their own persons, as security of their confidence, while they made God their Enemy, v. 36, 37. It was a piece of spiritual idolatry they were often guilty of, that they trusted in an arm of flesh, and their hearts therein departed from the Lord. Now here he shows them the folly of it. (1.) They were restless, and unsatisfied in the choice of their confidences; Why gildst thou about so much to change thy way? Doubtless it is because thou meetest not with that in those thou didst confide in, which thou promisedst thyself. Those that make God their Hope, and walk in a continual dependence upon him, need not gud about to change their way; for their souls may return to him, and repose in him as their Rest; but they that trust in creatures will be perpetually uneasy, like Noah's dove, which found no place to set foot in, (and, like Noah's dove, Eve) in all the things they trust to fail them, and yet they think to change for the better, but they will be still disappointed. They first trusted to Assyria, and when that proved a broken reed, they depended upon Egypt, and that proved no better. Creatures being vanity, they will be vexation of spirit to all these that put their confidence in them; they gud about, seeking rest, and finding none. (2.) They were quite dispossessed, and left as fatherless and alone; the prophet tells them they should be; Thou shalt be ashamed of Egypt, which thou now trustedst in, as formerly thou wast of Assyria, who distressed them, and helped them not, 2 Chron. xxvii. 20. The Jews were a peculiar people in their profession of religion, and for that reason none of the neighbouring nations cared for them, nor could heartily love them: and yet the Jews were still volunteering and confessing in them, and were well enough served when deceived by them. See what will come of it; (v. 37.) Thou shalt go forth from him, thine ambassadors or envoys shall return from Egypt re infecta—disappointed, and therefore with their hands upon their heads, lamenting the desperate condition of their people. Or, Thou shalt go forth from him, into captivity in a strange land, with those hands upon their heads, holding it because it aches. (Ubi dolor, ibi digitus—Where the pain is the finger will be applied) or as people ashamed, for Tamar, in the height of her confusion, laid her hand on her head, 2 Sam. xiii. 19. And Egypt, that thou rechast on, shall not be able to prevent it, or to rescue thee out of captivity. They that will not lay their hand on their hearts in God's work now, and will not be made to lay their hand on their head in the work of God out of the world, which works death. And no wonder that Egypt cannot help them, when God will not. If the Lord do not help thee, whence should I? The Egyptians are broken reeds, for the Lord has rejected thy confidences; he will not make use of them for thy relief, will neither so far honour them, nor so far give commendation of his confidence in them, as to make them to be the instruments of any good to thee, and therefore thou shalt not prosper in them; they shall not stand thee in thy stead, nor give thee any satisfaction. As there is no counsel or wisdom that can prevail against the Lord, so there is none that can prevail with him. Some read it, The Lord has rejected thee from the confidences, because thou hast dealt so unfaithfully with him as to trust in their creatures, nay, in his enemies, when thou shouldest have trusted in him only, he has abandoned thee to thy destruction from which thou thoughtest thus to have sheltered thyself; and then thou canst not prosper, for none ever either hardened himself against God, or estranged himself from God, and prospered.

CHAP. III.

The foregoing chapter was wholly taken up with reproofs, and threatenings against the people of God; for the apostates from him; but in this chapter, gracious invitations and encouragements are given them to return and repent, notwithstanding the multitude and greatness of their provocations, which are here aggravated, to magnify the mercy of God, and to show that as sin abounded grace did much more abound. Here, 1. It is further showed how bad they had been, and how well they deserved to be quite abandoned, and yet how ready God was to receive them into his favour, upon their repentance, v. 1. 5. II. The impenitence of Judah, and their persisting in sin, are aggravated from the judgments of God upon Israel, which they should have taken warning by, v. 6. 11. III. Great encouragements are given to these backsliders to return and repent; and promises made of great mercy which God had in store for them, and which he should prepare them for by bringing them into his house. Vers. 11, 12. IV. The charge renewed against them for their apostasy from God, and the invitation repeated to return and repent, to which are here added the words that are put in their mouth, which they should make use of in their return to God, v. 20. 29.

1. They say, If a man put away his wife, and she go from him, and become another man's, shall he return unto her again? shall not that land be greatly polluted: but thou hast played the harlot with many lovers; yet return again to me, saith the Lord. 2. Lift up thine eyes unto the high places, and see where thou hast not been lien with: in the ways hast thou sat for them, as the Arabian in the wilderness; and thou hast polluted the land with thy whoredoms, and with thy wickedness. 3. Therefore the showers have been withheld, and there hath been no latter rain; and thou hast a whore's forehead, thou refusedst to be ashamed. 4. Wilt thou not from this time cry unto me, My father, thou art the guide of my youth? 5. Will he reserve his anger for ever? will he keep it to the end? Behold, thou hast spoken and done evil things as thou couldst.

These verses some make to belong to the sermon in the foregoing chapter; and they open a door of hope to those who receive the conviction of the reproofs we had; therefore God wounds, that he may heal. Now observe here, 1. How basely this people had forsaken God, and gone a whoring from him. The charge runs very high here: 1. They had multiplied their idols, and their idolatry. They had adored one strange god among them that had been bad enough, but they were insatiable in their lustings after false worship; Thou hast played the harlot with many lovers, v. 1. She was become a common prostitute to idols; not a foolish deity was set up in all the neighbourhood, but the Jews would have it quickly. Where was a high place in the country, but they had an idol in it? v. 2. Ibid. In remembrance, it is good to make sorrowful reflections upon the particular acts of sin we have been guilty of, and the several places and companies where it has been committed, that we may give glory to God, and take shame to ourselves, by a particular confession of it.

2. They had sought opportunity for their idolatry, and had sent about to inquire for new gods; In the high ways hast thou sat for them, as Tamar when she sat on the ground of a harlot, (Gen. xxxviii. 14.) and as the foolish woman, that sits to call passengers, who go right on their way, Prov. ix. 14. 15. As the Arabian in the wilderness; the Arabian heathen, (so some,) that courts customers, and waits for the merchants to get a good bargain and forestall the market; or, the Arabian thief, (so others,) that watches for his prey; so had they waited either to court new gods to come among them, the newer the better, and the more fond they were of them, or to court others with them in the idolatries: they were not only sinners, but Satans; not only traitors themselves, but tempters to others.

3. They were grown very impudent in sin. They not only polluted themselves, but their land, with their whoredoms and with their wickedness; (v. 2.) for it was universal and unpunished, and so became a national sin. And yet, (v. 3.) Thou hast had a whore's forehead, a bazon face of thy own. Thou refusedst to be ashamed; thou didst enough to shame thyself for evil; but thou wouldst shame thyself. Blushing is the colour of virtue, or at least a relic of it; but those that are fast shame, (we say,) are fast hope. Those that have an adulterer's heart, if they indulge that, will come at length to have a whore's forehead, void of all shame and modesty. 4. They abounded in all manner of sin. They polluted the land not only with their whoredoms, their idolatries, but with their wickedness, or malice, (v. 2.) sins against the second table; for how can we think that those should be true to their neighbour, that are false to their God? Nay, (v. 5.) thou hast spoken and done evil things as thou couldst; and wouldest have spoken and done worse, if thou hadst known how; thy will was to do it, but thou lackedst opportunity. Note, Those are wicked indeed that sin to the utmost of their power; that never refuse to comply with a temptation because they should not, but because they cannot.

II. How gently God had corrected them for their sins. Instead of raining fire and brimstone upon them, because, like Sodom, they hadoured their sin, and had gone after strange gods, as Sodom after strange flesh, he only withheld the showers from them, and that only one part of the year, there has been no latter rain; which might serve as an intimation to them of their continual dependence upon God; when they had the former rain, that was no security to them for the latter, but they must still look up to God; but it had not this effect. How gently God had corrected them, and they had abandoned them utterly, and refused ever to receive them again, though they should return; this would have been but according to the known rule of divorces, v. 1. They say, it is an adjudged case, nay, it is a case in which the law is very express, and it is what every body knows and speaks of, (Deut. xxxiv. 4.) that if a woman be once put away for whoredom, and be not married to another man, her first husband shall not marry upon any pretence whatsoever, take her again to be his wife; such playing fast and loose with the marriage-bond would be a horrid profanation of that ordinance, and would greatly pollute that land. Observe what the law says in this case; They say, every one will say, and subscribe to the equity of the law in it; for every man finds something in himself, that forbids him to entertain one that is another
And in like manner they had reason to expect that God should refuse ever to take them to his people again, who had not only been joined to one strange god, but had played the harlot with many lovers. If we had to do with a man like ourselves, after such provocations as we have been guilty of, he would have been implacable, and we might have despised of his being reconciled to us. Jer. vi. He suggests he not only invites them, but directs them, to return to him.

1. He encourages them to hope that they should find favour with him, upon their repentance: "Though thou hast been bad, yet return again to me," v. 1. This implies a promise that he will receive them: "Return, and thou shalt be welcome." God has not tied himself by the laws which he made for the discharge of his religion, that men may have; he will be more kind to Israel, for the sake of his covenant with them, than ever any injured husband was to an adulterous wife; for in receiving penitents, as much as in any thing, he is God, and not man.

2. He therefore kindly expects that they will repent, and return to him, and he directs them what to say to him: "Wilt thou not cry unto me? Wilt thou not from that time cry unto me? Wilt thou not cried hither? wilt thou not from this time apply thyself to me? From this time of conviction and correction, now that thou hast been made to see thy sins, (v. 2) and to smart for them, (v. 3) wilt thou not now forsake them, and return to me, saying, I will go and return to my first husband, for then it was better with me than now?" Hos. vii. 1. 2. "From this time that thou hast had so kind an invitation to return, and assurance that thou shalt be well received: will not this grace of God overcome thee? Now that pardon is proclaimed, wilt thou not come in, and take the benefit of it? Surely thou wilt." (1.) He expects they will claim relation to God, as theirs: Wilt thou not cry unto me, My Father, thou art the guide of my youth? [1.] They will speak as to God a Father, he being from before their birth, butomit for their unfruitful conduct to him, (Father, I have sinned,) and will hope to find in him the tender compassions of a Father towards a returning prodigal. They will come to him as a Father, to whom they will make their complaints, and in whom they will put their confidence for relief and succour. They will now own him as their Father, and themselves fatherless without him; and therefore hoping to find mercy with him, as those penitents, Hos. xiv. 3. [2.] They will come to him as the Guide of their youth, as their Husband; for so that relation is described, Mal. ii. 14. "Though thou hast gone after many lovers, surely thou wilt at length remember the love of thine espousals, and return to the husband of thy youth." Or, it may be, they come to him as the Guide of my youth. Youth needs a guide. In our return to God, we must thankfully remember that he was the Guide of our youth, in the way of comfort; and we must faithfully covenant that he shall be our Guide from henceforward in the way of duty, and that we will follow his guidance, and give up ourselves entirely to it; that in all doubtful cases, we will consult with what concerns our souls, by attending to his word, and that way we may have the assurance of his presence with us, Hos. xii. 6. (2.) He expects they will appeal to the mercy of God, and crave the benefit of that mercy, (v. 5.) that they will reason thus with themselves for their encouragement to return to him; "Will he reserve his anger for ever? Surely he will not, for he has proclaimed his name gracious and merciful." Repenting sinners may encourage themselves with this, that though God chide, he will not always chide; though he be angry, he will not keep his anger to the end, but that though he cause grief, he will have compassion, and may thus plead for reconciliation. Some will say, Will he not entirely man crying to me, My Father?" Even when they were most addicted to idols, they pretended a regard to God and his service, and kept up the forms of godliness and devotion. It is a shameful thing for men thus to call, when God came not to do the works of the devil; (as the Jews, John viii. 44.) to call him the Guide of their youth, and yet give up themselves to walk after the flesh; and to flatter themselves with the expectation that his anger shall have an end, while they are continually treasuring up to themselves wrath against the day of wrath.

6. The Lord said also unto me in the days of Josiah the king, Hath thou seen that which backsliding Israel hath done? she is gone up upon every high mountain, and under every green tree, and there hath played the harlot. And I said, after she had done all these things, Turn thou unto me: but she returned not. And her treacherous sister Judah saw it. 8. And I saw, when for all the causes whereby backsliding Israel committed adultery, I had put her away, and given her a bill of divorce; yet her treacherous sister Judah feared not, but went and played the harlot also. 9. And it came to pass through the lightness of her whoredom, that she defiled the land, and committed adultery with stones and with stocks. 10. And yet for all this her treacherous sister Judah hath not turned unto me with her whole heart, but feignedly, saith the Lord.

11. And the Lord said unto me, The backsliding Israel hath justified herself more than treacherous Judah.

The date of this sermon must be observed, in order to the right understanding of it; it was in the days of Josiah, who set on foot a blessed work of reformation, in which he was hearty, but the people were not sincere in their compliance with it; to prove them for that, and warn them of the consequences of their hypocrisy, is the scope of that which God here said to the prophet, and which he delivered to them. The case of the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah is here compared, the ten tribes that revolted from the house of David, and the tribe of Jerusalem, and the two tribes that adhered to both. The distinct history of those two kingdoms we have in the two books of the Kings, and here we have an abstract of both, as far as relates to this matter.

1. Here is a short account of Israel, the ten tribes. Perhaps the prophet had been just reading the history of that, and had been elegantly observing, how all the kingdom of Israel, when God said, Hast thou seen what backsliding Israel has done? v. 6. For he could not see it otherwise than in history, they having been carried into captivity.
long before he was born: but what we read in the hanes of scripture should instruct us and affect same, as ourselves had been eye-witnesses of it.
She is called backsliding Israel, because that kingdom was first founded in an apostasy from the divine institutions, both in church and state. Now he had been concerning them, (1.) That they were wretchedly addicted to idiety; they had played the harlot upon every high mountain, and under every green tree; (v. 6.
they had worshipped other gods in their high places and groves; and no marvel, when from the first they had worshipped God by the images of the golden calves at Daju and Bethel. The way of idiety is down-hill: they that are in love with images, and will have them, soon become in love with other gods, and will have them too; for how should they stick at the breach of the first commandment, who make no conscience of the second?
(2) That God by his prophets had invited and encouraged them to repent and reform; (v. 7.)
"after she had done all these things, for which she might justly have been abandoned, yet I said unto her, Turn thou unto me, and I will receive thee."
Though they had forsaken both the house of David,
the kingdom of Judah, and had given themmen righteous divinity—God, without dispute, yet God sent his prophets among them, to call them to return to him, to the worship of him only, not insisting; so much as one would have expected upon their return to the house of David, but pressing their return to the house of Aaron: we read not that Elijah, that great reformer, ever mentioned their return to the house of David, but that they were pressed by the word of God, for their return to the faithful service of the true God according as they had it among them. It is serious piety that God stands upon more than even his own rituals.
(3.) That, notwithstanding this, they had persisted in their idolatries; but she returned not, and God saw it; he took notice of it, and was much displeased with it, v. 7, 8. Note, God keeps account, whether we do or no, how often he has called us to turn to him, and we have refused.
(4.) That he had therefore cast them off, and given them up into the hands of their enemies; (v. 8.)
When I saw (so it may be read) that for all the actions wherein she had committed adultery, I must dismiss her, I gave her a bill of divorces, God divorced them out of his protection, and left them an easy prey to any that would lay hands on them; when he scattered all their synagogues and schools of the prophets, and excluded them from laying any further claim to the covenant made with their fathers. Note, Those will justly be divorced from God, that join themselves to such as are rivals to God. For proof of this way, and see what God did to Israel.
2. Let us now see what was the case of Judah, the kingdom of the two tribes; she is called thy treacherous sister Judah; a sister, because descended from the same common stock, Abraham and Jacob; but as Israel had the character of a back-slider, so Judah is called treacherous, because, though she professed to keep close to God when his ways were hid, (she adhered to the kings and priests that were of God's own appointing, and did not withdraw from her allegiance, so that it was expected she should deal faithfully,) yet she proved treacherous and false, and unfaithful to her professions and promises. Note, The treachery of those who pretend to cleave to God, will be reckoned for,
as well as the treachery of those who openly revolved from him. Judah said what Israel did, and what came of it, and should have taken warning; Israel's capitulation was intended for Judah's admonition, but it had not the designed effect. Judah feared not, ciful, saith the Lord, and I will not keep anger for ever. 13. Only acknowledge thine iniquity, that thou hast transgressed against the Lord thy God, and hast scattered thy ways to the strangers under every green tree, and ye have not obeyed my voice, saith the Lord. 14. Turn, O backsliding children, saith the Lord; for I am married unto you: and I will take you one of a city, and two of a family, and I will bring you to Zion: 15. And I will give you pastors according to my heart, which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding. 16. And it shall come to pass, when ye be multiplied and increased in the land, in those days, saith the Lord, they shall say no more, The ark of the covenant of the Lord; neither shall it come to mind, neither shall they remember it, neither shall they visit it, neither shall that be done any more. 17. At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem; neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart. 18. In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers. 19. But I said, How shall I put thee among the children, and give thee a pleasant land, a goodly heritage of the hosts of nations? And I said, Thou shalt call me, My Father; and shalt not turn away from me.

Here is a great deal of gospel in these verses, both that which was always gospel, God's readiness to pardon, sin, and to receive and entertain returning repenting sinners, and those blessings which were in a special manner reserved for gospel-times, the forming and founding of the gospel-church, by bringing into it the children of God that were scattered abroad, the superseding of the ceremonial law, and the uniting of Jews and Gentiles, typified by the uniting of Israel and Judah in their return out of captivity.

The prophet is directed to proclaim these words toward the north, for they are to call to backsliding Israel, the ten tribes that were carried captive into Assyria, which lay north from Jerusalem. That way he must look, to show that God had not forgotten them, though their brethren had, and to upbraid the men of Judah with their obstinacy in refusing to answer the calls given them. One might as well call to them who lay many hundred miles off in the land of the north; they will as soon hear as these unbelieving and disobedient people; backsliding Israel will sooner accept of mercy, and have the benefit of it, than treacherous Judah. And perhaps the proclaiming of these words toward the north, looks as far forward as the preaching of repentance and remission of sins unto all nations, beginning at Jerusalem, Luke xxiv. 47. A call to Israel in the land of the north, is a call to others in that land, even as many as belong to the election of grace; when it was suspected that Christ would go to the dispersed Jews among the Gentiles, it was concluded that he would teach the Gentiles, John vii. 55. So here,

1. There is an invitation given to backsliding Israel, and in them to the backsliding Gentiles, to return unto God, the God from whom they had revolted; (v. 12.) Return, O backsliding Israel. And again, (v. 14.) O backsliding children, return your backslidings, return to your allegiance; come back to that good way which you have missed, and out of which you have turned aside.” Pursuant to this invitation, 1. They are encouraged to return; Repent, and be converted, and your sins shall be blotted out, Acts ii. 19. You have incurred God's displeasure, but return to me, and I will not cause my anger to return to you, though I am ready to fall upon sinners, as a lion falls on his prey, and there is none to deliver; as a mountain of loud falling on them, to sink them past recovery into the lowest hell. But if they repent it shall be turned away, Isa. xii. 1. I will not keep mine anger for ever, but will be reconciled, for I am merciful. We that are sinful, were for ever undone, if God were merciful; but his goodness of his nature encourages us to hope that if we by repentance and qualification we have done against him, he will by a pardoning unanswerable pardon he has said against us. 2. They are directed how to return; (v. 13.) “Only acknowledge thine iniquity, own thyself in a fault, and thereby take shame to thyself, and give glory to God.” I will not keep my anger for ever; (that is a previous punishment,) he shall be delivered from that anger of God which is everlastingly reprobate, it shall come; but upon what terms? Very easy and reasonable ones. Only acknowledge thy sins; if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive them. This will aggravate the condemnation of sinners, that the terms of pardon and peace were brought so low, and yet they would not come up to them. If the prophet had bid them do some great things, would they not have done it? How much more when he says, Only acknowledge thine iniquity? 2 Kings v. 13. In confussing sin, (1.) We must own the corruption of our nature; Acknowledge thine iniquity; the perverseness and irregularity of thy nature. (2.) We must own our actual sins, “that thou hast transgressed against the Lord thy God, hast affronted him and offended him.” We must own our present, our transgressions, “that thou hast scattered thy ways to the strangers, run hither and thither in pursuit of thine idols, under every green tree. Wherever thou hast rambled, thou hast left behind thee the marks of thy folly. (4.) We must aggravate our sin from the disobedience that there is in it to the divine law. The sinfulness of sin is the worst thing in it; “I have not obeyed thy voice, acknowledge that, and let that burn up more the guiltiness of sin.

II. Here are precious promises made to these backsliding children, if they do return; which were in part fulfilled in the return of the Jews out of their captivity, many that belonged to the ten tribes having perhaps joined themselves to those of the two tribes, in the prospect of their deliverance, and returning with them; but is to have it full accomplishment in the prospect that many and the gathering together of the children of God that were scattered abroad to that. “Return, for though you are backsliders, yet you are children; nay, though a treacherous wife, yet a wife, for I am married unto you, (v. 14.) and will not disown the relation.” Thus God remembers his covenant with their fathers, that marriage-covenant, and in consideration of that he remembers their part, and, I say, I will do, I will do, I will do, I will do. (2 Kings v. 14.) He promises to gather them together from all places whither they are dispersed and scattered abroad; (John xi. 52.) I will take you, one of a city and two of a family, or clan; and I will bring you to Zion. All these that by repentance return to their duty, shall return to their former comfort. Observe, (1.) God will graciously receive those that return to him, nay, it is he that by his distinguishing grace takes them out from among the rest that persist in their ungodliness, and delivers them from what they had been undone. (2.) Of the many that have backslidden from God, there are but few, very few in comparison, that return to him, like the gleanings of the vintage; one of a city, and two of a country; Christ's flock is a little flock, and few there be that find the strait gate. (3.) Of those few, though dispersed, yet not one shall be lost. The flock is not scattered, but it is scattered, they are out that one; he shall not be overlooked in a crowd, but shall be brought safe to Zion, safe to Heaven. The scattered Jews shall be brought to Jerusalem, and those of the ten tribes shall be as welcome there as those of the two. God's chosen, scattered all the world over, shall be brought to the gospel-church, that mount Zion, the heavenly Jerusalem, that holy hill on which Christ reigns.

2. He promises to set those over them that shall be every way blessings to them; (v. 15.) I will give you pastors after my heart, alluding to the character given of David, when God pitched upon him to be king; (1 Sam. xiii. 14.) The Lord hath sought him a man after his own heart. Observe, (1.) When a church is gathered it must be governed. I will have them be, who shall make his will their rut to be under discipline, not as wild beasts, that range at pleasure, but as sheep that are under the direction of a shepherd. I will give them pastors, magistrates and ministers; both are God's ordinance for the support of his kingdom. (2.) It is well with a people when their pastors are after God's own heart; such as they should be, such as he would have them be, who shall make his will their rut to be under discipline, not as wild beasts, that range at pleasure, but as sheep that are under the direction of a shepherd. I will give them pastors, magistrates and ministers, both are God's ordinance for the support of his kingdom.

3. He promises that there should be no more occasion for the ark of the covenant, which had been so much the glory of the tabernacle first, and afterward of the temple, and was the token of God's presence with them; that shall be set aside, and there shall be no more inquiry after, nor inquiring of it; (v. 16.) When ye be multiplied and increased in the land, when the kingdom of the Messiah shall be set up, which by the accession of the Gentiles will bring into the church a vast increase, (and the days of the Messiah the Jewish masters themselves acknowledge to be here intended,) then they shall say no more, The ark of the covenant of the Lord, they shall have it no more among them to value, or value themselves upon, because they shall have a pure spiritual way of worship set up, in which there shall be no occasion for any of those external ordinances, with the ark of the covenant the whole ceremonial law shall be set aside, and all the institutions of it, for Christ, the Truth of all those types, exhibited to us in the word and sacraments of the New Testament, will be to us instead of all. It is very likely (whatever the Jews suggest to the contrary) that the ark of the covenant was in the sCOND temple, being restored by Cyrus with the other vessels of the house of the Lord, Ezra ii. 7. But in the gospel-temple Christ is the Ark, he is the Propitiatory, or Mercy-seat; and it is the spiritual presence of God in his ordinances that we are now to expect. Many expressions are here used for the bringing in the Ark, which doth not imply that it shall set come to mind, that they shall not remember, but they shall not visit it, that none of these things shall be any more done; for the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth, John iv. 24. But this variety of expressions is used, to show that the ceremonies of the Law of Moses should be totally and finally abolished, never to be used any more among men. It is not said that those who were so long obedient to them should be weaned from them; and that they would not quite let them go till their Holy city and Holy house should both be levelled with the ground.

4. He promises that the gospel-church, here called Jerusalem, shall become eminent and conspicuous, v. 17. Two things shall make it famous. (1.) God's special residence and dominion in it. It shall be called, The throne of the Lord; the throne of God's glory, for that shines forth in the church; the throne of his government, for that also is erected there, there he rules his willing people by his word and Spirit, and brings every thought into obedience to himself. As the gospel went ground, this throne of the Lord was set up there where Satan's seat had been. It is the throne of the Lord, that by faith come to this Jerusalem, come to God the Judge of all, and to Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant, Heb. xii. 22, 23. (2.) The accession of the Gentiles to it. All the nations shall be discipled, and so gathered to the church, and shall become subjects to that throne of the Lord which is there set up, and devoted to the honour of the name of the Lord which is there both manifested and called upon.

5. He promises that there shall be a wonderful reformation wrought in those that are gathered to the church: They shall not walk any more after the imagination of their evil hearts. They shall not live as they list, but live by rules; not do according to their own corrupt appetites, but according to the will of God. See what leads in sin, the imagination of the heart. It is the throne of the Lord, that by faith come to this Jerusalem, come to God the Judge of all, and to Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant, Heb. xii. 22, 23. (2.) The accession of the Gentiles to it. All the nations shall be discipled, and so gathered to the church, and shall become subjects to that throne of the Lord which is there set up, and devoted to the honour of the name of the Lord which is there both manifested and called upon.

6. That Judah and Israel shall be happily united in one body, v. 18. They were so in their return out of captivity, and their settlement again in Canaan; The house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, as being perfectly agreed, and become one stick in the hand of the Lord, as Ezekiel also foretold, ch. xxxvii. 16, 17. Both Assyria and Chaldea fell into the hands of Cyrus, and his proclamation extended to all the Jews in all his dominions. And therefore we have reason to think that many of the house of Israel came with those of Judah into the land of the north; though at first there returned but forty-two thousand (whom we have an account of, Ezra ii.) yet Josephus says, (Antiq. lib. 11. cap. 4.) that some few years after, under Darius, Zerubbabel went, and fetched up above four millions of souls, to the land that was given for an inheritance to their fathers. And we never read of such anesties and enmities between Israel and Judah as had been formerly. This happy concurrence between Israel and Judah in Canaan, was a type of the uniting of Jews and Gentiles in the gospel-church, when, all enmities being slain, they should become one sheeplid under one shepherd.
III. Here is some difficulty started, that lies in the way of all this mercy; but an expidient is found to get over it.
1. God asks, How shall I do this for thee? Not as if God showed favour with reluctance, as he punishes with a How shall I give thee up? Hos. xi. 8, 9. No, though he is slow to anger, he is swift to show mercy. But it intimates that we are utterly unworthy of his favours, that we have no reason to expect them. For there is nothing in us to displease him, that we can lay no claim to them, and that he contrives how to do it in such a way as may save the honour of his justice and holiness in the government of the world; means must be devised, that his banished be not for ever expelled from him, 2 Sam. xiv. 14. How shall I do it? (1.) Even backsliders, if they return and repent, shall be put among the children; and who could ever have expected that? Behold, what manner of love is this! John iii. 1. How should we, who are so mean and weak, so worthless and unworthy, and so provoking, ever be put among the children? (2.) Those whom God puts among the children, to them he will give the pleasant land, the land of Canaan, that glory of all lands, that goodly heritage of the hosts of nations, which nations and their burdens are for ever, whereas the hosts of the nations have now got possession of: it was a type of heaven, where there are pleasures for evermore; now who could expect a place in that pleasant land, that has so often despised it, (Ps. cxxiv. 24.) and is so unworthy of it, and unfit for it? Is this the manner of men? 2. He does himself return answer to this question; But I said, Thou shalt call me, My Father. God does himself answer all the objections that are taken from our unworthiness, or they would never be got over. (1.) That he may put returning penitents among the children, he will give them the Spirit of adoption, teaching them to cry, Abba, Father, Gal. iv. 6. Thou shalt call me, My Father; thou shalt return to me, and resign thyself to me as a Father, and that shall recommend thee to my favour. (2.) That he may give them the pleasant land, he will put his fear in their hearts, that they may never turn from him, but may persevere to the end.

20. Surely as a wife treacherously departs from her husband, so have ye dealt treacherously with me, O house of Israel, saith the Lord. 21. A voice was heard upon the high places, weeping and supplications of the children of Israel: for they have perverted their way, and they have forgotten the Lord their God. 22. Return, ye backsliding children, and I will heal your backslidings. Behold, we come unto thee; for thou art the Lord our God. 23. Truly in vain is salvation hoped for from the hills, and from the multitude of mountains: truly in the Lord our God is the salvation of Israel. 24. For shame hath devoured the labour of our fathers from their youth; their flocks and their herd, their sons and their daughters. 25. We lie down in our shame, and our confusion covereth us: for we have sinned against the Lord our God, and we are our fathers, from our youth even unto this day, and have not obeyed the voice of the Lord our God.

Here is,
1. The charge God exhibits against Israel for their treacherous departures from him, v. 20. As an adulterous wife elopes from her husband, so have they gone a whoring from God. They were joined to God by a marriage covenant, but they broke that covenant, they dealt treacherously with God, who had always dealt kindly and faithfully with them. Treacherous dealing with men like ourselves is bad enough, but to deal treacherously with God is to deal treasonably.

II. Their conviction and confession of the truth of this charge, v. 21. When God reproved them for their apostasy, there were some among them, even such as God would take, and bring to Zion, whose voice was heard upon the high places, weeping and praying, humbling themselves before the God of their fathers, lamenting their calamities and their sins, the procuring cause of them; for this is that which they lament, for this they bewail themselves, that they have perverted their way, and forgotten the Lord their God. Note, 1. Sin is the perverting of our way, it is turning aside to crooked ways, and perverting that which is right. 2. Forgetting the Lord our God is at the bottom of all sin. If men would remember God, his eye upon them, and their obligation to him, they would not transgress as they do. 3. By sin we embarras ourselves, and ourselves bring upon us such difficulties as we could never have imagined. 4. Prayers and tears will become those whose consciences tell them that they have perverted their way and forgotten their God. When the foolishness of man perverts his way, his heart is apt to fret against the Lord, (Prov. xix. 3.) whereas it should be melted and poured out before him.

III. The invitation God gives them to return to him. (v. 22.) Return, ye backsliding children. He calls them children, in tenderness and compassion to them; foolish and forward as children, yet his sons; whom though he corrects he will not disinherit; for though they are refractory children, (so some render it,) yet they are children. God bears with such children, and so must parents. When they are convinced of sin, (v. 21.) and humbled for that, then they are prepared, and then they are invited, to return; as Christ invites these to him that are weary and heavy laden. The promise to those that return is, I will heal your backslidings; I will comfort you under the grief you are in for your backslidings, deliver you out of the troubles you have brought yourselves into by your backslidings, and cure you of your refractoriness, and bent to backslide. God will heal our backslidings by his pardoning mercy, his reconciling love, and his almighty power.

IV. The ready consent they give to this invitation, and their cheerful compliance with it; Behold, we come unto thee. This is an echo to God's call; as a voice returned from broken walls, so this from broken hearts. God says, Return; they answer, Behold, we come. It is an immediate, speedy answer; without delay, not, We will come hereafter. It is not a negative, but an affirmative, time to consider of it. Not, We come toward thee; but, We come to thee, we will make a thorough turn of it. Observe how universally they are; We come, one and all.

1. They come devoting themselves to God as theirs; Thou art the Lord our God, we take thee to be ours, we give up ourselves to thee to be thine; whither shall the way of the wayfarer lead? It is that which we have gone from thee. It is very comfortable, in our return to God after our backsliding, to look up to him as ours in covenant.
2. They come disclaiming all expectations of relief and succour but from God only; In vain is salvation hoped for from the hills, and from the multitude of the mountains; we now see our folly in relying upon creature-confidence, and will never so deceive ourselves any more. They worshipped their idols upon hills and mountains, (v. 6.) and they had a multitude of idols upon their mountains, which they had sought unto and put a confidence in; but now they will have no more to do with them. In vain do we look for any thing that is good from them, while from God we may look for every thing that is good; even salvation itself. Therefore,

3. They come depending upon God only as their God: In the Lord our God is the salvation of Israel. He is the Lord, and he only can save; he can save when all other successors and savours fail; and he is our God, and will in his own way and time work salvation. The prophet applies the words of the salvation from sin, which Jesus Christ wrought out for us; that is the salvation of the Lord, his great salvation.

4. They come justifying God in their troubles, and judging themselves for their sins, v. 24, 25. (1.) They implore all the calamities they had been under to their idols, which had not only done them no good, but had done them abundance of mischief; all the mischief that had been done them: Shame, (the idol, that shameful thing,) has devoured the labour of our fathers. Note, [1.] True penitents have learned to call sin shame; even the beloved sin, which has been as an idol to them, which they have been most pleased with and proud of, even that they shall call a scandalous thing, shall put content upon, and speak of it with regret. True penitents have learned to call sin death and ruin, and to charge upon it all the mischiefs they suffer; "It has devoured all those good things which our fathers laboured for, and left us; we have found from our youth that our idolatry has been the destruction of our prosperity. Children often throw away upon their lusts that which their fathers have done a great deal of good for; and it is well if at length they are brought (as these here) to see the folly of it, and to call those vices their shame, which have wasted their estates, and devoured the labour of their fathers. They mention the labour of their fathers, which their idols had devoured, their flocks and their herds, their sons and their daughters. First, Their idolatry had provoked God to bring these desolating judgments upon them, which had ruined their country and families, and made their estates a prey, and their children captives to the conquering enemy. They had procured these things to themselves. Or rather, Secondly, These had been sacrificed to their idols, had been separated unto that shame; (Hos. ix. 10.) and they had devoured them without mercy, they did eat the fat of their sacrifices, (ver. 20.) 39. (2.) Thus they have sacrificed. (2.) They put to themselves the shame of their sin and folly; (v. 25.) "We lie down in our shame, being unable to bear up under it, our confusion covers us, both our penal and our penitential shame. Sin has laid us under such rebukes of God's providence, and such reproaches of our own consciences, as surround us, and fill us up with shame. For we have sinned, and gone astray, and we are still attended with the sense of this sin. We are sinners by descent, guilt and corruption are entailed upon us; we and our fathers have sinned; we were sinners betimes, we began early in the course of sin, we have sinned from our youth; we have continued in it, have sinned even unto this day, though often called to repent, and forsake our sins. When God forgive us, for we have sinned; and when God forgive us, we must forgive ourselves, and still attend believers with the sense of their own sins.

We must notice of their repentance, to provoke the men of Judah to a holy emulation. David used it as an argument with the elders of Judah, that it would be a shame for them, that were his bone and his flesh, to be the last in bringing the king back, when the men of Israel appeared forward in it. 2 Sam. xix. 11, 12. Some other prophet excites Judah to repent, because Israel did; and well it were if the zare of others less likely would provoke us to strive to get before them, and go beyond them, in that which is good.

CHAP. IV.

It should seem that the two first verses of this chapter might better have been joined to the close of the foregoing chapter, for they are directed to Israel, the ten tribes, by way of reply to their compliance with God's call, directing and warning them, v. 1. 1. The rest of the chapter concerns Judah and Jerusalem. They are called to repent and reform, v. 3, 4. They are warned of the advance of Nebuchadnezzar and his forces against them, and are told that it is for their sins, from which they are again exhorted to wash themselves, v. 5. 18. III. To affect them with the greatness of the desolation that was coming, the prophet does not make use of the might of nations but sympathises with his people in the calamities it brought upon them, and the plunge it brought them to, representing it as a reduction of the world to its first chaos, v. 19-31.

1. If thou wilt return, O Israel, saith the Lord, return unto me; and if thou wilt put away thine abominations out of my sight, then shalt thou not remove. 2. And thou shalt swear, The Lord liveth, in truth, in judgment, and in righteousness; and the nations shall bless themselves in him, and in him shall they glory.

When God called to backsliding Israel to return, (ch. iii. 22.) they immediately answered, Lord, we return; now God here takes notice of their answer, and, by way of reply to it,

4. He directs them how to pursue their good resolutions: "Blest thou say, I will return," (v. 2.) "Then shalt thou return unto me, and return ye, that ye will not talk of it, but do it." (2.) "Thou must utterly abandon all sin, and not retain any of the relics of the idolatry; put away thine abominations out of thy sight, out of all places, for every place is unclean mine eye; especially out of the temple; the house which I have in a particular manner mine eye upon, to see that it is kept clean. It intimates that their idolatries were not only obvious, but offensive to the eye of God; they were abominations which he could not endure the sight of, therefore they were to be put away, and to be done away with, and all that was a branch or appendage of thine idolatry to the pure eyes of God's glory. Sin must be put away out of the heart, else it is not put away out of God's sight, for the heart and all that is in it is open before his eye. (3.) They must not return to sin again; so some understand that, Thou shalt not remove, reading it, Thou shalt not, or must not, wander. If thou shalt return to thine abominations, and wilt not wander after them, as thou hast done, all shall be well." (4.) They must give unto God the glory due unto his name; (v. 2.) Thou shalt swear, the Lord liveth. His existence shall be with thee the most sacred fact, then which nothing can be more sure; and his judgment the supreme court to which thou shalt appeal, than which nothing can be more awful. Swearing is an act of religious worship, in which we are to give honour to...
Jeremiah, IV.

God three ways. [1.] We must swear by the true God only, and not by creatures, or any false gods; by the God that truth, not by the gods that are dead, and dumb, and dead; by him only, and not by the Lord and by Malechah, as Zeph. i. 5. [2.] We must swear that only which is true, in truth and in righteousness; not daring to assert that which is false, or which we do not know to be true, or to assert that as certain, which is doubtful, or to promise that which we mean not to perform, or to violate the promise we have made. To say that which is untrue, or to do that which is unrighteous, is bad, but to back either with an oath is much worse. [3.] We must do it solemnly, swear in judgment, that is, when judicially called to it, and not in common and daily vent. A rash swearing is as profane a profanation of God’s name, as solemn swearing is an honour to it. See Deut. x. 20. Matt. v. 34, 37.

2. He encourages them to keep in this good mind, and adhere to their resolutions. If the scattered Israelites will thus return to God, (1.) They shall be blessed themselves; for to that sense the first words may be read; “If thou wouldest return to me, then thou shalt be as the plough-land; and if thou dost plough back out of thy captivity into thy own land again, as was of old promised,” Deut. iv. 29.—xxx. 2. Or, “Then thou shalt rest in me, shall return to me as thy rest, even while thou art in the land of thy captivity.” (2.) They shall be blessings to others; for their returning to God again will be a means of others turning to him, who never knew him. If thou wilt own the living Lord, then will thereby be his living; and if thou art, to bless themselves in him, to place their happiness in his favour, and to think themselves happy in being brought to the fear of him. See Isa. lxxv. 16. They shall bless themselves in the God of truth, and not in false gods; shall do themselves the honour, and give themselves the satisfaction, to join themselves to him; and then in him shall they glory, shall make him their Glory, and shall please, may shall pride, themselves with the blessed change they have made. Those that part with their sins to return to God, however they scurped the bargain at first, when they go away, then they boast.

3. For thus saith the Lord to the men of Judah and Jerusalem, Break up your fallow-ground, and sow not among thorns. 4. Circumcise yourselves to the Lord, and take away the foreskins of your heart, ye men of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem; lest my fury come forth like fire, and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of your doings.

The prophet here turns his speech, in God’s name, to the men of the place where he lived. We have heard what words he proclaimed toward the north, (ch. lii. 12.) for the comfort of those that were now in captivity, and were humbled under the hand of God; let us now see what he says to the men of Judah and Jerusalem, who were now in prosperity, for their conviction and awakening. In these two verses, he exorts them to repentance and reformation, as the only way left them to prevent the desolating judgments that were ready to break in upon them. Observe, 1. The duties required of them, which they are concerned to do.

(1.) They must do by their hearts as they do by their ground that they expect any good of; they must plough up their plough-land, or, “Plough up your plough-land, that you were not among thorns, that you may not labour in vain, for your own safety and welfare, as those do that sow good seed among thorns, and as you have been doing a great while.” Put yourselves into a frame fit to receive mercy from God, and put away all that which keeps it from you, and then you may expect to receive mercy, and to prosper in your endeavours to help yourselves.” Note, [1.] An unconfessed, unhumbled heart is like fallow-ground, ground tillled, unoccupied. It is ground capable of improvement; it is our ground, let out to us, and we must be accountable for it; but it is fallow; it is unconfessed, and lies common, it is unfruitful, and of no advantage to the owner, and (which is principally intended) it is overgrown with thorns and weeds, which the more we endeavor to uproot, the more it be not renewed with grace. Rain in profusion will be lost upon it, Heb. vi. 7, 8. [2.] We are concerned to get this fallow-ground ploughed up; we must search into our own hearts, let the word of God divide (as the plough does) between the joints and the marrow, Heb. iv. 12. We must rend our hearts, Joel ii. 13. We must pluck up by the roots those corruptions, which, as thorns, choke both our evangelical and speculative expectations, Hos. x. 12. (2.) They must do that to their souls, which was done to their bodies when they were taken into the covenant with God; (v. 4.) “Circumcise yourselves to the Lord, and take away the foreskin of your heart.” Mortify the flesh and the lusts of it. Pare off that superfluity of naughtiness, which hinders your receiving with meekness the engraven word, which is a jewel of the most eminent, and rent in pieces, and cast far away, the circumcisions of the body, for that is but a sign, and will not serve without the thing signified. It is a dedicating sign. Do that in sincerity, which was done in profession by your circumcision; devote and consecrate yourselves into the Lord, to be to him a peculiar people.” Circumcision is an obligation to keep the law; lay yourselves afresh under that obligation. It is a seal of the righteousness of faith, lay hold then of that righteousness, and so circumcise yourselves to the Lord.

2. The danger they are threatened with, which they are concerned to avoid. Repent and reform, lest my fury come forth like fire, which it is now ready to do, as that fire which came forth from the Lord, and consumed the sacrifices, and which was always kept burning upon the altar, and none might enjoy the sacrifices except the meek and lowly sinners, because of the evil of their doings. Note, (1.) That which is to be dreaded by us more than any thing else, is, the wrath of God; for that is the spring and bitterness of all present miseries, and will be the quintessence and perfection of everlasting misery. (2.) It is the evil of our doings, that kindles the fire of God’s wrath against us. (3.) The consideration of the imminent danger we are in, of falling and perishing under this wrath, should awaken us with all possible care to sanctify ourselves to God’s glory, and to see that we be sanctified by his grace.

5. Declare ye in Judah, and publish in Jerusalem; and say, Blow ye the trumpet in the land: cry, gather together, and say, Assemble yourselves, and let us go into the defended cities. 6. Set up the standard toward Zion: retire, stay not: for I will bring evil from the north, and a great destruction. 7. The lion is come up from his thicket, and the destroyer of the Gentiles is on his way: he is gone forth from his place to make thy land desolate: and thy cities shall be laid waste without an inhabitant 8. For this gird you with sackcloth, lament and howl; for the fierce anger of the Lord is not turned back from us. 9. And it shall come to pass at that day, saith the Lord, that the heart of the king shall perish, and the heart of the princes; and the priests shall be astonished, and the prophets shall wonder. 10. Then said I, Ah, Lord God! surely thou hast greatly deceived this people and Jerusalem, saying, Ye shall have peace; whereas the sword reacheth unto the soul. 11. At that time shall it be said to this people and to Jerusalem, A dry wind of the high places in the wilderness toward the daughter of my people, not to fan, nor to cleanse. 12. Even a full wind from those places shall come unto me: now also will I give sentence against them. 13. Behold, he shall come up as clouds, and his chariots shall be as a whirlwind: his horses are swifter than eagles. Wo unto us! for we are spoiled. 14. O Jerusalem, wash thy heart from wickedness, that thou mayest be saved: how long shall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee? 15. For a voice declareth from Dan, and publisheth affliction from mount Ephraim. 16. Make ye mention to the nations: behold, publish against Jerusalem, that watchers come from a far country, and give out their voice against the cities of Judah. 17. As keepers of a field are they against her round about; because she hath been rebellious against me, saith the Lord. 18. Thy way and thy doings have procured these things unto thee: this is thy wickedness, because it is bitter, because it reacheth unto thy heart.

God's usual method is, to warn before he wounds. In these verses, accordingly, God gives notice to the Jews of the general destruction that would shortly by brought upon them by a foreign invasion. This must be declared and published in all the cities of Judah, and streets of Jerusalem, that all might hear and fear, and by this loud alarm be either brought to repentance, or left inexcusable. The prediction of this calamity is here given very largely, and in lively expressions, which one would think should have awakened and affected the most stupid. Observe,

I. The war proclaimed, and general notice given of the advance of the enemy. It is published now, some years before, by the prophet; but since this will be slighted, it shall be published after another manner, when the judgement is actually breaking in, v. 5, 6. The trumpet must be blown, the standard must be set up, a summons must be issued out to the people, to gather together, and to draw toward Zion, either to guard it, or expecting to be guarded by it. There must be a general rendezvous, the militia must be raised, and all the forces mustered. Those that are able men, and fit for service, must go into the defenced cities, to garrison them; those that are weak, and would lessen their provisions, but not increase their strength, must retire, and not stay.

II. An express arrives with intelligence of the approach of the king of Babylon and his army. It is an evil that God will bring from the north, as he had said, ch. i. 15. even a great destruction, beyond all that had been done upon the nation of the Jews. The enemy is here compared,

1. To a lion that comes up from his thicket, when he is hungry, to seek his prey, v. 7. The helpless beasts are so terrified with his roaring, (as some report,) that they cannot flee from him, and so become an easy prey to him. Nebuchadnezzar is this roaring, (as he is in the seventy years' captivity of the nations,) that has laid many countries waste, and now is going his way on full speed toward the land of Judah. The destroyer of the Gentiles shall be the destroyer of the Jews too, when they have by their idolatry made themselves like the Gentiles. He is gone forth from his place, from Babylonia, or the place of the rendezvous of his army, on purpose against this land; that is the pray he has now his eye upon, not to plunder it only, but to make it desolate, and here-in he shall succeed to that degree, that the cities shall be laid waste, without inhabitants, shall be overgrown with grass as a field; so some read it.

2. To a dry, blasting wind, (v. 11.) a parching, scorching wind, which spoils the fruits of the earth, and withers them. Not a wind which brings rain, but which actually comes out of this desert, drives away rain, (Prov. xxv. 23.) but brings something worse instead of it, such shall this evil out of the north be to this people; a black freezing wind, which they can neither fence against, nor flee from, but, wherever they go, it shall surround and pursue them; and they cannot see it before it comes, but, when it comes, they shall feel it. It is a wind of the high places in the wilderness, or blast, that beats upon the tops of the hills, or that carries all before it in the plain, where there is no shelter, but the ground is all champaign. It shall come in its full force toward the daughters of my people, that have been brought up so tenderly and delicately, that they could not endure to have the wind blow upon them. Now this fierce wind shall come against them, not to fan, or cleanse them, nor such a gentle wind as is used in winnowing corn, but a full wind, (v. 12.) a strong and violent wind, blowing full upon them; this shall come to me, or rather for me, it shall come with commission from God, and shall accomplish that for which he sends it; for this, as other stormy winds, fulfill his word.

3. To clouds and whirlwinds for swiftness, v. 15. To stories of the Chaldean, clouds driven with the wind; so thick shall they stand, so fast shall they march, and it shall be to no purpose to offer to stop them, or to make head against them, any more than to arrest a cloud, or give check to a whirlwind. The horses are swifter than eagles when they fly upon their prey; it is in vain to think either of opposing them, or of outrunning them.

4. To ana the words, and the voice declareth from Dan, a city which lay farthest north of all the cities of Canaan, and therefore received the first tidings of this evil from the north, and hastened it to mount Ephraim, that part of the land of Israel which lay next to Judaea; they received the news of the affliction, and transmitted it to Jerusalem. II. Views by space; and an impenetrable people, that hides itself, expect no other than ill news. Now, what is this news? Tell the nations, those mixed nations that now inhabit the cities of the ten tribes, mention it to them, that they may provide for their own safety: but publish it against Jerusalem, that is the place aimed at, the game shot at, let them know that the lands and cities come from a far country, soldiers that will watch all opportunities to do mischief. Priests, soldiers we call private sentinels, or watchers. They are coming in full career, and give out that against the cities of Judah; they design to invest them, to make themselves masters of them, and to attack them with loud shouts, as sure of victory. As keepers of a field surround it, to keep all out from it, so shall they surround the enemy, and keep all in them, till they be constrained to surrender at discretion; they are against her round about, compassing her on every side. See Luke xix. 43. As formerly the good angels, those watchers and holy ones, were like keepers of a field to Jerusalem, watching about it, that nothing might go anon, to its prejudice; so now their enemies were as watchers and keepers of a field, surrounding it, that nothing might go anon, to its defect and ruin.

III. The lamentable cause of this judgment: how is it that Judah and Jerusalem come to be thus abandoned to ruin? See how it came to this. 1. They sinned against God, it was all owing to themselves; She has been rebellious against me, saith the Lord, v. 17. Their enemies surrounded them as keepers of a field, because they had taken up arms against their rightful Lord and Sovereign, and were to be seized as rebels. The Chaldeans are breaking in upon them, and it was sin that opened the gap at which they entered; Thy way and thy doings have provoked these things unto thee, (v. 18.) thy evil way, and thy doings that have not been good. It was not a false step or two that did them this mischief, but their way and course of living in general, it was a whole course of their troubles. Those that go on in sin, while they are endeavouring to ward off mischiefs with one hand, are at the same time pulling them upon their own heads with the other. 2. God was angry with them for their sin. It is the fierce anger of the Lord that makes the army of the Chaldeans thus fierce, thus furious; that is kindled against us, and is not turned back from us, v. 8. Notice, In men's anger against us, and the violence of that, we must see God's anger, and the power of that. If that were turned back from us, our enemies should not come forward against us. 3. In his just and holy anger he condemned them to this dreadful punishment: Now also will I give sentence against them, p. 12. The execution was done, not in a heat, but in pursuance of a sentence solemnly passed, according to the just merits of the case. See what wisdom he had in the execution of it. They that read it, Now will I do execution upon them, according to the doom formerly passed; and we are sure that the judgment of God is according to truth, and the execution of that judgment.

IV. The lamentable effects of this judgment, upon the first alarm given of it. 1. The people that should fight shall quite despair, and shall not have a heart to make the least stand against the enemy, (v. 8.) For this gird you with sackcloth, lament and howl; you will do so, when the cry is made through the kingdom, Arm, arm, all will be seized with a consternation, and all put into confusion; instead of girding on the sword, they will gird on the sackcloth; instead of animating one another to a vigorous resistance, they will law and howl, and so dishonour one another. While the enemy is yet at a distance, they will give up all for gone, and cry, Woe unto us, for we are spoiled, v. 13. We are all undone, the spoilers will certainly carry the day, and it is in vain to make head against them. 2. The public safety shall be at their wit's end; (v. 9.) At that day, the heart of the king shall perish, both his wisdom and his courage; despairing of success, he shall have no spirit to do anything, and, if he had, he will not know what to do. His princes and privy-councilors, who should animate and advise him, shall be as much at a loss, and as much in despair, as he. See how easily, how effectually, God can bring ruin upon a people that are doomed to it, merely by displaying their weakness, taking away the heart of the chief of them, (Job xii. 20, 24.) cutting off the head of the princes, Ps. lxxxvi. 12. The business of the priests was to encourage the people in the time of war; they were to say to the people, Fear not, and let not your hearts fail, Dent. xx. 3. They were to blow the trumpets, for an assurance to them that in the day of battle they should be remembered before the Lord their God, Num. x. 9. But now the priests themselves shall be astonished, and shall have no heart themselves to do their office, and therefore shall not be likely to put spirit into the people. The prophets too, the false prophets, who had cried peace to them, shall be put into the greatest amazement imaginable, seeing their own guilty blood ready to be shed by that sword which they had often told the people there was no danger of. Nete, God's judgments come with the greatest terror upon those that have been most secure. Our Saviour foretells that at the last destruction of Jerusalem men's hearts should fail them for fear, Luke xxii. 26. And it is common for those who have cheated and flattered people into a carnal security, not only to fail them, but to discourage them when the trouble comes.

V. The prophet's complaint of the people's being deceived, and discouraged, and the reason of it is, it was not a false step or two that did them this mischief, but their way and course of living in general; and so was it with them; and yet this is so common, that it is worth while to read it, Ah, Lord God, surely thou hast greatly deceived this people, saying, Ye shall have peace. We are sure that God deceives none; let no man say, when he is tempted or deluded, that God has tempted or deluded him. But, 1. The people deceived themselves with the promises that God had made in general of his favour to that nation, and the many public privileges with which they were dignified; building upon them, though they took no care to perform the conditions, on which the accomplishment of those promises, and the continuance of those privileges, did depend; they had no regard to the threatenings which in the law were set over against those promises. Thus they cheated themselves, and then wickedly complained that God had cheated them. 2. The false prophets deceived them with false promises, which they had false minds persuaded them to believe; but when they came to read it, Now will I do execution upon them, according to the doom formerly passed; and we are sure that the judgment of God is according to truth, and the execution of that judgment.

VI. The prophet's endeavour to undeceive them; when the prophets they loved and esteemed dealt falsely with them, he when they had hated and persecuted doth faithfully.
1. He shows them their wound; they were loth to see it, very loth to have it searched into; but if they will allow themselves the liberty of a free thought, they might discover their punishment in their sin; (v. 18.) "This is thy wickedness, because it is bitter." Now thou seest that it is a bitter thing to depart from God, and will certainly be bitterness in the latter end; (ch. ii. 19.) it is an effect of his hatred to the city and the people, to the thought of the heart, toucheth to the quick, and in the most tender part; the sword reacheth to the soul," v. 10. God can make trouble reach the heart even of those that would lay nothing to heart. And by this thou mayest see what is thy wickedness, that it is a bitter thing, a root of bitterness, that bears gall and wormwood, and that it has reached to the heart; is the corruption of the imagination of the thought of the heart. If the heart were not polluted with sin, it would not be disturbed and disquieted as it is with trouble.

2. He shows them the cure, v. 14. Since thy wickedness reacheth to the heart, there the application must be made; O Jerusalem, wash thine heart from wickedness, that thou mayst be saved. By Jerusalem he means each one of the inhabitants of the city, for he has a heart of his own to take care of, and it is personal reformation that must help the public. Every one must return from his own evil way, and in order to that, cleanse his own evil heart. And let the heart of the city too be purified, not the suburbs only, the out-skirts of it; the vitals of a state must be amended by the reformation of those that have the commanding influence upon. Note, (1.) Reformation is absolutely necessary to salvation; there is no other way of preventing judgments, or turning them away, when we are threatened with them, but taking away the sin by which we have procured them to ourselves. (2.) No reformation is saving, but that which reacheth the heart. There is heart-wickedness that is defiling to the soul, from which we must wash ourselves. By repentance and faith we must wash our hearts from the guilt we have contracted by spiritual wickedness, by those sins which begin and end in the heart, and go no further: and by mortification and watchfulness we must suppress and prevent this heart-wickedness for the future. The tree must be made good, else the fruit will not. Jerusalem was all overspread with the leprosy of sin; now it is to be washed, as the body when affected with leprosy, that external applications will do no good, unless physic be taken inwardly to carry off the humours that lurk there, and to change the miasma of the blood, so it is with the soul, so it is with the state, there will be no effectual reformation of manners, without a reformation of the mind; the mistakes there must be rectified, the corruptions there must be purified, and the evil dispositions there changed. "Though thou art Jerusalem, called a holy city, that will not save thee, unless thou wash thine heart from wickedness." In the latter part of the verse he reasons with them, How long shall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee? He complains here, [1.] Of the delays of their reformation; "How long shall that filthy heart be continued?" They have not speeded it, nor shall it be speeded; they have been loth to have anything to do with it. They have been too ready to toy with thoughts of consolation, and too slow to apply themselves to true repentance. [2.] Of the root of their corruption; the vain thoughts that lodged within them, and defiled their hearts, from which they must wash their hearts. Thoughts of iniquity or mischief, though withal evil thoughts that are passions bitter in the heart, from which all other wickedness is produced, Matt. xvi. 29. These are our own, the conceptions of our own lusts, (Jam. i. 15.) and they are most dangerous when they lodge within us, when they are admitted and entertained as guests, and are suffered to continue. Some read it thoughts of affliction, such thoughts as will bring nothing but affliction and misery. Some by the vain thoughts there understand all those frivolous pleas and excuses with which they turned off the reproves and calls of the word, and rendered them ineffectual, and bolstered themselves up in their wickedness. Wash thy heart from wickedness, and think not to say, We are not polluted, (ch. ii. 33.) or, "We are Jerusalem, we have Abraham to our father," Matth. iii. 8, 9.

19. My bowls, my bowls! I am pained at my very heart; my heart maketh a noise in me: I cannot hold my peace, because thou hast heard, O my soul, the sound of the trumpet, the alarm of war. 20. Destruction upon destruction is cried: for the whole land is spoiled: suddenly are my tents spoiled, and my curtains in a moment. 21. How long shall I see the standard, and hear the sound of the trumpet? 22. For my people is foolish, they have not known me; they are sotish children, and they have none understanding: they are wise to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge. 23. I beheld the earth, and, lo, it was without form and void; and the heavens, and they had no light. 24. I beheld the mountains, and, lo, they trembled, and all the hills moved lightly. 25. I beheld, and, lo, there was no man, and all the birds of the heavens were fled. 26. I beheld, and, lo, the fruitful place was a wilderness, and all the cities thereof were broken down at the presence of the Lord, and by his fierce anger. 27. For thus hath the Lord said, The whole land shall be desolate; yet will I not make a full end. 28. For this shall the earth mourn, and the heavens above be black: because I have spoken it, I have purposed it, and will not repent, neither will I turn back from it. 29. The whole city shall flee for the noise of the horsemen and bowmen; they shall go into thickets, and climb up upon the rocks: every city shall be forsaken, and not a man dwell therein. 30. And when thou art spoiled, what wilt thou do? Though thou cloakest thyself with crimson, though thou deckest thee with ornaments of gold, though thou rentest thy face with painting, in vain shalt thou make thyself fair; thy lovers will despise thee, they will seek thy life. 31. For I have heard a voice as of a woman in travail, and the anguish as of her that bringeth forth her first child; the voice of the daughter of Zion, that bewaileth herself, that spreadeth her hands, saying, Wo is me now: for my soul is weary because of murderers.

The prophet is here in agony, and cries cut like one upon the rack of pain with some acute distem per, or as a woman in travail. The expressions are very pathetic and moving, enough to melt a heart of stone into compassion. My bowels, my bowels, I am pained at my very heart; and yet well, and in heath himself, and nothing ails him. Note, A good man in such a sad world as this, cannot but be a man of sorrows. My heart makes a noise in the through the tumults of my spirits, and I cannot hold me, because it is, and therefore I was at first, and at length sudden destruction, for a woful day it would be to him.
It becomes us to tremble at the thoughts of the misery that sinners are running themselves into, through good hopes, through grace, that we ourselves are delivered from the wrath to come.
2. Tell it to them that are at ease; for they cannot prevent so great a judgment by a true and timely repentance, Note, Those that would affect others with the word of God, should evidence that they are themselves affected with it.
Now let us see what there is in the destruction here foreseen and foretold, that is so very affecting.
(1.) It is a swift and sudden destruction; it comes upon them, as the priests and elders (v. 21.) had no light, nor power, nor knowledge, nor information in themselves, nor were any comfort to the people, or any guide to them. Compare Matth. xxiv. 29.
(2.) The mountains trembled, and the hills moved their strength; Destruction upon destruction is cried, and it speaks the unchangeableness of God's covenant, which stands so firm, that though he may direct the events of it very severely, yet he will not cast them off, ch. xxx. 11.

[1.] God would not help them; so he tells them plainly, v. 28. And if the Lord do not help them, who can? This is that which makes their case deplorable; for this the earth mourns, and the heavens above are black; there are no prospects but what is worst. They have spoken it, v. 29. He has given the word which shall not be called back. I have purposed it, it is a consumption decreed, determined, and I will not repent, and not change this way, but proceed in it, and will not turn back from it. They would not repent, and turn back from the way of their sins, (ch. ii. 5.) and therefore God will not repent, and turn back from the way of his judgments. [2.] They could not help themselves, v. 30, 31. When the thing appeared at a distance, they flattered themselves with hopes that though God should not appear for them as he had done for Hezekiah against the Assyrian army, yet they should find some means or other to secure themselves, and give check to the forces of the enemy. But the prophet tells them, that when it comes to the great attack, it will be quite another case. When thou art spoiled, what wilt thou do? What course wilt thou take? Sit down now, and consider this in time. He assures them that, whatever were now their contrivances and confidences, First, They will then be despised by their allies whom they depended upon for assistance. He had often compared the sin of Jerusalem to whoredom, not only her idolatry, but her trust in creatures, in the neighbouring powers. Now he sees he must carry her to a harlot abandoned by all the lewd ones that used to make court to her. She is supposed to do all she can to keep up her interest in their affections; she does what she can to make herself appear considerable among the nations, and a valuable ally; she compasses them by her ambassadors to the highest degree, to engage them to stand by her now in her distress; she clothes herself with ornaments of gold, as if her treasures were still as full as ever they had been; she rents her face with painting, puts the best colours she can upon her present distresses, and does her utmost to palliate and extenuate her losses, sets a good face upon them. But this is a delusion. That face will not engage the present, really rent it; the former splendor of paint spoils the skin, cracks it, and makes it rough; so the case which by false colours has been made to appear better than really it was, when truth comes to light, will look so much the worse; "And after all, in vain shall thou make thyself fair; all thy neighbours are sensible how low thou art brought; the Lord's eye is upon the naked, and he shall make thee to be naked. The Lord is thy God, and he will give thee provision; he will restore thee, and will not cast thee off." The Chaldeans will strip thee of thy crimson and ornaments, and then thy confederates, thy allies, will not come to thy rescue, and refuse to give thee any succour, but they will join with those that seek thy life, that they may come in for a share in the prey of so rich a country. Here seems to be an allusion to the story of Jezebel, who thought, by making herself look fair and fane, to have outfaced her doom, but in vain, 2 Kings ix. 3. 4. God will make thee as ashes in the fire; the prophet says, when we confide in them, how treacherous they are, instead of saving the life, they seek the life; they often change, so that they will sooner do us an ill turn, than any service. And see to how little purpose it is for those that have by sin deformed themselves in God's eyes, to think by any arts they can use to beautify themselves in the eye of the world. Secondly, They will then be themselves in despair; they will find their troubles to be like the pains of a woman in travail, which she cannot es not the way of the Lord, nor the judgment of their God. 5. I will get me unto the great men, and will speak unto them: for they have known the way of the Lord, and the judgment of their God: but these have altogether broken the yoke, and burst the bonds. 6. Wherefore a lion out of the forest shall slay them, and a wolf of the evenings shall spoil them, a leopard shall watch over their cities: every one that goeth out thereof shall be torn in pieces; because their transgressions are many, and their backslidings are increased. 7. How shall I pardon thee for this? thy children have forsaken me, and sworn by them that are no gods: when I had fed them to the full, they then committed adultery, and assembled themselves by troops in the harlots' houses. 3. They were as fed horses in the morning: every one neighed after his neighbour's wife. 9. Shall I not visit for these things? saith the Lord: and shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?

Here is,

1. A challenge to produce any one right honest man, or at least any considerable number of such, in Jerusalem, v. 1. Jerusalem was become like the old world, in which all flesh had corrupted their way. There were some perhaps who flattered themselves with hopes that there were yet many good men in Jerusalem, who would stand in the gap to turn away the wrath of God; and there might be others who boasted of its being the Holy city, and thought that this would save it; but God bids them search the town, and intimates that they should scarcely find a man in it who executed judgment, and made conscience of what he said and did: "Look in the streets where they make their appearance, and converse together, and in the broad places where they keep their markets; see if you can find a man, a magistrate," (so some,) "that executes judgment, and administers justice impartially, that will put the laws in execution against vice and profaneness. When the faith of thus cease out fail, there is time to cry, Wo is me?" (Mic. vii. 1. 2.)

2. Run ye to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem, and see now, and know, and seek in the broad places thereof, if ye can find a man, if there be any that executeth judgment, that seeketh the truth; and I will pardon it. 2. And though they say, The Lord liveth, surely they swear falsely. 3. O Lord, are not thine eyes upon the truth? thou hast stricken them, but they have not grieved; thou hast consumed them, but they have refused to receive correction: they have made their faces harder than a rock; they have refused to return. 4. Therefore I said, Surely these are poor; they are foolish: for they know not the way of the Lord, nor the judgment of their God.
They do not swear by idols, they forewarn themselves, which is no less an affront to God, as the case of truth, then the other is as the only true God.

II. A complaint which the prophet makes to God of the obstinacy and wilfulness of these people. God had appealed to their eyes; (v. 1.) but here the prophet appeals to his eyes; (v. 3.) "Are they not thine eyes upon the truth? Dost thou not see every man's character? And is not this the truth of their case? Their eyes have been wickedly and deceitfully set upon the face of a rock?" Or, "Behold, thou dost rest truth in the inward part; but where is it to be found among the men of this generation? For though they say, The Lord liveth, yet they never regard him; thou hast stricken them with one affection after another, but they have not grieved for the affliction, they have been as stocks and stones under it, much less have they grieved for the sin by which they have brought it upon themselves. Thou hast gone further yet, hast consumed them, hast corrected them yet more severely; but they have refused to receive correction, to accommodate themselves to thy design in correcting them, and to answer to it. They would not receive instruction by the correction. They have set themselves to overthrow the divine service, and to destroy the execution of it, for they have made their faces harder than a rock; they cannot change countenance, neither blush for shame, nor look pale for fear, cannot be beaten back from the pursuit of their lusts, whatever check is given them; for though often called to it, they have refused to return, and would go forward, right or wrong, as the horse into the battle."

II. The trial made both of rich and poor, and the bad character given of both.

1. The poor were ignorant, and therefore they were wicked. He found many that refused to return, for whom he was willing to make the best excuse: their case would bear, and it was this, (v. 4.) "Surely, these are poor, they are foolish; they never had the advantage of a good education, nor have they wherewithal to help themselves now with the means of instruction; they are forced to work hard for their living, and have no time or capacity for reading or hearing, so that they know not the way of the Lord, or the judgments of their God; they understand neither the way in which God by his precepts will have them to walk toward him, nor the way in which he by his providence is with them. Notwithstanding, their willful ignorance is the lamentable cause of abounding impurity and iniquity. What can one expect but works of darkness from brutish, sottish people that know nothing of God and religion, but choose to sit in darkness? (2.) This is commonly a reigning sin among poor people. There are the devil's poor, as well as God's; who, notwithstanding their poverty, might know the way of the Lord, so as to walk in it, and do their duty, without being book-learned; but they are willingly ignorant, and therefore their ignorance will not be their excuse.

2. The rich were insolent and haughty, and therefore they were wicked; (v. 5.) "I will get me to the great men, and see if I can find them more pliable to the word and providence of God; I will speak to them the way of the Lord, and convince them."

VOL. IV.—2 X
or that a God of infinite purity will connive at such abominable uncleanness? These are things that must be reckoned for, else the honour of God's government cannot be maintained, nor his laws saved from contempt; but sinners will be tempted to think him altogether such a one as themselves, contrary to that conviction of their own consciences concerning the judgment of God, which is necessary to be supported, That they which do such things are worthy of death. Rom. i. 32. Observe, When God punishes sin, he is said to visit for it, or inquire into it; for he weighs the cause before he passes sentence. Sinners have reason to expect punishment, upon the account of God's holiness; to which sin is highly offensive, as well as upon the account of his justice, to which it renders us obnoxious; this is intimated in that, Shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this? It is not only the word of God, but his soul, that takes vengeance. And he has national judgments wherewith to take vengeance for national sins. Such nations as this was cannot long go unpunished. How shall I pardon thee for this? v. 7. Not but that those who have been guilty of these sins, have found mercy with God, as to their eternal estate; (Manasseh himself did, though so much necessary to the inquiry of those things;) but nations, as such, being rewarding and punishable only in this life, it would not be for the glory of God to let a nation so very wicked as this pass without some manifest tokens of his displeasure.

10. Go ye up upon her walls, and destroy; but make not a full end: take away her battlements; for they are not the Lord's. 11. For the house of Israel and the house of Judah have dealt very treacherously against me, saith the Lord. 12. They have belied the Lord, and said, It is not he, neither shall evil come upon us, neither shall we see sword nor famine; 13. And the prophets shall become wind, and the word is not in them: thus shall it be done unto them. 14. Wherefore thus saith the Lord God of hosts, Because ye speak this word, behold, I will make my words in thy mouth fire, and this people wood, and it shall devour them. 15. Lo, I will bring a nation upon you from far, O house of Israel, saith the Lord: it is a mighty nation, it is an ancient nation, a nation whose language thou knowest not, neither understandest what they say. 16. Their quiver is as an open sepulchre, they are all mighty men. 17. And they shall eat up thy harvest, and thy bread, which thy sons and thy daughters should eat: they shall eat up thy flocks and thy herds; they shall eat up thy vines and thy fig-trees: they shall impoverish thy fenced cities, wherein thou trustedst, with the sword. 18. Nevertheless in those days, saith the Lord, I will not make a full end with you. 19. And it shall come to pass, when ye shall say, Wherefore doth the Lord our God all these things unto us? then shalt thou answer them, Like as ye have forsaken me, and served strange gods in your land; so shall ye serve strangers in a land that is not yours.

We may observe in these verses, as before, I. The sin of this people, upon which the common mission signed against them is grounded. God disowns them, and dooms them to destruction, v. 10. But is there not a cause? Yes; for, 1. They have desolated the land of God, v. 11. The house of Israel and the house of Judah have dealt very treacherously against one another, yet both agreed to deal very treacherously against God. They forsook the worship of him, and therein violated their covenants with him; they revolved from him, and played the hypocrite with him. 2. They have defied the judgments of God, and given the lie to his threatenings in the mouth of his prophets, v. 12, 13. They were often told that evil would follow them; and therefore must expect some desolating judgments, sword and famine; but they were secure, and said, We shall have peace, though we go on. For, (1.) They did not fear what God is; they belied him, and confront ed the dictates even of natural light concerning him, for they said, It is not he, he is not such a one as we have been made to believe he is; he does not see, or not right, or not right will be made to us, and therefore no evil shall come upon us. Multitudes are blinded by being made to believe that God will not be so strict with them as his word says he will; nay, by this artifice Satan undid us all; Ye shall not surely die. So here, Neither shall we see sword nor famine. Vain hopes of impunity are the deceitful support of all impiety. (2.) They did not fear what God said. The prophets gave them fair warning, but they turned it off with a jest; Thus do they talk so, because it is their trade; they are words of course, and words are but wind. It is not the word of the Lord that is in them; it is only the language of their melancholy fancy, or their ill will to their country, because they are not preferred. Note, Impudent sinners are not willing to own any thing to be the word of God, that makes against them; that tends either to part them from, or disquiet them in, their sins. They threaten the prophets; They shall become wind, shall pass away unregarded, and thus shall it be done unto them, what they threaten against us we will inflict upon them. Do they frighten us with famine? Let them be fed with the bread of affliction. (So Micah was, i. 13.) Do they say, They shall tell us of the sword? Let them perish by the sword, ch. ii. 30. Thus their mocking and misusing of God's messengers, filled the measure of their iniquity.

II. The punishment of this people for their sin. I. The threatenings they laughed at shall be executed; (v. 14.) Because ye speak this word of contempt concerning the prophets, and the word in their mouths, therefore God will put honour upon them and their words, and one iota or title of them shall fall to the ground, i Sam. iii. 19. Here God turns to the prophet Jeremiah, who had been thus blantered, and perhaps had been a little uneasy at it; Behold, I will make my words in thy mouth fire. God owns them for his words, though men denied them, and will as surely make them to take effect as the fire consumes combustible matter that is in its wood; it is not the word, but the wood. Sinners by sin make themselves fuel to that wrath of God, which is revealed from heaven against all uncleanness and unworthiness of men in the scripture. The word of God will certainly be too hard for those that contend with it. They shall break, who will not bow before it. Therefore they that think them selves in no danger of shall be brought under by God. God gives them their commission; (v. 19.) Go up upon her walls, mount them, trample upon them, tread them down; walls of stone, before the divine commission, shall be but mud walls. Having made yourselves masters of the walls, you may destroy at pleasure; for you may take away her battlements, and leave the fenced, fortified cities to lie open; for her battlements are not the Lord's, he does not own them, and therefore will not protect and fortify them. They were not erected in his fear, nor with a dependence upon him: the people have trusted to them more than to God, and therefore they are not his. When the city is filled with sin, God will not look to them with favor, and therefore when you see that they are paper walls. What can defend us, when he who is our Defence, and the Defender of all our defences, is departed from us? Numb. iv. 9. What is not of God, cannot stand, not stand long, nor stand us in any stead.

What dreadful work these invaders should make, is here described; (v. 15.) Lo, I will bring a nation upon you, O house of Israel. Note, God has all nations at his command, does what he pleases with them, and makes what use he pleases of them. And sometimes he is pleased to make the nations of the earth, the heathen nations, a scourge to the house of Israel, when that is become an hypocritical nation. This nation of the Chaldeans is here said to be a remote nation; it is brought upon them from afar off; it is the panic-dread, and the longer stay, that they may pay themselves well for so long a march. It is a nation that thou hast had no commerce with, by reason of their distance, and therefore cannot expect to find favour with. God can bring trouble upon us from places and causes very remote. It is a mighty nation, that there is no making head against; an ancient nation, that value themselves upon their antiquity, and will therefore be the more haughty and imperial. It is a nation whose language thou knowest not; they speak the Syriac tongue, which the Jews at that time were not acquainted with, as appears, 2 Kings xviii. 26. The difference of language would make it the more difficult to treat with them of peace; compare this with the threatening, (Deut. xxviii. 49.) which it seems to have a reference to, for the law and the prophets exactly agree. They are well armed; Their quiver is an open sepulchre; their arrows shall fly so thick, hit so sure, and wound so deep, that they shall be reckoned to breathe nothing but death and slaughter; they are able-bodied, all effective, mighty men, v. 16. And when they have made themselves masters of the country, so shall their power extend, they shall reckon all their own, that they can lay their hands on, v. 17. (1.) They shall strip the country, shall not only sustain, but surfeit, their soldiers with the rich products of this fruitful land. They shall not cores up, (then it might possibly have been retriev-able,) but eat up, thine harvest in the field, and thy bread in the house, which thy sons and thy daughters eat. 20. We that have, we have for our families, and it is comfort to see our sons and daughters eating that which we have taken care and pains for. But it is a grievous vexation to see it devoured by strangers and enemies; to see their camps victualled with our stores, while those that are dear to us are perishing for want of it; this also is according to the curse of the law; (Deut. xxiii. 19.) They shall not eat the fruit of thy vineyards and fig-trees. (2.) They shall starve the towns; They shall impoverish thy fenced cities, (and what fence is there against poverty, when it comes like an armed man?) those cities wherein thou trustedst to be a protection to the country. Note, It is just with God to impoverish that which we make our confidence. They shall impoverish them with the sword, cutting off all provisions from coming to them, and intercepting trade and commerce, which will impoverish even fenced cities.

III. An intimation of the tender compassion God has yet for his people, the enemy is commissioned to destroy and lay waste, but must not make a full end, v. 10. Though they make a great slaughter, yet some must be left to live; though they make a great spoil, yet something must be left to live upon, for God has said it, (v. 18.) with a non obstant—a never-theless, to the present desolation; Even in those days, disdain not small provision, and lay up for yourselves provisions in the towns, for the Lorp will send forth the fruits of the earth in their place, that ye may live; and if God said not the enemy shall not, God has mercy in store for this people, and therefore will set bounds to this desolating judgment; hitherto it shall come, and no further.

IV. The justification of God in these proceedings against them: as he will appear to be gracious in not making a full end with them, so he will appear to be righteous in coming so near it, and will have it acknowledged that he has done them no wrong, v. 19. Observe, 1. A reason demanded, insolently demanded, by the people for these judgments. They will say, Wherefore doth the Lord our God do all this unto us? What provocation have we given him, or what quarrel has he with us? As if against such a sinful nation there did not appear cause enough of action. Note, Unhumbled hearts, when they are ready to blaspheme the name of God, their own and other men's perfictions, and pretend they are to seek for the cause of them, when it is written in the forefront of them. But, 2. Here is a reason immediately assigned: the prophet is instructed what answer to give them, for God will be justified when he speaks, though he speaks with ever so much terror. He must tell them that God does this against them for what they have done against him, and that they may, if they please, read their sin in their punishment. Do not they know very well that they have forsaken God; and therefore can they think it strange if he has forsaken them? Have they forgotten how often they served strange gods in their own land, that good land, in the abundance of the fruits of which they ought to have served God with gladness of heart; and therefore is it not just with God to make them serve strange gods in a strange land, where they can call nothing their own, as he had threatened to do? Deut. xxviii. 47, 48. They that are fond of strangers, to strangers let them go.

20. Declare this in the house of Jacob, and publish it in Judah, saying, 21. Hear now this, O foolish people, and without understanding; which have eyes, and see not; which have ears, and hear not: 22. Fear ye not me? saith the Lord: will ye not tremble at my presence, which have placed the sand for the bound of the sea, by a perpetual decree, that it cannot pass it; and though the waves thereof toss themselves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not pass over it? 23. But this people hath a revolting and a rebellious heart; they are revoluted and gone. 24. Neither say they in their heart, Let us now fear the Lord our God that giveth rain, both the former and the latter, in his season: he reserveth unto us the appointed weeks of the harvest. The prophet, having reproved them for sin, and threatened the judgments of God against them, here sent them to them again upon another errand, which he must publish in Judah: the purport of it is to persuade them to fear God, which would be an effectual principle of their reformation, as the want of that fear had been at the bottom of their apostasy.

1. He complains of the shameful stupidity of this people, and their bent to backslide from God; speaking as if he knew not what course to take with them.

2. Their understandings were darkened, and unfit to admit the rays of the divine light. They are a foolish people and without understanding, they apprehend not the mind of God, though ever so plainly discovered to them, by the written word, by his prophets, and by his providence; (v. 21.) They have eyes, but they see not, ears, but they hear not, lieth their minds so with the world, (Deut. iv. 6.) and yet really they are a foolish file, and without understanding. Note, We cannot judge of men by the advantages and opportunities they enjoy; there are those that sit in darkness in a land of light, that live in sin even in a holy land, that are bad in the best places.

2. Their wills were stubborn, and might to submit to the rules of the divine laws. (v. 22.) This people has a revolting and rebellious heart; and no wonder, when they were foolish and without understanding, Ps. lxxxi. 5. Nay, it is the corrupt bias of the will, that bribes and besets the understanding: none so blind as those that will not see. The character of this people is the true character of all people by nature, till the grace of God has wrought a change; we are foolish, slow of understanding, and apt to mistake and forget; yet that is not the worst; we have a revolting and a rebellious heart, a carnal mind, that is enmity against God, and is not in subjection to his law; not only revolting from him by a rooted aversion to that which is good, but rebellious against him by a strong inclination to that which is evil. Observe, The revolting heart is a rebellious one: they that withdraw from their allegiance to God, and will not bow down before his name and the Son, take up arms against him. They are revolted and gone. The revolting heart will produce a revolting life: They are gone, and they will g;: (so it may be read;) now nothing will be restrained from them, Gen. xi. 6.

11. He ascribed this to the want of the fear of God. When he observes them to be without understanding, he asks, “Fear ye not me, saith the Lord, and will ye not tremble at my presence?” v. 22. If you would but keep up an awe of God, you would be more observant of what he says to you; and did you but understand yourselves better, you would be more under the commanding rule of God’s fear.” When he observes that they are revolting and gone, he adds this, as the root and cause of their apostasy, (v. 24.) Agg. he says, “Fear ye not me, saith the Lord, and will ye not tremble at my presence?”

2. We must fear the Lord and his greatness; (v. 22.) upon this account he demands our fear: “Shall we not tremble at his presence, and be afraid of the --- him, or trilling with him, who in the kingdom of nature and providence gives such magnificent and powerful proofs of his almighty power? Here is one instance given of very many that might be given; he keeps the sea within compass; though the tides flow with a mighty strength, twice every day, and if they should flow on for awhile, would crown the world; though in a storm the billows rise high, and dash to the shore with incredible force and fury, yet they are under check, and cannot rise to their height. Thus it is the Lord’s doing, and it would be marvelous, if it were not common, in our eyes. He has placed the sand for the bound of the sea, not only for a measure, to mark our how far it may come, and where it must stop, but as a mound, or fence, to put a stop to it. A wall of sand shall be as effectual as a wall of brass to check the flowing waves, when God is pleased to make it so; nay, that is chosen rather to teach us that a soft answer like the soft sand, turns away wrath, and quits a feasting rage, when grievous words, like hard rocks, do but exacerbate, and make the waters cast forth so much the more mire and dirt. This bound is placed by a perpetual decree; by an ordinance of antiquity—so some read it, and then it sends us as far back as to the decree all the world, when God said, He that SATA with the sea and the dry land, and fixed marches between them, (Gen. i. 9, 10.) which is elegantly described, Ps. civ. 6, &c. and Job xxxvii. 8, &c. or to the period of Noah’s flood, when God promised that he would never drown the world again, Gen. xi. 11. An ordinance of perpetuity—so our translation takes it. It is a perpetual decree, it has its effect all the world, and till the end of the world, and shall still continue till day and night come to an end. This perpetual decree the waters of the sea cannot pass over or break through. Though the waves thereof toss themselves, as the troubled sea does when it cannot rest, yet can they not prevail: though they roar and rage as if they were vexed at the check given them, yet can they not pass over. Now this is a good reason why the Hebrews obey the Lord, (1.) By this they observe that he is a God of almighty power and universal sovereignty, and therefore to be feared and had in reverence. (2.) This shows us how easily he could drown the world again, and how much we continually lie at his mercy, and therefore we should be afraid of making him our Enemy. (3.) Even the unruly waves of the sea observe his decree, and retreat at his check; and shall not we? Why are our hearts revolting and rebellious, when the sea neither revolts nor rebels? We must fear the Lord and his goodness, Hos. iii. 5. The instances of this, as of the former, are fetched from God’s common providence; (v. 24.) We must fear the Lord our God, we must worship him, and give him glory, and be always in care to keep ourselves in his love, because he is continually doing us good; he is one of the the and the latter rain; the former a little after seedness, the latter a little before harvest, and both in their season; and by this means he reserves to us the appointed weeks of harvest. Harvest is reckoned by weeks, because in a few weeks enough is gathered to serve for sustenance the year round. The weeks of the harvest are appointed by the promise of God, that seed-time and harvest shall not fail. And this is the promise that we are reserved to us by the Divine Providence, otherwise we should come short of them. In harvest-mercy therefore God is to be acknowledged, his power, and goodness, and faith fulness, for they all come from him. And it is a good reason why we should fear him, that we may keep ourselves in his love, because we have such a necessary dependence upon him. The fruitful seasons were witnesses for God, even to the heathen world, sufficient to leave them inexusable in their contempt of him: (Acts xiv. 17.) and yet the Jews, who had the written word to explain their testimony by, were not wrought upon to fear the Lord, though it appears how much it is our interest to do so.

25. Your iniquities have turned away these things, and your sins have withheld good things from you. 26. For among my people are found wicked men: they lay wait as he that setteth snares: they set a trap, they catch men. 27. As a cage is full of birds, so are their houses full of deceit: therefore they are become great, and waxen rich. 28. They are waxen fat, they shine; yea, they overpass the deeds of the wicked: they judge not the cause, the cause of the fatherless, yet they prosper; and the right of the needy do they not judge. 29. Shall I not visit for these things? saith the Lord: shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this? 30. A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land; 31. The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so: and what will ye do in the end thereof?

I. The prophet shows them what mischief their sins had done them; they have turned away these things, (v. 25.) the former and the latter rain, which they used to have in due season, (v. 24.) but which had of late been withheld, (ch. iii. 3.) by reason of which the appointed weeks of harvest had sometimes disappointed them. "It is your sin that has withheld good from you, when God was ready to bestow it upon you," Note. It is sin that stops the current of God's favours to us, and deprives us of the blessings we used to receive. It is that which makes the heavens as brass and the earth as iron.

II. He shows them how great their sins were, how heinous and provoking. When they had forsaken the worship of the true God, even moral honesty was lost among them; Among my people are found wicked men, (v. 26.) some of the worst of men, and so much the worse they were, insomuch as they were found among God's people.

1. They were spiteful and malicious. Such are properly wicked men, men that delight in doing mischief; they were found, caught in the very act of their wickedness; as hunters or fowlers lay snares for their game, so did they lie in wait to catch men; and made a sport of it, and took, as much pleasure in it, as if they had been entrapping beasts or fish. They contrived ways of doing mischief to good people, (whom they hated for their goodness,) especially to those that faithfully reproved them; (Isa. xxi. 21.) or to those that stood in the way of their preferment, or that they supposed to have affronted them, or done them a diskindness; or to those whose estates they coveted; so Jezebel murdered Naboth for his vineyard. Nay, they did mischief for mischief-sake.

2. They were false and treacherous; (v. 27.) is cage, or coop, is full of birds, and of food for them to fatten them for the table, so are their houses full of deceit, of wealth gotten by fraudulent practices, or of arts and methods of defrauding. All the business of their brains is done with an eye to the purse; there ready deals with them, they will cheat him if they can; which is easily done by those who make no conscience of what they say and do. Herein they overpass the deeds of the wicked, v. 28. Those that act by deceit, with a colour of law and justice, do more mischief perhaps than these wicked men, (v. 26.) that carried all before them by open force of violence. They are the worst of the worst, they harden themselves, and are the worst of the worst. And would you think it? They prosper in these wicked courses, and therefore their hearts are hardened in them. They are greedy of the world, because they find it flows in upon them, and they stick not at any wickedness in pursuit of it, because they find that it is so far from hindering their prosperity, that it furthers it. They are become great in the world, they are waxen rich, and thrive upon it. They have wherewithal to make provision for the flesh to full the lusts of it, to which they are very indulgent, so that they are waxen fat with living at ease, and beholding themselves in all the delights of sense; they are sleek and smooth; they shine, they look fair and gay; every body admires them. And they fear the judgments of God. No wonder is it, if in the end they escape the evils which one would expect their sins should bring upon them; they are not in trouble as other men, much less as we might expect bad men, Ps. lxxxiii. 3, &c.

3. When they were grown great, and had got power in their hands, they did not do that good with it which they ought to have done: They judge not the cause, the cause of the fatherless, and the right of the needy. The fatherless are often needy, always need assistance and advice, and advantage is taken of their helpless condition to do them an injury. Who should succour them then but the great and rich? What have men wealth for, but to do good with it? But these would take no cognizance of any such distressed cases: they had not so much sense of justice, or compassion for the injured; or, if they did concern themselves in the cause, it was not to do right, but to protect them that did wrong. And yet they prosper still, God layeth not folly to them. Certainly then the things of this world are not the best things, for often the worst men have the most of them: yet we are not to think that, because they prosper, it allows of their practices. No, though sentence against their works be not executed speedily, it will be executed.

4. There was a general corruption of all orders and degrees of men among them; (v. 30, 31.) A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land. The degeneracy of such a people, so privileged and advanced, was a wonderful thing. How could they stand, with such weak oblations? It was a horrible thing, and to be detected, and the consequences of it dreaded. To frighten ourselves from sin, let us call it a horrible thing. What was the matter? In short, this: [1.] The leaders misled the people: The prophets prophesy falsely, counterfeit a commission from heaven, when they are factors for hell. Religion is never so dangerous as when it is misapplied; and yet misapplied, as it is, the very revolution. But why did not the priests, who had power in their hands for that purpose, restrain these false prophets? Alas! instead of doing that, they made use of them as the tools of their ambition and tyranny; they bare rule by their means; they supported themselves in their grandeur and wealth, their baseness and luxury, their impositions and oppressions, by the help of the false prophets, and their interest in the people. Thus they were in a combination against everything that was good, and strengthened another one's hands in evil. (2.) The people were well enough pleased to be misled; "They are my people," says God, "and should have stood up for me, and borne their testimony against the wickedness of their priests and prophets; but they love to have it so." If the priests and prophets will let them alone in their sins, they will give them no disturbance in theirs. They love to be ridden with a loose rein, and like those rulers very well wherein they are trusted, and those teachers that will not referre them.

III. He shows them how fatal the consequences of this would certainly be. Let them consider, 1. What the reckoning would be for their wickedness; (v. 29.) Shall not I visit for these things as before, v. 9. Sometimes mercy rejoices against judgment; How shall I give thee up, Ephraim! Here, judgment on reasoning against mercy; Shall I not visit? We are sure that Infinite Wisdom knows how to accommodate the matter between them. The manner of expression is very emphatical, and speaks, (1.) The certainty and necessity of God's judgments; Shall not my soul be avenged? Yes, without doubt, vengeance will come, it must come, if the sinner repents not. (2.) The justice and equity of God's judgments; he appeals to the sinner's own conscience. Do they not deserve to be punished, that have been guilty of such abominations? Shall he not be avenged on such a nation, such a wicked, provoking nation as this?

2. What the direct tendency of their wickedness was: What will you do in the end thereof? That is, (1.) What a pitch of wickedness will you come to at last? What will you do, when God is pleased to do that which you have caused? What will this grow to? You will certainly grow worse and worse, till you have filled up the measure of your iniquity. (2.) What a fit of destruction will you come to at last! When things are brought to such a pass as this, as nothing can be expected from you but a deluge of sin, so nothing can be expected from God but a deluge of wrath; and what will ye do when that comes? Note, Those that walk in bad ways, would do well to consider the tendency of them both to greater sin and utter ruin. An end will come, the end of a wicked life will come, when it will be all called over again, and without doubt will be bitterness in the latter end.

CHAP. VI.

In this chapter, as before, we have, 1. A prophecy of the invading of the land of Judah, and the besieging of Jerusalem by the Chaldæan army, (v. 1. 8.) with the spoils which they should make of the country, (v. 9.) and the terror which all should be seized with on that occasion, v. 22. 28. 11. An account of the sins of Judah and Jerusalem, which provoked God to bring this desolating judgment upon them. Their oppression; (v. 7.) their contempt of the word of God; (v. 10. 12.) their worldliness; (v. 13.) the treachery of their prophets; (v. 14.) their impiety in sin; (v. 15.) their obstinacy against reproofs, v. 18. 19. These made their sacrifices unacceptable to him, (v. 29.) and for these he gave them up to destruction. He that stirr'd them up to evil by his words and signs, and the people that rejected them as irreclaimable, v. 29. 30. III. Good counsel given them in the midst of all this, but in vain, v. 8. 19. 17.

1. O YE children of Benjamin, gather yourselves to flee out of the midst of Jerusalem, and blow the trumpet in Tekoa, and set up a sign of fire in Beth-haccerem: for evil appeareth out of the north, and great destruction. 2. I have likened the daughter of Zion to a comely and delicate woman. 3. The shepherds with their flocks shall come unto her: they shall pitch their tents against her round about; they shall feed every one in his place. 4. Prepare ye war against her; arise, and let us go up at noon. Wo unto us! for the day goeth away, for the shadows of the evening are stretched out. 5. Arise, and let us go by night, and let us destroy her palaces. 6. For thus hath the Lord of hosts said, How ye down trees, and cast a mount against Jerusalem: this is the city to be visited; she is wholly oppression in the midst of her. 7. As a fountain casteth out her waters, so she casteth out her wickedness: violence and spoil is heard in her; before me continually is grief and wounds. 8. Be thou instructed, O Jerusalem, lest my soul depart from thee; lest I make thee desolate, a land not inhabited.

Here is, 1. Judgment threatened against Judah and Jerusalem; the city and the country, which were at this time secure, and under no apprehension of danger; they saw no cloud gathering, but every thing looked safe and serene: but the prophet tells them that they shall shortly be invaded by a foreign power, an army shall be brought against them from the north, which shall lay all waste, and shall cause not only a general destruction, but a general desolation. It is here foretold, 1. That the alarm of this should be loud and terrible. This is represented, v. 1. The children of Benjamin, in which tribe part of Jerusalem lay, are here called to shift for their own safety in the country; for the city (to which it was first thought advisable for them to flee, ch. iv. 5. 6.) would soon be made too hot for them, and they would find it the wisest course to flee out of the midst of it. It is common, in public frights, for people to think any place safer than that in which they are; and therefore those in the city are for shifting into the country, in hopes there to escape out of danger, and those in the country are for shifting into the city, in hopes there to make head against the danger; but it will be in vain, when evil first appears, to shift with commission. That which bid send the alarm into the country, and to do what they could for their own safety; Blow the trumpet in Tekoa, a city which lay twelve miles north from Jerusalem. Let them be stirred up to stand upon their guard; Set up a sign of fire, that is, kindle the beacons in Beth-haccerem, the house of the vineyard, which lay on a hill between Jerusalem and Tekoa. Prepare to make a vigorous resistance, for the evil appears out of the north. This may be taken ironically; Keep yourselves to the best methods you can think of for your own preservation, but all shall be in vain; for when you have done your best, it will be a great destruction, for it is in vain to contend with God's judgments. 2. That the attempt upon them should be bold and formidable, and such as they should be a very unequal match for. (1.) See what the daughter of Zion is, on whom the assault is made; she is likened to a comely and delicate woman, (v. 2.) bred up in every thing that is nice and soft, that will not set so much as the sole of her foot to the ground for tenderness and delicacy, (Deut. xxxix. 56.) nor suffer the wind to blow upon her; and, not being accustomed to hardship, she will be the less able either to resist the enemy, (for those that make war must endure hardness,) or to bear the destruction with.
that patience which is necessary to make it tolerable. The more we indulge ourselves in the pleasures of the life we love, the more we shall have to bear the troubles of this life. (2.) See what the daughter of Babylon is, by whom the assault is made. The generals and their armies are compared to shepherds and their flocks; (v. 3.) in such numbers and in such order did they come, the soldiers following their leaders, as the sheep their shepherds. The daughter of Zion dwell at home, (so some read it,) in her beauty, the common city, owned by none, pitch their tents in it, and their flocks quickly eat it bare; so shall the Chaldean army easily break in upon the land of Judah, force for themselves a free quarter where they please, and in a little time devour all.

For the further illustration of this, he shows,
[1.] How God shall commission them to make their slaughter upon Jerusalem, which was the holiest city, that were his peculiar. It is he that says, (v. 4.) Prepare ye war against her; for he is the Lord of hosts, that has all hosts at his command, and he has said, (v. 6.) How ye down trees, and cast a mount against Jerusalem, in order to the attacking of it. The Chaldeans have great power against Judah and Jerusalem, and yet they have no power but what is given them from above. God has marked out Jerusalem for destruction; he has said, 'This is the city to be visited, visited in wrath, visited by the divine justice, and this is the time of her visitation.' The day is coming, when those that are careless and secure in sinful ways, will be visited.

[2.] How they shall animate themselves and one another to execute that commission. God's counsels being against Jerusalem, which cannot be altered or dissuaded, the counsels of war which the enemies held are made to agree with his counsels. God having said, Prepare war against her, their determinations are made subservient to his; and notwithstanding the distance of place, and the many difficulties that lay in the way, it is soon resolved nothing shall be delayed, but all shall be prepared to move, and as go. Note, It is good to see how the counsel and decree of God are pursued and executed in the devices and designs of men, even theirs that know him not, Isa. x. 6, 7. In this campaign, First, They resolved to be very expedient. They have no sooner resolved upon it, than they address themselves to it; it shall never be said that they left anything to be done; the evening is stretched out, and they could do to-day. Arise, let us go up at noon, though it be in the heat of the day; nay, (v. 5.) Arise, let us go up by night, though it be in the dark; nothing shall hinder them, they are resolved to lose no time. They are described as men in care to make dispatch, (v. 4.) 'We unto us, for the day goes away, and we are not going on with our work; the sun and its brightness are gone, arise, and sit still, and let slip the opportunity.' O that we were thus eager in our spiritual work and warfare, thus afraid of losing time, or any opportunity, taking the kingdom of heaven by violence! It is folly to trifle when we have an eternal salvation to work out, and the enemies of that salvation to fight against. Secondly, They confidently expect to be very successful, and may bring all their places, and make ourselves masters of the wealth that is in them. It was not that they might contend with God's counsels, but that they might fill their own treasures, that they were thus eager; yet God alwaysPerch scourge them for it. Thus they carry on the work of trouble, and the troubles of life with these means. (3.) How the daughter of Babylon will be thus employed. Thus, (v. 9.) she is employed, bring her own with her; for she has given them what they needed. They have had hard work with them one another, each in their turns, as they have had power and advantage, and now the enmity shall be thus employed, and the same men, that by oppression, and violence, and wrong-doing, is here charged upon them, 1. As a national sin; (v. 6.) Therefore this city is to be visited, it is time to make inquisition, for she is wholly oppressed in the midst of her. All orders and degrees of men, from the prince on the throne to the meanest master of a shop, were oppressive to those that were under them. Look which way you will, there were causes for complaints of this kind. 2. As a sin that was become in a manner natural to them; (v. 7.) She casts out wickedness in all the instances of malice and mischievousness, as a fountain casts out her waters, as plentifully and constantly; the streams bitter and poisonous, like the fountain. The waters out of the fountain will not be restrained, but will flow forth in all its streams, if it be once let; and this by laws or conscience in their violent proceedings. This is fitly applied to the corrupt heart of man in his natural state; it casts out wickedness, one evil imagination or other, as a fountain casts out her waters, naturally and easily; it is always flowing, and yet always full. 3. As that which was become a constant practice with them. Violence and spoil are heard in her. The cry of it is come up before God, as that of Sodom; Before me continually are grievance and wounds—the complaint of those that find themselves aggrieved, being unjustly wounded in their bodies or spirits, in their estates or reputation. Note, He that is the common Parent of mankind, regards and rescinds, and sooner or later will revenge the mischiefs and wrongs that men do to one another.

III. The counsel given them, how to prevent this judgment. Fair warning is given, now upon the whole matter; 'Be thou instructed, O Jerusalem, v. 8. Receive the instruction given thee both by the law of God and by his prophets; be wise at length for thyself.' They knew very well what they had been instructed to do; nothing remained but to do it, for till then they could not be instructed. The reason for this counsel is taken from the inevitable ruin they ran upon, if they refused to comply with the instructions given them; lest my soul depart, or be disjoined, from thee. This intimates what a tender affection and concern God had had for them; his very soul had been joined to them, and nothing but sin could disjoin it. Note, 1. The God of mercy is this path to depart even from a provoking people, as mercifulst with them, by true repentance and reformation to prevent things coming to that extremity. 2. Their case is very miserable from whom God's soul is disjoined; it intimates the loss not only of their outward blessings, but of those comforts and favours which are the more immediate and peculiar tokens of his love and presence. Compare this with what is said in the same word, Heb. x. 38. If any man drew back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him. 3. These whom God forsakes are certainly undone; when God's soul departs from Jerusalem, she soon becomes desolate and uninhabited, Matth. xxiii. 38.

9. Thus said the Lord of hosts. They shall thoroughly glean the remnant of Israel as a vine; turn back thy hand as a grape-
There is in their anger we may see God angry. Now see on whom the fury is poured out in full phials; upon the children abroad, or in the streets, where they are playing; (Zech, vii, 5) or whether they run out innocently to look about them; the sword of the merciful saileth unobserved. The Chaldeans; ch. ix. 21. The children perish in the calamity which the fathers' sins have procured. The execution shall likewise reach the assembly of young men, their merry meetings, their clubs which they keep up to strengthen one another's hands in wickedness, they shall be cut off together. Nor shall these only fall into the enemies' hands, who meet for lewdness, but the Lord himself and his house shall be taken, these two in bed together, and neither left, but both taken prisoners. And as they have no compassion for the weak but fair sex, so they have none for decrepit but venerable age; the old with the fall of days, whose deaths can contribute no more to their safety than their lives to their service, who are not in a capacity to do them either good or harm, they shall be either cut off or carried off. Their houses shall then be turned to others, (v. 12.) the conquerors shall dwell in their habitations, use their goods, and live upon their stores; their fields and wives shall fall together into their hands as was threatened, Deut. xxviii. 30, 8c. For God stretches out his hand upon the inhabitants of the land, and none can go out of the reach of it.

Now as to this denunciation of God's wrath, 1. The prophets have but expressed it in terror, hardly, for herein he dealt faithfully; (v. 11.) "I am full of the fury of the Lord, full of the thoughts and apprehensions of it, and am carried out with a powerful impulse, by the spirit of prophecy, to speak of it thus vehemently." He took no delight in threatening, nor was it any pleasure to him with such sermons as these to make those about him uneasy; but he could not contain himself, he was uneasy with holding in; he suppressed it as long as he could, as long as he durst, but he was so full of power by the spirit of the Lord of hosts, that he must speak, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear. Note, When ministers preach the terrors of the Lord according to the scripture, we have no reason to be displeased at them; for they are but messengers, and must deliver their message pleasing or unpleasant. 2. He condemns the false prophets, who preached plausibly, for therein they flattered people, and dealt unfaithfully, v. 13, 14. The priests and the prophet, who should be their watchmen and monitors, have dealt falsely, have not been true to their trust, nor told the people their faults and the danger they were in; they should have been their physicians, but they murdered their patients by letting them have their wills, and giving them every thing they had a mind to, and flattering them into an opinion that they were in no danger; (v. 14.) They have healed the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, or, according to the cure of some slight hurt; skimming over the wound, and never searching it to the bottom; applying lotions only, when there is a need of surgery. Here, 1. He gives the false professors, who are not only guilty of the sins of their times, and giving them eulogies, to make them easy for the present, while the disease was prevailing upon their vitals. They said, "Peace, peace, all shall be well." If there were some thinking people among them, who were awake, and apprehensive of danger, they soon stopped their mouths with their priestly and prophetic authority, boldly averring, that they must have been in error, or that the case was in a different way, when there is no peace, because they went on in their idolatries and daring impieties. Note, Those are to be reckoned our false friends, that is, our worst and most dangerous enemies, who flatter us in a sinful way.

II. The sin of Judah and Jerusalem is here dis covered, which provoked God to bring this ruin upon them, and justified him in it.

1. They would by no means bear to be told of their faults, nor of the danger they were in. God bids the prophet give them warning of the judgment coming, v. 3. "But," says he, "to whom shall I speak, and give warnings?" I cannot find out any that will so much as give me a patience hearing. I may give warnings long enough, but there is nobody that will take warning. I cannot speak, that they may hear, cannot speak to any purpose, or with any hope of success; for their ear is uncircumsized, it is carnal and fleshly, indisposed to receive the voice of God, so that they cannot hearken. They love to hear the voice of the skulk, and the gains of hearing, so that divine things might as much purpose be spoken to a stone as to them. Nay, they are not only deaf to it, but prejudiced against it; therefore they cannot hear, because they are resolved that they will not. The word of the Lord is unto them a reproof. Both the reproves and the threatenings of the word are so; they reckon themselves wronged and affronted by both, and resent the prophet's plain-dealing with them, as they would the most causeless slander and calumny. This was kicking against the pricks, (Acts ix. 5.) as the lawyers against the word of Christ; (Luke xi. 45.) Thus saying, thou reproachest us also. Note, These reproves that are counted reproaches, and that are regarded as a gainst them, be at some times in the heaviest woes. When it is here said, They had no delight in the word, more is implied than is expressed; they have an antipathy to it, their hearts rise at it; it exasperates them, and enranges their corruptions, and they are ready to fly in the face, and pull out the eyes, of their reprovers. And how can those expect that the word of the Lord shall not be for them, who have no delight in it, but would rather be any where than within hearing of it?

2. They were inordinately set upon the world, and wholly carried away by the love of it; (v. 13.) From the least of them even to the greatest, old and young, rich and poor, high and low, those of all ranks, professions, and employments, every one is given to the gratifying of the world, which is what they can get, her fis per nefas—right or wrong, and this made them oppressive and violent, (v. 6, 7.) For of that evil, as well as others, the love of money is the bitter root. Nay, and this hardened their hearts against the word of God and his prophets; they were the coves of Phariasees that derided Christ, Luke xvi. 14.

3. They were become impudent in sin, and past shame. After such a high charge of flagrant crimes proved upon them, it was very proper to ask. (v. 15.) Were they ashamed, when they had committed all these abominations, which are such a reproach to their reason and religion? Did they blush at the conviction, and acknowledge that confusion of face belonged to them? If so, there is some good, though little, in them. But alas! there did not appear so much as this colour of virtue among them; their hearts were so hardened, that they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush, they had so brazened their faces. They even gloried in their wickedness, and openly confuted the convictions which should have humbled them; and brought them to repentance. They resolved to flout the warnings, and not to own their guilt. Some refer it to the priests and prophets, who had healed the people slightly, and told them that they should have peace, and yet were not ashamed of their treachery and falsehood, no, not when the event disproved them, and gave them the lie. Those that are shameless are graceless, and their case hopeless. But they that will not submit to a penitential shame, nor take that to themselves as their due, shall not escape an utter ruin; for so it follows, Therefore they shall fall among them that fall, they shall have their portion with those that are quite undone; and when God visits the nation in wrath, they shall be sure to be cast down, and be made to tremble, because they would not blush. Note, Those that sin, and cannot blush for it, shall find that it is bad with them now, and that it will be worse with them shortly. At first, they hardened themselves, and would not blush, afterward, they were so hardened, that they could not. Quid uum habuist in malis bonum perdunt, peraudci iercundam. They have lost the good they have; they have been in many bad ones, that is, shame, for having done amiss. Senec. de Vit. Bcet.

III. They are put in mind of the good counsel which had been often given them, but in vain. They had a great deal said to them to little purpose. 1. By way of advice concerning their duty, v. 16. God had been used to say to them, Stand in the ways and see. That is, (1.) He would have them to consider, not to proceed rashly, but to do as travellers in the road, who are in care to find the right way which will bring them to their journey's end, and therefore pause and inquire for it. If they have any reason to think that they have missed their way, they are not easy till they have got satisfaction. O that more would be thus minded, and would ponder the path of their feet, as those that believe lawful and unlawful are of no less consequence to us than the right way and the wrong are to a traveller! (2.) He would have them to consult antiquity, the observations and experiences of those that went before them; "Ask for the old paths; inquire of the former age; (Job vii. 1.) ask the sage, the ancient; (Deut. xxxiii. 7.) and thou wilt find the way of godliness and righteousness has always been the way which God has owned and blessed, and in which men have prospered. Ask for the old paths, the paths prescribed by the law of God, the written word, that true standard of antiquity. Ask for the paths that the patriarchs travelled in before you, Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and Joseph, and Moses. Write the promises made to them, tread in their steps. Ask for the old paths; Where is the good way? We must not be guided merely by antiquity, as if the plea of prescription and long usage were alone sufficient to justify our path; no, there is an old way which wicked men have trodden, Job xxii. 13. But when we ask for the old paths, it is only in order to find out the good way, the highway of the righteous. Note, The way of religion and godliness is a good old way; the way that all the saints in all ages have walked in. (3.) He would have them to resolve to act according to the result of these inquiries; "When you have found out which is the good way, walk therein; practise accordingly, keep close to that way, proceed and persevere in it. Some of these words may be applied to the troubles and declensions of the church; and others refer to the struggles that were between the true and false prophets, between those that said they should have peace, and those that told them trouble was at the door; they pretended they knew not which to believe; "Stand in the way," says God, "and see, and inquire, which of these two agrees with the written word, and the usual methods of God's providence, and make that your choice, for that is the good way, and do accordingly." (4.) He assures them, that if they do thus, it will secure the welfare and satisfaction of their own souls; "Walk in the good old way, and you will find that your walking in that way will be easy and pleasant; you will enjoy both your God and yourselves, and the way will lead you to true rest. Though it cost you some pains to walk in that way, you will find an abundant recompense at your journey's end."

(3.) He bemoans that this good counsel, which was so rational in itself, and so proper for them, could not find acceptance; "But they said, We will not walk therein. Not only will we not be at the pains to inquire which is the good way, the good old way; but when it is told us, and we have nothing to say to the contrary but that it is the right way, yet we will not walk ourselves and our horses so as to walk in it." Thus multitudes are ruined for ever by downright willfulness.

2. By way of admonition concerning their danger. Because they would not be ruled by fair reasoning, God takes another method with them; by lesser judgments he threatens greater, and sends his prophets to give them this explication of them, and to frighten them with an apprehension of the danger they were in; (v. 17.) Also I set watchmen over you. God's ministers are watchmen, and it is a great mercy to have them set over us in the Lord. Now observe here, (1.) The fair warning given by these watchmen. This was the burden of their song, they cried again and again, Hearken to the sound of the trumpet. God, in his providence, sounds the trumpet; (Zech. ix. 14.) the watchmen heard the melodies and are affected with it. (Jer. 22. 19.) and they are to call upon others to hearken to it too, to hear the Lord's controversy, to observe the voice of Providence, to improve it, and answer the intentions of it. (2.) This fair warning slighted; "But they said, We will not hearken; we will not hear, we will not heed, we will not believe; the prophets may as well save themselves and us the trouble. The reason why sinners perish is, because they do not hearken to the sound of the trumpet; and the reason why they do not is, because they will not; and they have no reason to give why they will not, but because they will not, that is, they are herein most unreasonable. One may more easily deal with ten men's reasons, than one man's will.

18. Therefore hear, ye nations, and know, O congregation, what is among them. 19. Hear, O earth; behold, I will bring evil upon this people, even the fruit of their thoughts, because they have not hearkened unto my words, nor to my law, but rejected it. 20. To what purpose cometh there to me incense from Sheba, and the sweet cane from a far country! your burnt-offerings are not acceptable, nor your sacrifices sweet unto me. 21. Therefore thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will lay stumbling-blocks before this people, and the fathers and the sons together shall fall upon them; the neighbour and his friend shall perish. 22. Thus saith the Lord, Behold, a people cometh from the north country, and a great nation shall be raised from the sides of the earth. 23. They shall lay hold on bow and spear; they are cruel, and have no mercy: their voice roareth like the sea; and they ride upon horses, set in array as men for war against thee. O daughter of Zion. 24. We have heard the fame thereof; our hands wax feeble: anguish hath taken hold of us, and pain as of a woman in travail. 25. Go not forth into the field, nor walk by the way; for the sword of the enemy and fear is on every side. 26. O daughter of my people, gird thee with sackcloth, and wallow thyself in ashes: make thee mourning as for an only son, most bitter lamentation: for the spoiler shall suddenly come upon us. 27. I have set thee for a tower and a fortress among my people, that thou mayest know and try their way. 28. They are all grievous revolters, walking with slanders: they are brass and iron; they are all corrupters. 29. The bellows are burned, the lead is consumed of the fire; the founder melteth in vain; for the wicked are not plucked away. 30. Reprobate silver shall men call them, because the Lord hath rejected them.

Here, I. God appeals to all the neighbours, may, to the whole world, concerning the equity of his proceedings against Judah and Jerusalem; (v. 18, 19.) "Hear, ye nations, and know particularly, O congregation of the mighty, the great men of the nations, that take cognizance of the affairs of the states about you, and make remarks upon them. Observe now what is doing among them of Judah and Jerusalem; you hear of the desolations brought upon the earth, and the earth rings of it, trembles under it; you all wonder that I should bring evil upon this people, that are in covenant with me, that profess relation to me, that have worshipped me, and been highly favoured by me; you are ready to ask, Wherefore has the Lord done thus to this land? (Deut. xxix. 24.) Know then," 1. "That it is the natural product of their devices. The evil brought upon them is the fruit of their thought. They thought to strengthen themselves by their alliance with foreigners, and by that very thing they weakened and diminished themselves, they betrayed and exposed themselves." 2. "That it is the just punishment of their disobedience and rebellion. God does but execute upon them the curse of the law for their violation of its commandments. It is because they have not hearkened to my words refer to my law, that I have reckoned a word I have said to them but rejected it all. They would never have been ruined thus by the judgments of God's hand, if they had refused to be ruled by the judgments of his mouth: therefore you cannot say that they have any wrong done them."
III. He foretells the desolations that was now coming upon them. 1. God designs their ruin because they hate to be reformed; (v. 21.) I will lay stumbling-blocks before this people, occasions of falling, not into sin, but into trouble. Those whom God has marked for destruction he perplexes and embarrasses in their counsels, and obstructs and retards all the methods they take for their own safety. The worse they were, the worse they did find themselves, wherever they went, were stumbling-blocks to them, in every corner they stumbled upon them, and were dashed to pieces by them; The fathers and the sons together shall fall upon them; neither the fathers with their wisdom, nor the sons with their strength and courage, shall escape them, or get over them, The sins that sinned with their fathers, fall with them. 2. Except the Lord God be his sword, he shall perish, and not be able to help either themselves or one another. 3. He will make use of the Chaldeans as instruments of it; for whatever work God has to do, he will find out proper instruments for the doing of it. This is a people fetched from the north, from the sides of the earth. Babylon itself lay a great way off northward; and some of the countries they were subject to the king of Babylon, out of which his sword had been farther. These must be employed in his service, v. 22, 23. For, (1.) It is a people very numerous, a great nation, which will make their invasion the more formidable. (2.) It is a warlike people; they lay hold on bow and spear, and at this time know how to use them, for they are used to them; they ride upon horses, and therefore they march the more swiftly, and in battle press the harder. No nation has ever brought into the field a better cavalry than the Chaldeans. (3.) It is a barbarous people; they are cruel, and have no mercy, being greedy of prey, and flushed with victory. They take a pride in frightening all about them; their voice roars like the sea. And, lastly, They have a particular design upon Judah and Jerusalem, in hopes greatly to enrich themselves with the spoil of that famous country. They are set in array against them, O daughter of Zion. The sins of God's professing people make them an easy prey to those that are God's enemies as well as theirs.

IV. He describes the very great consternation which Judah and Jerusalem should be in, upon the approach of this formidable enemy, v. 24—26. 1. They are seized with a sense of the utter power and intelligence brought them of the approach of the enemy; "When we have but heard the fame thereof, our hearts wax feeble, and we have no heart to make any resistance; anguish has taken hold of us, and we are immediately in an extremity of pain, like that of a woman in travail." Note, Sense of guilt quite dispirits men, upon the approach of any thing that is to be done. 2. They are afraid of their own weakness, and would have none to help themselves, who have made God their Enemy? 3. They confine themselves by consent to their houses, not daring to show their heads abroad, for though they could not but expect that the sword of the enemy would at last find them out there, yet they would rather die tamely and meanly there than run any venture, either by flight or flight, to help themselves. Two things they are to do for themselves, Hold forth into the field, no to fetch to your provision thence, nor walk by the way; dare not to go to church or market, it is at your peril if you do, for the sword of the enemy, and the fear of it, is on every side; the highways are uncouraged, as in Joel's time," Judg. vi. 6. Let this remind us, when we travel the roads in safety, and there is none to molest us, to observe the old maxim of the restraint of all public tranquility. 3. The prophet calls upon them sadly to lament the desolations that were coming upon them. He was himself the lamenting prophet, and called upon his people to join with him in his lamentations; "O daughter of my people, hear thy God calling thee to weeping and mourning, and answer his call: do not only put on sackcloth for a day, but gird it on for thy constant wear; do not only put ashes on thy head, but wallow thyself in ashes; put thyself into close mourning, and use all the tokens of bitter lamentation, not forced and forced only, but freely and from the heart, for all the desolations that are to come for an only son, and think themselves comfortless because they are childless. Thus do they lament for the spoiler that suddenly comes upon us. Though he is not come yet, he is coming, the decree is gone forth; let us therefore meet the execution of it with a suitable sadness." As saints may rejoice in hope of God's mercies, though they lose them only in the promise, so sinners must mourn for fear of God's judgments, though they see them only in the threatened. 4. He constitutes the prophet a judge over this people that now stand upon their trial; as ch. i. 10. I have set thee over the nations; so here, I have set thee for a tower, or as a sentinel, or a watchman, upon a tower, among my people, as an inspector of their actions, and to give them warning and try their ways, v. 27. Not that God needed any to inform him concerning them; on the contrary, the prophet knew little of them in comparison, but by the spirit of prophecy: but thus God appeals to the prophet himself, and his own observation concerning their character, that he might be fully satisfied in the equity of God's proceedings against them, and with the more assurance give them warning of the judgment to come. God set him for a tower conspicuous to all, and attacked by many, but made him a fortress, a strong tower, gave him courage to stem the tide, and bear the shock of their displeasure. They that will be faithful reprovers, have need to be firm as fortresses.

Now in trying their ways he will find two things: 1. That they are wretchedly debauched; (v. 28.) They are all grievous revolters, revolters of revolters, (so the word is,) the worst of revolters, as a servant of servants is the meanest servant. They have a revolting heart, have deeply revolted, and revolt more and more. They have seemed to start fair, but they revolt and start back. They walk with slanders; they make nothing of belying and backbiting one another, nay, they make it a sort of sport to say the worst of one another, and of course; and they govern themselves by the slanders they hear, hating these that they hear ill-spoken of, though ever so unjustly. They are brass and iron, base metals, and there is nothing in them that is valuable. They were as silver and gold, but they are degenerated. Nay, as they are all revolters, so they are all corrupted, not only debauched themselves, but intractable to be reformed. 2. That they would never be reformed and reformed; it was in vain to think of reducing them, for various methods had been tried with them, and all to no purpose, v. 29, 30. It is impossible to submit to such a sort to have some good metal in it, and was therefore put into the furnace by the refiner, who used all his art, and took abundance of pains, about it, but it proved all dross, nothing of any value could be extracted out of it. God by his prophets and by his providences had used the most proper means to refine this people, and to purify them from their wickedness, as it was in all vain. Not all the timbering of the word, and a series of afflictions, they had been kept in a constant fire, but all to no purpose. The belles have been still kept so near the fire, to blew it, that they are burnt with the heat of it, or they are quite worn out with long use, and thrown into the fire as good for nothing. The prophets have reached their throats sore with crying aloud against the sins of Israel, and yet they are not convinced and humbled. The lead, which was then used in refining silver, as quicksilver is now, is consumed of the fire, and has not done its work; for the founder melts in vain, his labour is lost, for the wicked are not plucked away, no care is taken to separate between the precious and the vile, the gold and the old leaven, to cast out of communion those who, being corrupt themselves, are in danger of infecting others. Or, Their wickednesses are not removed, (so some read it,) they are still as bad as ever, and nothing will prevail to part between them and their sins; they will not be brought off from their idolatries and immoralities by all they have heard, and all they have felt, of the wrath of God, which is hereby expressed upon them, v. 30. Reprobate silver shall they be called, useless and worthless; they glitter as if they had some silver in them, but there is nothing of real virtue or goodness to be found among them, and for this reason the Lord has rejected them. He will no more own them as his people, nor look for any good from them; he will take them away like their wicked progenitors, and consume them with a fire for those that would not be purified by a refining fire. By this it appears, (1.) That God has no pleasure in the death and sinners, for he tries all ways and methods with them to prevent their destruction, and qualify them for salvation. Both his ordinances and his providences have a tendency this way, to part between them and their sins, and yet with many it is all lost labour: We have hited you to, and you have not danced; we have mourning ed unto you, and you have not wept. Therefore, (2.) God will be justified in the death of sinners, and all the blame will lie upon themselves. He did not reject them till he had used all proper means to reduce them; did not cast them off so long as there was any hope of them, nor abandon them as dross till it appeared that they were reprobate silver.

CHAPTER VII.

The prophet having in God's name reproved the people for their sins, and given them warning of the judgments of God that were coming upon them, in this chapter pursues the same intention for their humiliation and awakening. I. He shows them the invalidity of the plea they so much relied upon, that they had the temple of God among them, and constantly attended the service of it, and endeavours to take them off from their confidence in their external privileges and performances, v. 1. II. He against them the impositions of the law; and foretells that such should be the desolations of Jerusalem, v. 12. 13. III. He represents to the prophet their abominable idolatries, for which he was thus incensed against them, v. 17. 18. IV. He sets before the people that fundamental maxim of religion, that to obey is better than sacrifice, (1 Sam. xx. 22.) and that God would not accept the sacrifices of those that obstinately persisted in disobedience, v. 21. 22. V. He threatens, should they separate among the latter day waste for their idolatry and iniquity, and to multiply their stain as they had multiplied their sin, v. 29. 31.

1. THE word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying, 2. Stand in the gate of the Lord's house, and proclaim there this word, and say, Hear the word of the Lord, all ye of Judah, that enter in at these gates to worship the Lord: 3. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Amend your ways and your doings, and I will cause you to dwell in this place. 4. Trust you not in lying words, saying, The temple of the Lord, The temple of the Lord, are these. 5. If ye thoroughly amend your ways and your doings; if you thoroughly execute judgment between a man and his neighbour; 6. If ye oppress not the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, and shed not innocent blood in this place, neither walk after other gods to your hurt: 7. Then will I cause you to dwell in this place, in the land that I gave to your fathers, for ever and ever. 8. Behold, ye trust in lying words, that cannot profit. 9. Will ye steal, murder, and commit adultery, and swear falsely, and burn incense unto Baal, and walk after other gods whom ye know not; 10. And come and stand before me in this house, which is called by my name, and say, We are delivered to do all these abominations? 11. Is this house, which is called by my name, become a den of robbers in your eyes? Behold, even I have seen it, saith the Lord. 12. But go ye now unto my place, which was in Shiloh, where I set my name at the first, and see what I did to it for the wickedness of my people Israel. 13. And now, because ye have done all these works, saith the Lord, and I spake unto you, rising up early and speaking, but ye heard not; and I called you, but ye answered not; 14. Therefore will I do unto this house, which is called by my name, wherein ye trust, and unto the place which I gave to you and to your fathers, as I have done to Shiloh. 15. And I will cast you out of my sight, as I have cast out all your brethren, even the whole seed of Ephraim.

These verses begin another sermon, which is continued in this and the two following chapters; much to the same effect, with those before, to reason them to repentance. Observe, 1. The orders given to the prophet to preach this sermon; for he had not only a general commission, but particular directions and instructions, for every message he delivered. This was a word that came to him from the Lord, v. 1. We are not told when this sermon was to be preached, but are told, 1. Where it must be preached—in the gates of the Lord's house, where he had set his name, and in the outer court, or the court of the people. It would affront the priests, and expose the prophet to their rage, to have such a message as this delivered within their precincts; but the prophet must not fear the face of man, he cannot be faithful to his God if he do. 2. To whom it must be preached—to the men of Judah, that enter in at these gates to worship the Lord; probably, it was at this time, when all the males from all parts of the country were to appear before the Lord in the courts of his house, and not to appear empty. Then he had many together to preach to, and that was the most seasonable time to admonish them not to trust to their privileges. Note, (1.) Even those that profess religion have need to be preached to, as well as those that are without. (2.) It is desirable to have opportunity of preaching to many together. Wisdom chooses to cry in the chief place of concourse, and as Jeremiah here, in the opening of the gates, the temple-gates. (3.) When we are going to worship God, we need to be admonished to worship him in the spirit, and to have no confidence in the flesh, Phil. iii. 3.

11. The contents and scope of the sermon itself. It is delivered in the name of the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, who commands the world, but conveys with his people. As creatures we are bound to regard the Lord of hosts, as Christians the God of Israel; what he said to them he says to us, and it is not much the same with that which John Baptist said to them when he was baptized; (Matt. iii. 9.) Bring forth fruits meet for repentance; and think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father. The prophet here tells them.

1. What were the true words of God, which they might trust to. In short, they might depend upon it, that, if they would repent, and reform their lives, and return to God in a way of duty, he would restore and confirm their peace, would redress their grievances, and return to them in a way of mercy; (v. 3.) Amend your ways and your doings. This implies that there had been much amiss in their ways and doings, many faults and errors. But it is a great instance of the favour of God to them, that he gives them liberty to amend, shows them where and how they erred, and tells them how they may amend, and repent; measure them upon their amendment; "I will cause you to dwell quietly and peaceable in this place, and a stop shall be put to that which threatens your expulsion." Reformation is the only way, and a sure way, to prevent ruin.

He explains himself, (v. 5—7.) and tells them particularly,

1. That the amendment was which he expected from them. They must thoroughly amend; in making good, they must make good their ways and doings; they must reform with resolution, and it must be a universal, constant, persevering reformation; not partial, but entire; not hypocritical, but sincere; not wavering, but constant. They must make the tree good, and make the fruit good; must amend their hearts and thoughts, and so amend their ways and doings. In particular, (1.) They must be honest and just in all their dealings. They that had power in their hands must thoroughly execute judgment between a man and his neighbour, without partiality, and according as the merits of the cause appeared. They must not either in judgment or in contract oppress the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, nor lend money upon usury; that did oppress, nor refuse to do them right when they sought for it: they must not shed innocent blood, and with it defile this place and the land wherein they dwelt. (2.) They must keep close to the worship of the true God only; Neither walk after other gods; "Do not hangen after them, nor hearken to those that would draw you into communion with idols; for it is, as they say, their common concern, this with all speed, go through with it, and abide by it; and I will cause you to dwell in this place, this temple; it shall continue your place of resort and refuge, the place of your comfortable meeting with God and one another; and you shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers for ever and ever, and shall never be turned out either from God's house or from your own. It is promised that they shall still enjoy their civil and sacred privileges, that they shall have a comfortable enjoyment of them; I will cause you to dwell here, (and those dwell at ease, whom God gives a settlement to;) they shall enjoy it by covenant, by virtue of the grant made of it to their fathers, not by providence; but by promise. They shall continue in the enjoyment of it without eviction or molestation, they shall not be disturbed, much less dispossessed, for ever and ever; nothing but sin could throw them out.

And an everlasting inheritance in the heavenly Canaan is hereby secured to them, which lies in all godliness and honesty. And the vulgar Latin reads a further privilege here, v. 2. 7. Ibidem venire— I will dwell with you, in this place; and we shall find Canaan itself but an uncomfortable place to dwell in, if God did not dwell with us there.

2. What were the lying words of their own hearts, which they must not trust to. He cautions them against this self-deceit; (v. 4.) "Trust not in lying words; you are told in what way, and upon what terms, you may be easy, safe, and happy; now do not flatter yourselves with an opinion that you may be so on any other terms, or in any other way." Yet he charges them with this self-deceit arising from vanity; (v. 8.) "Behold, it is plain that you do trust in lying words, notwithstanding what is said to you; you trust in words that cannot profit; you rely upon a plea that will stand you in no stead. To give that confidence, which is the very soul of all words of truth, which would profit them, take shelter for it in the word of God, which cannot profit them. Now these lying words were, "The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, are these. These buildings, the courts, the holy place, and the holy of holies, are the temple of the Lord, built by his appointment, to his glory; here he resides, here he is worshiped, and here he makes his abode under his people, and is our homage to him as our King in his palace." This they thought was security enough to them to keep God and his favours from leaving them, God and his judgments from breaking in upon them. When the prophet tells them how sinful they were, and how miserable they were likely to be still, they appealed to the temple; "How can we be either so or so, as long as we have that holy, happy place among us?"

The prophet repeats it because they repeated it upon all occasions. It was the cant of the times, it was in their mouths upon all occasions. If they heard an awakening sermon, if any startling piece of news was brought upon them, they lulled themselves asleep again with this, "We cannot but do well, for we have the temple of the Lord among us." Note, The privileges of a flourishing church are often the pride and confidence of those that are strangers and enemies to the power of it. It is common for those that are farthest from God, to boast themselves most of their being near to the church. They are haughty because of the holy mountain; (Zeph. iii. 11.) as if God's mercy were so tied to that, that he would be none of them.

Now, to convince them what a frivolous plea this was, and what little stead it would stand them in,

(1.) He shows them the gross absurdity of it in itself. If they knew any thing either of the temple of the Lord, or of the Lord of the temple, they must think that to plead that, either in excuse of their sin against God, or in arrest of God's judgment against them, was the most ridiculous, unreasonable thing that could be.

[1.] God is a holy God; but this plea made him the Patron of sin, of the worst of sins, which even the light of nature condemns; (v. 9. 10.) "What," says he, "will you steal, murder, and commit adultery, be guilty of the vilest immoralities, and which the common interest, as well as the common sense, of mankind witness against? Will you swear falsely, a crime which all nations (who with the belief of a God had a veneration for an oath) have always had a horror of? Will you burn intense to Baal, a dung-hill-deity, that sets up as a rival with the great Jehovah, and, not content with that, will you walk after other gods too, whom you know not, and by all these crimes put a daring afront upon God, how as the Lord of hosts, and the God of Israel? Will you exchange a God whose power and goodness you have had such a long experience of, for gods whose ability and willingness to help you you know nothing of? And when you have thus done the worst you can against God, will you brazen your faces so far as to come and stand before him in this house which is called by his name, and in which his name is hallowed upon—stand before him as servants writing his commands, as supplicants expecting his favour? Will you act in open rebellion against him, and yet herd yourselves among his subjects, among the best of them? By this, it should seem, you think that either he does not discover, or does not dislike, your wicked practices, to imagine either of which is to put the highest indignity possible upon him. It is as if you should say, We are delivered to do all these abominations. If they had not the front to say this totidem verbis—in so many words, yet their actions speak it aloud. They could not but own that God, even their own God, had many a time delivered them, and been a present Help to them, when otherwise they must have perished. He, in delivering them, designed to cause them to render accounts to him, and to lead them to repentance; but they resolved to persist in their abominations notwithstanding; as soon as they were delivered, (as of old in the days of the Judges,) they did evil again in the sight of the Lord; which was, in effect, to say, in direct contradiction to the true intent and meaning of the providences which had affected them, that God had delivered them in order to lead them to their ruin, as by sacrificing the more profusely to their idols. Note, Those who continue in sin because grace has abounded, or that grace may abound, do, in effect, make Christ the Minister of sin. Some take it thus: You present yourselves before God with your sacrifices and sin-offerings, and then say, We are delivered, we are discharged from inward guilt. But now, if this is his true business, and his true force, it is to blind the world, and stop the mouth of conscience, that you may, the more easily to yourselves, and the more plausibly before others, do all these abominations. [2.] His temple was a holy place; but this plea made it a protection to the most unholy persons; Is this house, which is called by my name, and is standing sign of God's kingdom, set men in opposition to the kingdom of sin and Satan—Is this become a den of robbers in your eyes? Do you think it was built to be not only a rendezvous of, but a refuge and shelter to, the vilest of malefactors? No; though the horns of the altar were a sanctuary to him that slew a man unawares, yet they were not so to a willful murder, nor to one that did it with premeditation. (Ex. xxi. 14.)

Kings ii. 29. Those that think to excuse themselves in unchristian practices with the Christian name, and sin the more boldly and securely because there is a Sin-offering provided, do, in effect, make God's house of prayer a den of thieves; as the priests in Christ's time, Matt. xxiii. 15. But could they thus insultingly presume upon the presence of the Lord, have seen the real iniquities through the counterfeit and dissembled piety. Note, Though men may deceive one another with the shows of devotion, yet they cannot deceive God. [2.] He shows them the insufficiency of this plea adjoined long since in the case of Shiloh. [1] It is certain that Shiloh was ruined, though it had God's sanctuary in it, when by its wickedness it profaned that sanctuary; (v. 12.) Go ye now to my place which was in Shiloh; it is probable that the ruins of that once flourishing city were yet remaining; they might, at least, read the history of it, which ought to affect them as if they saw the place: there God set his name at the first, there the tabernacle was set up when Israel first took possession of Canaan, (Josh. xviii. 1.) and thither the tribes went up; but those that attended the service of the tabernacle there, corrupted both themselves and others, and from them arose the wickedness of his people Israel; that fountain was poisoned, and sent forth malignant springs; and what came of it? Go, see what God did to it! Was it protected by its having the tabernacle in it? No, God forsook it, (Ps. lxxviii. 60.) sent his ark into captivity, cut off the house of Eli that presided there; and it is very probable that the city was quite destroyed, for we never read any more of it but as a monument of divine vengeance upon holy places when they harbour wicked people. Note, God's judgments upon other nations have really revolted from God, while they kept up a profession of nearness to him, should be a warning to us not to trust in lying words. It is good to consult precedents, and make use of them; remember Lot's wife; remember Shiloh and the seven churches of Asia; and know that the ark and candlestick are moveable things, Rev. iii. 18. [2.] It is certain that Shiloh's fate will be Jerusalem's doom, if a speedy and sincere repentance prevent it not. First, Jerusalem was now as sinful as ever Shiloh was; that is proved by the unerring testimony of God himself against them; (v. 13.) You have done all these works, you cannot deny it: and they continued obstinate in their sin; that is proved by the very incriminating precedents, they profaned the tabernacle and the ark, and brought it into exile, and finally into captivity, rising up early and speaking, as one in care, as one in earnest, as one who would lose no time in dealing with them; nay, who should take the fittest opportunity for speaking to them early in the morning, when, if ever, they were sober, and had their thoughts free and clear; but it was all in vain, God spake, but they were deaf, as if they were dead; as if they were mindless; he called them, but they answered not; they would not come at his call. Note, What God has spoken to us greatly aggravates what we have done against him. Secondly, Jerusalem shall shortly be as miserable as ever Shiloh was; Therefore will I do unto this house as I did to Shiloh, ruin it, and lay it waste: v. 14. Those that tread in the steps of wickedness that went before them, must expect to fall by the like judgments, for all these things happen to them for examples. The temple at Jerusalem, though ever so strong built, if wickedness was found in it, would be as unable to keep its ground, and as easily conquered, as even the tabernacle in Shiloh was, when God's day of vengeance was come; "This great sanctuary, erected by a step of solemn consecration, and therefore you may think that I should protect it; it is the house in which you trust, and you think that it will protect you; this land is the place, this city the place, which I gave to you and your fathers, and therefore you are secure of the continuance of it, and that nothing can turn you out of it; but the men of Shiloh thus treated there God set his name at the first, there his service." This quotes another precedent, (v. 13.) the ruin of the kingdom of the ten tribes, who were the seed of Abraham, and had the covenant of circumcision, and possessed the land which God gave to them and their fathers, and yet their idolatries threw them out, and extirpated them; And can you think that the same evil courses should be as speaks the prophet not to pray for them, because he would not have his prayers to be (as prophets' prayers seldom did) unanswered. God said to Moses, Let me alone, Exod. xxxii. 10. It is an ill omen to a people, when God restrains the spirits of his ministers and people from praying for them, and gives them to see their case so desperate, that few of them will have heart to speak a good word for them. Those who pray expecting no answer, may not expect any benefit by their prayers; and if you will not hear us when we speak from God to you, God will not hear us when we speak to him for you.

II. He gives him a reason for this prohibition. Praying is too precious a thing to be lost and thrown away upon a people hardened in sin, and marked for ruin.

I. They are resolved to persist in their rebellion against God, and will not be turned back by the prophet's preaching: for this he appeals to the prophet himself, and his own inspection and observation; (v. 17.) Seest thou not what they do openly, and publicly, without either shame or fear, in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem? This is intimated, that the sin was evident, and could not be denied, and that the shewers were impudent, and would not be reformed; they committed their wickedness even in the prophet's presence and under his eye; he saw what they did, and yet they did it, which was an affront to his office, and to him whose officer he was, and bade defiance to both.

Now observe, (1.) What the sin is, with which they are here charged—it is idolatry, v. 18. Their idolatrous respects are paid to the queen of heaven, the moon, either in an image, or in the original, or both: they worshipped it, probably, under the name of Ashtaroth, or some other of their goddesses, being in love with the brightness in which they saw the moon walk, and thinking themselves indebted to her for her benign influence, or hearing her malignant ones, Job xxxi. 26. The worshipping of the moon was much in use among the heathen nations, Jer. xlv. 17, 19. Some read it the frame or workmanship of heaven, the whole celestial globe with all its ornaments and powers was the object of their adoration. They worshipped the host of heaven, Acts vii. 42. The homage they should have paid to the Queen, they paid to the statues that beautified the front of it, this is intended of the heathen gods, which they worshipped the creatures instead of him that made them: the servants instead of him that commands them, and the gifts instead of him that gave them. With the queen of heaven they worshipped other gods, images of things not only in heaven above, but in the earth beneath, and in the waters under the earth; in these that forsake the true God, wander endlessly after false ones. To these do the children of their own making they offer cakes for meat-offerings, and pour out drink-offerings, as if they had their meat and drink from them, and were obliged to make to them their acknowledgments; and see how busy they are, and how every hand is employed in the service of these idols, according as they used to be employed in their debasing services. The children were sent to gather wood, the fathers they worshipped out the oven, being of the poorer sort, that could not afford to keep servants to do it, yet they would rather do it themselves than it should be undone; the women kneaded the dough with their own hands, for perhaps though they had servants to do it, they took a pride in showing their zeal for their idols by doing it themselves. Let us be instructed even by this this had example, in the service of God.

Let us honour him with our substance, as those that have our subsistence from him, and eat and drink to the glory of him from whom we have our next

God had showed them, in the foregoing verses, that the temple, and the service of it, of which they boasted, and in which they trusted, should not avail to prevent the judgment threatened: But there was another thing which might stand them in some stead, and which yet they had no value for, and that was, the prophet's intercession for them; his prayers would do them more good than their own pleas: now here that support is taken from them; and their case is sad indeed, who have lost their interest in the prayers of God's ministers and people.

I. God here forbids the prophet to pray for them; (v. 16.) "The decree is gone forth, their ruin is resolved on, therefore pray not thou for this people, pray not for the preventing of this judgment threatened; they have sinned unto death, and therefore pray not for their life, but for the life of their souls," 1 John v. 16. See here, 1. That God's prophets are freemen of God's prophet for the destruction of Judah and Jerusalem, and yet pray for their preservation, not knowing that the decree was absolute; and it is the will of God that we pray for the peace of Jerusalem. Even when we threaten sinners with damnation, we must pray for their salvation, that they may turn, and live. Jeremiah was hated, and persecuted, and reproached, by the children of his people, and yet he lived for them, and for it becomes us to labour for evil. 2. That God's praying prophets have a great interest in heaven, how little soever they have in earth. When God was determined to destroy this people, he be and drink. [2] Let us not decline the hardest services, nor disdain to step to the meanest, by which God may be honoured; for none shall kindle a fire on God's altar for naught. Let us think it an honour to be employed in any work for God. [3] Let us bring up our children in the acts of devotion: let them, as they are capable, be employed in doing something toward the keeping up of religious exercises.

2. What is the direct tendency of this sin; "It is that they may provoke me to anger, they cannot design any thing else in it. But, (v. 19.) do they provoke me to anger? Is it because I am hard to be pleased, or easily provoked? Or am I to bear the blame of the resentment? No, it is their own doing, they are their own enemies, and their own wrong, and they alone shall bear it." Is it against God, that they provoke him to wrath? Is he the worse for it? Does it do him any real damage? No, is it not against themselves, to the confusion of their own faces? It is a malice against God, but it is impotent malice, it cannot hurt him; nay, it is foolish malice, it will hurt themselves; they show their spite against God, but they do not know it; they are not able to discern that a people, thus desperately set upon their own ruin, should be abandoned.

2. God is resolved to proceed in his judgments against them, and will not be turned back by the prophet's prayers; (v. 26.) Thus saith the Lord God, and what he saith he will not unsay, nor can all the world guesstain; hear it therefore, and tremble; "Behold, my anger is kindled, but a little, much more is it kindled; as the flames of fire upon the new carpet of earth, or the shower of fire and brimstone upon Sodom; since they will anger me, let them see what will come of it." They shall soon find, (1.) That there is no extinguishing this deluge of fire, either by flying from it, or fencing against it; it shall be poured out on this place, though it be a holy place, the Lord's house. It shall reach both men and beast, like the plagues of Egypt, and, like some of them, shall destroy the trees of the field, and the fruit of the ground, which they had designed and prepared for Baal; and of which they had made cakes to the queen of heaven. (2.) There is no extinguishing it; it shall burn, and shall not be quenched; prayers and tears shall then avail nothing; when his wrath is kindled but a little, much more will it be kindled to such a degree, there shall be no quenching of it. God's wrath is that fire unquenchable, which eternity itself will not see the period of; Depart, ye cursed, into everlasting fire.

21. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Put your burnt-offerings unto your sacrifices, and eat flesh. 22. For I spake not unto your fathers, nor commanded them in the day that I brought them out of the land of Egypt, concerning burnt-offerings or sacrifices: 23. But this thing commanded I them, saying, Obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people; and walk ye in all the ways that I have commanded you, that it may be well unto you. 24. But they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear, but walked in the counsels and in the imagination of their evil heart, and went backward, and not forward. 25. Since the day that your fathers came forth out of the land of Egypt unto this day, I have even sent unto you all my servants the prophets, daily rising up early, and sending them: 26. Yet they hearkened not unto me, nor inclined their ear, but hardened their neck: they did worse than their fathers. 27. Therefore thou shalt speak all these words unto them; but they will not hearken to thee: thou shalt also call unto them; but they will not answer thee. 28. But thou shalt say unto them, This is a nation that obeyeth not the voice of the Lord their God, nor receiveth correction: truth is perished, and is cut off from their mouth.

God, having showed the people that the temple would not protect them while they polluted it with their wickedness, here shows them that their sacrifices would not alone for them, nor be accepted, while they went on in disobedience. See with what contempt he here speaks of their ceremonial service; (v. 21.) "Put your burnt-offerings to your sacrifices, go on in them as long as you please; add one sort of sacrifice to another; turn your burnt-offerings, which were to be wholly burnt to the honour of God, into peace-offerings," (which the offerer himself had a considerable share of,) "that you may eat flesh, for that is all the good you are likely to have from your sacrifices, a good meal's meat or two; but expect not any other benefit by them while you live at this loose rate. Keep your sacrifices to yourselves, and do not serve God himself at your own table, for they are no way acceptable at God's altars." For the opening of this,

I. He shows them that obedience was the only thing he required of them, v. 22. 23. He appeals to the original contract, by which they were first formed into a people, when they were brought out of Egypt. God made them a kingdom of priests himself, not that he might be regaled with their sacrifices, as the devils, whom the heathen worshipped, which are represented as eating with pleasure the fat of their sacrifices, and drinking the wine of their drink-offerings, Deut. xxxiii. 38. No, Will God eat the flesh of bulls? Ps. i. 13. I spake not to your fathers concerning burnt-offerings or sacrifices; the law of the temple was given before the ceremonial institutions; and those came afterward, as trials of their obedience, and assistance to their repentance and faith. The Levitical law begins thus, If any man of you will bring an offering, he must do so and so, (Lev. i. 2.—li. 1.) as if it were intended rather to regulate sacrifice than to require it: but that which God commanded, which he bound them to by his suprime authority, and which he insisted upon as the condition of the covenant was, Obey my voice; see Exod. xv. 26. where this was the statute and the ordinance by which God proved them, Hearken diligently to the voice of the Lord thy God. The condition of their being God's peculiar people was this, (Exod. xix. 5.) Be ye mine army. Make conscience of the duties of natural religion, observe positive institutions from a principle of obedience; and then, I will be your God, and ye shall be my people," the greatest honour, happiness, and satisfaction, that any of the children of men are capable of. "Let your conversation be regular, and in everything study to comply with the will and word of God: walk within the bounds that I have set you, and in all the ways that I have commanded you, and then you may assure yourselves that it shall be well with you." The demand here is very reasonable, that we should be directed by Infinite Wisdom to that which is fit; that he that made us should command us, and that he should give us law,
361. The promise is very encouraging; let God's will be your rule, and his favour shall be your felicity.

11. He shows them that disobedience was the only thing for which he had a quarrel with them. He would not reprehense them for their sacrifices, for the omission of them, they had been continually before him, (Ps. 1. 8.) with them they hoped to allure God, and purify a way to go on in sin. Then there was no cause of quarrel which God had all along laid to their charge, was breaking his commandments in the course of their conversation; while they observed them, in some instances, in the course of their devotion, v. 24, 25, &c.

1. They set up their own will in competition with the will of God. They hearted false to God and to his law, they never heeded that, it was to them as if it had never been given, or were of no force; they inclined not their ear to attend to it, much less their hearts to comply with it. But they would have their own way, would do as they chose, and not as they were bidden. Their own counsels were their guide, and not the dictates of divine wisdom; that shall be lawful and good with them, which the word of God says quite contrary. The imaginations of their evil heart, the appetites and passions of it, shall be a law to them, and they will walk in the way of it, and in the sight of their eyes.

2. If they began well, yet they did not proceed, but soon flew off. They went backward, when they talked of making a captain, and returning to Egypt and the places of their former sin, and they thought that it was to them as if they had never been there; they inclin'd their ear. This had been their way and manner all along; they were of the same stubborn, refractory disposition with those that went before them; it had all along been the genius of the nation, and an evil genius it was, that continually haunted them till it ruined them at last.

3. Their practice and character were still the same; they are worse, and not better, than their fathers.

(1.) Jeremiah can himself witness against them, that they were disobedient, or he shall soon find it so; (v. 27.) as men rise up early to call servants to their work, but they were as deaf to the prophets as they were to God, and not the word of God, but their inclin'd their ear. This had been their way and manner all along; they were of the same stubborn, refractory disposition with those that went before them; it had all along been the genius of the nation, and an evil genius it was, that continually haunted them till it ruined them at last.

(2.) He must therefore own that they deserved the character of a disobedient people, that were ripe for destruction, and must go to them, and tell them so to their faces; (v. 28.) Say unto them, This is a nation that obeys not the voice of the Lord their God; they are notorious for their obstinacy; they sacrifice to the Lord as their God, but they will not be ruled by him as their God; they will not receive either the instruction of his word or the correction of his rod, they will not be reformed or returned by either; true, that is not among them; they cannot receive it, they will not submit to it, nor be governed by it; they will not speak truth, there is no believing a word they say, for it is cut off from their mouth, and lying comes in the room of it; they are false both to God and man.

29. Cut off thy hair, O Jerusalem, and cast it away, and take up a lamentation on high places; for the Lord hath rejected, and forsaken the generation of his wrath. 30. For the children of Judah have done evil in my sight, saith the Lord; they have set their abominations in the house which is called by my name, to pollute it. 31. And they have built the high places of Tophet, which is in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to burn their sons and their daughters in the fire; which I commanded not, neither came it into my heart. 32. Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be called Tophet, nor, The valley of the son of Hinnom, but, The valley of slaughter: for they shall bury in Tophet till there be no place. 33. And the carcases of this people shall be meat for the fowls of the heaven, and for the beasts of the earth; and none shall fray them away. 34. Then will I cause to cease from the cities of Judah, and from the streets of Jerusalem, the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride; for the land shall be desolate.

Here is,

I. A loud call to weeping and mourning. Jerusalem, that had been a joyous city, the joy of the whole earth, must now take up a lamentation on high places, and lamentations where they had observed their idols; there must they now bewail their misery. In token both of sorrow and slavery, Jerusalem must now cut off her hair, and cast away; the word is peculiar to the hair of the Nazarites, which was the badge and token of their dedication to God, and it is called their crown. Jerusalem had been a city which was a Nazarite to God, but must now cut off her hair, must be profaned, degraded, and separated from God, as she had been separated to him. It is time for these that have lost their holiness, to lay aside their joy.

II. Just cause given for this great lamentation.

1. The sin of Jerusalem appears here very heinous, nowhere worse, or more exceedingly sinful. The children of Judah (God's professing people, that came forth out of the waters of Judah, Isa. lxxxv.) have done evil in my sight, under my eye, in my presence; they have affronted me to my face, which very much aggravates the affront; or, They have done that which they know to be evil in my sight, and in the highest degree offensive to me. Idoltry was the sin which was, above all other sins, distasteful to God's sight. Now here are two things charged upon them in their idolatry, which were very provoking.

(1.) That they were very impudent in it toward God, and set him at defiance; (v. 30.) They have
This valley of Tophet was a place where the citizens of Jerusalem walked to take the air; but it shall now be spoiled for that use, for it shall be full of graves, that there shall be no walking there, because of the danger of contracting a ceremonial pollution by the touch of a grave. There it was that they sacrificed some of their children, and dedicated others to Moloch, and there they shall fall as victims to his worship. Tophet was the burying-place, or burning-place, of the dead bodies of the besiegers, when the Assyrian army was routed by an angel; and for this it was ordained of old, Isa. xxx. 33. But they having forgotten this mercy, and made it the place of their sin, God will now turn it into a burning-place for the besieged. In allusion to this valley, he bids in the prophecies of the commencement of it, that Tophet, in the midst of the great city of Jerusalem, shall be the burning-place of the Assyrians, and the revolting Jews; so hell is a receptacle after death both for infidels and hypocrites, the open enemies of God's church, and its treacherous friends; it is the congregation of the dead; it is prepared for the generation of God's wrath. But so great shall that slaughter be, that even the sparsel of the valleys of the city of Jerusalem shall not be able to bury the slain; and at length there shall not be enough left alive to bury the dead, so that the carcasses of the people shall be meat for the birds and beasts of prey, that shall feed upon them like carrion, and none shall have the concern or courage to frighten them away, as Rizpah did from the dead bodies of Saul's sons, 2 Sam. xxi. 16. This was according to what the threatening prophets and a branch of the curse; (Deut. xxviii. 26.) The carcasse shall be meat to the fowls and beasts, and no man shall fray them away. Thus do the law and the prophets agree, and the execution with both. The decent burying of the dead is a piece of humanity, in remembrance of what the dead body has been—the tabernacle of a reasonable soul. Nay, it is a piece of divinity, in expectation of what the dead body shall be at the resurrection: the want of it has sometimes been an instance of the rage of men against God's witnesses, Rev. xi. 9. Here it is threatened as an instance of the wrath of God against his enemies, and is an intimation that evil pursues sinners even after death.

(2.) Joy shall depart from them; (v. 34.) Then shall I cause to cease the voice of mirth. God shall be called by his prophets, and by lesser judgments, to weeping and mourning; but they walked contrary to him, and would hear of nothing but joy and gladness, Isa. xxii. 12, 13. And what came of it? Now God called to lamentation, (v. 29.) and he made his call effectual, leaving them neither cause for joy for heart and gladness. They that will not weep, shall weep; they that will not by the grace of God be emptied of all mirth, shall be made to see the justice of God be deprived of all mirth; for when God judges he will overcome. It is threatened here, that there shall be nothing to rejoice in; there shall be none of the joy of weddings; no mirth, for there shall be no marriages; the comforts of life shall be abandoned, and all care to keep up mankind upon earth cast off; there shall be none of the voice of the godly glee and the bire and mirth, shall be the music sung; nor shall there be any more of the joy of harvest, for the land shall be desolate, uncultivated and unimproved; both the cities of Judah, and the streets of Jerusalem, shall look thus melancholy: and when they thus look about them, and see no cause to rejoice, no marvel if they retire into themselves, and find no heart to rejoice. God can so move New Jerusalem, Jerusalem the new, Jerusalem the holy city, which is a reason why we should always rejoice with trembling; be merry and wise.
The prophet proceeds, in this chapter, both to magnify and to justify the destruction that God was bringing upon his people for their iniquity. He shows how grievous was the sin, and how righteous is the punishment. 1. He represents the judgments coming as so very terrible, that death should appear so as most to be dreaded, and yet should be desired, v. 1-3. He aggravates the wasted stupidity and wilfulness of this people, as that which brought this ruin upon them, v. 4-12. 2. He describes the great confusion and consternation that the whole land should be in, upon the alarm of it, v. 13-17. 3. The prophet is himself deeply affected with it, and lays it very much to heart, v. 18-22.

1. At that time, saith the Lord, they shall bring out the bones of the kings of Judah, and the bones of his princes, and the bones of the priests, and the bones of the prophets, and the bones of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, out of their graves: 2. And they shall spread them before the sun, and the moon, and all the host of heaven, whom they have loved, and whom they have served, and after whom they have walked, and whom they have sought, and whom they have worshipped: they shall not be gathered, nor be buried; they shall be for dung upon the face of the earth. 3. And death shall be chosen rather than life by all the residue of them that remain of this evil family, which remain in all the places whither I have driven them, saith the Lord of hosts.

These verses might fitly have been joined to the close of the foregoing chapter, as giving a further description of the dreadful desolation which the army of the Chaldeans should make in the land. It shall strangely alter the property of death itself, and for the worse too.

1. Death shall not now be, as it always used to be—the repose of the dead. When Job makes his court to the grave, it is in hope of this, that there he shall rest with kings and counsellors of the earth; but now the ashes of the dead, the bones of the kings, and the bones of the priests, and their bones scattered at the grave's mouth, Ps. cxli. 7. It was threatened in the close of the former chapter, that the slay should be unburied; that might be through neglect, and was not so strange; but here we find the graves of those that were buried, industriously and maliciously opened by the victorious enemy; who, either for covetousness, hoping to find treasure in the graves, or for the sake to the nation, and in a rage against it, brought out the bones of the kings of Judah, and the princes. The dignity of their sepulchres could not secure them, nay, did the more expose them to be rifled; but it was base and barbarous thus to trample upon royal dust. We will hope that the bones of good Josiah were not disturbed, because he piously protected the bones of God, or for the sake of the bones of the idolatrous priests, 2 Kings xxiii. 18. The bones of the priests and prophets too were dug up and thrown about. Some think the false prophets, and the idol-priests, God putting this mark of ignominy upon them: but if they were God's prophets and his priests, it is what the Psalmist complain's of, as the fruit of the outrage of the enemies, Ps. lx. 1, 2. Nay, those of the sinful Chaldeans that could not reach to violate the sepulchres of princes and priests, would rather play at small game than sit out, and therefore pulled the bones of the ordinary inhabitants of Jerusalem out of their graves. The barbarous nations were sometimes guilty of these absurd and inhuman triumphs over those they had conquered, and God permitted it here, for a mark of his displeasure against the generation of his wrath, and for terror to those that survived. The bones being dugged out of the graves, were spread abroad upon the face of the earth in contempt, and made objects of the most ghastly contemplation. They spread them to be dried, that they might carry them about in triumph, or might make fuel of them, or make some superstitious use of them. They shall be spread before the sun; for they shall not be ashamed openly to avow the fact at noon-day: and before the moon and stars, even all the host of heaven, whom they have made idols of. From the mention of the sun, moon, and stars, which should be the unconcerned spectators of this tragedy, the prophet takes occasion to show how they had idolized them, and paid those respects to them, which they should have paid to God only; that it might be observed how little they got by worshipping the creature, for the creatures they worshipped when they were in distress, saw it, but were not pleased; and rather grieved to see those whom they had abused in being defiled, by whom they had been abused in being defiled. See how their respects to their idols are enumerated, to show how we ought to behave toward our God. (1.) They loved them; as amiable beings and bountiful benefactors they esteemed them and delighted in them, and therefore did all that follows. (2.) They served them, did all they could in behalf of them, and thought nothing too much; they conformed to all the laws of their superstition, without disputing. (3.) They walked after them, strove to imitate and resemble them, according to the characters and accounts of them they had received, which gave rise and countenance to much of the abominable wickedness of the heathen. (4.) They sought them, consulted them as oracles, appealed to them as judges, implied their favour; and prayed to them as their benefactors. (5.) They worshipped them, gave them divine honour, as having a sovereign dominion over them. Before these lights of heaven, whom they had courted, shall their dead bodies be cast, and left to putrefy, and to be as dung upon the face of the earth; and the sun's shining upon them will but make them the more noisome objects; for the sun shall set but be as barley ground, and the dust of the earth shall be gathered; and the true God only, it will stand us in no stead on the other side death and the grave, not for the body, much less for the soul.

2. Death shall now be what it never used to be—the choice of the living: not because there appears in it any thing delicious: on the contrary, death never appeared in more horrid, frightful shapes than now. But to the believer it is but one of either a comfortable death or a human burial; and yet everything in this world shall become so irksome, and all the prospects so black and dismal, that death shall be chosen rather than life; (v. 3.) not in a believing hope of happiness in the other life, but in an utter despair of any case in this life. The nation is now reduced to a family, so small is the residue of those that remain in the land, if it be an evil family, still as bad as ever, their hearts unhumbled, and their lusts unmortified: these remain alive (and that is all) in the many places whither they were driven by the judgments of God; some prisoners in the country of their enemies, others beggars in their neighbours' country, and others fugitives in the land of the heathen. And though these that died, died very miserably, yet these that survived, and were thus driven out, should live yet more miserably; so that
4. Moreover, thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord; Shall they fall, and not arise? shall he turn away, and not return? 5. Why then is this people of Jerusalem slidden back by a perpetual backsliding? they hold fast deceit, they refuse to return. 6. I hearkened and heard, but they spake not aright: no man repented him of his wickedness, saying, What have I done? every one turned to his course, as the horse rusheth into the battle. 7. Yea, the stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times; and the turtle, and the crane, and the swallow, observe the time of their coming; but my people know not the judgment of the Lord. 8. How do ye say, We are wise, and the law of the Lord is with us? Lo, certainly in vain made he it; the pen of the scribes is in vain. 9. The wise men are ashamed, they are dismayed and taken: lo, they have rejected the word of the Lord; and what wisdom is in them? 10. Therefore will I give their wives unto others, and their fields to them that shall inherit them: for every one, from the least even unto the greatest, is given to covetousness; from the prophet even unto the priest, every one dealeth falsely. 11. For they have healed the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, Peace, peace; when there is no peace. 12. Were they ashamed when they had committed abomination? nay, they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush: therefore shall they fall among them that fall: in the time of their visitation they shall be cast down, saith the Lord.

The prophet here is instructed to set before this people the folly of their impertinence, which was it that brought this ruin upon them. They are here represented as the most stupid, senseless people, in the world, that would not be made wise by all the methods that Infinite Wisdom took to bring them to themselves and their right mind, and so to prevent the ruin that was coming upon them.

1. They would not attend to the dictates of reason; they would not act in the affairs of their souls with the same common prudence with which they acted in other things. This is least signified, in they would show themselves men; and religion would soon rule them, if right reason might. Observe it here; Come, and let us reason together, saith the Lord; (v. 4, 5.) Shall men fall, and not arise? If men happen to fall to the ground, to fall into the dirt, will they not get up again as fast as they can? They are not such fools as to lie still when they are down. Shall a man turn aside out of the right way? Yes, the most careful traveller may miss his way; but then, as soon as he is aware of it, will he not return? Yes, certainly he will, with all speed, and will thank him that showed him his mistake. Thus men do in other things; why then is this people of Jerusalem slidden back by a perpetual backsliding? Why do they not, when they are fallen into sin, hasten to get up again by repentance? Why do not they, when they see they have missed their way, correct their error, and return? No, this was a man in a way that he knows will never bring him to his way's end; why then is his people slidden back by a perpetual backsliding? See the nature of sin—it is a backsliding, it is going back from the right way: not only into a by-path, but into a contrary path: back from the way that leads to life to that which leads to utter destruction. And this backsliding, if ambiguity greatly be the design to prevent it, will be a perpetual backsliding. It may be-
He mocks at fear, and is not affrighted. Thus the daring sinner laughs at the threatenings of the word as bugbears, and runs violently upon the instruments of death and slaughter, and nothing will be restrained from him.

III. They would not attend to the dictates of piety, but understand the voice of God in them. (v. 7.) It is an instance of their sottishness, that, though they are God's people, and therefore should readily understand his mind, upon every intimation of it, yet they know not the judgment of the Lord, they apprehend not the meaning either of a mercy or of an affliction, not how to accommodate themselves to either, or to answer God's intention in either. They regarded the sacred word: God affords them when he sends them his prophets, nor how to make use of the rebukes they are under when his voice cries in the city. They discern not the signs of the times. (Matt. xvi. 3.) nor are aware how God is dealing with them. They know not that way of duty, which God had prescribed them, though it be written both in their hearts and in their books. (v. 1.) An aggravation of the want of religion, that there is so much sagacity in the inferior creatures. The stork in the heavens knows her appointed times of coming and continuing; so do other season-birds, the turtle, the crane, and the swallow; these by a natural instinct change their quarters, as the temper of the air alters; they come when the spring comes, and are gone, we know not when. When they, truly, truly, they think, they are wise, because the climates, as some birds come with winter, and are gone when that is over.

IV. They would not attend to the dictates of the written word. They say, We are wise; but how can they say so? With what face can they pretend to any thing of wisdom, when they do not understand themselves so well as the brute creatures? Very, truly, truly, they think they are wise, because the law of the Lord is with them, the book of the law and the interpreters of it; and their neighbours, for the same reason, conclude they are wise; Deut. iv. 6. But their pretensions are groundless for all this; Lo, certainly in vain made he it; surely never any people had Bibles to so little purpose as they have. They might as well have been without the law, unless they had made a living of it: they have indeed made it able to make men wise to salvation, but as to them it is made so in vain, for they are never the wiser for it; The pen of the scribes, of those that first wrote the law, and of those that now write expositions of it, are in vain. Both the favour of their God, and the labour of their scribes, are lost upon them; they receive the grace of God therein in vain. Note, There are many that enjoy abundance of the means of grace, that have great plenty of Bibles and ministers, but they have them in vain; they do not answer the end of their having them. But it might be said, They have some wise men among them, to whom the law and the pen of the scribes are not in vain. To this it is answered, (v. 9.) The wise men are ashamed, they have reason to be so, that they have not made better use of their wisdom, and lived more up to it. They are confounded and taken; all their wisdom has not served to keep them from those courses that tend to their ruin. They are taken in the same snares that others of their neighbours, who have not pretended to so much wisdom, are taken in, and filled with the same confusion. Those that have more knowledge than others, and yet do no better than others for their own souls, have reason to be ashamed. They talk of their wisdom, but, Lo, they have rejected the word of the Lord; they would not be governed by it, would not follow its direction, would not do what they knew; and then what wisdom is in them? None to any purpose; none that will be found to their praise at the great day, how much soever it is found to their pride now.

The pretenders to wisdom, who said, "We are wise, and the law of the Lord is with us," were the priests and the false prophets; with them the prophet here deals. 1. He threatens the judgments of God against them. Their families and estates shall be ruined; (v. 10.) Their wives shall be given to others, when they are taken captives, and their fields shall be taken from them by the victorious enemy, and shall be given to those that shall inherit them; not only strip them for once, but take possession of them as their own, and acquire a property in them, which they shall transmit to their posterity. And, (v. 12.) notwithstanding all their pretensions to wisdom and sanctity, they fall among them that fall; for if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall together into the ditch. In the time of their visitation, when the wickedness of the land comes to be inquired into, it will be found that they have contributed to it more than any, and therefore they shall be sure to be cast down and cast out.

2. He gives a reason for these judgments, (v. 10, 12.) even the same account of their business which we meet with before, (ch. vi. 13—15.) where it was opened at large. (1.) They were greedy of the wealth of this world, which is bad enough in any, but worst in prophets and priests, who should be best acquainted with another world, and therefore should show more than others for their sins, and so be the first to be destroyed. They pretended to be the physicians of the state, but knew not how to apply proper remedies to its growing maladies; they healed them slightly, killed the patient with punitive cures; silencing their fears and complaints with "Peace, peace, all is well, and there is no danger," when the God of heaven was proceeding in his controversy with them. (2.) They flattered themselves that their children could not be destroyed, because they were the least of the greatest, were given to covetousness. The priests teach for hire, and the prophets drone for money, Mic. iii. 11. (2.) They made no conscience of speaking truth, no not when they spake as priests and prophets; Every one deals falsely; looks one way, and rows another. There is no such thing as sincerity among them. (3.) They flattered their neighbours in their sins, and so deluded them into destruction. They pretended to be the physicians of the state, but knew not how to apply proper remedies to its growing maladies; they healed them slightly, killed the patient with punitive cures; silencing their fears and complaints with "Peace, peace, all is well, and there is no danger," when the God of heaven was proceeding in his controversy with them. (4.) When it was made to appear how basely they prevaricated, they were not at all ashamed of it, but rather gloried in it; (v. 12.) They could not blush, so perfectly lost were they to all sense of virtue and honour; when they were convicted of the grossest forgeries, they would justify what they had done, and laugh at those whom they had imposed upon. Such as these were ripe for ruin.

13. I will surely consume them, saith the Lord; there shall be no grapes on the vine, nor figs on the fig-tree, and the leaf shall fade; and the things that I have given them shall pass away from them. 14. Why do we sit still? assemble yourselves, and let us enter into the defended cities, and let us be silent there; for the Lord our God hath put us to silence, and given us waters of gall to drink, because we have sinned against the Lord. 15. We looked for peace, but no good came; and for a time of health, and be hold trouble! 16. The snorting of his horses was heard from Dan; the whole land trembled at the sound of the neighing of his strong ones; for they are come, and have devoured the land, and all that is in it; the city, and those that dwell therein. 17. For, behold, I will send serpents, cockatrices, among you, which will not be charmed; and they shall bite you, saith the LORD. 18. When I would comfort myself against sorrow, my heart is faint in me. 19. Behold, the voice of the cry of the daughter of my people, because of them that dwell in a far country. Is not the LORD in Zion? is not her king in her? why have they provoked me to anger with their graven images, and with strange vanities? 20. The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved. 21. For the hurt of the daughter of my people am I hurt; I am black; astonishment hath taken hold on me. 22. Is there no balm in Gilead? is there no physician there? why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?

In these verses we have,

1. God threatening the destruction of a sinful people. He has been long with them, but they are still more and more provoking, and therefore now their ruin is resolved on; I will surely consume them; (v. 13.) consuming I will consume them, not only surely, but utterly, consume them; will follow them with one judgment after another, till they are quite consumed; it is a consummation determined, Is. x. 23.

1. They shall be quite stripped of all their comforts; (v. 13.) There shall be no grapes on the vine. Some understand it as intimating their sin; God came looking for grapes from this vineyard, seeking fruit upon this fig-tree, but he found none, (as Is. v. 2. Luke xix. 6.) nay, they had not so much as leaves, Matth. xxii. 19. But it is rather to be understood of God's judgments upon them; and may be meant literally. The enemy shall seize the fruits of the earth, shall pluck the grapes and figs for themselves, and beat down the very leaves with them; or, rather, figuratively; They shall be deprived of all their comforts, and shall have nothing left them wherewith to make glad their hearts. It is explained in the last clause, The things that I have given them shall pass away from them. Note, God's gifts are upon condition, and revocable upon non-performance of the condition. Mercies abused are forfeited, and it is just with God to take the forfeiture.

2. They shall be set upon by all manner of grievances, and surrounded with calamities; (v. 17.) I will send serpents among you, the Chaldean army, fiery serpents, flying serpents, cockatrices; these shall not be charmed, nor shall any thing pacify them or allure them to leave them, but they shall bite them, and they shall be not be charmed, as some serpents used to be, with music. These are serpents of another nature, that are not so wrought upon; or they are as the deaf adder, that stops her ear, and will not hear the voice of the charmer. The enemies are so intent upon manifesting their infection, that it will be too no purpose to accuse them gently, or offer any thing to pacify them or mollify them, or to bring them to a better temper. No peace with God, therefore none with them.

11. The people sinking into despair under the pressure of these calamities. They that were void of fear, (when the trouble was at a distance,) and set it at defiance, are void of hope now that it breaks in upon them, and have no heart, either to make head against it, or to bear up under it, v. 14. They cannot think themselves safe in the open villages; Why do we sit still here? Let us assemble and go in to the friendly cities. Though they could expect no other than to be surely cut off there at last, yet not so soon as in the country, and therefore, "Let us go, and be silent there; let us attempt nothing, nor so much as make a complaint; for to what purpose?" It is not a submissive, but a sullen, silence, that they here condemn themselves to. Those that are most jovial in their prosperity, commonly despise most, and are most melancholy, in trouble.

Now observe what it is that sinks them.

1. They are sensible that God is angry with them; The Lord our God has put us to silence, has struck us with astonishment, and given us water of gall to drink, which is both bitter and stupefying, or intoxicating; (Ps. i. 3.) "Thou hast made us to drink the wine of astonishment. We had better sit still than rise up and fall; better say nothing than say nothing to the purpose. To what purpose is it to contend with our fate, when God himself is become our Enemy, and fights against us? Because we have sinned against the Lord, therefore we are brought to this plague." This may be taken as the language, (1.) Of their indignation. They seem to quarrel with God, as if he had dealt hardly with them; in his wrath he has done them to the uttermost, and provoked them to speak for themselves, and then telling them, that it was because they had sinned against him. Thus men's foolishness perverts their way, and then their hearts fret against the Lord. Or, rather, (2.) Of their convictions. At length they begin to see the hand of God lifted up against them, and stretched out in the calamities under which they are now involved; and then they acknowledge that God has provoked him to contend with them. Note, Sooner or later, God will bring the most obstinate to acknowledge both his providence and his justice, in all the troubles they are brought into; to see and say, both that it is his hand, and that he is righteous.

2. They are sensible that the enemy is likely to be too hard for them, v. 16. They are soon apprehensive that it is to no purpose to make head against such a mighty force; they and their people are quite dispirited; and when the courage of a nation is gone, their numbers will stand them in little stead. The roaring of the horses was heard from Dan, the report of the formidable strength of their cavalry was soon carried all the nation over, and every body trembled at the sound of the neighing of his steeds; for they are come, and there is no opposing them; they have devoured the land, and all that is in the city; both town and country are laid waste before them, not only the wealth, but the inhabitants of both, those that dwell therein. Note. When God appears against us, every thing else that is against us appears very formidable; whereas if he be for us, every thing appears very despicable, Rom. viii. 31.

3. They are disappointed in their expectations of deliverance out of their troubles, as they had been surprised when their trouble came upon them: and this double disappointment very much aggra- vaed their calamity. (1.) The trouble came when they little expected it; (v. 15.) He looked for peace, the continuance of our peace, but no good came, no good news from abroad, no looking for any thing to the health and prosperity to our nation, but behold trouble, the alarms of war; for, as it follows, (v. 16.) the noise of the enemies' horses was heard from Dan. Their false prophets had cried, Peace, peace, to them, which made it the more terrible, when the scene of war opened on a sudden. This complaint will occur again, ch. xiv. 19. (2.) The deliverance did not come, when they had long expected it; *(v. 20.) The harvest is past, the summer is ended; there is a great deal of time gone. Harvest and summer are parts of the year, and when they are gone, the year draws toward a conclusion; so the meaning is, "One year passes after another, one campaign after another, and yet our affairs are in as bad a posture as ever they were; no relief comes, nor is any thing done towards it: We are not saved." Nay, there is a great deal of opportunity lost, the season of action is over and slit, the summer and harvest are gone, and a cold and melancholy winter succeeds.

Note, The salvation of God's church and people often goes on very slowly, and God keeps his people long in the expectation of it, for why, and how can they otherwise hope, that their enemies should put a bar in their own door, and are not saved, because they are not ready for salvation.

4. They are deceived in those things which were their confidence, and which they thought would have secured their peace to them; *(v. 19.) The daughter of my people cries, cries aloud, because of them that dwell in a far country, because of the foreign enemy that invades them, that comes from a far country to take possession of ours; this occasionises the cry; and what is the cry? Is not the Lord in Zion? Is not her king in her? These were the two things that they had all along buoyed up themselves with, and depended upon. *(1.) That they had among them the temple of God, and the tokens of his special presence with them; the temple, which had a "fountain the Lord is in Zion; Whom duni-ger then need we fear?" and they held by this when the trouble was breaking in upon them; "Surely we shall do well enough, for have we not God among us?" But when it grew to an extremity, it was an aggravation of their misery that they had thus flattered themselves. *(2.) That they had the throne of the house of David, and his presence among them, so they had a "fountain the Lord is in Zion; Whom duni-ger then need we fear?" and they held by this when the trouble was breaking in upon them; "Surely we shall do well enough, for have we not God among us?" But when it grew to an extremity, it was an aggravation of their misery that they had thus flattered themselves.

III. We have here the prophet himself bewailing the calamity and ruin of his people; for there were with him all the lamentations of Jeremiah; but those we find in the book that bears that title. Observe here,

1. How great his griefs were. He was an eyewitness of the desolations of his country, and saw those things which by the spirit of prophecy he had foreseen. In the foresight, much more in the sight of them, he cries out, *(My heart is fain in me, my flesh is waxen small, because of all the calamities of it, v. 18.) When I would comfort myself against my sorrow, I do but labour in vain; nay, every attempt to alleviate the grief does but aggravate it." It is our wisdom and duty, under mournful events, to do what we can to comfort ourselves against our sorrow, by suggesting to ourselves such considerations as are proper to allay the grief, and balance the grievance. But sometimes the sorrow is such, that the more it is repressed, the more strongly it recoils. It may sometimes be the case of very good men, as of the prophet here, whose soul refused to be comforted, and fainted at the cordial, Ps. lxxvii. 2, 6. He says, *(v. 21.) what was the matter? It is for the hurt of the daughter of my people, that I am thus hurt; it is for their sin, and the miseries they have brought upon themselves by it; it is for this, that I am black, that I look black, that I go in black as mourners do, and that astonishment has taken hold on me, so that I know not what to do, nor which way to turn." Note, The miseries of our country ought to be very much the grief of our souls. A gracious spirit will be a public spirit, a tender spirit, a mourning spirit. It becomes us to lament the miseries of our fellow-creatures, much more to lay to heart the calamities of our country, and especially of the church of God, to guide for the affliction of Joseph. Jeremiah had prophesied the destruction of Jerusalem, and though the truth of his prophecy was questioned, yet he did not retract in the proof of the truth of it by the accomplishment of it, preferring the welfare of his country before his own reputation. If Jerusalem had repented and been spared, he would have been far from fretting, as Jonah did. Jeremiah had many enemies in Judah and Jerusalem, that hated and reproached, and persecuted him; and in the judgments brought on the country, God's enemies, and his, plied his prophets cause; yet he was far from rejoicing in it, so truly did he forgive his enemies, and desire that God would forgive them.

2. How small his hopes were; *(v. 22.) Is there no balm in Gilead? No medicine proper for a sick and dying kingdom? Is there no physician there? No skillful, faithful hand to apply the medicine? If we find no physician here, we are at a great loss; the case is irreparable, and past relief. There is no balm in Gilead, that can cure the disease of sin; no physician there, that can restore the health of a nation quite over run by such a foreign army as that of the Chaldeans. The desolations made are irreparable, and the disease is presently come to such a height, that there is no checking it. Or, this verse may be understood as having the cause and consequences of their disease upon themselves; and so the question must be answered affirmatively: Is there no balm in Gilead? No physician there? Certainly there is; God is able to help and heal them, there is a sufficiency in him to redress all their grievances. Gilead was a place in their own land, not far off; they had among themselves God's law and his prophets, in the help of which they might have been brought to repentance, and their ruin might have been prevented; they had princes and priests, whose business it was to reform the nation, and redress their grievances. What could have been done more than has been done for their recovery?

Why then is not their health restored? Certainly it was not owing to God, but the same who were not physicians, but because they would not admit the application, nor submit to the methods of cure. The physician and physic were both ready, but the patient was willful and irregular, would not be tied to rules, but must be humourous. Note, If sinners die of their wounds, their blood is upon their own heads. The blood of Christ is balm in Gilead, balm and medicine; but that is not so when they will not use it, nor submit to any thing that is suitable, as the physician and physic were both ready. And the patient was willing and irregular, would not be tied to rules, but must be humourous.

Note, If sinners die of their wounds, their blood is upon their own heads. The blood of Christ is balm in Gilead, balm and medicine; but that is not so when they will not use it, nor submit to any thing that is suitable, as the physician and physic were both ready. And the patient was willing and irregular, would not be tied to rules, but must be humourous.

In this chapter, the prophet goes on faithfully to reprove sin, and to threaten God's judgments for it, and yet bitterly to lament both, as one that neither rejected at Jeremiah, IX.

1. Guilty, nor was glad at calamities. He here expresses his great grief for the miseries of Judah and Jerusalem, and his detestation of their sins, which brought those miseries upon them, v. 1-11. He justifies God in the greatness of the destruction brought upon them, v. 12, 16. He calls upon others to bewail the woful case of Judah and Jerusalem, v. 17, 23. IV. He shows them the folly and vanity of trusting in their own strength or wisdom, or the privileges of their circumcision, or any thing but God only, v. 25, 26.

2. O that my head were waters, and my eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people! 2. Oh that I had in the wilderness a lodging-place of wayfaring men, that I might leave my people, and go from them! for they be all adulterers, an assembly of treacherous men. 3. And they bend their tongue like their bow for lies; but they are not valiant for the truth upon the earth; for they proceed from evil to evil, and they know not me, saith the Lord. 4. Take ye heed every one of his neighbour, and trust ye not in any brother: for every brother will utterly suppress, and every neighbour will walk with slanders. 5. And they will deceive every one his neighbour, and will not speak the truth: they have taught their tongue to speak lies, and weary themselves to commit iniquity. 6. Thy habitation is in the midst of deceit; through deceit they refuse to know me, saith the Lord. 7. Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, Behold, I will melt them, and try them; for how shall I do for the daughter of my people? 8. Their tongue is as an arrow shot out; it speaketh deceit: one speaketh peaceably to his neighbour with his mouth, but in heart he lavisheth his want. 9. Shall I not visit them for these things? saith the Lord: shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this? 10. For the mountains will I take up a weeping and wailing, and for the habitations of the wilderness a lamentation, because they are burnt up, so that none can pass through them; neither can men hear the voice of the cattle: both the fowl of the heavens and the beast are fled; they are gone. 11. And I will make Jerusalem heaps, and a den of dragons; and I will make the cities of Judah desolate, without an inhabitant.

The prophet, being commissioned both to foretell the destruction coming upon Judah and Jerusalem, and to point out the sin for which that destruction was brought upon them, here, as elsewhere, speaks of both very feelingly: what he said of both came from the heart, and therefore one would have thought it should have reached to the heart.

1. He abandons himself to sorrow, in consideration of the calamitous condition of his people, which he sadly laments, as one that preferred Jerusalem before his chief joy, and her grievances I fore his chief sorrows.

1. He laments the slaughter of the persons; the bloodshed, and the lives lost; (v. 1.) "O that my head were waters, quite melted and dissolved with grief, that so mine eyes might be fountains of tears, weeping abundance, continually, and without intermission, still sending forth fresh floods of tears, as there still occur fresh occasions for them." The same word in Hebrew signifies both the eye and a fountain, as if in this land of sorrows our eyes were designed rather for weeping than seeing. Jeremiah was much more in grief at the sight of those things, that he might affect a stupid people, and raise them to a due sense of the hand of God gone out against them. Note, It becomes us, while we are here in this vale of tears, to conform to the temper of the climate, and to sow in tears. Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted hereafter; but let us expect that while they are here, the clouds will still rain upon them, and cause their sorrows; there is no climate so severe but men can suffer in it; and as the fountain of sin, so the fountain of tears is for all posterity, a lasting monument of the iniquity of man, and a monument of the grace of God in forgiving it.

2. But the fountain of Jacob shall be dried up, and the water thereof become hot. Note, The fountain of Jacob, or of the hills, was well known to the Israelites, as a symbol of their public prosperity; and it is now to be run dry of. Jeremiah deplores his nation's grief, and looks to God for comfort, as the fountain of Jacob would do in parching drought. But it is to be feared that the fountain of Jacob shall be dried up; and this shows us the nature of man, and that his happiness is in the highest degree precarious; and it shows us the nature of Providence, and its dispensations of it, for that which was nourish'd by the fountain of the heavens, is now to be cut off, and the Israelites reduced to a condition of wretchedness, to their own shame and the reproach of their God. The prophet puts it this way, as if he feared that the fountain of Jacob should be dried up. Note, The same event would be more grieved at, and more lamented, by those who are made to partake of it, than by many that never apprehend it, or believe it possible. 3. Therefore, saith the Lord, the labour of Jacob shall be in vain, and the recompense of Israel: but they shall return to the land of Egypt; they shall eat the bread of affliction, and drink the water of sorrow: they shall be filled with their shame, and also with the labours which they laboured therein; for the mountains of Sodom will not thresh them out, the beasts of the desert will not eat them, the birds of the heaven will not cast the remainder of them. Note, The desolations of God's people are more terrible, and more detestable, than any other calamity that has befallen the world. 4. But I will make Jerusalem desolate, and a spoil for all nations; and I will utterly devour all the inhabitants thereof. Note, The desolations of Jerusalem illustrate the desolation of the whole nation. This verse expatiates on the desolations of the country. He brings in, v. 10. (for impious mourners are not often very methodical in their discourses,) "Not for the towns and cities merely, but for the mountains, will I take up a weeping and wailing, not barren mountains, but the fruitful hills with which Judah abounded; and for the habitations of the wilderness, or, rather, the features of the plain, those used to be clothed with flocks, and covered over with corn; and a goodly sight it was; but now they are burnt up by the Chaldean army, which, according to the custom of war, destroyed the forage, and carried off all the cattle; so that no one dares to pass through them, for fear of meeting with some parties of the enemy; no one cares to pass through them, everything looks so melancholy and frightful; one has an hard business to pass through them, for they hear the noise of the horsemen, they hear the feet of them, the bleating of the sheep and the lowing of the oxen, that grateful music to the owners; nay, both the fowl of the heavens, and the beasts, are fled, either frightened away by the rude noises and terrible fires which the enemies make, or forced away because there is no subsistence for them. Note, God has in many ways of turning a fruitful land into barrenness, for the wickedness of his people.

5. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, behold, I will break his yoke of iron, and his band of brass, and will make them perish together, and the havoc war makes in a country cannot but be for a lamentation to all tender spirits, for it is a tragedy which destroys the stage it is acted on. 11. He abandons himself to solitude, in consideration of the scandalous character and conduct of his people. Though he dwells in Judah where God is known, in Salem where Psalms were, yet he is ready to confess that he is himself guilty of sin, and that he is like to be accounted one of the sinners. Ps. cxx. 5. While all his neighbours are fleeing to the defensive cities, and Jerusalem especially, in dread of the enemies' rage, (ch. iv. 6, &c.) he is contriving to retire into some desert, in desolation of his people's sins: (v. 2.) "O that I had in the wilderness a lodging-place of wayfaring men, such a lonely cottage to dwell in as they have in the deserts of Arabia, which are uninhabited, where forlorners may repose themselves in, that I may leave my people, and go from them!" Not only because of the
They are not valiant for truth in the land, the land which has truth for the glory of it. Truth is fallen in the land, and they dare not bend a hand to help it up, Is. 1. 14, 15. We must answer, another day, not only for our triality in opposing truth, but for our cowardice in defending it. [2.] Go into their families, and you will find they will cheat their own brethren, (every brother will utterly supplant,) they will trip up one another's heels if they can, for they be at the catch, to seek all advantages against those they hope to make a hand of. Jacob had his whores from speaking, it is the word here used: they followed him with a word, but he was in his character, without guile. So very false are they, that you cannot trust in a brother, but must stand as much upon your guard, as if you were dealing with a stranger, with a Canaanite that has balances of deceit in his hand. Things are come to an ill pass, indeed, when a man cannot put confidence in his own brother.

3.) Go into company, and observe both their commerce and their conversation, and you will find there is nothing of sincerity or common honesty among them; Nee hosheh ab hosheh tutus—The host and the guest are in danger from each other. The best advice a wise man can give you, is, to take heed every one of his neighbour, nay, of his friend, (some read it,) of whom he has had enemies, and who have deceived him, and who are not to be trusted. No man thinks himself bound to be either grateful or sincere. Take them in their converse; and every neighbour will walk with slander, they care not what ill they say one of another, though ever so false; that way that the slander goes they get: they will walk with it. They will walk about from house to house too, carrying slanders along with them, all the ill-natured stories they can pick up, or invent, to make mischief. Take them in their trading and bargaining; and they will deceive every one his neighbour, will say any thing, though they know it to be false, for their own advantage. Nay, they will lie for lying sake, to keep their tongues in use to it, for they will not speak the truth, but will tell a deliberate lie, and laugh at it when they have done.

That which aggravates the sin of this false and lying generation, is, First, That they are ingenious to sin; They have taught their tongue to speak lies, implying, that, through the reluctance of natural conscience, they found it difficult to bring themselves to it. Their tongue would have spoken truth, but they taught it to speak lies, and by degrees have made themselves masters of the art of lying, and have got such a habit of it, that use has made it the second nature to them. They learned it when they were young, (for the wicked are estranged from the womb, speaking lies, Ps. lxi. 3.) and now they are grown dexterous at it. Secondly, That they are industrious to sin; They weary themselves to commit iniquity; they put a force upon their consciences, to bring themselves to it; they tire out their conscience by one lie, and then proceed to another, and so take a great deal of pains, till they have even spied themselves in bringing about their malicious designs. They are weary with their sinful pursuits, and yet not weary of them. The service of sin is a perfect drudgery; men run themselves out of breath in it, and put themselves to a great deal of toil, to damn their own souls.

Thirdly, That they grew carnal and worldly, preferred a pretty show and form in religion to evil, from one sin to another, from one degree of sin to another. They began with lesser sins; (Nimrod repente fit turpissimus—No one reaches the height of vice at once;) they began with equivocating and bantering, but at last came to downright lying. And they are now proceeding to greater sins yet, for they know not me, saith the Lord. Where men have no knowledge of God, or no consideration of what they have known of him, what good can be expected from them? Men's ignorance of God is the cause of all their ill conduct one towards another.

2. The prophet shows what God had informed him of their wickedness, and what he had determined to do against them.

(1.) God had marked their sin. He could tell the precise plot, (and he speaks of it with compassion,) what sort of people they were, that he had to deal with. I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, Rev. ii. 13. So here, (v. 6.) "Thy habitations is in the midst of deceit, all about thee are addicted to it; therefore stand upon thy goads. It is meet for man to be wise as serpents. They are deceitful men, therefore there is little hope of thy doing any good among them; for make things ever so plain, they have some trick or other whereby to shuffle off their convictions. This charge is enlarged upon, v. 8.

Their tongue was a bow bent, (v. 3.) plotting and preparing mischief; here it is an arrow shot out, putting in execution what they had projected. It is as a slaying arrow; so some readings of the original have it: their tongue has been to many an instrument of death. They speak peaceably to their neighbours, against whom they are at the same time lying in wait: as Job kissed Abner, when he was about to kill him: and Cain, that he might not be suspected of any ill design, talked familiarly with his brother. Not so, Fair words, when they are not attended with good intentions, are deceivable, but when they are intended as a cloak and cover for wicked intentions, they are abominable. While they did all this injury to one another, they put a great contempt upon God; Not only they knew not me, but, (v. 6.) through deceit, through the deceptions of the false prophets, they did not know God; therefore so cheated into a good opinion of their own ways, the ways of their own heart, that they desire not the knowledge of my ways." Or, They are so wedded to this sinful course which they are in, and so bewitched with that, and its gains, that they will by no means admit the knowledge of God, because that it would be a check upon them in their sins. This is the ruin of sinners, they might be taught the go all knowledge of the Lord: and they will not learn it. Where no knowledge of God is, what good can be expected? Hos. iv. 1.

(2.) He had marked them for ruin, v. 7, 9, 11. Those that will not know God as their Lawgiver, shall be made to know him as their Judge. God determines here to bring his judgments upon them, for the refining of some, and the ruin of the rest.

(1.) Some shall be refined, (v. 7.) "Because they are thus corrupt, behold, I will melt them, and try them, will bring them into trouble, and see what that will do toward bringing them to repentance; whether the furnace of affliction will purify them from their dross, and whether, when they are melted, they will be new cast in a better mould."

He will make trial of lesser affictions, before he brings them to this. They then will be melted, for he does not the death of sinners. They shall not be rejected asprobable silver, till the Founder has melted in vain, ch. vi. 29, 30. For how shall I do for the daughters of my people? He speaks as one consulting with himself what to do with them, that might be for the best, and as one that could not find in his heart to cast them off, and give them up to ruin, till he had first tried all means that he could to bring them to repentance. Or, How shall I do for them? They are grown so very corrupt, that there is no other way with them but to put them into the furnace; what other course can I take with them? (Isa. v. 4, 5.) It is the daughter of my people, and I must do something to vindicate my own honour, which will be reflected upon if I conive at their wickedness; I must do something to reduce and reform them." A parent corrects his own children because they are his own. Note, When God afflicts his people, it is with a gracious design to modify and reduce them; but when he needs it, and when he knows it is the best method he can use.

(2.) The vast shall be ruined, (v. 9.) Shall I not visit for these things? Fraud and falsehood are sins which God hates, and which he will reckon for; Shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this, that is so universally corrupt, and, by its impudence in sin, even thares and defies divine vengeance? The sentence is past, the decree is gone forth, v. 11. I will make Jerusalem heaps ofabal'ish, and lay it in such ruins, that it shall be fit for nothing but to be a den of dragons; and the cities of Judah shall be a desolation." God makes them so, for he gives the enemies warrant and power to do it; but why is the holy city made a heap? The answer is ready, Because it was become an unholy one.

12. Who is the wise man, that may understand this; and who is he to whom the mouth of the Lord hath spoken, that he may declare it, for what the land perisheth and is burnt up like a wilderness, that none passeth through? 13. And the Lord saith, Because they have forsaken my law which I set before them, and have not obeyed my voice, neither walked therein; 14. But have walked after the imagination of their own heart, and after Baalim, which their fathers taught them: 15. Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will feed them, even this people, with wormwood, and give them water of gall to drink. 16. I will scatter them also among the heathen, whom neither they nor their fathers have known; and I will send a sword after them, till I have consumed them. 17. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Consider ye, and call for the mourning women, that they may come; and send for cunning women, that they may come; 18. And let them make haste, and take up a wailing for us, that our eyes may run down with tears, and our eyelids gush out with waters. 19. For a voice of wailing is heard out of Zion, How are we spoiled! we are greatly confounded, because we have forsaken the land, because our dwellings have cast us out. 20. Yet hear the word of the Lord, O ye women, and let your ear receive the word of his mouth, and teach your daughters wailing, and every one her neighbour lamentation: 21. For death is come up into our windows, and is entered into our palaces, to cut off the children from without, and the young men from the streets. 22. Speak, Thus saith the Lord, Even the carcases of men shall fall as dung upon the open field, and as the handful after the harvest-man, and none shall gather them.

Two things the prophet designs in these verses, with reference to the approaching destruction of Jeremiah, IX.

1. To convince people of the justice of God in it, that they had by sin brought it upon themselves, and that therefore they had no reason to quarrel with God, who did them no wrong at all, but a great deal of reason to fall out with their sins, which did them all this mischief.

2. To affect people with the greatness of the desolation that was coming, and the miserable effects of it, that by a terrible prospect of it they might be more influenced in their amendment and reformation, which was the only way to prevent it, or, at least, mitigate their own share in it. This being designed,

1. He calls for the thinking men, by them to show people the equity of God's proceedings, though they seemed harsh and severe; (v. 12.) Where, is the wise man, or the prophet, to whom the mouth of the Lord hath spoken? You boast of your wisdom, and of the prophets you have among you; produce me any one that has but the free use of human reason, or any acquaintance with divine revelation, and he will soon understand this himself, and it will be so clear to him, that he will be ready to declare it to others, that there is just ground of God's controversy with this people.

Do these men inquire who has forgotten the people, and laid the burden on Jerusalem?* (v. 13.)* It is, that such a change is made with this land; it is used to be a land that God cared for, and he had his eyes upon it for good; (Deut. xi. 20.) but it is now a land that he has forsaken, and that his face is against; it is used to flourish as the garden of the Lord, and to be replenished with inhabitants; but now it is burnt up like a wilderness, that none findeth it. All this has been by the judgment of God; (v. 14.) It was supposed, long ago, that it would be asked, when it came to this, Wherefore has the Lord done this unto this land? What means the heat of this great anger? (Deut. xxix. 24.) to which question God here gives a full answer, before which all flesh must be silent. He produces out of the record,

I. The indictment preferred and proved against them, upon which they had been found guilty, v. 13, 14. It is charged upon them, and it cannot be denied, (1.) That they have revolted from their allegiance to their rightful Sovereign: therefore God has forsaken their land, and justly, because they have forsaken his laws, which he had so plainly, so fully, so frequently set before them, and had not observed his orders, nor obeyed his voice, nor walked in them. (v. 13.) They had been guilty of and wickedness began, in the omission of their duty to their God, and a contempt of his authority. But it did not end here. It is further charged upon them,

(2.) That they have entered themselves into the service of oppressors and usurpers, have not only withdrawn themselves from their obedience to their Prince, but have taken upon arms against him. For, (v. 15.) They have acted according to the tradition received from their fathers; They have walked after Baalim; the word is plural; they had many Baals, Balaam, and Bala-bather, the Baal of this place, and the Baal of the other place; for they had birds many, which their fathers taught them to worship, but which the God of their fathers had laid and again slain. This was it which the Lord had punished. The King of kings might view them as upon his own subjects, but when they treacherously depast from him, and rebel against him, and it is become necessary by this means to chastise their rebellion, and reduce them to their allegiance; and they themselves shall at length acknowledge that he is just in all that is brought upon them.

2. Th judgment given upon this indictment, the sentence upon the convicted rebels, which must now be executed, for it was righteous, and nothing could be moved in arrest of it: The Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, hath said it; (v. 15, 16.) and who can reverse it? (1.) That all their comfort at home shall be no comfort to them; it shall be a poison to them, if they shall be minded to it; I will feed them with worm wood; which is, for it signifies an herb that is not wholesome, as wormwood is, though it be bitter, but some herb that is both nauseous and noxious; and I will give them water of gall, or juice of hemlock, or some other herb that is poisonous, to drink. Everything about them, till it comes to their very meat and drink, shall be a terror and overthrow to them, and they will curse their blessings. Mal. ii. 2. (2.) That their dispersion abroad shall be their destruction; (v. 16.) I will scatter them among the heathen. They are corrupted and drowned by their intimacy with the heathen, with whom they mingled themselves, and learned their works; and now they shall lose themselves there where they lost their virtue, and were among the heathen. They have forsaken the truth, which is the bond and cement of society and commerce, and addicted themselves to deceit and lying, and therefore are justly crumbled to dust, and scattered among the heathen. They set up gods which neither they nor their fathers had known, strange gods, new gods; (Deut. xxxiii. 17.) and now God will put them among neighbours which neither they nor their fathers have known, and they shall claim no acquaintance with, and therefore can expect no favour from. And yet, though they are scattered so as that they will not know where to find one another, God will know where to find them all out, (Ps. xxii. 8.) with that evil which still pursues imperious sinners: I will send a sword after them, some killing judgment or other, till I have consumed them; for when God judges, they will overcome, when he pursues, he will overtake. And now we see for what the land perishes; all this desolation is the desert of their deeds, and the performance of God's words.

II. He calls for the mourning women, and engages them with their arts to affect people, and move their passion, to lament these sad calamities befalling them, that they might themselves, and the nation might be alarmed to prepare for them. The Lord of hosts himself says, Call for the mourning women, that they may come, v. 17. The scope of this is to show how very woful and lamentable the condition of this people was likely to be.

1. Here is work for the counterfeit mourners: Send for the mourning women that know how to compose mournful discourses, or, at least, to sing them in mournful tunes and accents, and therefore are made use of at funerals to supply the want of true mourners. Let these take up a waiting for us, v. 18. The deaths and funerals were so many, that people wept for them till they had no more power to weep, as those, 1 Sam. xxx. 4. Let them therefore do it now, whose trade it is; or, rather, it intimates the necessity of some persons being appointed to laments, that the laid not to heart the judgments they were under, nor, even when there was so much blood shed, could find in their hearts to shed a tear. They cry not when God binds them, Job xxxvi. 13. God sent his mourning prophets to them, to call them to weeping and mourning, but his word in their mouths did not work upon their flesh; rather therefore than they shall good advice to their mind, let the mourning women come, and try to work upon their fancy, that their eyes may at least run down with tears, and their eyelids gush out with waters. First of all, sinners must be weepers.
who might have been spared in policy, because capable of being serviceable to them, shall fall to gether by the sword. It's usual now, even in the greatest military executions, to put many in the sword but those that are found in arms; but then even the boys and girls playing in the streets were sacrificed to the fury of the conqueror.

[2.] Those that are slain shall be left unburied; (v. 22.) Speak, Thus saith the Lord, (for the confirmation and aggravation of what was before said,) Even the careless of men shall fall as dung, neglected, and trodden under foot, as by the mule, as the man is. Common humanity obliges the survivors to bury the dead, even for their own sake; but here such numbers shall be slain, and those so dispersed all the country over, that it shall be an endless thing to bury them all, nor shall there be hands enough to do it, nor shall the conquerors permit it, and those that should do it, shall be overwhelmed with grief, so that they shall have no heart to do it. The dead bodies even of the fairest and strongest, when they have lain awhile, become as dung, such vile bodies have we. And here such multitudes shall fall, that their bodies shall lie as thick as heaps of dung in the fur-rrows of the field, and no more notice shall be taken of them than of the handfuls which the harvestman drops for the gleaners, for none shall gather them, but they shall remain in sight, monuments of divine vengeance, that the eye of the impudent survivors may affect their heart. Stay them not, bury them not, lest my people forget, Ps. lix. 11.

23. Thus saith the Lord, Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might, let not the rich man glory in his riches: 24. But let him that glorieth, glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me, that I am the Lord which exerciseth loving-kindness, judgment, and righteousness, in the earth: for in these things I delight, saith the Lord.

25. Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will punish all them which are re-un-cised with the uncircumcised; 26. Egypt, and Judah, and Edom, and the children of Ammon, and Moab, and all that are in the utmost corners, that dwell in the wilderness: for all these nations are uncircumcised, and all the house of Israel are uncircumcised in the heart.

The prophet had been endeavouring to possess this people with a holy fear of God and his judgments, to convince them both of sin and wrath; but still they had recourse to some sorry subterfuge in other, under which to shelter themselves from the conviction, and with which to excuse themselves in their obstinacy and carelessness; he therefore sets himself here to drive them from these refuges of lies, and to show them the insufficiency of them.

I. When they were told how inevitable the judg-mens would be, they pleaded the defence of their polities and powers, which, with the help of their wealth and treasure, they thought made their city impenetrable. In answer to this he shows them the toll of trusting to, and boasting of, all these stays, while they have not a God in covenant to stay themselves upon, v. 23, 24.

Here he shows, 1. What we may not depend upon in day of distress; Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, as if with the help of that he could cut-wit or counteract the enemy, or in the greatest extremity find out some evasion or other; for a man's word may fail him when he needs it most, and he may be taken in his own craftiness. Aithophel was befooled, and counsellors are often proved to spoil.

But if a man's policies fail him, yet surely he may gain his point by might, and dint of courage; n, let not the strong man glory in his strength, for the battle is not always to the strong: David the stripling proves too hard for Goliat the giant. All hope is to be set upon the Lord, for He can do nothing against him. But may not the rich man's wealth be his strong city? (Money answers all things.) No, Let not the rich man glory in his riches, for they may prove so far from sheltering him, that they may expose him, and make him the fairer mark. Let not the people boast of the wise men, and mighty men, and rich men that they have among them, as if they could make their part good against the Chaldeans, because they have wise men to advise concerning the war, mighty men to fight their battles, and rich men to bear the charges of the war. Let not particular persons think to escape the common calamity by their wisdom, might, or money, for all these will prove but vain things for safety.

Let us see what we may depend upon in a day of distress. (1.) They may consider that we have done our duty. They that refused to know God, (v. 6.) will boast in vain of their wisdom and wealth; but they that know God intelligently, that understand aright that he is the Lord, that have not only right apprehensions concerning his nature, and attributes, and relation to man, but receive his word, who are the impressions of them, may glory in this, it will be their rejoicing in the day of their salvation, (v. 7.) (2.) Our only confidence in trouble will be, that, having through grace in some measure done our duty, we shall find God a God all-sufficient to us. We may glory in this, that, wherever we are, we have an acquaintance with, and an interest in, a God that exercises loving-kindness, and judgment, and righteousness, in the earth; that is not only just to all his creatures, and will do no wrong to any of them, but kind to all his children, and will protect them, and provide for them. For in these things I delight. God delights to show kindness, and to execute judgment himself, and is pleased with those who herein are followers of him as dear children. Those that have such knowledge of the glory of God as to be changed into the same image, and to partake of his holiness, will have their perfection in glory; and the God they thus faithfully conform to, they may cheerfully confide in, in their greatest straits. But the prophet intimates that the generality of this people took no care about this. Their wisdom, and might, and riches, were their joy and hope, which would end in grief and despair. But those few among them that had the knowledge of God, might please themselves with his, and boast the blessings of his; it would stand them in better stead than thousands of gold and silver.

II. When they were told how provoking their sins were to God, they vainly pleaded the covenant of their circumcision. They were, undoubtedly, the people of God; as they had the temple of the Lord in their city, so they had the mark of his children in their person and privileges. But this head of sins has laid such and such nations waste, because they were uncircumcised, and therefore not under the protection of the Divine Providence, as we are. To this the prophet answers, That the days of visitation were now at hand, in which God would punish all wicked people, without making any distinction between the circumcised and uncircumcised, v. 25, 26. The prophet speaks with great pertinacy, in pointing out their peculiarity, and lived in common with the uncircumcised nations, and so had forfeited the benefit of that peculiarity, and must expect to fare never the better for it. God will punish the circumcised with the uncircumcised. As the ignorance of the uncircumcised shall not excuse their wickedness, so neither shall the privileges of the circumcised excuse theirs, but they shall be punished together. Note, The Judge of all the earth is impartial, and none shall fire the better at his bar for any external advantages, but he will render to every man, circumcised or uncircumcised, according to his works. The covenant being the same with the Gentiles, we must not be baptized, will be as sure as, no, and more severe than, that of impenitent sinners that are unbaptized. It would affect one to find here Judah industriously put between Egypt and Edom, as standing upon a level with them, and under the same doom, v. 26. These nations were forbidden a share in the Jews' privileges, Deut. xxxii. 3. But the Jews are here told that they shall share in their punishment. Those in the utmost corners, that dwell in the wilderness, are supposed to be the Kedarenes, and those of the kingdoms of Hazor, as appears by comparing ch. xlix. 28.—32. Some think they are so called, because they dwelt as it were in a corner of the world: others, because they had the hair of their head folded into corners. However that was, they were of those nations the more uncircumcised in flesh, and the Jews are ranked with them, and are as near to men for their sins as they; for all the house of Israel are uncircumcised in the heart: they have the sign, but not the thing signified, ch. iv. 4. They are heathens in their hearts, strangers to God, and enemies in their minds by wicked works. Their hearts are devoted to idols, as the hearts of the un- circumcised Gentiles are. Note, The seals of the covenant, though they dignify us, and lay us under obligations, will not save us, unless the temper of our minds, and the tenor of our lives, agree with the covenant. That only is circumcision, and that baptism, which is of the heart, Rom. ii. 28, 29.

CHAP. X.

We may conjecture that the prophecy of this chapter was delivered after the first captivity, in the time of Jeconiah or Jehoiachin, when many were carried away to Babylon; for it has a double reference. 1. To those that were carried away into the land of the Chaldeans, a country notorious above any other for idolatry and superstition: they are here cautioned against the infection of the place, not to be carried away by the way of the heart, and lest their astrology and idolatry be both foolish things, (v. 3, 5.) and the worshippers of idols brutish, v. 8, 9. So it will appear in the day of their visitation, v. 14, 15. They are here exhorted to consider the God of Israel, for that there is none like him, v. 6, 7. He is the true God, lives for ever, and has the government of the world; (v. 10, 13.) and his people are happy in him, v. 16. To those that yet remained in their own land. They are cautioned against security, and bid to expect distress, (v. 17, 18.) and that by a foreign enemy, which God would bring upon them for their sin, v. 20—22. This calamity the prophet foretells, (v. 19.) and prays for the mitigation of it, v. 23—25.

1. HEAR ye the word which the Lord speaketh unto you, O house of Israel: 2. Thus saith the Lord, Learn not the way of the heathen, and be not dismayed at the signs of heaven; for the heathen are dismayed at them. 3. For the customs of the people are vain: for one cutteth a tree out of the forest (the work of the hands of the workman) with the axe: 4. They deck it with silver and with gold; they fasten it with nails and with hammers, that it move not. 5. They are upright as the palm-tree, but speak not; they must needs be borne because they cannot go. Be not afraid of them; for they cannot do evil, neither also is it in them to do good. 6. Forasmuch as there is none like unto thee, O Lord; thou art great, and thy name is great in might. 7. Who would not fear thee, O King of nations? for to thee doth it appertain: forasmuch as among all the wise men of the nations, and in all their kingdoms, there is none like unto thee. 8. But they are altogether brutish and foolish; the stock is a doctrine of vanities. 9. Silver spread into plates is brought from Tarshish, and gold from Uphaz, the work of the workman, and of the hands of the founder: blue and purple is their clothing; they are all the work of cunning men. 10. But the Lord is the true God, he is the living God, and an everlasting King; at his wrath the earth shall tremble, and the nations shall not be able to abide his indignation. 11. Thus shall ye say unto them, The gods that have not made the heavens and the earth, even they shall perish from the earth, and from under these heavens. 12. He hath made the earth by his power, he hath established the world by his wisdom, and hath stretched out the heavens by his discretion. 13. When he uttereth his voice, there is a multitude of waters in the heavens, and he causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth; he maketh lightnings with rain, and bringeth forth the wind out of his treasures. 14. Every man is brutish in his knowledge; every founder is confounded by the graven image; for his molten image is falsehood, and there is no breath in them. 15. They are vanity, and the work of errors: in the time of their visitation they shall perish. 16. The portions of Jacob is not like them: for he is the former of all things; and Israel is the rod of his inheritance: the Lord of hosts is his name.

The prophet Isaiah, when he prophesied of the captivity in Babylon, added warnings against idolatry, and largely exposed the sottishness of idolaters, not only because the temptations in Babylon would be in danger of drawing the Jews there to idolatry, but because the afflictions in Babylon were designed to cure them of their idolatry. Thus the prophet Jeremiah here arms people against the idolatrous usages and customs of the heathen, not only for the use of those that were gone to Babylon, but of those also that stood behind; that, being convinced and exclaimed by the word of God, the rod might be prevented, and it is written for our learning. Observe here, 1. A solemn charge given to the people of God, to turn not themselves to the heathen and customs of the heathen. Let the house of Israel hear and receive this word from the God of Israel; "Learn not the way of the heathen, do not approve of it, nor think idenitively concerning it, much less imitate it, or consecrate yourselves to it. Let not any of their customs stand among you, (as they are apt to do insensibly,) nor mingle yourselves with your religion." Note, It ill becomes those that are taught of God, to learn the way of the heathen, and to think of worshipping the true God with such rites and ceremonies as they use in the worship of their false gods. See Deut. xii. 29, 30. 2. Learn not the way of the heathen to worship the host of heaven, the sun, moon, and stars; to them they gave divine honours, and from them they expected divine favours, and therefore, according as the signs of heaven were, whether they were auspicious or ominous, they thought themselves countenanced or discouraged by their deities: which made them observe those signs, the eclipses of the sun and moon, the conjunctions and oppositions of the planets, and all the unusual phenomena of the celestial globe, with a great deal of anxiety and trembling. Business was stopped, if any thing occurred that was thought to bode ill; if it did but thunder on their left hand, they were almost as if they had been thunderstruck. Now God would not have his people to be dismayed at the signs of heaven; to reverence the stars as deities, or to frighten themselves with any presignifications grounded upon them. Let them fear the God of heaven, and keep up a reverence of his providence, and then they need not be dismayed at the signs of heaven, for the stars in their courses fight not against any that are at peace with God. The heathen are dismayed at these signs, for they knew not the God of Israel, but they that are taught of God, be so. 3. Divers good reasons given to enforce this charge. 1. The way of the heathen is very ridiculous and absurd, and is condemned even by the dictators of right reason, v. 3. The statutes and ordinances of the heathen are vanity itself; they cannot stand the test of a rational disquisition. This is again and again insisted upon here, as it was by Isaiah. The Chaldeans valued themselves on their wisdom, in which they thought that they excelled all their neighbours; but the prophet here shows that they, and all others that worshipped idols, and expected help and relief from them, were brutish and sottish, and had not common sense. (1.) Consider what the idol is that is worshipped; it is a tree cut out of the forest originally, it was fitted up by the hands of the workman, squared and sawed, and worked into shape; see Isa. xlv. 12, &c. But, after all, it was but the stock of a tree, fitter to make a gate-post of than any thing else. But to hide the wood, they deck it with silver and gold, they gild or lacquer it, or they deck it with gold and silver lace, or cloth of tissue. They fasten it to its place, which they themselves have assigned it, with nails and hammers, that it fall not, or be thrown down, or stolen away, v. 4. The image is made straight enough, and it cannot be denied but that the workman did his part, for it is upright as the palm-tree, (v. 5,) it looks stately, and stands up as if it were going to speak to you, but it cannot speak, it is a poor dumb creature; nor can it take one step toward your heart. The same is true of the idol of gold, its face is turned away from the sun, so that it cannot shift its place, it must be carried in procession, for it cannot go. Very fitly does it come in here, "Be not afraid of them, any more than of the signs of heaven; be not afraid of incurring their displeasure, for they can do no evil; be not afraid of forfeiting their favour, for neither is it in them to do good. If you think to mend the matter by mending the materials of which the idol is made, you do to yourself, Idols of gold and silver are unworthy to be worshipped as wooden gods. The stock is a doctrine of vanities, v. 8. It teaches lies, teaches lies concerning God. It is an instruction of vanities, it is wood." It is probable that the idols of gold and silver had wood underneath for the substratum, and then silver spread into plates is brought from Tur-"ship, imported from beyond sea, and gold from Udahz, or Phæz, which is sometimes rendered the fine gold, Ps. xxi. 3. A great deal of art is used and pains taken about it. They are not such ordinary, mechanical matters that are employed about these, as about the golden gods, v. 3. These cunning men, it is the work of the workman, the graver must do his part, when it has passed through the hands of the founder. Those were but decked here and there with silver and gold, these are silver and gold all over. And that these gods might be reverenced as kings, blue and purple are their clothing, the royal robes, (v. 2.) which seems, to use an ignorant worshippers, but makes the matter no better. For what is the idol when it is made, and when they have made the best they can of it? He tells us, (v. 14.) They are falsehood, they are not what they pretend to be, but a great cheat put upon the world. They are worshipped as the gods that give us breath and life and sense, whereas they are lifeless, senseless things themselves, and there is no breath in them; there is no spirit in them, (so the word is,) they are not animated or inhabited, as they are supposed to be, by any divine spirit or name—divinity, they are so far from being gods, that they have not so much as the spirit of a beast that goes downward. They are vanity, and the work of errors, v. 15. Inquire into the use of them; ye shall find that these do nothing, no help is to be expected from them, nor any confidence put in them. They are a deceitful work, works of illusions, or mere mockerys; so some read the following clause. They delude those that put their trust in them, make fools of them, or, r. ther, they make fools of themselves. Inquire into the rise of them; they are the work of errors, gross errors, as bad as nonsense, that every age and every nation, who pretended to reason were guilty of. They are the creatures of a deceived fancy; and the errors by which they were produced, they propagate among their worshippers.

(2.) Inter hence what the idolaters are that worship these idols, (v. 8.) They are altogether brutish and foolish; they that make them are like unto them, senseless and stupid, and there is no breath in them, no use of reason, else they would never believe in such gods, no sense of honour, else they would never stoop to them, v. 14. Every man that makes or worships idols, is become brutish in his knowledge, brutish for want of knowledge, or brutish in that very thing which one would think they should be fully acquainted with; compare Jude 10. What they know naturally, what they cannot but know by the light of nature, in those things, as brute beasts, they corrupt themselves. Though in the works of creation they cannot but see the eternal power and godhead of the Creator, yet they are become vain in their imaginations, not liking to retain God in their knowledge. See Rom. i. 21, 28. Nay, whereas they thought it a shame to worship beasts, this was next in order. The gods they made the greatest folly they could be guilty of. The world by wisdom knew not God, 1 Cor. i. 21. Rom. i. 22. Every founder is himself confounded by the graven image; when he has made it by a mistake, he is more and more confirmed in his mistake by it; he is bewildered, bewitched, and cannot disentangle himself from the snare; or it is he will one time or other, by the advice or counsel of some he trusts in, be led into a snare. Such things are there, he is the living God; he is Life itself, has life in himself, and is the Fountain of life to all the creatures. The gods of the heathen are dead things, worthless and useless, but ours is a living God, and hath immortality. (2.) Look upon him with relation to his creatures, he is a King, and absolute Monarch over all them, is their Owner and Ruler, has an immortal right to the whole earth and dispose of them; as a King, he protects the creatures, provides for their welfare, and preserves peace among them. He is an everlasting King. The counsels of his kingdom were from everlasting, and the continuance of it will be to everlasting. He is a King of eternity. The idols whom they call their kings, are but of yesterday; and will sort be abolished; and the kings of the earth that are with them shall bow down, and themselves be the first among the nations: but the Lord shall reign for ever, the God O Zion, unto all generations.

6. The heavens and the earth shall perish, and the sea; yet the word of our God shall stand for ever.

7. God glorifies in the treasures he has of these, Job xxxviii. 22, 23. This God can do; but which of the idels of the heathen can do the like? Note, There is no sort of weather but what furnishes us with a proof and instance of the wisdom and power of the great Creator.

(5.) This God is Israel's God in covenant, and the only God of Israel. The Lord his God, the house of Israel cleave to him, and not forsake him to embrace idols; for, if they do, they certainly change for the worse, for (v. 16.) the Portion of Jacob is not like them; their rock is not as our Rock, (Deut. xxxii. 31.) nor our like their meale-hills. Note, [1.] They that have the Lord for their God, have a full and complete happiness in him. The God of Jacob is the Portion of Jacob; he is his all, and in him he has enough, and needs no more in this world or the other. In him we have a worthy portion, Ps. xvi. 5. [2.] If we have entire satisfaction and complacency in God as our Portion, he will have a gracious delight in us as his people, whom he owns as the rod of his inheritance, his possession and treasure, with whom he dwells and by whom he is served and honoured. [3.] It is the unspakable comfort of the Christian, that the Lord is the Former of all things, and therefore is able to do all that for them, and give all that to them, which they stand in need of. Their help stands in his name who made heaven and earth. And he is the Lord of hosts, of all the hosts in heaven and earth, has them all at his command, and will command them into the service of his people when there is occasion. This is the name by which they know him, which they first give him the glory of, and then take to themselves the comfort of. [4.] Herein God's people are happy above all other people, happy indeed, bona si sua norint—did they but know their blessedness. The gods which the heathen pride, and please, and so portion themselves in, are vanity and a lie; but the Portion of Jacob is not like them.

8. The prophet, having thus compared the gods of the heathen with the God of Israel, (between whom there is no comparison,) reads the doom, the certain doom, of all those pretenders, and directs the Jews in God's name, to read it to the worshippers of idols, though they were their lords and masters; (v. 11.) Thus shall ye say unto them, and they shall be held in saying it, if the gods which have not made the heavens and the earth, and therefore are no gods, but usurpers of the honour due to him only who did make heaven and earth, these shall perish; perish of course, 'because they are vanity; perish by his righteous sentence, because they are rivals with him, as gods they shall perish: from off the earth, even all those things on earth beneath, which they make gods; and from before these, even all things, which they make an ornament of heaven, under the highest heavens, which are defined, according to the distribution in the second commandment. These words in the original are not in the Hebrew, like all the rest, but in the Chaldee dialect, that the Jews in captivity might have this ready to say to the Chaldeans in their own language, when they tempted the Israelites to idolatry; to say, if ye serve other gods, your gods, or the gods of your gods. We will never do that; for," (1.) They are counterfeit deities; they are no gods, for they have not made the heavens and the earth, and therefore are not entitled to our homage; nor are we indebted to them either for the products of the earth, or the influences of heaven, as we are to the God of Israel." The primitive Christians would say, when they were urged to worship such a god, Let him make a world, and he shall be my god. While we have him to worship, who made heaven and earth, it is very absurd to worship any other. (2.) They are con ducted deities; they shall perish, the time shall come when they shall be no more respected as they are now, but shall be buried in oblivion, and they and their worshippers shall sink together; the earth shall no longer bear them, the heavens shall no longer cover them, but both shall abandon them. It is repeated, v. 15. In the time of their visitation.

When God comes to reckon with idolaters, he shall make them weary of their idols, and glad to be rid of them; they shall cast them to the moles and to the bats, Isa. ii. 20. Whatever runs against God and religion, will be run down at last.

17. Gather up thy wares out of the land, O inhabitant of the fortress: 18. For thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will sling out the inhabitants of the land at this once, and will distress them, that they may find it so. 19. Wo is me for my hurt! my wound is grievous: but I said, Truly this is a grief, and I must bear it. 20. My tabernacle is spoiled, and all my cords are broken: my children are gone forth of me, and they are not; there is none to stretch forth my tent any more, and to set up my curtains. 21. For the pastors are become brutish, and have not sought the Lord: therefore they shall not prosper, and all their flocks shall be scattered. 22. Behold, the noise of the gruit is come, and a great commotion out of the north country, to make the cities of Judah desolate, and a den of dragons. 23. O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps. 24. O Lord, correct me, but with judgment; not in thine anger, lest thou bring me to nothing. 25. Pour out thy fury upon the heathen that know thee not, and upon the families that call not on thy name: for they have eaten up Jacob, and devoured him, and consumed him, and have made his habitation desolate.

In these verses,

I. The prophet threatens, in God's name, the approaching ruin of Judah and Jerusalem, v. 17, 18. The Jews that continued in their own land, after some were carried into captivity, were very secure; they thought themselves inhabitants of a fortress, their country was their strong hold, and, in their own conceit, impregnable; but they are hereby bid to think of leaving it; they must prepare to go to their brethren, and pack up their effects in expectation of it; "Gather up thy wares out of the land; contract your affairs, and bring them into as little a compass as you can. Arise, depart, this is not your rest, Mic. ii. 10. Let not what you have lie scattered, for the Chaldeans will be upon you again, to be the executioners of them that must pass over up you, (v. 18.) Behold, I will sling out the inhabitants of the land at this once: they have hitherto dropt out, by a few at a time, but one captivity more shall make a thorough riddance, and they shall be stung out as a stone out of a sling, so easily, so thoroughly shall they be cast out; nothing of them shall remain, they shall be thrown out with violence, and driven to a place at a great distance off, in a little time. See this comparison used to signify an utter destruction, 1 Sam. xxxv. 29. Yet once more, God will shake their land, and shake the wicked out of it, II. b. xii. 26. He adds, And I will distress them, that they may find it so. He will not only throw them out hence, (that he may do, and yet they may be easy elsewhere;) but, wthithersoever they go, trouble shall follow them: they shall be continually perplexed and straitened, and at a loss within themselves; and who or what can make these easy whom God will distress, whom he will distress, that they may find it so, that they may feel that which they would not believe? They were often told of the weight of God's wrath, and their own iniquity; yet make he lift up his hand against it, or bear up under it; they were told that their sin would be their ruin, and they would not regard or credit what was told them; but now they shall find it so; and therefore God will pursue them with his judgments, that they may find it so, and be forced to acknowledge it. Note, Sooner or later, sinners will find it just so as the word of God has represented things to them, even as no better, and that the threatenings were not nugbears. 11. He brings in the people sadly lamenting their calamities; (v. 19.) Wo is me for my hurt! Some make this the prophet's own lamentation, not for himself, but for the calamities and desolations of his country. He mourned for those that would not be persuaded to mourn for themselves; and since there were none that had so much sense as to join with them, he weeps in secret, and cries out, Wo is me! In mournful times, it becomes us to be of a mournful spirit. But it may be taken as the language of the people, considered as a body, and therefore speaking as a single person. The prophet puts into their mouths the words they should say; whether they would or not, he has so great a cause to say them. So among them would they be done by themselves, and all of them, at last, would be forced to do it.

1. They lament that the affliction is very great, and that it is very hard to them to bear it; the more hard because they had not been used to trouble, and now did not expect it: "Wo is me for my hurt, and for what I have done; but I am not as the hurt, no, as some are, worse frightened than hurt. Nor is it a slight hurt, but a wound, a wound that is grievous, very painful, and very threatening. 2. That there is no remedy but patience; they cannot help themselves, but must sit still, and abide it. But I said, when I was about to complain of my wound, To what purpose is it to complain? This is a grief, and I must bear it as well as I can. This is the language rather of a sufferer than of a gracious submission; of a patience for force, not a patience by principle. When I am in affliction, I should say, "This is an evil, and I will bear it, because it is the will of God that I should, because his wisdom has appointed this for me, and his grace will make it work for good. This is the grieve-
ing part at the hand of God, Job ii. 10. But to say, "This is an evil, and I must bear it, because I cannot help it," is a brutal patience, and argues a want of those good thoughts of God, which we should always have, even under our afflictions; saying, not only, God can and will do what he pleases, but, Let him do what he pleases.

2. That the country was quite ruined and wasted; (v. 20.) My tabernacle is spoiled. Jerusalem, though a strong city, now proves as weak and moveable as a tabernacle: their government is dissolved, and their state fallen to pieces, like a tabernacle or tent, when it is taken down, and all its cords, that should keep it together, are broken. Or, by the tabernacle here may be meant the temple, the sanctuary, which at first was but a tabernacle, and is now called so, as then it was sometimes called a temple. Their church is ruined, and all the supports of it fail. It was a general destruction of church and state, city and country, and there were none to repair these desolations: "My children are gone forth of me, they are spoiled, they are carried into captivity, so that as to me they are not; I am likely to be an outcast, and to perish for want of shelter; for there is none to stretch forth my tent any more, none of my children that used to do it for me, none to set up my curtains, none to do me any service." Jerusalem has none to guide her of all her sons, Isa. lli. 19.

And the rulers took no care, nor any proper measures, for the redress of their grievances, and the re-establishing of their ruined state; (v. 21.) The pastors are become brutish. When the tents, the shepherds' tents, were spoiled, (v. 20.) it concerned the shepherds to look after them; but they were foolish shepherds. Their kings and princes had no regard at all to the public welfare, seemed to have no sense of the desolations of the land, but were quite bewitched and infatuated. The priests, the pastors of God's tabernacle, did a great deal towards the ruin of religion, but nothing toward the repair of it. They are brutish indeed, for they have not sought the Lord; they have neither made their peace with him nor their prayer to him; they had no eye to him and his providence, in their management of affairs; they neither acknowledged the judge, nor expected the deliverance, to come from his hand. Note, Those are brutish people, that do not seek the Lord, that live without prayer, and live without God in the world; every man is either a saint or a brute. But it is sad indeed with a people, when their pastors, that should feed them with knowledge and understanding, are themselves thus brutish. And what comes of it? Therefore they shall not prosper; none of their attempts for the public safety shall succeed. Note, Those cannot expect to prosper, who do not by faith and prayer take God along with them in all their ways. And when the pastors are brutish, what else can be expected but that all their flocks should be scattered? For if the blind lead the blind, both will fall into the ditch. The ruin of a people is often owing to the brutishness of their pastors and preachers.

5. That the report of the enemy's approach was very dreadful; (v. 22.) The noise of the brutish is come, of the report which at first was but whispered and bruited abroad, as wanting confirmation. It now proves too true. A great commotion arises out of the north country, which threatens to make all the cities of Judah desolate, and a den of dragons; for they must all expect to be sacrificed to the cruelty and fury of the Chaldean army. And what else can that place expect, but to be made a den of dragons, which has by sin made itself a den of thieves?

III. He turns to God, and addresses himself to him, finding it little purpose to speak to the people. It is some comfort to poor ministers, that, if men will not hear them, God will; and he, therefore, has plenty of this at all times. Let them close their preaching with prayer, as the prophet, and then they shall have no reason to say that they have labour'd in vain.

1. The prophet here acknowledges the sovereignty and dominion of the divine providence, that by it, and not by their own will and wisdom, the affairs of men are fixed, and points them distinctly and determinedly. v. 23. This is an article of our faith, which it is very proper for us to make confession of at the throne of grace, when we are complaining of an affliction, or suing for a mercy: "O Lord, I know, and believe, that the way of man is not in himself; Nebuchadnezzar did not come of himself against our land, but by the direction of a divine providence." We cannot of ourselves do any thing for our own relief, unless God work with us, and command deliverance for us, for it is not in man that walketh, to direct his steps, Ps. lxxxv. 8. (2.) It is a prediction of God's judg-ments upon all the impenitent enemies of his church and kingdom. If judgment begin thus at the house of God, what shall be the end of these that hear not his gospel? 1 Pet. iv. 17. See how the heathen are described, on whom God's fury shall be seen. (2.) It is a prediction of God's judg-ments upon all the impenitent enemies of his church and kingdom. If judgment begin thus at the house of God, what shall be the end of these that hear not his gospel? 1 Pet. iv. 17. See how the heathen are described, on whom God's fury shall be seen.
ed out. [1.] They are strangers to God, and are of a content to be so. They know him not, nor desire to know him. They are families that live without prayer, that have nothing of religion among them; they call not on God's name. Those that restrain prayer, prove that they know not God; for they that know him will seek to him, and entertain his favour. [2.] They are persecutors of the people of God, and are ready to be his enemies. They have eaten up Jacob, with as much greediness, as those that are hungry eat their necessary food; nay, with more, for they never know when they have enough; they have devoured him and consumed him, and made his habitation desolate, that is, the land in which he lives, or the temple of God, which is his habitation among them. Note, What the heathen, in their rage and malice, do against the people of God, though therein he makes use of them as the instruments of his correction, yet he will, for that, make them the objects of his indignation. This prayer is taken from Ps. xxxix. 6, 7.

CHAP. XI.

In this chapter, 1. God by the prophet puts the people in mind of the covenant he had made with their fathers, and how that they had transgressed, and were not obedient to that covenant, that they should be obedient to him, v. 1, 7. 2. He charges it upon them, that they, in succession to their fathers, and in confederacy among themselves, had obstinately rebuked him, v. 7. 3. He threatens to punish them with utter ruin for their disobedience, especially for their idolatry; (v. 11, 13.) and tells them, that their idols should not save them, (v. 12.) that their prophets should not pray for them; (v. 14.) he also justifies his proceedings therein, they having brought all this mischief upon themselves by their own folly and willfulness, v. 15, 17. 4. Here is an account of a conspiracy formed against Jeremiah by his fellow-citizens, the men of Anathoth; God's discovery of it to him; (v. 18, 19.) his prayer against them, (v. 20.) and a prediction of God's judgments upon them for it, v. 21, 22. 29.

1. The word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying, 2. Hear ye the words of this covenant, and speak unto the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem; 3. And say thou unto them, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Cursed be the man that obeyeth not the words of this covenant, 4. Which I commanded your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, from the iron furnace, saying, Obey my voice, and do them, according to all which I command you: so shall ye be my people, and I will be your God; 5. That I may perform the oath which I have sworn unto your fathers, to give them a land flowing with milk and honey, as it is this day. Then answered I, and said, So be it, O Lord. 6. Then the Lord said unto me, Proclaim all these words in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, saying, Hear ye the words of this covenant, and do them. 7. For I earnestly protestted unto your fathers, in the day that I brought them up out of the land of Egypt, even unto this day, rising early and protesting, saying, Obey my voice. 8. Yet they obeyed not, nor inclined their ear, but walked every one in the imagination of their evil heart: therefore I will bring upon them all the words of this covenant which I commanded them to do: but they did them not. 9. And the Lord said unto me, A conspiracy is found among the men of Judah, and among the inhabitants of Jerusalem. 10. They are turned back to the iniquities of their forefathers, which refused to hear my words; and they went after other gods to serve them: the house of Israel and the house of Judah have broken my covenant, which I made with their fathers.

The prophet here, as prosecutor in God's name, draws up an indictment against the Jews for idolatry and disobedience to the commands of their rightful Sovereign. For the more solemn management of this charge,

1. He produces the commission he had to draw up the charge against them; he did not take pleasure in accusing the children of his people, but God commanded him to speak it to the men of Judah; v. 1, 2. In the original it is plural; Speak ye this. For what he had to say was of such a nature that he had no charge to make to all his servants the prophets. They none of them said any other than what Moses, in the law, had said; to that therefore they must refer themselves, and direct the people; "Hear the words of this covenant; turn to your Bibles, be judged by them." Jeremiah must now proclaim this in the name of Judah and the men of Jerusalem, and may hear, for all concerns. All the words of reproof and conviction, which the prophets spake, were grounded upon the words of the covenant, and agreed with that; "And therefore hear these words, and understand by them what terms you stood with God at first; and then, by comparing yourselves with the covenant, you will soon be aware upon what terms you now stand with him."

1. This was the original contract between God and them, when he first formed them into a people. It was what he commanded their fathers, when he first brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, (v. 4.) and again, v. 7. He never intended to take them under his guidance and protection upon any other terms. This was it that he required from them, in gratitude for the great things he did for them when he brought them from the iron furnace. Therefore he redeemed them out of the service of the Egyptians, which was perfect slavery, that he might take them into his own service, which is perfect freedom, Luke 1, 74, 75.

2. This was not only laid before them then, but it was with the greatest importunity imaginable pressed upon them, v. 7. God not only commanded it, but earnestly protected it, to their fathers, when he brought them into covenant with himself. Moses inculcated it again and again, by precept upon precept, and line upon line.

3. This was the condition of the relation between them and God, which was so much their honour and privilege; "So shall ye be my people, and I will be your God; I will own you for mine, and you shall be my sons and daughters," which intimates that if they refused to obey, they could no longer claim the benefit of the relation.

4. It was upon these terms that the land of Canaan was given them for a possession; "Obey my voice, that I may perform the oath sworn to your fathers, to give them a land flowing with milk and honey," v. 3. God was ready to fulfil the promise, but then they must fulfil the condition: if not, the promise is void, and it is just with God to turn them out of it. Being brought in upon their good behaviour, they had no wrong done them if they were turned out upon their ill behaviour. Obedience was the rent reserved by the lease, with a power to re-center for non-payment.

5. This obedience was not only made a condition of the blessing, but was required under the penalty of a curse. This is mentioned first here, (v. 5.) that they might, if possible, be awaked by the terrors of the Lord; Cursed be the man, though it were but a single person, that obeys not the words of this covenant. Much more when it is the body of the nation, that rebels. There are curses of the covenant as well as blessings; and Moses set before them not only life and good, but death and evil; (Deut. xxx. 13.) so that they fear warning given them of the fatal consequences of disobedience.

6. Last this covenant should be forgotten, and, because out of mind, should be thought out of date. God had from time to time called to them to remember it, and by his servants the prophets had made a continual claim of this rent; so that they could not plead, in excuse of their non-payment, that it had never been demanded; from the day he brought them out of Egypt to this day, (and that was near one thousand years,) he had been, in one way or other, at sundry times and in divers manners, pro- testing to them the necessity of obedience. God keeps an account how long we have enjoyed the means of grace, and how powerful these means have been; how often we have been not only spoken to, but threatened with the curse.

7. This covenant was consented to; (v. 5.) Then answered I, and said, Amen, so be it, O Lord. These are the words of the prophet, expressing either, (1.) His own consent to the covenant for himself, and his desire to have the benefit of it. God promised Canaan to the obedient; "Lord," says he, "I take thee at thy word, I will be obedient; let me be permitted to concern myself in thy bounty; of which Canaan am a type." Or, (2.) His own will, and good wish, that his people might have the benefit of it; "Amen; Lord, let them still be kept in possession of this good land, and not turned out of it; make good the promise to them." Or, (3.) His people's consent to the covenant; "Then answered I, in the name of the people, So be it." Taking it in his sense, it refers to the declared consent which the people gave to the type, and which God will give to the importations of it, when they said, All that the Lord shall say unto us we will do, and will be obedient, but to the penalties, when they said Amen to all the curses upon mount Ebal. The more solemnly we have engaged ourselves to God, the more reason we have to hope that it will be perpetual; and yet here it did not go on.

II. He charges them with breach of covenant, such a breach as amounted to a forfeiture of their charter, v. 8. God had said again and again, by his law and by his prophets, "Obe, my voice, do as you are bidden, and all shall be well;" yet they obeyed not; and because they were resolved not to submit thir souls to God's commandments, they would not so much as incline their ears to them, but got as far as they could cut of call: They caused every one in the imagination of their evil hearts, fol- lowed their own inventions; every man did as his fancy and humour led him, right or wrong, lawful or unlawful, and the thoughts of the times, which had no conversations; see ch. viii. 24. What then can they ex- pect, but fall under the curse of the covenant, since they would not comply with the commands and conditions of it; Therefore I will bring upon them all the words of this covenant, all the threatenings contained in it, because they did not what they were commanded. Note, The words of the covenant will not find fault with God, but with ourselves: our obedience qualify ourselves for the blessings of it, we shall by our disobedience bring ourselves under the curses of it.

That which aggravated their defection from God, and rebellion against him, was, that it was general, and as it were by consent, v. 9, 10. Jeremiah himself saw that many lived in open disobedience to God, and the worst of them were worse than he thought of; A conspiracy is found among them, by him whose eye is upon the hidden works of darkness. There is a combination against God and religion, a dangerous design formed to over- throw God's government, and bring in the pretenders, the counterfeit deities. This intimates that they were wilful and deliberate in wickedness; they rebelled against God, not through incoignity, but presumptuously, and with a high hand; that they were subtle and ingenious in wickedness, and car- ried on their plot against religion with a great deal of art and management; that they were linked to- gether in the design, and, as is usual among conspirators, engaged to stand by one another in it, and to live and die together; they were resolved to go through with it. A cursed conspiracy! O that there were not the like in our day! Observe, 1. What the conspiracy was; they designed to overthrow divine revelation, and set that aside, and persuade people not to hear, not to heed, the words of God. They did all they could to derogate from the authority of the scriptures, and to lessen the value of them; they designed to draw people after other gods to serve them, to consult them as their oracles, and make appeal to their consciences; they would, if they could, be their god, a light within their god, an infallible judge their god, saints and angels their gods, the god of this or the other nation shall be theirs; thus, under several disguises, they are in the same confederacy against the Lord and against his anointed. 2. Who were in the conspiracy: one would have expected to find some foreigners ringleaders in it; but not so, even the children of Jerusa- lem are in conspiracy with the men of Judah; city and country agree in this, however they may differ in other things. (2.) Those of this generation seem to be in conspiracy with those of the foregoing gen- eration, to carry on the war from age to age against religion; They are turned back to the iniquities of their forfathers, and are rising up in their stead, a head of evil things. No, (4.) The unfaithful of Jerusa- lem xxxii. 14. In Josiah's time there had been a refor- mation, but after his death they returned to the idolatries which then they had renounced. (3.) Judah and Israel, the kingdom of the ten tribes and the two that were often at daggers-drawing one with another, were yet in a conspiracy to break the covenant God had made with their fathers, even with the heads of all the twelve tribes. The king- dom of Israel began the revolt, but the house of Judah soon came into the conspiracy. Now what else could be expected, but that God should take severe methods, both for the chastising of these conspirators, and the crushing of this conspiracy; for none ever hardened his heart thus against God, and prospered. He that rolls this stone, it will return upon him.

11. Therefore thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will bring evil upon them, which they shall not be able to escape; and though they shall cry unto me, I will not hearken unto them. 12. Then shall the cities of Judah, and inhabitants of Jerusalem, go and cry unto the gods unto whom they offer incense: but they shall not save them at all in the time of their trouble. 13. For according to the number of the cities were thy gods, O Judah; and according to the number of the streets of Jerusalem have ye set up altars to that shameful thing, even altars to burn incense unto Baal. 14. Therefore pray not thou for this people, neither lift up a cry or prayer for them: for I will not hear them in the time that they cry unto me for their trouble. 15. What hath my beloved to do in my house, seeing she hath wrought lewdness with many, and the holy flesh is passed from thee? when thou dost evil, then thou rejoicest. 16. The Lord called thy name, A green olive-tree, fair, and of goodly fruit; with the noise of a great tumult he hath kindled fire upon it, and the branches of it are broken. 17. For the Lord of hosts that planted thee hath pronounced evil against thee, for the evil of the house of Israel, and of the house of Judah, which they have done against themselves, to provoke me to anger, in offering incense unto Baal.

This paragraph, which contains so much of God’s wrath, might very well be expected to follow upon that which goes next before, which contained so much of his people’s sin. When God found so much evil among them, we cannot think it strange if it follows, Therefore I will bring evil upon them, (v. 11.) the evil of punishment for the evil of sin; and there is no remedy, no relief, the decree is gone forth, and the sentence will be executed.

1. They cannot help themselves, but shall be found too weak to contest with God’s judgment; it is evil which they shall not be able to escape, or to go forth out of, by any evasion whatsoever. Note, Those that will not submit to God’s government, shall not be able to escape his wrath. There is no fleeing from his justice, no avoiding his cognizance. Evil pursues sinners, and entangles them in snares out of which there is no escape.

2. Their God will not help them, his providence shall no way favour them; Though they shall cry unto me, I will not hearken unto them. In their affliction they will seek the God whom before they slighted, and cry to him whom before they would not vouchsafe to speak to. But how can they expect to speed? For he has plainly told us, that he will turn away his ears from hearing the low, as they did, (v. 8.) for they inclined not their ear, even his prayer shall be an abomination to him, as the way of the Lord was now to them a reproach.

3. Their idols shall not help them, v. 12. They shall go and cry to the gods to whom they now offer incense, and put them in mind of the costly services wherewith they had honoured them, expecting they should now have relief from them, but in vain: they shall be sent to the gods whom they served; (Judg. x. 4. Deut. xxxii. 37, 38.) and what the better? They shall not save them at all, shall do nothing for them in their distress: nor give them any prospect of it; they shall not afford them least relief, nor mitigation of their trouble. It is God only that is a Friend at need, a present powerful Help in time of trouble. The ideas cannot help themselves; how then should they help their worshippers? Those that make holes in the world and the flesh, will in vain have recourse to them in a day of distress, (v. 11.) their idols shall have done any real kindness to their worshippers, they would have done it for this people, who had renounced the true God to embrace him, had multiplied them according to the number of their cities, (v. 13.) in Jerusalem, according to the number of their streets, suspecting both their sufficiency and their readiness to help them, they must have many, lest a few would not be enough. So that the altar of Baal is dispersed in every corner, lest they should be out of the world when they had occasion for them. In Jerusalem, the city which God had chosen to put his name there, publicly in the streets of Jerusalem, in every street, they had altars to that shameful thing, that shame, even to Baal, which they ought to have been ashamed of, with which they did reproach the Lord, and bring confusion upon themselves. But now in their distress, their minds wander, and they stand in no stead. Note, Those that will not be ashamed of their commission of sin as a wicked thing, will be ashamed of their expectations from sin as a fruitless thing.

4. Jeremiah’s prayer shall not help them; (v. 14.) what God had said to him before, (ch. vii. 16.) he says again, Pray not thou for this people. This is not designed for a command to the prophets so much as for a threatening to the people, that they should have no benefit by the prayers of their friends for them. God would give no encouragement to the prophets to pray for them, would not stir up the Spirit of prayer, but cast a damp upon it; would put it into their hearts to pray, not for the body of the people, but for the remnant among them, to pray for their election, not for any deliverance, but from the temporal judgments that were coming upon them; and what other prayers were put up for them, should not be heard. Those are in a sad case indeed, that are cut off from the benefit of prayer. I will not hear them when they cry, and therefore do not thou pray for them.” Note, Those that have so far thrown themselves out of God’s favour, that he will not hear their prayers, cannot expect benefit by the prayers of others for them.

5. The profession they make of religion shall stand them in no stead, v. 15. They were originally God’s beloved, his spouse, he was married to them by the covenant of peculiarity; even the unbelieving Jews are said to be beloved for the fathers’ sake, Rom. xi. 28. As such, they had a place in God’s house, they heard his prayer to worship in the courts of his temple, they partook of God’s altar, they ate of the flesh of his peace-offerings, he called the holy flesh, which God had the honour of, and they had the comfort of. This they gloried in, and trusted to. What harm could come to those who were God’s beloved, who were under the protection of his house? Even when they did evil, yet in the minds and hearts of them, this, made a glympe of the halcyon days of this. And when their evil was, (so the margin reads it,) when trouble came upon them, they rejoiced in this, and made this their confidence; but their confidence would deceive them, for God has rejected it.
they themselves have forfeited the privileges they so much boasted of. They have wrought lewdness with many, have been guilty of spiritual whoredom, have worshipped many idols. And therefore, (1.) God's temple will yield them no protection; it is fit that the adulteress, especially when she has so often repeated her whoredoms, and is grown so impatient in them, and irreclaimable, should be put away, and turned out.

(2.) What (asks the prophet) is my house to do in my house? She is a scandal to it, and therefore it shall no longer be a shelter to her.

(2.) God's altar will yield them no satisfaction, nor can they expect any comfort from that; The holy flesh is passed from thee, an end will soon be put to thy sacrifices, when the temple shall be laid in ruins; and where then will the holy flesh be, that thou art so proud of? A holy heart will be a comfort to us when the holy flesh is passed from us; an inward principle of grace will make up the want of the outward means of grace. But wo unto us if the departure of the holy flesh be accompanied with the departure of the holy Spirit.

6. God's former favours to them shall stand them in no stead, v. 16, 17. Their remembrance of them shall do them no good in their troubles, and God's remembrance of them shall be no armament for their relief. (1.) It is true, God had done great things for them; that people had been favourites above any people under the sun, they had been the darlings of heaven, God had called Israel's name a green olive-tree, and had made them so, for he miscalls nothing; he had planted them, (v. 17.) had formed them into a people, with all the advantages they could have to make them a fruitful and flourishing people, so good was their law, and so good was their land. One would think no other, than that a people so planted, so watered, so cultivated, should be, as the olive-tree is, ever green, in respect both of piety and prosperity, Ps. lii. 8. God called them fair, and of goodly fruit; both good for food, and pleasant to the eye; both amiable and serviceable to God and man, for with the greenness and fruitfulness of the olive both are honoured, Judg. ix. 9. (2.) It is as true, that they have done evil things against God; he had planted them a green olive, a good olive, but they were degenerate into a wild olive, Rom. xi. 17. Both the house of Israel and the house of Judah had done evil, and had provoked God to anger in burning incense unto strange gods and mediating for them, and the supreme God besides the promised Messiah; nay, setting up other gods in competition with the true and living God, for they had gods many, as well as lords many. (3.) When they have conducted themselves so ill, they can expect no other than that, notwithstanding what good he has done to them, and designed for them, he should now bring upon them the plagues he had threatened them. He that made them will not save them. He that planted this green olive-tree, and expected fruit from it, finding it barren and grown wild, has kindled fire upon it, to turn it as it stands; for, being without fruit, it is twice dead, plucked up by the roots. (Jude 12.) It is cut down, and cast into the fire, the fiest place for trees that cumber the ground, Matthew vi. 19. brethren of blessedness, brethren of death, lefty boughs, (so the word signifies,) are broken, are broken down, both princes and priests cut off. And thus it proves, that the evil done against God, to provoke him to anger, is really done against themselves, they wrong their own souls; God is out of their reach, but they ruin themselves. See ch. vii. 19.

And the Lord hath given me knowledge of it, and I know it, then thou shewest me their doings. 19. But I was like a lamb, or an ox, that is brought to the slaughter: and I knew not that they had devised devices against me, saying, Let us destroy the tree with the fruit thereof, and let us cut him off from the land of the living, that his name may be no more remembered. 20. But, O Lord of hosts, that judgest righteously, that triest the reins and the heart, let me see thy vengeance on them; for unto thee have I revealed my cause. 21. Therefore thus saith the Lord of the men of Anathoth that seek thy life, saying, Prophecy not in the name of the Lord, that thou die not by our hand; 22. Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, Behold, I will punish them; the young men shall die by the sword, their sons and their daughters shall die by famine; 23. And there shall be no remnant of them, for I will bring evil upon the men of Anathoth, even the year of their visitation.

The prophet Jeremiah has much in his writings concerning himself, much more than Isaiah had, the times he lived in being very troublesome; here we have grave charges, as well as inducements of his corruptions, which arose from those of his own city, Anathoth, a priest's city, and yet a malignant one. Observe here,

1. Their plot against him, v. 19. They devised devices against him, laid their heads together to contrive how they might be in the most plausible and effectual manner the death of him. Malice is infectious in its devices, as well as injurious of his prosecutions. They said concerning Jeremiah, Let us destroy the tree with the fruit thereof, a proverbial expression; "Let us utterly destroy him, root and branch. Let us destroy both the father and the family." (Is, when Nabal was put to death for treason, his sons were put to death with him;) or, rather, "Both the prophet and the prophecy; let us cut him off from the house of the living, as a false prophet, and load him with ignominy and disgrace, that his name may be no more remembered with respect. Let us sink his reputation, and spoil the credit of his predictions." This was their plot; and, (1.) It was a barbarous one; but so cruel have the persecutors of God's prophets been. They hunt for no less than the present life, and very precious the lives are, that they hunt for. But (2.) It was a baffled one. They thought to put an end to his days, but he survived most of his enemies; they thought to blast his memory, but it lives to this day, and will be blessed while time lasts.

2. The information which God gave him of this conspiracy against him. He knew nothing of it himself, so artfully had they concealed it; he came to Anathoth, meaning no harm to them, and therefore fearing no harm from them, like a lamb or an ox, that thinks he is driven as usual to the field, when he is brought to the slaughter; so little did poor Jeremiah dream of the design his citizens that hated him had upon him. None of his friends could, and none of his enemies would, give him any notice of his danger. He must shift for his own safety; as Paul's sister's son gave him intelligence of the Jews that were lying in wait for him. There is but a step between Jeremiah and death; but then, Lord gave him knowledge of it, by dream or vision.
understanding their inhibition, he should die by their hand; this would be accusers, judges, executioners, and all. It used to be said, that a prophet could not perish but at Jerusalem; for there the great council sat; but so bitter were the men of Anathoth against Jeremiah, that they would undertake to be the death of him themselves. A prophet then shall find not only no honour, but no favour, in his own country.

(2.) The sentence passed upon them for this crime, v. 17. 18. God will set them to deal with him, I will visit this upon them; so the word is: God will inquire into it, and reckon for it. Two of God’s four sore judgments shall serve to ruin their town. The sword shall devour their young men, though they were young priests, not men of war; their character shall not be their protection; and famine shall destroy the children, sons and daughters, that there was at Anathoth; which is a more grievous death than that by the sword, Lam. iv. 9. The destruction shall be final, (v. 23.) There shall be no remnant of them left, none to be the seed of another generation; they sought Jeremiah’s life, and therefore they shall die; they would destroy him, root and branch, that his name might be no more remembered, and therefore there shall be no remnant of them: and herein the Lord is righteous. Thus evil is brought upon them, even the year of their visitation; and that is evil enough, a recompense according to their deserts. Then shall Jeremiah see his desire upon his enemies. Note, Their condition is sad, who have the prayers of good ministers and good people against them.

CHAP. XII.

In this chapter, we have, 1. The prophet’s humble complaint to God of the success that wicked people had in their wicked practices, (v. 1, 2.) and his appeal to God concerning his integrity, 10. 11. How God would have suffered, and would have forebore, and would have done more, than he did; and this in the place of audience of iniquity; that God would not have taken upon him to be a judge of his people, nor to be a witness against them, nor to deal with them; because of the multitude and greatness of the iniquities of his people, in this generation. 2. His answer to the prophet’s complaint, and his word to comfort and encourage him, 12. 13. IV. An intimation of mercy to God’s people, in a denunciation of wrath against their neighbours that helped forward their affliction, that they should be plucked out, and with a promise, that if they would at last join themselves with the people of God, they should come in sharers with them in their privileges, v. 14. 17.

1. Righteous art thou, O Lord, when I plead with thee: yet let me talk with thee of thy judgments: Wherefore doth the way of the wicked prosper? wherefore are all they happy that deal very treacherously? 2. Thou hast planted them; yea, they have taken root; they grow; yea, they bring forth fruit: thou art near in their mouth, and far from their reins. 3. But thou, O Lord, knowest me; thou hast seen me, and tried my heart toward thee; pull them out like sheep for the slaughter, and prepare them for the day of slaughter. 4. How long shall the land mourn, and the herbs of every field wither, for the wickedness of them that dwell therein? the beasts are consumed, and the birds; because they said, He shall not see our last end. 5. If thou hast run with the footmen, and they have wearied thee, then how canst thou contend with horses? and if in the land of peace, wherein thou trustedst, they wearied three, then how will thou do in the swelling of Jordan? 6. For even thy brethren, and the house of thy father, even they have dealt treacherously with thee; yea, they have called a multitude after thee: believe them not, though they speak fair words unto thee.

The prophet doubts not but it would be of use to others, to know what had passed between God and his soul; what temptations he had been assaulted with, and how he had got over them; and therefore he here tells us,

1. What liberty he humbly took, and was graciously allowed him, to reason with God concerning his judgment, v. 1. He is about to plead with God, not to quarrel with him, or find fault with his providence; he brings a truth of nature, a principle, which he resolves to abide by in managing this argument; Righteous art thou, O Lord, when I plead with thee. Thus he arms himself against the temptation wherewith he was assaulted, to envy the prosperity of the wicked, before he entered into a parley with it. Note, When we are most in the dark concerning the meaning of God's dispensations, when our hands are still to keep up right thoughts of God, and must be confident of this, that he never did, nor ever will do, the least wrong to any of his creatures; even when his judgments are unsearchable as a great deep, and altogether unaccountable, yet his righteousness is as conspicuous and unmeaning as the great mountains, Ps. xxxvi. 6. Though sometimes clouds and darkness are round about him, yet justice and judgment are always the habitation of his throne, Ps. xcviii. 2. When we find it hard to understand particular providences, we must have recourse to general truths as our first principles, and abide by them; however it be, the Lord is righteous; see Ps. lxiii. 1. And we must acknowledge it to him, as the prophet here, even when we plead with him, as those that have no thoughts of contending, but only in love longing hither, in faith, that he be exalted when he speaks. Note, However we may see cause for our own information to plead with God, yet it becomes us to own that, whatever he says or does, he is in the right.

II. What it was in the dispensations of Divine Providence, that he stumbled at, and that he thought would bear a debate. It was that which has been a temptation to many wise and good men, and such a one as they had hardly got over. 1. They see the designs and projects of wicked people successful: The way of the wicked provers; they compose their malicious designs, and gain their point. 2. They see their affairs and concerns in a good posture; They are happy, happy as the world can make them, though they deal treacherously, very treacherously, very treacherously. Events are chiefly meant, (as appears, v. 2.) who dispose in their good professions, and depart from their good beginnings and good promises, and in both they deal treacherously, very treacherously. It has been said, that men cannot expect to prosper who are unjust and dishonest in their dealings; but these they dealt treacherously, and yet they are happy.

1. He shows (v. 2.) both their prosperity, and their abuse of their prosperity. (1.) God had been very indulgent to them, and they were got beforehand in the world: "They are planted in a good land, a land flowing with milk and honey, and thou hast planted them; now, thou didst cast out the heathen to plant them," Ps. xlv. 2.—lxxxv. 8. Many a tree is planted, that yet never grows, or comes to any thing; but they have taken root, their prosperity seems to be confirmed and settled; they take root in the earth, for there they fix themselves, and thence they draw the sap of all their satisfaction. Yet all was not treacherous; they were, seamen, in these grow, yea, they bring forth fruit; their families are built up, they live high, and spend at a great rate; and all this was owing to the benignity of the Divine Providence, which smiled upon them, Ps. lxxiii. 7. (2.) Thus God had favored them, though they had dealt treacherously with him: Thou art near in their mouth, and far from their reins. This is a paradox, a speech phrase for the Spirit of prophecy, without which it is not safe to charge men with hypocrisy, whose appearances are plausible. Observe, [1.] Though they cared not for thinking of God, nor had any sincere affection to him, yet they could easily persuade themselves to speak of him frequently, and with an air of seriousness. Piety from the teeth outward is so difficult the one to be found, that men can ensnare those that are not Israelites indeed. [2.] Though they had on all occasions the name of God ready in their mouth, and accustomed themselves to those forms of speech that savored of piety, yet they could not persuade themselves to keep up the fear of God in their hearts. The form of godliness should engage us to keep up the power of it; but with them it did not so.

III. What comfort he had in appealing to God concerning his own integrity; (v. 5.) But thou, O Lord, knowest me. Probably, the wicked men he complains of were forward to reproach and censure him, (ch. xviii. 18.) in reference to which, this was his comfort, that God was a Witness of his integrity. God knew he was not such a one as they were, who had God near in their mouths, but far from their reins; nor such a one as they took to be, and represented him, a deceiver and false prophet; they that thus abused him did not know him; (1 Cor. ii. 8.) "But thou, O Lord, knowest me, though they think me not worth their notice." 1. Observe what the matter is, concerning which he appeals to God, Thou knowest my heart toward thee. Note, We are as our hearts are, and our hearts are good or bad, according as they are, or are not, toward God; and this is that therefore concerning which we should examine ourselves, that we may approve ourselves to God. 2. The cognizance to which he appeals; "Thou knowest me better than I know myself, not by hearsay or report, for thou hast seen me, not with a transient glance, but thou hast tried me;" God's knowledge of us is as clear and exact and certain, as if he had made the most strict scrutiny. Note, The God with whom we have to do, perfectly knows how our hearts are toward him. He knows both the guile of the hypocrite, and the sincerity of the upright.

IV. He prays that God would turn his hand against these wicked people, and not suffer them to prosper always, though by our hearts we are, and our hearts are good or bad, according as they are, or are not, toward God; and this is that therefore concerning which we should examine ourselves, that we may approve ourselves to God. 2. The cognizance to which he appeals; "Thou knowest me better than I know myself, not by hearsay or report, for thou hast seen me, not with a transient glance, but thou hast tried me;" God's knowledge of us is as clear and exact and certain, as if he had made the most strict scrutiny. Note, The God with whom we have to do, perfectly knows how our hearts are toward him. He knows both the guile of the hypocrite, and the sincerity of the upright.
I would be pulled out of their land, because they had brought ruin upon the land, and the longer they continued in it, the more they were planted, and the more the judgment was increased upon them; (v. 4.) "How long shall the land mourn (as it does under the judgments of God inflicted upon it) for the wickedness of them that dwell therein? Lord, shall they prosper themselves, that ruin all about them?" 1 See here what the judgment was, which the land was now groaning under; The herbs of every field wither, the grass is burnt up, and all the princes of the children of Israel, the priests and the kings, the nobles, and the great men, the princes of Jerusalem, and the people, whose wickedness was their great misfortune; now, why was it that this fruitful land was turned into barrenness, but for the wickedness of them that dwell therein? Ps. c.iii. 34. Therefore the prophet prays that these wicked people might die for their own sin, and that the whole nation might not suffer for it. 2 See here what was the language of their wickedness. They said, He shall not see therein, (as the prophet foretold, there should be shook, as great an earthquake, as any before,) The roof of hypocrisy; therefore God is far from their reins, though near in their mouth, because they say, How doth God know? Ps. lxviii. 11. Job xxiii. 13. He knows not what way we take, nor what it will end in. Or, Jeremiah shall not see our last end; whatever he pretends, when he asks us what shall be in the end hereof, he cannot himself foresee it. They thought they had him as a false prophet. Or, "Whatever it is, he shall not live to see it, for we will be the death of him," ch. xi. 21. Note, (1.) Men's setting their latter end at a great distance, or looking upon it as uncertain, is at the bottom of all their wickedness, Lam. i. 9. (2.) The whole creation groans under the burden of the sin of man, Rom. viii. 22. It is for this, that the earth mourns; (so it may be read,) cursed be the ground for thy sake.

V. He acquaints us with the answer God gave to those complaints of his, v. 5, 6. We often find the prophets admonished, whose business it was to admonish others, as Isa. viii. 11. Ministers have lessons to learn, as well as lessons to teach, and must themselves hear God's voice, and preach to themselves. Jeremiah complained much of the wicked dealing of them, and that notwithstanding, that, notwithstanding, they prospered. Now this seems to be an answer to that complaint. 1. It is allowed that he had cause to complain; (v. 6.) "Thy brethren, the priests of Anathoth, that are of the house of thy father, who ought to have protected thee, and pretended to do so, even they have dealt treacherously with thee, have been false to thee, have done thee mischief they could; they have called a multitude after thee, raised the mob upon thee, and incensed the common people against thee, to whom they have endeavoured, by all arts possible, to render thee despicable or odious, while at the same time they pretend that they had no design to persecute thee, or deprive thee of tliy property, out of their own consciences believe, though they speak fair words to thee. They seem to be thy friends, but are really thine enemies." Note, God's faithful servants must not think it at all strange, if their foes be those of their own house, (Matth. x. 36.) and if those they expect kindness from, prove such as they can put no confidence in, Mic. vii. 5. 2. Yet he is told that he carried the matter too far. (1.) He laid the unkindness of his countrymen too much to heart. They weared him, because it was in a land of peace wherein he trusted, v. 5. It was very grievous to him to be thus hated and abused by his own kindred. He was now raised upon high, his spirit was sunk and overwhelmed with it, so that he was in great agitation and distress about it. Nay, he was discouraged in his work by it, begun to be weary of prophesying, and to think of giving it up. (2.) He did not consider that this was but the beginning of his sorrow, and that he had sorcerer trials yet before him; and whereas he should endeavour by a constant bearing his cross a little, to get himself farther for greater, by his unseasonableness under this he did but unfit himself for what further lay before him: If thou hast run with the footmen, and they have wearied thee, and run thee quite out of breath, then how wilt thou contend with horses? If the injuries done him by the men of Anathoth made such an impression upon him, what would he do when the princes and chief priests at Jerusalem should set upon him with their power, as they did afterward, ch. xx. xxxiii. 2. If he was so soon tired in a land of peace, where there was little noise or peril, what would he do in the swellings of Jordan, when that overflows all its banks, and frets and burns out of its thickets? ch. xlix. 19. Note, (1.) While we are in this world, we must expect troubles and difficulties, and the greater the victors, the more the danger of being run down. (2.) God's usual method being to begin with lesser trials, it is our wisdom to expect greater than any we have yet met with. We may be called out to contend with horsemen, and the sons of Anak may perhaps be reserved for the last encounter. (3.) It highly concerns us to prepare for such trials, and to consider what we should do in them. How shall we preserve our integrity and peace, when we come to the swellings of Jordan? (4.) In order to our preparation for greater and further trials, we are concerned to approve ourselves well in present lesser trials, to keep up our spirits, keep hold of the promise, keep our way, with our eye upon the prize, so run that we may obtain it. Some good interpreters understand this as spoken to the people, who were very secure, and fearless of the threatened judgments. If they have been so humbled and impoverished by lesser calamities, wasted by the Assyrians; if the Ammonites and Moabites, who were their brethren, and with whom they were in league, if these proved false to them, (as undoubtedly they would,) then how would they be able to deal with such a powerful adversary as the Chaldeans? One would think, when they would bear up their head against that invasion which should come like the swellings of Jordan?

7. I have forsaken my house, I have left my heritage; I have given the dearly-beloved of my soul into the hand of her enemies. 8. My heritage is unto me as a lion in the forest; it crieth out against me: therefore have I hated it. 9. My heritage is unto me as a speckled bird; the birds round about are against her; come ye, assemble all the beasts of the field, come to devour. 10. Many pastors have destroyed my vineyard, they have trodden my portion under foot, they have made my pleasant portion a desolate wilderness. 11. They have made it desolate, and being desolate it mourned unto me; the whole land is made desolate, because no man layeth it to heart. 12. The spoilers are come upon all high places through the wilderness: for the sword of the Lord shall devour from the one end of the land even to the other end of the land: no flesh shall have peace. 13. They have sown wheat, but shall reap thorns; they have put themselves to pain, but shall not profit; and they shall be ashamed of your revenues, because of the fierce anger of the Lord.

The people of the Jews are here marked for ruin. 1. God is here brought in, falling out with them, and leaving them desolate; and they could never have been under them, had not God provoked toexecute. It is a terrible thing, as the Prophet here says, (v. 7.) I have forsaken my house, the temple, which had been his palace, they had polluted it, and so forced him out of it: I have left mine heritage, and will look after it no more; his people that he has taken such delight in, and care of, are now thrown out of his protection. They had been the dearly beloved of his soul, precious in his sight, and he had been; but now, was forsaken, and appointed to aggravate their sin, in returning him hatred for his love, and their misery, in throwing themselves out of the favour of one that had such a kindness for them, and to justify God in his dealings with them: he sought not occasion against them, but if they would have conducted themselves tolerably, he would have made the best of them, for they were the dear children of his soul; but they had conducted themselves so that they had provoked him to give them into the hand of their enemies, to leave them unguarded, an easy prey to those that bore them ill will. But what was the quarrel God had with a people that had been so long dear to him? Why, truly, they were degenerated. 1. They were become like beasts of prey, which nobody loves, but every hand avails and gets as far off from as possible: (v. 8.) Mine heritage is unto me a lion in the forest. Their sins cry to heaven for vengeance as loud as a lion roars. Nay, they cry out against God in the threatenings and slaughter which they breathe against his prophets that speak to them in his name: and what is said and done against them, God takes as said and done against himself. They blaspheme his name, oppose his authority, and bid defiance to his justice, and so cry out against him, as a lion in the forest. They that were the sheep of God's pasture, are become barbarous and ravenous, and as un Governable as lions in the forest, therefore I hated them: for what delight could the God of love take in a people that were now become as roaring lions and raging beasts, fit to be taken and shot at, as a vexation and torment to all about them? 2. They were become like birds of prey, and therefore are worthy a place in God's house, where neither beasts nor birds of prey were admitted to be offered in sacrifice; (v. 9.) Mine heritage is unto me as a bird with talons; (so some read it, and so the margin:) they are continually pulling and pecking at one another, they have by their unnatural contumies made their country a cock-pit. Or, as a speckled bird, dide, or crippled, or old and weak, with the bill of her prey; the shining of intense blood was Judas's measure-filling sin, and bastained their ruin, not only as it provoked God against them, but as it provoked their neighbours likewise; for those that have their hand against every man, shall have every man's hand against them; (Gen. xvi. 12.) and so it follows here, the birds round about which are against him. Some make her a speckled, bird, or motley bird, upon the account of their mixing the superstitious customs and usages of the heathen with divine institutions in the worship of God; they were fond of a party-coloured religion, and thought it made them fine, when really it made them odious. God's turtle-dove is no speckled bird. 11. The enemies are here brought in falling upon them, and laying them desolate. And some think it is upon this account that they are compared to a speckled bird, because fowls make a noise about a bird of an odd, unusual colour. God's people are among the birds of the field, the beast of the field, the fowl of heaven, but very much greater was the misery of Judah and Jerusalem, that the desolation brought upon them was by order from heaven. The birds and beasts are perhaps called to feast upon the bodies of the slain, as in St. John's vision, Rev. xix. 17.

The utter desolation of the land by the Chaldean army is here spoken of as a thing done; so sure, so near, the unwatching, unfeared desolation which God had appointed to be done, and yet which he had no pleasure in, any more than in the death of other sinners. 1. See with what a tender affection he speaks of this land, notwithstanding the sinfulness of it, in remembrance of his covenant, and the tribute of honour and glory he had formerly had from it; it is his vineyard, my portion, my pleasant possession. 10. Note, God has a kindness and concern for his church, though there be much amiss in it; and his correcting of it will every way consist with his com placency in it.

2. See with what a tender compassion he speaks of the desolations of this land; Many pastors, the Chaldean generals that made themselves masters of the country, and ate up with their armies as easily as the Arabian shepherds with their flocks eat up the fragments of a piece of ground that lies common; they have destroyed my vineyard, without any consideration had either of the value of it, or of my interest in it; they have with the greatest insolence and indignation trodden it under foot; and that which was a pleasant land they have made a desolate wilderness. The destruction was universal: The whole land was made desolate; (v. 11.) It is made so by the sword of war; the spoilers, the Chaldean soldiers, are come through the plain upon all high places; they have made themselves masters of all the natural fastnesses and artificial fortresses, v. 12. The sword devours from one end of the land to the other; all places he exposed, and the numerous army of the invaders disperse themselves into every corner of that fruitful country, so that no flesh shall have peace, none shall be exempt from the calamity, nor be able to enjoy any tranquillity. When all flesh have corrupted their way, no flesh shall have peace; those only have peace, that walk after the Spirit.

3. See whence all this misery comes. (1.) It comes from the displeasure of God. It is the sword of the Lord that devours from one end of the land to the other; All the Lord, who keep close to him, the sword of their protectors and deliverers is the sword of the Lord, witness that of Gideon; but when they have forsaken him, so that he is become their Enemy, and fights against them, then the sword of their invaders and destroyers is become the sword of the Lord; witness this of the Chaldeans. It is because of the fierce anger of the Lord, which kindled this fire among them, and made their enemies so furious. And who may stand before him, when he is angry? (2.) It is their sin that has made God their Enemy, particularly their incorrigible ones under former rebukes; (v. 11.) The land mourns unto me, the country that lies desolate does, as it were, pour out its complaint before God, and hems itself under its hand; but the inhabitants are so senseless and stupid, that none of them lays it to heart; they do not mourn to God, but are unaffected with his displeasure, while they get ground that their sin is not their own. Note, When God's hand is lifted up, and men will not see, it shall be laid on, and they shall be made to feel, Isa. xxxvi. 11.

4. See how unble they should be to fence against it; (v. 13.) "They have sown wheat, they have taken a deal of pains for their own security, and promised themselves great matters from their endeavours, but it is all in vain; they shall reap thorns, that which shall prove very grievous and vexatious to them; instead of helping themselves, they shall but make themselves more uneasy: they have put themselves to pain, both with their labour, and with their expectations, but it shall not profit; they shall not prevail to extricate themselves out of the difficulties into which they have plunged themselves. They shall be ashamed of your revenues, that they have devoted to their own purposes, and have made preparations for war, and particularly upon their ability to bear the charges of it." Money is the sinsews of war; they thought they had enough of that, but shall be ashamed of it; for their silver and gold shall not profit them in the day of the Lord's anger.

14. Thus saith the Lord against all mine evil neighbours, that touch the inheritance which I have caused my people Israel to inherit; Behold, I will pluck them out of their land, and pluck out the house of Judah from among them. 15. And it shall come to pass, after that I have plucked them out, I will return, and have compassion on them, and will bring them again, every man to his heritage, and every man to his land. 16. And it shall come to pass, if they will diligently learn the ways of my people, to swear by my name, The Lord liveth; (as they taught my people to swear by Baal;) then shall they be built in the midst of the land. 17. But if they will not obey, I will utterly pluck up and destroy that nation, saith the Lord.

The prophets sometimes, in God's name, delivered messages both of judgment and mercy to the nations that bordered on the land of Israel; but here is a message to them all in general, who had in their turns been one way or other injurious to God's people, had either oppressed them, or triumphed in their being oppressed. Observe,

1. What the quarrel was that God had with them. They were his evil neighbours, v. 14. evil neighbours to his church, and what they did against it he took as done against himself, and therefore called them his evil neighbours, that should have been neighbourly to Israel, but were quite otherwise. Note. It is often the lot of good people to live among bad neighbours, that are unkind and provoking to them; and it is bad indeed when they are all so. These evil neighbours were the Moabites, Ammonites, Sodomites, Egyptians, that had been evil neighbours to Israel in helping to devil them, and draw them from God; therefore God calls them his evil neighbours, and now they helped to make them desolate, and joined with the Chaldeans against them. It is just with God to make those the instruments of trouble to us, whom we have made instruments of sin. That which God lays to their charge, is, that they have meddled with the inheritance which I have caused my people Israel to inherit, they unjustly seized that which was none of their own: nor, they sacrilegiously turned that to their own use, which was designed to be the peculiar people. He says, Touch not my inheritance; it is at your peril if you do. Not only the persons, but the estates, of God's people are under his protection.

11. What course he would take with them. 1. He would break the power they had got over his people, and force them to make restitution; I will pluck out the house of Judah from among them, and cause it to be a great favour to God's people, who had either been taken captive by them, or, when they fled to them for shelter, had been detained and made prisoners; but it would be a great mortification to their enemies, who would be like a lion disappointed of his prey. The house of Judah either cannot, or will not, make any bold struggles toward the revenge of their injuries against God's people. The Lord will pluck them out, will by his Spirit compel them to come out, and by his power compel their taskmasters to let them go, as he plucked Israel out of Egypt. 2. He would bring upon them the same calamities that they had been instrumental to bring upon his people; I will pluck them out of their land. Judgment began at the house of God, which they did not love there. He had wasted the land of Israel, turned his hand against their evil neighbours, and was a scourge to them.

111. What mercy God had in store for such of them as would join themselves to him, and become his people, v. 15, 16. They had drawn in God's backsliding people to join them in the service of idols; and now they would lie drawn by a returning people to join with them in the service of the true and living God, they should not only have their enmity to the people of God forgiven them, but the distance which they had been kept at before should be removed, and they should be received to stand upon the same level with the Israel of God; this had its accomplishment in part, when, after the return of captivity, many of the people of the lands that had been evil neighbours to Israel, became Jews; and was to have its full accomplishment in the conversion of the Gentiles to the faith of Christ. Let not Israel, though injured by them, be incapable toward them, for God is not; After that I have plucked them out in justice for their sins, and injealou sy for the honour of Israel, I will return, will change my way, and have compassion on them. Though, being heathen, they can lay no claim to the mercies of the covenant, yet they shall have benefit by the compassions of the Creator, who will notwithstanding look upon them as the work of his hands. Note, God's controversies with his creatures, though they cannot be disputed, may be accommodated. Those who (as these here) have not only strangers, but enemies in their minds, by wicked works, may be reconciled. Observe here,

1. What were the terms on which God would show favour to them. It was always provided, that they will diligently learn the ways of my people. That is, in general, the ways that they walk in, when they believe, as my people, not the wicked ways into which they have turned aside, the ways which my people are directed to take. Note, (1.) There are good ways that are peculiarly the ways of God's people, which, however they may differ in the choice of their paths, they are all agreed to walk in. The ways of holiness and heavenly-mindedness, of love and peaceableness, the ways of prayer and sabbath-sanctification, and diligent attendance on instituted ordinances—these, and the like, are the ways of God's people. (2.) Those that would have their lot with God's people, and their last end and bliss, must learn these ways, and walk in them; must observe the rule they walk by, and conform to that rule, and the steps they take by that rule, and go forth by those footsteps. By an intimate conversation with God's people they must learn to do as they do. (3.) It is impossible to learn the ways of God's people as they should be learned, without a great deal of care and pains; we must diligently observe these ways, and diligently go ourselves in them; look diligently, (Heb. xii. 15.) and work diligently, Luke xiii. 24.

In particular, they must learn to give honour to God's name, by making all their solemn appeals to him. They must learn to say, The Lord liveth, to own him, and to adore him, and to abide by his judgment; as they taught my people to swear by Baal. It was bad enough that they did themselves swear by other names; they taught others, and worst of all that they taught God's own people, who had been better taught: and yet, if they will at length reform, they shall be accepted. Observe, [1.] We must not despair of the conversion of the worst; no, not of those who have been instrumental to pervert and debauch others; even they may be brought to repentance, and, if they be shall be accepted. [2.] Those whom we have been industrious to draw to that which is evil, when God opens their eyes and ears, we should be as industrious to follow in that which is good. It will be a holy revenge upon ourselves to become pupils to those in the way of duty, to whom we have been tutors in the way of sin. [3.] The conversion of the deceived may prove a happy occasion of the conversion of the deceivers. Thus they who fell together into the ditch, are sometimes plucked together out of it.

2. What should be the tokens and fruits of this favour, when they return to God, and God to them. (1.) They shall be restored to, and re-established in, their own land; (v. 15.) I bring them again, every man to his heritage. The same hand that plucked them up, shall plant them again. (2.) They shall have been delivered to the spiritual privileges of God's Israel; if they will be towrdily, and learn the ways of my people, will conform themselves to the rules, and confine themselves to the restraints, of my family, then shall they be built in the midst of my people. They shall not only be brought among them, to have a name and a place in the house of the Lord, where there was a court for Gentiles, but they shall be built among them, they shall unite with them, the former enmities shall be slain, they shall be both edified and settled among them. See Isa. lxi. 5.—7. Note, They that diligently learn the ways of God's people, shall enjoy the privileges and comforts of his people.

IV. What should become of those that were still weekly to their own evil ways, yea though of these evidences, but they are the Lord: (v. 17.) If they will not obey, if any of them continue to stand out, I will utterly pluck up and destroy that nation, that family, that particular person, saith the Lord. Those that will not be ruled by the grace of God, shall be ruined by the justice of God. And disobedient nations shall be destroyed, much more disobedient churches, from whom better things are expected.

CHAP. XIII.

The prophet is attempting to awaken this sordid and stubborn people to repentance, by the consideration of the judgments of God that were coming upon them.

1. Thus saith the Lord unto me, Go and get thee a linen girdle, and put it upon thy loins, and put it not in water. 2. So I got a girdle, according to the word of the Lord, and put it on my loins. 3. And the word of the Lord came unto me the second time, saying, Take the girdle that thou hast got, which is upon thy loins, and arise, go to Euphrates, and hide it there in a hole of the rock. 5. So I went, and hid it by Euphrates, as the Lord commanded me. 6. And it came to pass after many days, that the Lord said unto me, Arise, go to Euphrates, and take the girdle from thence, which I commanded thee to hide there.

7. Then I went to Euphrates, and digged, and took the girdle from the place where I had hid it; and, behold, the girdle was marred, it was profitable for nothing. 9. Then the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Thus saith the Lord, After this manner will I mar the pride of Judah, and the great pride of Jerusalem. 10. This evil people, which refuse to hear my words, which walk in the imagination of their heart, and walk after other gods to serve them, and to worship them, shall even be as this girdle, which is good for nothing. 11. For as the girdle cleaveth to the loins of a man, so have I caused to cleave unto me the whole house of Israel, and the whole house of Judah, saith the Lord; that they might be unto me for a people, and for a name, and for a praise, and for a glory: but they would not hear.

Here is,

1. A sign, the marrying of a girdle which the prophet had worn for some time, by hiding it in a hole of a rock, near the river Euphrates. It was usual with the prophets to teach by signs, that a stupid, unthinking people might be brought to consider and believe, and be affected with what was thus set before them. 1. He was to wear a linen girdle for some time, v. 1, 2. Some think he wore it under his clothes, because it was linen, and it is said to cleave to his loins, v. 11. It should rather seem to be worn upon his clothes, for it was worn for a name and a praise, and probably was a fine sash, such as officers wear, and such as are commonly worn at this day in the eastern nations. He must not put it in water, but wear it as it was, that it might be the stronger, and less likely to rot linen wastes almost as much as with washing as with wearing. Being wet, it was the more stiff, and less apt to ply; yet he must make a shift to wear it. Probably, it was very fine linen, which will wear long without washing. The prophet, like John Baptist, was none of those that were soft clothing.
and therefore it would be the more strange to see him with a linen girdle on, who probably used to wear a leathern one. 2. After he had worn this linen girdle for some time, he must go and hide it in a hole of a rock, (v. 4.) by the water's side, where, when the water was high, it would be wet, and when it fell, would grow dry again, and by that means would serve not, so as not to be taken at all. 3. After many days, he must look for it, and he should find it quite spoiled, gone all to rags, and good for nothing, v. 7. It has been of old a question among interpreters, whether this was really done, so as to be seen and observed by the people, or only in a dream or vision, so as to go no farther than the prophet's own mind. It seems hard to imagine, that the prophet should be sentenced to take two long journeys as to the river Euphrates, each of which would take him up some weeks time, when he could so ill be spared at home; for that reason, most incline to think the journey, at least, was only in vision, like that of Ezekiel, from the captivity in Chaldea to Jerusalem, (Ezek. viii. 3.) and from thence back to Chaldea, ch. xi. 24. The explanation of this sign is given only to the prophet himself, (v. 8.) not to the people, the sign not being public. But there being, it is probable, at that time, great conjunctions of travelling between Jersalem and Babylon, and some part of Euphrates being not so far off, but that it was the utmost wonder of the kind of promise, (Josh. i. 4.) I see no inconvenience in supposing the prophet to have made such journeys, and that they were very frequent, for he did as the Lord commanded him: and thus gave a signal proof of his obsequiousness to his God, to shame the stubbornness of a disobedient people; the toil of his journey would be very proper to signify both the pains they took to corrupt themselves with their idolatries, and the sad fatigue of their captivity; and Euphrates being the river of Babylon, to which Jews were the place of their bondage, was a particular circumstance in this sign.

II. The thing signified by this sign. The prophet was willing to be at any cost and pains to affect this people with the word of the Lord: ministers must spend, and be spent, for the good of souls. We have the explanation of this sign, v. 9.—11.

1. The people of Israel had been to God as this girdle, in two respects. (1.) He had given them the girdle of his own by sending them a king himself; As the girdle cleaves very close to the loins of a man, and surrounds it, so have I caused to cleave to me the houses of Israel and Judah. They were a people near to God; (Ps. exlviii. 14.) they were his own, a peculiar people to him, a kingdom of priests that had access to him above other nations. He caused them to cleave to him by the law he gave them, the prophets he sent among them, and the favours which in his providence he showed them. He required their stated attendance in the courts of his house, and the frequent ratification of their covenant with him by sacrifices: thus they were made so to cleave to him, that one would think they could never have parted. (2.) He had herein designed his own honour: when he took the time to him for a people, it was that they might be to him for a name, and for a praise, and for a glory; as a girdle is an ornament to a man, and particularly the curious girdle of the ephod was to the High Priest for glory and for beauty. Note, Those whom God takes to be to him for a people, he intends to be to him for a name, and for a praise. [1.] It is their duty to honour him by observing his institution, and inwardly therein his glory, and thus adorning their profession. [2.] It is their happiness that he reckons himself honoured in them and by them. He is pleased with them, and glories in his relation to them, while they behaved themselves as becomes his people. He was pleased to take it among the titles of his honour to be the God of Israel, even a God to Israel, 1 Chron. xxvii. 24. In vain do we pretend to be to God for a people, if we be not to him for a praise.

2. They had by their idolatries and other iniquities besieged themselves from him, thrust themselves into distant places in the land, buried themselves in the earth, and foreign earth too, mingled themselves among the nations, and were so spoiled and corrupted, that they were good for nothing; they could no more be to God, as they were designed, for a name and a praise, for they would not hear either their duty to do it, or their privilege to value it; They refused to hear the voice of the Lord, their prophets have been kept still cleaving close to him; They walked in the imagination of their heart, wherever their fancy led them; and denied themselves no gratification they had a mind to, particularly in their worship; They would not cleave to God, but walked after other gods, to serve them, and to worship them; they detested upon the gods of the heathen nations that lay towards Euphrates, so that they were quite spoiled for the service of their own God, and were as this girdle, this rotten girdle, a disgrace to their profession, and not an ornament. A thousand pities it was, that such a girdle should be so spoiled, that such a people should be so wretchedly degenerate.

3. God would by his judgments separate them from him, send them into captivity, detach all their mind in their own glory, and to their own excellency, so as it should be like a fine girdle gone to rags, a worthless, useless, despicable people. God will after this manner mar the pride of Judah, and the great pride of Jerusalem. He would strip them of all that which was the matter of their pride, of which they boasted, and in which they trusted; it should not only be sullied and stained, but quite destroyed, like this fine girdle. He speaks of the pride of Judah; the country people were proud of their holy land, their good land, but it is the great pride of Jerusalem, there the temple was, and the royal palace, and therefore those citizens were more proud than the inhabitants of other cities. God takes notice of the degrees of men's pride, the pride of some, and the great pride of others; and he will mar it, he will mar the pride of Judah. He will have a fall, for God resists the proud. He will either mar the pride that is in us, that is, mortify it by his grace, make us ashamed of it, and, like Hezekiah, humble us for the pride of our hearts, the great pride, and cure us of it, great as it is; (and this marring of the pride will be the making of the soul; happy for us, if by humiliating providences our hearts be humbled;) or else, he will mar the thing we are proud of. Parts, gifts, learning, power, external privileges if we are proud of these, it is just with God to blast them; even the temple, when it became Jerusalem's pride, was marred and laid in ashes. It is the honour of God to look upon every one that is proud, and abase him.

12. Therefore thou shalt speak unto them this word, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Every bottle shall be filled with wine; and they shall say unto thee, Do we not certainly know that every bottle shall be filled with wine? 13. Then shalt thou say unto them, Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will fill all the inhabitants of this land, even the kings that sit upon David's throne, and the priests, and the prophets, and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, with drunkenness. 14. And I will dash them one against another, even the fathers and the sons together, saith the Lord; I will not pity, nor spare, nor have mercy, but destroy them. 15. Hear ye, and give ear; be not proud: for the Lord hath spoken. 16. Give glory to the Lord your God, before he cause darkness, and before your feet stumble upon the dark mountains, and while ye look for light, he turn it into the shadow of death, and make it gross darkness. 17. But if ye will not hear it, my soul shall weep in secret places for your pride; and mine eyes shall weep sore, and run down with tears, because the Lord's flock is carried away captive. 18. Say unto the king and to the queen, Humble yourselves, sit down; for your principalities shall come down, even the crown of your glory. 19. The cities of the south shall be shut up, and none shall open them; Judah shall be carried away captive all of it, it shall be wholly carried captive. 20. Lift up your eyes, and behold them that come from the north; where is the flock that was given thee, thy beautiful flock? 21. What will thou say when he shall punish thee? (for thou hast taught them to be captains, and as chief over thee;) shall not sorrows take thee, as a woman in travail?

Here is,

1. A judgment threatened against this people, that would quite intoxicate them. This doom is pronounced against them in a figure, to make it the more taken notice of, and the more affecting. (v. 12.) Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Every bottle shall be filled with wine; those that by their sins have made themselves vessels of wrath fitted to destruction, shall be filled with the wrath of God, as a bottle is with wine, and as eyes with tears. Mercy expected for glory shall be filled with mercy and glory, so they shall be full of the fury of the Lord, (Isa. li. 20.) and they shall be brittle as bottles; and as old bottles into which new wine is put, they shall burst and be broken to pieces; (Matt. ix. 17.) or, They shall have their heads as full of wine as bottles are; for so it is explained, v. 13. They shall be filled with drunkenness; (as compare Isa. ii. 17.) It is probable that this was a common proverb among them, applied divers ways; but they, not being aware of the prophet's meaning in it, ridiculed him for it: Do we not certainly know that every bottle shall be filled with wine? What strange thing is there in that? Tell us something that we did not know before. Perhaps they were thus touchy with the prophet, because they thought him so bold as to be a reflection upon them for their drunkenness and probably, it was in part so intended. They love flagons of wine, Hos. iii. 1. They made their king sick with bottles of wine, Hos. vii. 5. Their watchmen were all for wine, Isa. liv. 15. They love their false prophets, that prophesied to them of wine, (Mic. ii. 11.) that bid them be merry; for that they should never want their bottle to make them so. "Well," says the prophet, "you shall have your bottles full of wine, but not such wine as you desire." They suspected that he had some mystical meaning in it, which prophesied no good concerning them, but evil; and he owns that so he had. What he meant was this,

1. That they should be as giddy as men in drink. A drunken man is fitly compared to a bottle or cask full of wine; for when the wine is in, the wit, and wisdom, and virtue, and all that is good for any thing, are out. Now God threatens, (v. 13.) that they shall all be filled with drunkenness; they shall be as full of confusion in their counsels, shall flatter in all their talk, and stagger in all their motions; they shall not know what they say or do, much less what they should say or do. They shall be sick of all their enjoyments, and throw them up as drunken men do, Job xx. 15. They shall fall into a slumber, and be utterly unable to help themselves, and, like men that have drunk away their reason, shall lie at the mercy, and subject themselves to the designs of all about them. And this shall be the condition not of some among them; (if any had been sober, they might have helped the rest;) but even the kings that sit upon the throne of David, that should have been like their father David, who was wise as an angel of God, shall be thus intoxicated. Their priests and prophets too, their false prophets, that pretended to guide them, were as indulgent of their lusts, and therefore were just as much deprived of their senses, as any other. Nay, and all the inhabitants both of the land and of Jerusalem were as far gone as they. Whom God will destroy, he infatuates.

2. That, being giddy, they should run upon one another. The cup of the wine of the Lord's fury shall throw them not only into a lethargy, so that they shall not be able to help themselves one another, but into a perfect frenzy, so that they shall do mischief to themselves and one another; (v. 14.) I will dash a man against his brother. Not only their drunken follies, but their drunken fray, shall help to ruin them. Drunken men are often quarrelsome, and upon that account they have wine and sorrow; (Prov. xxii. 29, 30.) so their sin is their punishment; for it was so here. God sent an angel of his spirit into families and neighbourhoods, (as Judg. ix. 23.) which made them jealous of, and spiteful towards, one another; so that the fathers and sons went together by the ears, and were ready to pull one another to pieces, which made them all an easy prey to the common enemy. This decree against them being gone forth, God says, I will not pity, (v. 15.) I will not spare, I will destroy them; for they will not pity, nor spare, nor have mercy, but destroy one another; see Hab. ii. 15, 16.

II. Here is good counsel given, which, by being taken, might prevent this desolation. It is, in short, to humble themselves under the mighty hand of God. If they will hearken and give ear, this is that which God has to say to them, Be not proud, v. 15. This was one of the sins for which God had a controversy with them; (v. 9.) let them mortify and forsake this sin, and God will let fall his controversy. Be not proud; when God speaks to you by his prophets, do not think yourselves too good to be taught; be not scornful, be not willful, let not your hearts rise against the word, nor slight the messengers that bring it you. When God is coming forth against us, he will not speak without an answer; (as he speaks,) be not secure when he threatens, be not impatient when he strikes, for pride is at the bottom of both. It is the great God that has spoken, whose authority is incontestable, whose power is irresistible; therefore bow to what he says, and be not proud, as you have been.

They must not be proud, for they must confess God and study how to do him honour; "Give glory to the Lord your God, and not to your idols, nor to other gods. Give him glory, by confessing your sins, owning yourselves guilty before him, and accepting the punishment of your iniquity, v. 16. Give him glory by a sincere repentance and reformation." Then, and not till then, we begin to live as we should, and to some good purpose, when we begin to give glory to the Lord our God; to make his honour your chief end, and to seek it accordingly. "Do this quickly, while your space to repent is continued to you; before he cause darkness, before he bring his judgments upon you, which you will see no way of escaping." Note, Darkness and calamity are the effects of sin, and receive glory to God. When those that by the fourth vial were scorched with heat, requisite not, to give glory to God, the next vial filled them with darkness, Rev. xvi. 9, 10. The aggravation of the darkness here threatened, is, (1.) That their attempts to escape shall hasten their ruin; Their foot shall stumble when they are making all the haste they can to the end, the devil and God shall shall, and be unable to get up again. Note, Those that think to outrun the judgment of God, will find their road impassable; let them make the best of their way, they can make nothing of it, the judgments that pursue them will overtake them; their way is dark and shifty, Ps. xxxvi. 6. And therefore, before it comes to that extremity, it is our wisdom to give glory to him, and so make our peace with him; to fly to his mercy, and then there will be no occasion to fly from his justice. (2.) That their hopes of a better state of things will be disappinted; While ye look for light, for comfort and relief, he will turn it into the shadow of death, which is very dismal and terrible, and make it gross darkness, like that of Egypt, when Pharaoh continued to flee from his God. Let us hate that, so that might be felt. The expectation of impenitent sinners perishes, when they die, and think to have it satisfied.
2. They must abuse themselves, and take shame to themselves; the prerogative of the king and queen will not exempt them from this; (v. 18.) "Say to the king and queen, that, great as they are, they must humble themselves by true repentance, and so give both glory to God and a good example to their subjects." Note, Those that are exalted above others in the world, must humble themselves before God, who is higher than the highest, and to whom kings and queens are accountable. They must humble themselves, and sit down; sit down, and consider what is coming; sit down in the dust, and lament; let God have his own way. God will otherwise take an effectual course to humble them.
"Your principalities shall come down," the honour and power on which you value yourselves, and in which you confide, even the crown of your glory, your goodly or glorious crown; when you are led away captives, where will your principality and all the badges of it be then?
Blessed be God, there is a crown of glory, which they shall inherit who do humble themselves, that shall never come down.
III. This counsel is enforced by some arguments, if they continue proud and unhumbled.
1. It will be the prophet's unspeakable grief; (v.
15.) "If you will not hear it, will not submit to the word, but continue refractory, not only mine eye, but my soul, shall see you in secret places." Note,
The obstinacy of people, in refusing to hear the word of God, will be a heart-breaking to their poor ministers, who know something of the terrors of the Lord and the worth of souls, and are so far from desiring, that they tremble at, the thoughts of the death of sinners. "His grief for it was undissembled, his soul wept;" and void of affectation, for he saw his masters in secret places, where no eye saw him but his who is all eye. He would mingle his tears not only with his public preaching, but with his private devotions. Now, thoughts of their case would make him melancholy, and he would become a perfect reclus. It would grieve him, (1.) To see their sins unrepent of: "My soul shall weep for your pride, your haughtiness, and stubbornness, and vain confidence." Note, The sins of others should be matter of sorrow to us. We must mourn for that which we cannot understand, and mourn the more for it, because we cannot mend it. (2.) To see their camutiny past redress and remedy; "Mine eyes shall shed tears, they shall flow not in number; so much not so much as in my relations, friends, and near neighbours, are in it." Note, We see, that the Lord's flock, his people, and the sheep of his pæ-ture, are carried away captive." That should always grieve us most, by which God's honour sufers, and the interest of his kingdom is weakened.
2. It will be their own inevitable ruin, v. 19. — 21.
(1.) The land shall be laid waste; The cities of the south shall be laid waste. The cities of Judah lay in the southern part of the land of Canaan. It shall be woe to the inhabitants, that shall be none to go in and out. Some understand it of the cities of Egypt, which was south from Judah; the places there, whence they expected succours, shall fail them,
and they shall find no access to them.
(2.) The inhabitants shall be carried away into a foreign country, there to live in slavery; Judah shall be carried away captive. Some were already carried off, which they hoped might serve to answer the prediction, and that the residue should still be left; no, it shall be carried away all of it; God will make a full end with them, it shall be wholly carried away. See it was in the last captivity under Zedekiah, because they rejected God's country. (3.) The enemy was now at hand, that should do this; (v. 20.) "Lift up your eyes, I see them upon their march, and you may, if you will, behold them that come from the north, from the land of the Chaldeans; see how fast they advance, how fierce they appear." Upon this, he addresses himself to the king and his court, and tells them, that the enemy were coming; and that this was in the last captivity under Zedekiah, because they rejected the God of their fathers. "What will you do now with the people which is committed to your charge, and which you ought to protect?
Where is the flock that was given thee, thy beautiful flock? Whither canst thou take them now for shelter? How can they escape these raving wolves? Magistrates must look upon themselves as shepherds, and those that are under their charge as their flocks, and they shall be their care of, and must give an account of; they must take delight in them as their beautiful flock, and consider what to do for their safety in times of public danger. Masters of families, who neglect their children, and suffer them to perish for want of a good education, and ministers who neglect their people, should think, that God hearing putting this question to them, Where is the flock that was given you? and, that beautiful flock? It is starved, it is left exposed to the beasts of prey. What account will they give of them when the Chief Shepherd shall appear?
(2.)"What have you to object against the equity of God's proceedings? What will thou say when he shall visit upon thee the former days? Then canst not thou say when he shall bring upon thee what they that flatter them selves say, with hopes of impunity, what will they say! What confusion will cover their faces, when they shall find themselves deceived, and that God punishes them!
(3.) "What thoughts will you now have of your own folly, in giving the Chaldeans such power over you, by seeking to them for assistance, and joining in league with them? Think it not, but believe that you are brought against yourselves to be captives, and to become the head." Hezekiah began, when he showed his trea-sures to the ambassadors of the king of Babylon, tempting him thereby to come and plague him.
Those who, having a God to trust in, court foreign fore am I in affliction? Why doth God contend with me? God takes notice of it, and is ready by his Spirit to impress the conviction, that, sin being discovered, it may be expiated of.

III. An answer to this inquiry. God will be justified when he speaks, and will oblige us to justify him; and therefore will set the sin of sinners in order before them. Do they ask, Wherefore come these things upon us? Let them know, it is all owing to themselves.

1. It is for the greatness of their iniquities, v. 22. God does not take advantage against them for small faults; no, the sins for which he now punishes them are of the first rate, very heinous in their own nature, and highly aggravated; for the multitude of those iniquity; so it may be read. Sins of every kind, and in such a manner that aggravates them, and think we are more in danger from the multitude of our lesser sins than from the heinousness of our greater sins; of both we may say, Who can understand his errors?

2. It is for their obstinacy in sin; their being so long accustomed to it, that there was little hope left of their being reclaimed from it, v. 2. Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots? then may ye also do good, that are accustomed to do evil. 24. Therefore will I scatter them as the stubble that passeth away by the wind of the wilderness. 25. This is thy lot, the portion of thy measures from me, saith the Lord; because thou hast forgotten me, and trusted in falsehood. 26. Therefore will I discover thy skirts upon thy face, that thy shame may appear. 27. I have seen thine adulteries, and thy neighings, the lewdness of thy whoredom, and thine abominations on the hills in the fields. Wo unto thee, O Jerusalem! wilt thou not be made clean? when shall it once be?

II. An iniquity made by the people into the cause of this ruin, v. 22. Thou wilt sin in thine heart, (and God knows how to give a proper answer to what men say in their hearts, though they do not speak it out; Jesus knowing their thoughts, replied to them, Matth. ix. 4.) Wherefore came these things upon me? The question is supposed to come into the heart. 1. Of a sinner quarrelling with God, and refusing to receive correction; they could not see that they had done any thing which might justly provoke God to be thus angry with them. They durst not speak it out; but in their hearts they thus charged God with unrighteousness, as if he had laid upon them more than was meet. They seek for the cause of their calamities, when, if they had not been wilfully blind, they might easily have seen it. Or, 2. Of a sinner returning to God. If there come but a penitent thought into the heart at any time, (saying, What have I done? ch. viii. 6. Wherefore am I in affliction? Why doth God contend with me?) God takes notice of it, and is ready by his Spirit to impress the conviction, that, sin being discovered, it may be expiated of.

1. It is for the greatness of their iniquities, v. 22. God does not take advantage against them for small faults; no, the sins for which he now punishes them are of the first rate, very heinous in their own nature, and highly aggravated; for the multitude of those iniquity; so it may be read. Sins of every kind, and in such a manner that aggravates them, and think we are more in danger from the multitude of our lesser sins than from the heinousness of our greater sins; of both we may say, Who can understand his errors?

2. It is for their obstinacy in sin; their being so long accustomed to it, that there was little hope left of their being reclaimed from it, v. 2. Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots? then may ye also do good, that are accustomed to do evil. 24. Therefore will I scatter them as the stubble that passeth away by the wind of the wilderness. 25. This is thy lot, the portion of thy measures from me, saith the Lord; because thou hast forgotten me, and trusted in falsehood. 26. Therefore will I discover thy skirts upon thy face, that thy shame may appear. 27. I have seen thine adulteries, and thy neighings, the lewdness of thy whoredom, and thine abominations on the hills in the fields. Wo unto thee, O Jerusalem! wilt thou not be made clean? when shall it once be?

II. An iniquity made by the people into the cause of this ruin, v. 22. Thou wilt sin in thine heart, (and God knows how to give a proper answer to what men say in their hearts, though they do not speak it out; Jesus knowing their thoughts, replied to them, Matth. ix. 4.) Wherefore came these things upon me? The question is supposed to come into the heart. 1. Of a sinner quarrelling with God, and refusing to receive correction; they could not see that they had done any thing which might justly provoke God to be thus angry with them. They durst not speak it out; but in their hearts they thus charged God with unrighteousness, as if he had laid upon them more than was meet. They seek for the cause of their calamities, when, if they had not been wilfully blind, they might easily have seen it. Or, 2. Of a sinner returning to God. If there come but a penitent thought into the heart at any time, (saying, What have I done? ch. viii. 6. Wherefore am I in affliction? Why doth God contend with me?) God takes notice of it, and is ready by his Spirit to impress the conviction, that, sin being discovered, it may be expiated of.

III. An answer to this inquiry. God will be justified when he speaks, and will oblige us to justify him; and therefore will set the sin of sinners in order before them. Do they ask, Wherefore come these things upon us? Let them know, it is all owing to themselves.

1. It is for the greatness of their iniquities, v. 22. God does not take advantage against them for small faults; no, the sins for which he now punishes them are of the first rate, very heinous in their own nature, and highly aggravated; for the multitude of those iniquity; so it may be read. Sins of every kind, and in such a manner that aggravates them, and think we are more in danger from the multitude of our lesser sins than from the heinousness of our greater sins; of both we may say, Who can understand his errors?

2. It is for their obstinacy in sin; their being so long accustomed to it, that there was little hope left of their being reclaimed from it, v. 2. Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots? then may ye also do good, that are accustomed to do evil. 24. Therefore will I scatter them as the stubble that passeth away by the wind of the wilderness. 25. This is thy lot, the portion of thy measures from me, saith the Lord; because thou hast forgotten me, and trusted in falsehood. 26. Therefore will I discover thy skirts upon thy face, that thy shame may appear. 27. I have seen thine adulteries, and thy neighings, the lewdness of thy whoredom, and thine abominations on the hills in the fields. Wo unto thee, O Jerusalem! wilt thou not be made clean? when shall it once be?
4. It is for their idolatry, their spiritual whoredom, that sin which is of all other most provoking to the jealous God. Therefore they are exposed to a shameful calamity, (v. 26.) because they have been guilty of a shameful iniquity, and yet are shameless in it; (v. 27.) I have seen thine adulteries, thine inordinate fancy for strange gods, which thou hast been impotent for the gratification of, but even weighed after it; even the lewdness of thy whoredoms, thine impudence and insatiableness in them, thy eager worshipping of idols on the hils in the fields, upon the high places. This is that for which a rod is denounced against thee, O Jerusalem; nay, and many woes.

V. 5. Here is an affectionate expostulation with them, to clear the whole matter. Though it was adjusted next to impossible for them to be brought to do good, (v. 23.) yet, while there is life there is hope, and therefore still be reasons with them, to bring them to repentance, v. 27. 1. He reasons with them concerning the thing itself; Will thou not be made clean? Note, It is the great concern of those who are polluted by sin, to be made clean in repentance and faith, and universal reformation. The reason why sinners are not made clean, is, because they will not be made clean; and herein act most unreasonably.

"Wilt thou not be made clean? Surely thou wilt at length be persuaded to wash thee, and make thee clean, and be so wise for thyself." 2. Concerning the time of it: When shall it once be? Note, It is an instance of the wonderful grace of God, that he desires the return of sinners, and the change and conversion of sinners, and thinks the time long till they are brought to it; but it is an instance of the wonderful folly of sinners, that they put that off from time to time, which is of such absolute necessity; that, if it be not done some time, they are certainly undone for ever. They do not say that they will never be cleansed, but not yet; they will defer it to a more convenient season, but cannot tell us when it shall once be.

CHAP. XIV.

This chapter was penned upon occasion of a great drought, for want of rain. This judgment began in the latter end of Josiah's reign, but, as it should seem, continued in the beginning of Jehoiakim, for longer judgments are seen to have been of greater coming, if not prevented by repentance. This calamity was mentioned several times before, but here, in this chapter, more fully. Here is, 1. A melancholy description of it, v. 1. 6. A people are found to be dying the death of a calf, and to turn in mercy to their land, v. 7. 9. 11. A severe threatening, that God would proceed in his controversy, because they proceeded in their iniquity, v. 10. 12. The prophet's accusing the people, by laying the blame on their false prophets; and the dung passed both on the deceivers and the deceived, v. 13. 16. V. Direction given to the prophet, instead of interceding for them, to lament them, yet he continued to intercede for them, v. 17. 22.

THE word of the Lord that came to Jeremiah concerning the drought. 2. Judah mourneth, and the gates thereof languish; they are black unto the ground; and the cry of Jerusalem is gone up. 3. And their nobles have sent their little ones to the waters: they came to the pits, and found no water; they returned with the vessels empty; they were ashamed and confounded, and covered their heads. 4. Because the ground is chapt, for there was no rain in the earth, the plougmen were ashamed, they covered their heads. 5. Yea, the hind also calved in the field, and forsook it, because there was no grass. 6. And the wild asses did stand in the high places, they staid upon the wind like dragons; their eyes did fail, because there was no grass. 7. O Lord, though our inequities testify against us, do thou it for thy name's sake: for our backslidings are many; we have sinned against thee. 8. O the hope of Israel, the Saviour thereof in time of trouble, why shouldst thou be as a stranger in the land, and as a wayfaring man that turnest aside to tarry for a night? 9. Why shouldst thou be as a man astonished, as a mighty man that cannot save? yet thou, O Lord, art in the midst of us, and we are called by thy name; leave us not.

The first verse is the title of the whole chapter: it does indeed all concern the drought, but much of it is the prophet's prayers concerning it; yet these are not unholy said to be. The word of the Lord which came to him concerning it; for every acceptable prayer is that which God farts into our hearts; nothing is our word that comes to him, but what is first his word that comes from him. In these verses, we have,

I. The language of nature lamenting the calamity. When the heavens were as brass, and distiled no dew, the earth was as iron, and produced no fruits; and then the grief and confusion were universal.

1. The people of the land were all in tears. Destroy their vines and their fig-trees, and ye cause all their mirth to cease, Hos. ii. 11. 12. All their joy fails with the joy of harvest, with that of their corn and wine, v. 2. Judah mourns, not for the sin, but for the trouble; for the withholding of the rain, not for the withdrawing of God's favour. The gates thereof, all that go in and out at their gates languish, look pale, and grow feeble, for want of the necessary supports of life, and for fear of the further fatal consequences of this judgment. The gates, through which supplies of corn formerly used to be brought into their cities, now look melancholy; when, instead of that, the inhabitants are departing through them to seek for bread in other countries. Even those that sit in the gates languish; they are black unto the ground, they are black as mourning persons, and sit on the ground; as the poor beggars at the gates are black in the face, for want of food, blacker than a coal, Lam. iv. 8. Famine is represented by a black horse, Rev. vi. 5. They fall to the ground through weakness, not being able to go along the streets. The cry of Jerusalem (that is, of the inhabitants) is gone up; for the city is served by the fields; or, of people in all parts of the land, do come to pray at Jerusalem to try met at Jerusalem to pray for rain; so some. But I feared it was rather the cry of their trouble, and the cry of their sin, than the cry of their prayer.

2. The great men of the land felt from this judgment; (v. 3.) The nobles sent their little ones to the water, perhaps their own children, having been forced to part with their servants, because they had not wherewithal to keep them; and being forced to train up their children, when they were little, to labour, especially in a case of necessity, as this was. We find Ahab and Obadiah, the king and the lord chamberlain of his household, in their own persons, seeking for water in such a time of distress as this was, 1 Kings xviii. 5. 6. Or, rather, their maidservants, their servants, and small officers; these they sent to seek for water, which there is no living without; but there was none to be found, they returned.
with their vessels empty, the springs were dried up, when there was no rain to feed them; and then they (their masters that sent them) were ashamed and confounded at their disappointment. They would not be ashamed of their sins, nor confounded at the sense of them, but were unhumbled under the reproaches of the word, thinking their wealth and dignity set them above repentance; but God took a contrary method; he did not despise their pride, but he was so proud of them, when they found that even on this side bell their nobility would not purchase them a draft of water to cool their tongue. Let our reading the account of this calamity make us thankful for the mercy of water, that we may not by the feeling of the calamity be taught to value it. What is most precious is most plentiful.

1. The beast of grace, from the language of grace, felt most sensibly and immediately from it; (v. 4.) The ploughmen were ashamed, for the ground was so parched and hard, that it would not admit the plough, even when it was so chatt and cleft, that it seemed as if it did not need the plough. They were ashamed to be idle, for there was nothing to be done, and therefore nothing to be expected. The sluggard, that will not labour for his victual, is cold blooded folly; but the diligent husbandman, that cannot plough by reason of heat, is ashamed of his own affliction. See what an immediate dependence husbandmen have upon the Divine Providence, which therefore they should always have an eye to, for they cannot plough or sow in hope, unless God water their furrows. Ps. Ixiv. 10.

2. Man's sin brings those judgments upon the earth, which make even the inferior creatures groan; and the prophet takes notice of this as a plea with God for mercy; Judah and Jerusalem have sinned, but the hinds and the wild asses, what have they done? The hinds are pleasant creatures, lovely and loving, and particularly tender of their young; and yet such is the extremity of the case, that, contrary to the instinct of their nature, they leave their young, even when they are newly calved, and most need them, to seek for grass elsewhere; and if they can find none, they abandon them, because not able to suckle them. It grieved not the hind so much, that she had no grass for herself; as that she had none for her young; which will shame those who spend that upon their lusts, which they should provide for their children. The proggy has brought forth her young, is said to have cast forth her sorrows, (Job xxxix. 3.) and yet she continues her cares; but, as it follows there, she soon sees the good effect of them, for her young ones in a little while grew up, and trouble her no more, (v. 4.) But here the great trouble of all is, that she has nothing for them. Nay, one would be sorry even for the wild ass (though they are creatures that have none any great affection for,) for though the barren land is made their dwelling at the best, (Job xxxix. 5, 6.) yet even that is now made too hot for them, so hot, that they cannot breathe in it, but they get to the highest places they can reach, where the air is coolest, and snuff up the wind like dragons, like those creatures which, being very hot, are not able for their condition (though they are creatures and so does their strength, because there is no grass to support them. The same ass, that serves her owner, is welcome to his crib, (Isa. i. 3.) and has her keeping for her labour; when the wild ass that swarmeth the crying of the driver, is forced to live upon air, and is well enough served for not serving: he that will not labour, let him not eat.

3. The people are not forward to pray, but the prophet here prays for them, and so exciteth them to pray for themselves, and puts words into their mouths, which they may make use of, in hopes to speed, v. 7.—9. In this prayer,

1. Sin is humbly confessed. When we come to pray for the preventing or removing of any judgment, we must always acknowledge that we deserve it, and a thousand times worse. We cannot hope by extenuating the crime to obtain a mitigation of the punishment; for the iniquities of the people are iniquities that testifie against us. Our sins are witnesses against us, and true penitents see them to be such. They testify, for they are plain and evident, we cannot deny the charge; they testify against us, for our conviction; which tends to our present shame and confusion, and our future condemnation. They disprove and overthrow all our pleas for ourselves; and not only accuse us, but answer against us. Our boast of our own excellencies, and trust to our own righteousness, our iniquities testify against us, and prove us perverse. If we quarrel with God as dealing unjustly or unkindly with us in afflicting us, our iniquities testify against us, that we do him wrong; for our backslidings are many, and our revolts are great, whereby we have sinned against thee; too numerous for us, for they are many, too numerous to be excused, for they are against thee.

2. Mercy is earnestly begged; "Though our iniquities testify against us, and against the granting of the favour which the necessity of our case calls for, yet do thou it." They do not say particularly what they would have done; but, as becomes penitents and beggars, they refer themselves to God; "Do with us as these; but every thing in thee." Not, do thou it in this way, or at this time, but, "Do thou it for thy name's sake; do that which will be most for the glory of thy name." Note, Our best pleas in prayer are those that are fetched from the glory of God's own name; "Lord, do it, that thy mercy may be magnified, thy promise fulfilled, and thine interest in the world kept up; we have nothing to plead in ourselves, but every thing in thee." There is another petition in this prayer, and it is a very modest one, (v. 9.) "Leave us not, withdraw not thy favour and presence." Note, We should dread and deprecate God's departure from us, more than the removal of any of all our creature-comforts. 3. Their relation to God, their interest in him, and their expectations from him grounded thereupon, are most pathetically pleaded with him, (v. 8, 9.)

1. They look upon him as one they have reason to think should deliver them when they are in distress, yea, though their iniquities testify against them; for in him mercy has often rejoiced against judgment. The prophet, like Moses of old, is willing to make the best he can of the case of his people, and therefore, though he must own that they have sinned many times before, (Exod. xxxii. 31.) yet he pleads, Thou art the Hope of Israel. God has encouraged his people to hope in him; in calling himself so often the God of Israel, the Rock of Israel, and the Holy One of Israel, he has made himself the Hope of Israel. He has given Israel his word to hope in, and caused them to hope in it; and there are those yet in Israel, that make God their hope in, and expect he will be their Saviour in time of trouble, and they look not for salvation in any other; "Thou hast many a time been such, in the time of their extremity." Note, Since God is his people's all-sufficient Saviour, they ought to hope in him, in their greatest straits; and since he is their only Saviour, they ought to place all hope in him; they plead likewise, we are the special tokens of thy presence with us, the temple, thine ark, thine cherubs, and we are called by thy name, the Israel of God; and therefore we have reason to hope thou wilt not leave us; we are three, save us. Thy name is called upon us, and because what evils we are under reflect dishonour upon thee, as if thou wert not able to relieve thee own." The prophet had often told the people, that their profession of religion would not protect them from the judgments of God; yet here he pleads it with God, as Moses, Exod. xxxii. 11. Even this may go far as to temporal punishments with a God of mercy. Valeat quantum valete foris.—Let the plea of the prophet for his flock be heard.

(23) It therefore grieves them to think that he does not appear for their deliverance; and though they do not charge it upon him as unrighteous, they humbly plead it with him why he should be gracious, for the glory of his own name. For otherwise he will seem, [1.] Unconcerned for his own people; What will the Egypians say? They say, their Hope and Saviour does not mind them, he is become as a stranger in the land, that does not at all interest himself in its interests; his temple, which he called his rest for ever, is no more so, but he is in it as a wayfaring man, that turns aside to tarry but for a night in an inn, which never inquires into the affairs of, nor is in any care about. Though God never is, yet he seems to be, as he was of a man, yet becoming a God, Christ slept when his disciples were in a storm. [2.] Incapable of giving them any relief; the enemies once said, Because the Lord was not able to bring his people to Canaan, he let them perish in the wilderness; (Numb. xiv. 16.) so now they will say, "Either his wisdom or his power fails him; either he is as a man astonished, who, though he has the features of a man, yet being astonished, is quite at a loss and at his wit's end; or, as a mighty man, who is overpowered by such as are more mighty, and therefore cannot save, though mighty, yet a man, and therefore having his power limited." Either of these would be a most insufferable reproach to the divine perfections; and therefore, why is the God that we are sure is in the midst of us become as a stranger? Why does the almighty God seem as if he were no more than a mighty man; who, when he is astonished, though he would, yet cannot save? It becomes us in prayer to show ourselves concerned more for God's glory than for our own comfort: Lord, what wilt thou do unto thy great name?

10. Thus saith the Lord unto this people, Thus have they loved to wander, they have not refrained their feet; therefore the Lord doth not accept them: he will now remember their iniquity, and visit their sins. 11. Then said the Lord unto me, Pray not for this people for their good. 12. When they fast, I will not hear their cry; and when they offer burnt-offering and an oblation, I will not accept them; but I will consume them by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence. 13. Then said I, Ah, Lord God! behold, the prophets say unto them, Ye shall not see the sword, neither shall ye have famine; but I will give you assured peace in this place. 14. Then the Lord said unto me, The prophets prophesy lies in my name; I sent them not, neither have I commanded them, neither spake unto them: they prophesy unto you a false vision and divination, and a thing of nought, and the deceit of their heart. 15. Therefore thus saith the Lord concerning the prophets that prophesy in my name, and I sent them not, yet they say, Sword and famine shall not be in this land; By sword and famine shall those prophets be consumed. 16. And the people to whom they prophesy shall be cast out in the streets of Jerusalem, because of the famine and the sword; and they shall have none to bury them, them, their wives, nor their sons, nor their daughters; for I will pour their wickedness upon them.

The dispute between God and his prophet, in this chapter, seems to be like that between the owner and the dresser of the vineyard concerning the barren fig-tree, Luke xiii. 7. The justice of the owner condemns it to be cut down, the clemency of the dresser intercedes for a reprieve; Jeremiah had been earnest with God, in prayer, to return in mercy to this people. Now here,

1. God overrules the plea which he had offered in their favour, and shows him that it would not hold. In answer to it, he says, Concerning this people, 10. He does not say, Concerning my people, for he owns them, because they had broken covenant with him. It is true, they were called by his name, and had the tokens of his presence among them; but they had sinned, and provoked God to withdraw. This the prophet had owned, and hoped to obtain mercy for them, notwithstanding this, through intercession and sacrifice; therefore God here tells him,

4. That they were not duly qualified for a pardon. The prophet had owned that their backslidings were many; and though they were so, yet there was hopes for them if they returned; but they show no disposition at all to return; they have wandered, and they have loved to wander; their backslidings have been their choice and their pleasure, which should have been their shame and pain, and therefore they will be their ruin. They cannot expect God should take up his rest with them, when they take such delight in going astray from him after their idols. It is not through necessity or inadvertency that they wander, but they love it. Sinners are wanderers from God; their wanderings forfeit God's favour, but it is their loving to wander, that quite cuts them off from it. They were told what their wanderings would come to, what the Lord would have by them in the land, and all to ruin; and yet they have not taken warning, and refrained their feet. So far were they from returning to their God, that neither his prophets nor his judgments could prevail with them to give themselves the least check in a sinful pursuit.

This is that for which God is now reckoning with them; when he denies them rain from heaven, he is remembering their iniquity and visiting their sins; that is it for which their fruitful land is thus turned into barrenness.

2. That they had no reason to expect that the God they had rejected should accept them; no, not though they betook themselves to fasting and prayer, and put themselves to the expense of burnt-offering and an oblation, which was designed to be an expression of faith in a Mediator; though their prayers be thus enforced, and offered up in those vehicles that used to be acceptable, yet, because they do not proceed from humble, penitent, and renewed hearts, but still they love to wander, therefore I will not hear their cry, be it ever so loud; nor will I accept them, either their persons, or their performances. It had been long since declared, The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord; and those only are accepted that do well, Gen. iv. 7. Since then Jeremiah had been in vain to the prophet’s prayers for them, because they had not regarded his preaching to them. This is the meaning of that repeated prohibition given to the prophet, (v. 11.) Pray not thou for this people for their good, as before, ch. xi. 14.—vii. 16. This did not forbid him thus to express his good will to them, (Moses continued to intercede for Israel, after God had declared that he would not go with them, Exod. xxxiii. 11.) but it forbade them to expect any good effect from it, as long as they turned away their ear from hearing the law. Thus was the doom of the inimical ratified, as that of Saul’s rejection was by that word to Samuel, When wilt thou cease to mourn for Saul? It therefore follows, (v. 12.) I will consume them, not only by this famine, but by the further sore judgments of sword and pestilence; for God has thrust them in his quiver, and those that will not be convinced and reclaimed by one, shall be consumed by another.

II. The prophet offers another plea, in excuse for the people’s obstinacy, and it is but an excuse, but he was willing to say whatever their case would bear; it is this, That the prophets, who pretended and conspired in false prophecies, have now flattered them with assurances of peace, that they went on in their sinful way, v. 13. He speaks of it with lamentation, ‘Ah, Lord God, the poor people seem willing to take notice of what comes in thy name, and there are those who in thy name tell them that they shall see the sword or famine; and they say it as from thee, with all the gravity and solemnity of prophets. I will continue upon this place, and will give you assured peace here, peace of truth; I tell them the contrary, but I am one against many, and every one is apt to credit that which makes for them; therefore, Lord, pity and spare them, for their leaders cause them to err.’ This excuse had been of some weight if they had not had warning given them before, of false prophets, and ruin by which to discover them; so that it was not so much deceived, it was entirely their own fault. But this teaches us, as far as we can with truth, to make the best of bad, and judge as charitably of others as their case will bear.

III. God not only overlooks this, but condemns both the blind leaders and the blind followers to fall together into the ditch. 1. God disowns the flatterers; (v. 14.) They prophesy in my name. They had no commission from God to prophesy at all; I neither sent them, nor commanded them, nor spake unto them. They never were employed to go on any errand at all from God, he never made himself known to them, much less by them to the people; never any word of the Lord came to them, no call, no warrant, no instruction, much less did he send them on this errand to rock them asleep in security. No men may flatter themselves, and Satan may flatter them, but God never does. It is a false vision, and a thing of naught. Note, What is false and groundless is vain and worthless. The vision that is not true, be it ever so pleasing, is good for nothing; it is the deceit of their heart, a spider’s web spun out of their own bowels, in it they will shelter themselves, but it will be swept away in a moment, and prove a great cheat. They that oppose their own thoughts to God’s word, (God indeed says so, but they think otherwise,) walk in the deceit of their heart, and it will be their ruin.

2. He passes sentence upon the flatterers; (v. 15.) As for the prophets who put this abuse upon the people, by telling them they shall have peace, and this affiant upon God by telling them so in God’s name; let them know that they shall have no peace themselves. They shall fall first by those very judgments which they have flattered others with the hope of an exemption from. They undertook to warrant people, that sword and famine should not be in the land; but it shall soon appear how little their warrants are good for, when they themselves shall be cut off by sword and famine. How should they secure others, or foretell peace to them, when they cannot secure themselves, nor have such a foresight of their own calamities, as to get out of the way of them. Note, The sorest punishments await those who promise sinners impunity in their sinful ways.

3. He lays the flattered under the same doom, v. 16. The people to whom they prophesy lies, and who willingly suffer themselves to be thus imposed upon, they shall die by sword and famine. Note, The unbelief of the deceived, with all the falsehood of the deceivers, shall not make the divine threatenings of no effect; sword and famine will come, whatever they say to the contrary; and those will be least safe that are most secure. Impenitent sinners will not escape the damnation of hell, by saying that they can never believe there is such a thing; but will feel what they will not fear. It is threatened that this people shall not only fall by sword and famine, but that they shall be hanged up in chains, as monuments of that divine justice which they set at defiance; their bodies shall be cast out, even in the streets of Jerusalem, which of all places, one would think, should be kept clear from such nuisances: there they shall lie unburied; their nearest relations, who should do them that last office of love, being either so poor that they cannot afford it, or were weakened with hunger that they are not able to attend it, or so overwhelmed with grief, that they have no heart to it, or so destitute of natural affection, that they will not pay them so much respect. Thus will God pour their woe to the woe upon them, the punishment of their wickedness; the full vials of God’s wrath shall be poured on them, to which they have made themselves obnoxious. Note, When sinners are overwhelmed with trouble, they must in it see their own wickedness poured upon them. This refers to the wickedness both of the false prophets and of the people; the blind lead the blind, and both fall together into the ditch, where they will be miserable comforters one to another.

17. Therefore thou shalt say this word unto them, Let mine eyes run down with tears night and day, and let them not cease; for the virgin daughter of my people is broken with a great breach, with a very grievous blow. 18. If I go forth into the field, behold the slain with the sword! and if I enter into the city, behold them that are sick with famine! yea, both; the prophet and the priest go about into a land that they know not. 19. Hast thou utterly rejected Judah? hath thy soul loathed Zion? why hast thou smitten us, and there is no healing for us? we looked for peace, and there is no good; and for the time of healing, and behold trouble! 20
We acknowledge, O Lord, our wickedness, and the iniquity of our fathers; for we have sinned against thee. 21. Do not abhor us, for thy name’s sake; do not disgrace the throne of thy glory: remember, break not thy covenant with us. 22. Are there any among the vanities of the Gentiles that can cause rain? or can the heavens give showers? Art not thou, O Lord our God: therefore we will wait upon thee; for thou hast made all these things.

The present deplorable state of Judah and Jerusalem is here made the matter of the prophet’s lamentation, (v. 17, 18,) and the occasion of his prayer and intercession for them; (v. 19,) and I am willing to hope that the latter, as well as the former, was by divine direction, and that these words, (v. 17,) Thus shalt thou say unto them, (or concerning them, or in their hearing,) refer to the intercession, as well as to the lamentation, and then it amounts to a revocation of the directions given to the prophet not to pray for them, v. 11. However, it is plain, by the prayers we find in these verses, that the prophet did not understand it as a prohibition, but only as a discouragement, like that, I John v. 16. I do not say he shall pray for that.

Here, 1. The prophet speaks as if he already saw the miseries attending the descent which the Chaldeans made upon them; The virgin daughter of my people, that is as dear to me as a daughter to her father, is broken with a great breach, with a very grievous breach, v. 17. And though they have now returned, he has yet sustained for, (v. 18,) in the field multitudes lie dead that were slain by the sword, and in the city multitudes lie dying for want of food. Doleful spectacles! The prophets and the priests, the false prophets that flattered them with their lies, and the wicked priests that persecuted the true prophets, these are now expelled their country, and go abroad either as priests and captives, whithersoever their conquerors lead them, or as fugitives and vagabonds, wherever they can find shelter and relief. in a land that they know not. Some understand it of the true prophets, Ezekiel and Daniel, that were carried to Babylon with the rest. The prophet’s eyes must run down with tears day and night, in prospect of this, that the people might be convinced, not only that this and all those miseries were sent upon them, but that he was far from desiring it, and would as gladly have brought them messages of peace as their false prophets, if he might have had warrant from heaven to do it. Note. Because God, though he inflicts death on sinners, yet delights not in it, it becomes his ministers, though in his name they proclaim the death of sinners, yet sadly to lament it.

II. He stands up in the intercession for them; for who knows but God will yet return and repent? While there is life, there is hope, and room for prayer. And though there were many among them, who neither prayed themselves, nor valued the prophet’s prayers, yet there were some who were better affected, would join with him in his devotions, and set the seal of their Amen to them. 1. He humbly expostulates with God concerning the present deplorableness of their case, v. 19. If it be very sad, for, (1.) Their expectations from their God have been disappointed; a very hard case: we did not expect Judah to be his, but now, it seems, he has utterly rejected it, and cast it off; will not own any relation to it, or concern for it. However, they thought Zion was the beloved of his soul, was his rest for ever; but now he’s soul even loathes Zion, loathes even the services there performed, for the sake of the sins there committed. (2.) Then no marvel that all their hopes of peace were blasted, and that they were smitten, and their wounds were multiplied, but there was no healing for them; they looked for peace, because after a storm there usually comes a calm, and fair weather after a long fit of wet, but there was no good, things went still worse and worse. They looked for a healing time, but could not gain so much as a breathing time; Behold, trouble at the door, by which we hoped peace would enter. And is it so then? How then indeed rejected Judah? Justly then mightest thou. Has thy soul loathed Zion? We deserve it should. But wilt thou not at length in wrath remember mercy?

2. He makes a penitent confession of sin, speaking that language which they all should have spoken, though but few did; (v. 20,) We acknowledge our iniquity, the abounding wickedness of our land, and the iniquity of our fathers, which we have imitated, and therefore justly smart for. We know, we acknowledge, that we have sinned against thee, and therefore thou art just in all that is brought upon us; but, because we confess our sins, we hope to find thee faithful and just in forgiving our sins.

3. He deprecates God’s displeasure, and by faith appeals to his mercy; the abounding wickedness of our land, and the iniquity of our fathers, which we have imitated, and therefore justly smart for. We know, we acknowledge, that we have sinned against thee, and therefore thou art just in all that is brought upon us; but, because we confess our sins, we hope to find thee faithful and just in forgiving our sins.

{v. 21.} Do not abhor us, though thou wilt afflict us, do not abhor us; though thy hand be turned against us, let not thy heart be so, nor let thy mind be alienated from us. They own God might justly abhor them, they had rendered themselves odious in his eyes; yet when they pray, Do not abhor us, they mean, Receive us into favour again. Let not thy soul loathe Zion, v. 19. Let not our incontinence be our misfortune. There is another sense of this verse, which is, If we have made God’s honor, the honor of his scriptures, by which he has made himself known; his word, which he has magnified above all his name; Do not abhor us for thy name’s sake, that name of thine by which we are called, and which we call upon. The honor of his sanctuary is pleaded; Lord, do not abhor us, for that will disgrace the throne of thy glory. (The temple, which is called a glorious high throne from the beginning, ch. xvii. 12,) let that not which has been the joy of the whole earth, be made a hissing and an astonishment; we desire to have disgrace put upon us, but let it not be so as to reflect upon thyself; let not the desolations of the temple give occasion to the heathen to reproach him that used to be worshipped there, as if he could not, or would not, eschew, or permit it, seeing the avenging designs had been too hard for him. Note, Good men lay the credit of religion, and its profession in the world, nearer their hearts than any private interest or concern of their own; and those are powerful pleads in prayer, which are fetched from thence, and great supports to faith. We may be sure that God will not disgrace the throne of his glory, on earth; nor will he give occasion to the heathen, and especially to his own providence, without some making it shine forth, and more brightly than before, by another. God will be no loser in his honour at the long run. (2.) To the promise of God of this he is humbly bold to death; and such as are for the sword, to the sword; and such as are for the famine, to the famine; and such as are for the captivity, to the captivity. 3. And I will appoint over them four kinds, saith the Lord; the sword to slay, and the dogs to tear, and the fowls of the heaven, and the beasts of the earth, to devour and destroy. 4. And I will cause them to be removed into all kingdoms of the earth, because of Manasseh the son of Hezekiah king of Judah, for that which he did in Jerusalem. 5. For who shall have pity upon thee, O Jerusalem? or who shall bemoan thee? or who shall go aside to ask how thou doest? 6. Thou hast forsaken me, saith the Lord, thou art gone backward; therefore will I stretch out my hand against thee, and destroy thee; I am weary with repenting. 7. And I will fan them with a fan in the gates of the land; I will bereave them of children I will destroy my people, since they return not from their ways. 8. Their widows are increased to me above the sand of the seas: I have brought upon them, against the mother of the young men, a spoiler at noonday; I have caused him to fall upon it suddenly, and tears upon the city. 9. She that hath borne seven languished; she hath given up the ghost; her sun is gone down while it was yet day; she hath been ashamed and confounded: and the residue of them will I deliver to the sword before their enemies, saith the Lord.

We scarcely find any where more pathetic expressions of divine wrath against a provoking people than we have here in these verses. The prophet had prayed earnestly for them, and found some among them to join with him; and yet not so much as a reprove was given, or the least mitigation of the judgment; but this answer is given to the prophet's prayers, that the decree was gone forth, irrecoverable, and would shortly be executed. Observe here,

I. What the sin was, upon which this severe sentence was grounded. 1. It is in remembrance of a former iniquity; it is because of Manasseh, for that which he did in Jerusalem. v. 4. What that was, we are told, and that it was for that Jerusalem's destruction, v. 5. But the sins of Manasseh were the sins of his idolatry, and the innocent blood which he shed, which the Lord would not pardon. He is called the son of Hezekiah, because his relation to so good a father was a great aggravation of his sin, so far was it from being an excuse of it. The greatest part of a generation was worn off since Manasseh's time, yet his sin is brought into the account; as in Jerusalem. He does not say God's justice, but his righteousness; and God's righteousness is the innocent blood shed on the earth, to show how heavy the guilt of blood will weigh and lie somewhere, sooner or later, and that reproves are not pardons. It is in consideration of their present impenitence. See how their sin is described; (v. 6.) Thou hast forsaken me, my services and thy duty to me; thou art gone backward into the ways of contradiction, art become the reverse of what thou

Chap. XV.

When we left the prophet, in the close of the foregoing chapter, so pathetically pouring out his prayers before God, we had reason to hope that in this chapter we should find God reconciled to the land, and the prophet brought into a quiet, composed frame; but, to our great surprise, we are here informed, notwithstanding the prophet's prayers, God here ratifies the sentence given against the people, and abandons them to ruin, turning a deaf ear to all the intercessions made for them, v. 1. 2. The prophet himself, notwithstanding the satisfaction he had in communion with God, still finds himself uneasy and out of temper. 1. He complains to God of his continual struggle with his persecutors, v. 10. 2. God assures him that he shall be taken under special protection, though there was a general desolation coming upon the land, v. 11. 14. 3. He appeals to God concerning his sincerity in the discharge of his duties as a prophet, and thinks it may be well for others to be strengthened thereby; he should not have more of the comfort of it, v. 15. 18. 4. Fresh security is given him, that upon condition he continue faithful, God will continue his care of him and his favour to him, v. 19. 21. And thus, at length, we hope he regained the possession of his own soul.

Then said the Lord unto me, though Moses and Samuel stood before me, yet my mind could not be toward this people; cast them out of my sight, and let them go forth. 2. And it shall come to pass, if they say unto thee, Whither shall we go forth? then thou shalt tell them, Thus saith the Lord; Such as are for death, shouldst have been, and of what God by this law would have led thee forward to." See how the impiety is described; (v. 7.) They return not from their ways, the ways of their own hearts, into the ways of God's commandments again. There is mercy for those who have turned aside; if they will return; but what favour can they expect, that persist in their apostasy?

II. What the sentence is. It is such as denotes no lesser than an utter ruin.

1. God himself abandons and abhors them; My mind cannot be toward them. How can it be thought that the holy God should have any remaining complacency in those that have such roused antipathy to him? It is not in a passion, but with a just and holy indignation, that he says, "Cast them out of my sight, as that which is in the highest degree odious and offensive; and let them go forth, for I will be troubled with them no more."

2. He will not admit of any intercession to be made for them; (v. 1.) "Though Moses and Samuel stood before me, by prayer or sacrifice to reconcile me to them, yet I could not be prevailed with to admit them into favour." Moses and Samuel were two as great favourites of Heaven, as ever were the blessings of this earth, and were particularly famed for the success of their mediation between God and his offending people; many a time they succeeded in saving Israel, if Moses had not stood before him in the breach; and to Samuel's prayers they owed their lives; (1 Sam. xii. 19.) yet even their intercessions should not prevail, no, not though they were now in a state of perfection, much less Jeremiah's, who was now subject to like passions as others. The putting of this as a case, Though they should stand before me, supposes that they do not, and that their intercessions are rejected. But it points to intercessors for saints on earth. It is the prerogative of the Word, to be the only Mediator in the other world, whatever Moses and Samuel and others were in this.

3. He condemns them all to one destroying judgment or other. When God casts them out of his presence, whither shall they go forth? v. 2. Certainly no whither, to be safe or easy, but to be met by one judgment, while they are pursued by another, till they find themselves surrounded with mischief on all hands, so that they cannot escape; Such as are for death, to death. By death here is meant the pestilence, (Rev. vi. 8.) for it is death without visible means. Such as are for death, to death, or for the sword, to the sword; every man shall fall upon his brother, and every one upon his neighbour, as God has appointed; the law that appoints the malefactor's death, determines what death he shall die. Or, He that is by his own choice for this judgment, let him take it, or for that, let him take it, but by the one or the other they shall all fall, and none shall escape. It is a choice like that which David was put to, and was thereby put into a great strait, 2 Sam. xxiv. 14. Can we wish any other way but that God has appointed? And the sorest judgment of all, being both a complication and continuation of miseries. That of the sword is again repeated, (v. 3.) and is made the first of another four frightful set of destroyers, which God will appoint over them, as officers over the soldiers to do what they please with them. As those that escape the sword shall be cut off by pestilence, (v. 1.) so those that escape the sword, the sword shall be cut off by divine vengeance, which pursues sinners on the other side death; there shall be dogs to tear in the city, and fowls of the air and wild beasts in the field to devour. And if there be any that think to extrate justice, they shall be made the most public monuments of it; They shall be removed into all kingdoms of the earth, (v. 4.) like Cain, who, that he might be made a spectacle of horror to all, became a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth.

4. They shall fall without being relieved. Who can do any thing to help them? When (1.) God, when they turned away, (vi. 1.) appears against them; I will stretch out my hand against them, which denotes deliberate, determined stroke, which will reach far, and wound deep, v. 6. I am weary of repenting, it is a strange expression; they had behaved so provokingly, especially by their treacherous professions of repentance, that they had not even infinite patience itself to the stretch. God is often: with patience, when it is ready to break forth against them; he now will manifest no more pity. Miserable is the case of those who have sinned so long against God's mercy, that at length they have sinned it away. (2.) Their own country expels them, and is ready to slue them out, as it had done the Canaanites that were before them; for so it was threatened, (Lev. xviii. 28.) I will slue them with a fan in the gates of the land, in their own gates, through which they shall be scattered; or, into the gates of the earth, into the cities of all the nations about them. (3.) Their own children, that should assist them when they speak with the enemy in the gate, shall be cut off from them; (v. 7.) I will bereave them of children; so that they shall have little hopes that the next generation will preserve the remembrance of their name. And when and while the inhabitants are slain, the land will soon be desolate. This melancholy article is enlarged upon, v. 8, 9. where we have,

[1.] The destroyer brought upon them. When God has bloody work to do, he will find out bloody instruments to do it with. Nebuchadnezzar is here called a spoiler at noon-day; not a thief in the night that is afraid of being discovered, but one that without fear shall break through and destroy all the fences of rights and properties, and this in the face of the sun, and in defiance of its light; I have brought against the mother, a young man, a spoiler; (so some read it;) for Nebuchadnezzar, when he first invaded Judah, was but a young man, in the first year of his reign. We read it, I have brought upon them, even against the mother of the young man, a spoiler, against Jerusalem, a mother-city, that had a very numerous family of young men; or, that invasion was in a particular manner terrible to those mothers who had many sons fit for war, who must now jeopard their lives in the high places of the field: and, being an unequal match for the enemy, would be like to fall there, to the inexpressible grief of their poor mothers, who had nursed them up with a deal of tenderness. The same God that brought the spoiler upon them, caused him to fall upon it, upon the spoil delivered to him, suddenly and by surprise; and then terrors came upon the city. The original is very abrupt, the city and terrors. Of the city, what a consternation will it then be in? O the terrors that shall then seize it! which is enough to be told in the case of the terrors that seemed at a distance from each other. I will cause suddenly to fall upon her (upon Jerusalem) a watcher and terrors; so Mr. Gataker reads it, for the word is used for a watcher, (Dan. iv. 13, 23.) and the Chaldean soldiers were called watchers, ch. iv. 16.

[2.] The destruction made by this destroyer. A dreadful slaughter is here described. First, The wives are deprived of their husbands; Their widows are increased above the sand of the seas, so numerous are they now grown. It was promised that the men of Israel (for those only were numbered) should be as the sand of the sea for multitude; but now they shall be cut off, and their widows shall be so. But observe, God says, They are increased to me. Though the husbands were cut off by the sword of his jour-tice, their poor widows were gathered in the arms of his mercy, who has taken it among the titles of his honour to be the God of the widows. Widows are said to be taken into the number, the number of those whom God has pitied, provided for, and comforted. Secondly, The parents are deprived of their children; She that has borne seven sons, whom she expected to be the support and joy of her age, now languishes, when she has seen them all cut off by the sword in one day, who had been many years her burden and care. She that had many children is waxen feeble, 1 Sam. ii. 5. See what uncertain comforts children are; and let us therefore rejoice in them, as though we rejoiced not. When the children are slain, the mother gives up the ghost, for her life was bound up in theirs: Her sun is gone down while it was yet day: she is bereaved of all her comforts then when she thought herself in the midst of the enjoyment of them. She is now ashamed and confounded: to think how proud she had been of her sons, how fond of them, and how much she promised herself from them. Some understand by this languishing mother, Jerusalem lamenting the death of her inhabitants as passionately as ever poor mother bewailed her children. Many are cut off already, and the residue of them, who have yet escaped, and, as was hoped, were reserved to be the seed of another generation, even them will I deliver to the sword before their enemies, (as the condemned malefactor is delivered to the sheriff, to be executed, with the Lord, the Judge of heaven and earth, who, we are sure, herein judges right, though the judgment seem severe. 5. They shall fall without being pitied; (v. 5.) “For who shall have pity on thee, O Jerusalem? When thy God has cast thee out of his sight, and his compassions fail, and are shut up from thee, neither thine enemies nor thy friends shall have any compassion on thee. They shall have no sympathy with thee, they shall not bemoan thee, or be sorry for thee, they shall have no concern for thee, shall not go a step out of their way to ask how thou dost.” For, (1.) Their friends, who were expected to do these friendly offices, were all involved with them in the calamities, and had enough to do to bemoan themselves. (2.) It was plain to all their neighbours, that they had brought all this upon themselves by their obstinacy in sin, and that they might have easily prevented it by repentance and reformation, which they were often in vain called to; and therefore who can pity them? O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself. Those will perish for ever unpitied, that might have been saved upon such easy terms, and would not. (3.) God will thus complete their misery, he will set his face against them, as he did Job’s, at a distance from them; and his hand, his righteous hand, is to be acknowledged in all the unkindnesses of our friends, as well as in all the injuries done us by our foes.

14. And I will make thee to pass with thine enemies into a land which thou knowest not; for a fire is kindled in mine anger, which shall burn upon you.

Jeremiah is now returned from his public work, and is retired into his closet; what passed between him and his God there, we have an account of in these and the following verses, which he published afterward, to affect the people with the weight and importance of his messages to them. Here is,

1. The complaint which the prophet makes to God of the many discouragements he met with in his work, v. 10.

1. He met with a great deal of contradiction and opposition. He was a man of strife and contention to the whole land; (so it might be read, rather than to the whole earth, for his business lay only in that land;) both city and country quarrelled with him, and set themselves against him, and said and did all they could to thwart him. He was a peaceable man, gave no provocation to, nor was apt to resent the provocations given him, and yet a man of strife, not a man striving, but a man striving with; he was for peace, but, when he spoke, they were for war. And, whatever they pretended, that which was the real cause of their quarrels with him, was, his faithfulness to God and to their souls. He showed them how they were all suffered to be led into want, to be kept in a way to prevent that ruin, which was the greatest kindness he could do them; and yet this was it for which they were incensed against him, and looked upon him as their enemy. Even the Prince of peace himself was thus a man of strife, a sign spoken against, continually enduring the contradiction of sinners against himself. And the gospel of peace brings division, even to form itself to the Lord’s account, as it did to Jeremiahs. Matt. x. 34, 55. Luke xii. 49, 51. Now this made Jeremiah very uneasy, even to a degree of impatience; he cried out, Wo is me, my mother, that thou hast borne me. As if it were his mother’s fault, that she bore him, and he had better never have been born, than be born to such an uncomfortable life; nay, he is angry that she had borne him a man of strife; as if he had been fatally determined to this by the stings of conscience that were ever present at his birth.

If he had any meaning of this kind, doubtless it was very much his infirmity; we rather hope it was intended for no more than a pathetic lamentation of his own case. Note, (1.) Even those who are most quiet and peaceable, if they serve God faithfully, are often made men of strife. We can but follow peace; we have the making only of one side of the bargain, and that we can but, as much as in us lies, live peaceably. (2.) It is very uncomfortable to those who are of a peaceable disposition, to live among those who are continually picking quarrels with them. (3.) Yet, if we cannot live so peaceably as we desire with our neighbours, we must not be so disturbed at it as thereby to lose the repose of our own minds, and put ourselves upon the fret.

10. Wo is me, my mother, that thou hast borne me a man of strife, and a man of contention to the whole earth! I have neither lent on usury, nor men have lent to me on usury: yet every one of them doth curse me. 11. The Lord said, Verily it shall be well with thy remnant, verily I will cause the enemy to entertain thee well in the time of evil, and in the time of affliction. 12. Shall iron break the northern iron and the steel? 13. Thy substance and thy treasures will I give to the spoil without price, and that for all thy sins, even in all thy borders.
cution, else he could not have lost himself thus: not not the least; I have neither lent money, nor borrowed money; have been neither creditor nor debtor;
for so general is the signification of the words here.
(1.) It is implied here, that those who deal much in the business of this world, are often involved in it by strife and contention; mean and tuum—mine and thine are the great makebeats, lenders and borrowers, sue and are sued, and great dealers often get a deal of ill-will. (2.) It was an instance of Jeremiah's great prudence, and it is written for our learning, that, being called to be a prophet, he entangled not himself in the affairs of this life, but kept clear from them, that he might employ himself
the more closely to the business of his profession, and might not give the least shadow of suspicion that he aimed at secular advantages in it, nor any occasion to his neighbours to contend with him. He put out no money, for he was no usurer, nor indeed had he any money to lend; he took in no money, for he was no purchaser, no merchant, no spec-thrift. He was perfectly dead to this world, and the things of it: a very little served to keep him, and we find (ch. xvi. 2.) that he had neither wife nor children to keep. And yet, (3.) Though he behaved thus discreetly, and so as one would have thought should have gained him universal esteem, yet he lay under a general odium, through the iniquity of the times. Blessed be God, had as things are, he had saved himself for the sake of his people, those with whom virtue has its praise; yet let those who behave most prudently, think it strange if they have not the respect and esteem they deserve. Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you.

II. The answer which God gave to this complaint.
Though there was in it a mixture of passion and infuriation, yet it was not so much an imperious command, as a religious answer, because it was for his sake that the prophet suffered reproach. In this answer, 1. God assures him that he should weather the storm, and be made easy at last, v. 11. Though his neighbours quarrelled with him for what he did in the discharge of his office, yet God accepted him, and promised to stand by him. It is in the original expressed in the form of an oath; If I take not care of thee, let me never be counted faithful; verily, it shall go well with thy remnant, with the remainder of thy life; for so the word signifies. The residue of thy days shall be more comfortable to thee than those hitherto have been. Thy end shall be good; so the Chaldee reads it. Note, It is a great and sufficient support to the people of God, that, how troublesome soever their way may be, it shall be well with them in their latter end, Ps. xxxvii. 37.
They have still a remnant, a residue, something behind, and left in reserve, which will be sufficient to balance all their grievances, and the hope of it may serve to make them easy. It should seem that Jeremiah, besides the vexation that his people gave him, was uneasy at the apprehension he had of shallafter, which was not unforseen by him; and though he mentioned not this, God replied to his thought of it, as to Moses, Exed.
v. 19. Jeremiah thought, "If my friends are thus abusive to me, what will my enemies be?" And God had thought fit to awaken him in an expectation of this kind, ch. xii. 5. But here he quits his mind with this promise, "Verily, I will cause the enemy to treat thee well, and the time of evil, all about thee shall be laid waste." Note, God has all men's hearts in his hand, and can turn those to favour his servants, whom they were most afraid of.
And the prophets of the Lord have often met with farther and better treatment among open enemies than among those that call themselves his people.
When we see trouble coming, and it looks very threatening, let us not despair, but hope in God, because it may prove better than we expect. This promise was accomplished, when Nebuchadnezzar, having taken the city, charged the captain of the guard to be kind to Jeremian, and let him have every thing he had a mind to, ch. xxxix. 11, 12.
The following words, Shall iron break the northern iron, and the steel, or brass? (v. 12.) being compared with the promise of God made to Jeremiah, (ch. i. 18.) that he would make him an iron pillar and broken walls, seem intended for his comfort.
They were continually clashing with him, and wor-rownd and hard as iron; but Jeremiah, being armed with power and courage from on high, is an northern iron, which is naturally stronger, and as steel, which is hardened by art; and therefore they shall not prevail against him; compare this with Ezek.
i. 6.—iii. 8, 9. He might the better bear their quarrelling with him, when he was sure of the victory.

2. God assures him that his enemies and persecutors should be lost in the storm, should be ruined at last, and that therein the word of God in his mouth should be accomplished, and he proved a true prophet, v. 13, 14. God here turns his speech from the prophet to the people. To them also, v.
12. may be applied; Shall iron break the northern iron, and the steel? Shall their courage and strength, and the meat hardly and vigorous of their eff ft s, be able to contend with evil? No, nor so much as in combat with the army of the Chaldeans, which are as subtle, as invincible, as the northern iron, and the steel. Let them therefore hear their doom; Thy substance and thy treasure will I give to the spoil, and that without price; the spoilers shall have it greatly, it shall be to them a cheap and easy prey.
Observe, The prophet was poor, he neither lent nor borrowed; yet God assured him of an eternal stance nor treasure, and therefore the enemy will treat him well, Cantabit vacuus coram latrovi rior—The traveller that has no property about him, will congratulate himself, when accosted by a robber. But the people that had great estates in money and land, would be slain for what they had, or the enemy, finding they had much, would use them hardly, to make them confess more. And it is their own iniquity that herein corrects them: It is for all thy sins, even in all thy borders. All parts of the country, even those which lay most remote, had contributed to the national guilt, and all shall now be brought to account. Let not one tribe lay the blame upon another, but each take shame to itself:
It is for all thy sins in all thy borders. Thus shall they stay at home till they see their estates ruin-ded, and then they shall be carried into captivity, to spread the sad remains of a miserable life in slavery:
"I will make thee to pass with thine enemies, who shall lead thee in triumph, into a land thou knowest not, and therefore cannot expect to find no comfort in it." All this is the fruit of God's wrath: "It is a fire kindled in mine anger, which shall burn upon them, and, if not extinguished in time, will burn eternally."

15. O Lord, thou knowest: remember me, and visit me, and revenge me of my persecutors; take me not away in thy long-suffering: know that for thy sake I have suffered rebuke. 16. Thy words were found, and I did eat them; and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of my heart: for I am called by thy name, O Lord God of hosts. 17. I sat not in the assembly of the mockers, nor rejoiced; I sat alone, because of thy hand: for thou hast filled me with indignation: 18. Why is my pain perpetual, and my wound incurable, which refuseth to be healed? wilt thou be altogether unto me as a liar, and as waters that fail? 19. Therefore thus saith the Lord, If thou return, then will I bring thee again, and thou shalt stand before me: and if thou take forth the precious from the vile, thou shalt be as my mouth: let them return unto thee; but return not thou unto them. 20. And I will make thee unto this people a fenced brazen wall; and they shall fight against thee, but they shall not prevail against thee: for I am with thee to save thee, and to deliver thee, saith the Lord. 21. And I will deliver thee out of the hand of the wicked, and I will redeem thee out of the hand of the terrible.

Here, as before, we have,

1. The prophet's humble address to God, containing a representation both of his integrity, and of the hardships he underwent notwithstanding. It is matter of comfort to us, that whatever ails us, we have a God to go to, before whom we may spread our case, and to whose omniscience we may appeal, as the prophet here, "O Lord, thou knowest; thou knowest my sincerity, which men are resolved they will not acknowledge; thou knowest my distress, which men disdain to take notice of." Observe here,

1. What it is that the prophet prays for, v. 15. (1) That God would consider his case, and be mindful of him; "O Lord, remember me; think upon me for good." (2) That God would communicate strength and comfort to him; Visit me; not only remember me, but let me know that thou rememberest me, that thou art nigh unto me." (3) That he would appear for him against those that did him wrong: "Revenge me of my persecutors, or, rather, "Vindicate me from my persecutors; give judgment against them, and let that judgment be executed so far as is necessary for my vindication, and to compel them to acknowledge that they have done me wrong. Further than this, a good man will not desire that God would revenge him; but that the power of God be shown upon them to convict them, and that (whatever blasphevers say to the contrary) Jeremiah is a righteous man, and the God whom he serves is a righteous God. (4) That he would yet spare him and continue him in the hand of the living: "Take me not away by a sudden stroke, but in thy long-suffering lengthen out my days." The best men will own themselves so obnoxious to God's wrath, that they are indebted to his patience for the continuance of their lives. Or, "While thou exercisest long-suffering toward my persecutors, let them prevail to take me away." Though in compassion he complained of his birth, (v. 10.) yet he desires here that his death might not be hastened; for life is sweet to nature; the life of a useful man is so to grace. I pray not that thou shouldst take them away, but that thou shouldst frustrate the plot of them.

2. What it is that he pleads with God for, mercy and relief against his enemies, persecutors, and slanderers.

(1) That God's honour was interested in his case; Know, and make it known, that for thy sake I have suffered rebuke. Those that lay themselves open to reproach by their own fault and folly, have great reason to bear it patiently, but no reason to expect that God should appear for them. But if it is doing well that we suffer ill, and for righteousness' sake that we have all manner of evil said against us, we may hope that God will vindicate our honour with his own. To the same purport, (v. 16.) I am called by thy name, O Lord of hosts; it was for that reason that his enemies hated him, and therefore for that reason he premised himself that God would own him, and stand by him.

(2) That the word of God, which he was employed to preach to others, he had experienced the power and preciety of in his own person. He had the graces of the Spirit to qualify him for the divine favour, as well as his gifts. We find some rejected of God, who yet could say, Lord, we have professed in thy name. But Jeremiah could say more, (v. 16.) "Thy words were found, found by me," (he searched the scriptures, diligently studied the word, and found that in it which was reviving to him. If not so, we shall find." (and find it,)" the words which he was to deliver to others, were laid ready to his hand, were brought to him by inspiration; "and I did not only taste them, but eat them, received them entirely, conversed with them intimately; they were welcome to me, as food to one that is hungry; I entertained them, digested them, turned them in succus et sanguinem—into blood and spirits, as myself also the minister of those truths which I was to deliver to others." The prophet was bid to eat the roll, Ezek. ii. 8. Rev. x. 9. I did eat it, that is, as it follows, it was to me the joy and rejoicing of my heart, nothing could be more agreeable. Understand it, [1.] Of the message itself which he was to deliver. Though he was to foretell the ruin of his country, which was then denounced to him, and in the name of which he spoke (v. 18.) not but have a deep share, yet all natural affections were swallowed up in zeal for God's glory, and even these messages of wrath, being divine messages, were a satisfaction to him. He also rejoiced, at first, in hope that the people would take warning, and prevent the judgment. Or, [2.] Of the commission he received to deliver this message. Though the work he was called to was not attended with any secular advantages, but, on the contrary, exposed him to contempt and persecution, yet, because it put him in a way to serve God, and do good, he took pleasure in it, was glad to be so employed, and it was his meat and drink to do the will of him that sent him, John iv. 34. Or, [3.] Of the promise God gave him, that he would assist and comfort him in it; (v. 20.) he was satisfied in that, and depended upon it, and therefore hoped it should not fail him.

(3) That he had applied himself to the discharge of his office with all possible gravity, seriousness, and self-denial, though he had had of late but little satisfaction in it, v. 17. [1.] It was his comfort, that he had given up himself wholly to the business of his office, and had done nothing in his heart, but what he comprehended to be the duty of his cries to divert himself from it, or divest himself for it. He kept no unsuitable company, denied himself the use even of lawful recreations, abstained from every thing that looked like levity, lest thereby he should make himself mean and less regarded. He sat alone, spent a deal of time in his closet, because of the hand of the Lord that was strong upon him to carry on his office, and to make the object of the prophet was, (v. 10.) but to the pleasures of it too, as here. But, [2.] It is his complaint, that he had had but little pleasure in his work. It was at first the rejoicing of his heart, but of late it had made him melancholy; so that he had no heart to sit in the mourning of those that make merry; he cared not for company, for indeed no company cared for him; he sat alone, fretting at the people's obstinacy, and the little success of his labours among them; this filled him with a holy indignation. Note, It is the folly and infirmity of some good people, that they lose much of the pleasantness of their religion by the freedom and awkwardness of their manner of thinking and acting, and thereby make themselves the more hateful and contemptible in the sight of those that have not their degree of grace.

(4.) He throws himself upon God's pity and promise in a very passionate expostulation; (v. 18.) "Why is my pain perpetual, and nothing done to case it? Why are the wounds which my enemies are continually giving me both to my soul and to my credit, not healed; and my wound is not obliterated?" [2.] He must closely adhere to his instructions, and not in the least vary from them; let them return to thee, but return not thou to them. That is, he must do the utmost he can, in his preaching, to bring people up to the mind of God; he must tell them they must, at their peril, comply with that. They that had flown off from him, that did not like the terms upon which God's favour was offered to them, "Let them return to thee, and, upon second thoughts, let them return with thee;" but do not thou return to them, do not compliment them, or comply with them, or think to make the matter easier to them than the word of God has made it. Men's hearts and lives must come up to God's law, and comply with that, for God's law will never come down to them, or comply with them.

21. What he here promises them, upon the performance of these conditions. If he approve himself well,

(1.) God will quiet his mind, and pacify the present tumult of his spirits; If thou return, I will bring thee again; will restore thy soul, as Ps. xxiii. 3. The best and strongest saints, if at any time they have gone aside out of the right way, and are determined to return, need the grace of God to bring them again.

(2.) God will employ him in his service as a prophet, whose work, even in these bad times, had comfort and honour enough in it to be its own wages; Thou shalt stand before me, to receive instructions from me, as a servant from his master; and thou shalt be as my mouth to deliver my messages; and to the people, as an ambassador is the mouth of the prince that sends him. Note, Faithful ministers are God's mouth to us; they are so to look upon themselves, and to speak God's mind, and as becomes the oracles of God; and we are so to look upon them, and to hear God speaking to us by them. Observe, If thou keep close to thine instructions, thou shalt be as my mouth, not otherwise; so far and no further, God will stand by ministers, as they go by the written word; Thou shalt be as my mouth, what thou savest shall be made good, as if I myself had said it." See Isa. xliv. 26. 1 Sam. iii. 19.

(3.) He shall have strength and courage to face the difficulties he meets with in his work, and his spirit shall not fail again, as now it does; (v. 20.) I will make thee unto these people a fenced broken wall; that is, I will set up a firm and strong barrier against the wicked, and against the broad way, against men, and against falling upon, but cannot slike. Return not thou to them, by any sinful compliances, and then trust thy God to arm thee by his grace with holy resolutions. Be not cowardly, and God will make thee daring. He had complained that he was made a man of strife; "Expect (says God) that they will fight against thee; they will still continue their opposition; but I will make thee so strong, and will make the enemies of all sorts to fear thee, that thou mayest live off from thy work, or to cut thee off from the hand of the living."

(4.) He shall have God for his Protector and mighty Deliverer; I am with thee, to save thee. These that have God with them, have a Saviour with them, who has wisdom and strength enough to deal with the most formidable enemy; and these are very sharp and strong arrows, as much as the wicked, (v. 21.) either from trouble or through it. They may perhaps fall into the hand of the wicked, and they may appear terrible to them, but God will rescue them out of their hands. They shall not be able to kill them, till they have finished their testimony; they shall not prevent their happiness. God will so deliver them as to preserve them to his heavenly kingdom, and preserve those that are of exacting nature, "There are many things that appear very frightful, that yet do not prove at all hurtful to a good man."
CHAP. XVI.

In this chapter, I. The greatness of the calamity that was coming upon the Jewish nation, is illustrated by prohibitions given to the prophet, neither to set up a house of his own, v. 1-4, nor to go into the house of mourning, v. 5-7. II. God is justified in these severe proceedings against them, by an account of their great wickedness, v. 10, 13. III. An intimation is given of mercy in reserve, v. 14, 15. IV. Some hopes are given that the punishment of the sin should prove the reformation of the sinners, and that they should return to God at length in a way of duty, and so be qualified for his returns to them in a way of favour, v. 16-21.

1. The word of the Lord came also unto me, saying, Thou shalt not take thee a wife, neither shalt thou have sons nor daughters in this place. For thus saith the Lord concerning the sons, and concerning the daughters that are born in this place, and concerning their mothers that bare them, and concerning their fathers that begat them in this land; 4. They shall die of grievous deaths: they shall not be lamented, neither shall they be buried; but they shall be as dung upon the face of the earth: and they shall be consumed by the sword, and by famine; and their carcases shall be meat for the fowls of heaven, and for the beasts of the earth. 5. For thus saith the Lord, Enter not into the house of mourning, neither go to lament nor beweep them, for I have taken away my peace from this people, saith the Lord, even loving-kindness and mercies. 6. Both the great and the small shall die in this land: they shall not be buried, neither shall mourn for them, nor cut themselves, nor make themselves bald for them: 7. Neither shall men bear themselves for them in mourning, to comfort them for the dead; neither shall men give them the cup of consolation to drink for their father or for their mother: 8. Thou shalt not also go into the house of feasting, to sit with them to eat and to drink. 9. For thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will cause to cease out of this place in your eyes, and in your days, the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride.

The prophet is here for a sign to the people; they would not regard what he said, let it be tried whether they will regard what he does. In general, he must conduct himself so, in every thing, as became one that expected to see his country in ruins very soon. This he would do as a mark of his self-denying and self-denying, and therefore for his sons, marriage, mourning for the dead, and mirth. Note, Those that would convince others of, and affect them with, the word of God, must make it appear, even in the most self-denying instances, that they do believe it themselves, and are affected with it.

If we would persuade others out of their security, and persuade them to sit loose to the world, we must ourselves be mortified to present things, and show that we expect with them, a more immediate and a more decisive difference of affairs in a short time. 1. Jeremiah must not marry, nor think of having a family, and being a housekeeper; (v. 2.) Thou shalt not take thee a wife, nor think of having sons and daughters in this place, in the land of Judah, not in Jerusalem, not in Anathoth. The Jews, more than any people, valued themselves on their early marriages, and their numerous offspring. But Jeremiah must not only refrain from marrying, but from the due exercises of that of virginity, as in diminution of it; by this it appears that it was advisable and seasonable only in calamitous times, and times of present distress, 1 Cor. vii. 26. That it is so, is a part of the calamity. There may be a time when it will be said, Blessed is the womb that bare not, Luke xxiii. 29. When we see such times at hand, it is wisdom for all, especially for prophets, to keep themselves as much as may be from being entangled with the affairs of this life, and encumbered with that which, the dearer it is to them, the more it will be the matter of their care, and fear, and grief, at such a time. The reason here given, is, because the fathers and mothers, the sons and the daughters, shall die of grievous deaths, Hos. iii. 4. As for those that have wives and children, (v. 3.) They shall not be cut off in such a clear manner, that they cannot flee from those deaths. A single man may make his escape, and shift for his own safety, when he that has a wife and children, can neither find means to convey them with him, nor find in his heart to go and leave them behind him. (4.) They will be in continual terror for fear of those deaths; and the more they have to lose by them, the greater terror and consternation be, when death appears everywhere in its triumphant power and might. (5.) The death of every child, and the aggravating circumstances of it, will be a new death to the parent. Better have no children than have them brought forth, and bred up, for the murderer, (Hos. ix. 13, 14.) than see them live and die in misery. Death is grievous, but some deaths are more grievous than others, both to them that die and to their relations that survive them; hence we read of so great a death, 2 Cor. i. 10. Two things are used a little to palliate and alleviate the terror of death, as to this world, and to sugar the bitter pill; bewailing the dead, and burying them; but to make these deaths grievous indeed, these are denied; They shall not be lamented, but shall be consigned over to the beasts of the earth for food of them, nay, they shall not be buried, but left exposed, as if they were designed to be monuments of justice. They shall be as dung upon the face of the earth, not only despicable, but detestable, as if they were good for nothing but to measure the ground; being consumed, some by the sword, and some by famine, their carcases shall be meat for the fowls of heaven, and for the beasts of the earth.

2. Jeremiah must not go to the house of mourning, upon occasion of the death of any of his neighbors or relations; (v. 5.) Enter thou not into the house of mourning. It was usual to condescend with those whose relations were dead, to bemoan them, to cut themselves, and make themselves bald, which, it seems, was commonly practised, as an expression of mourning, though forbidden by the law, Deut. xiv. 1. Nay, sometimes, in a passion of grief, they tore themselves for them; (v. 6, 7.) partly in honor of the deceased, thus signifying that they thought... there was a great loss of them; and partly, in compassion to the surviving relations, to whom the burden then would be made lighter, by their having sharers with them in their grief. They used to mourne with them, and so to comfort them for the dead, as Job's friends with him, and the Jews with Martha and Mary: and it was a friendly office to give them a cup of consolation to drink, to provide contentions for them, and press this conveyance for the sake of them, for the support of their spirits; give wine to that they are of heavy heart, for their father or mother, that it may be some comfort to them to find that, though they have lost their parents, yet they have some friends left, that have a concern for them. Thus the usage stood, and it was a laudable usage; it is a good and pleasant manner, as well for the sake of them to comfort them, as the conveyance to ease the going to the house of mourning. It seems the prophet Jeremiah had been wont to abound in good offices of this kind, and it well became his character, both as a pious man and as a prophet; and one would think it should have made him better beloved among his people, than it should seem he was.

But now God bids him not lament the death of his friends, as Job, v. (1.) His sorrow for the destruction of his countrymen, must swallow up his sorrow for particular deaths. His tears must now be turned into another channel; and there is occasion enough for them. (2.) He had little reason to lament those who died now just before the judgments entered, which he saw at the door; but rather to think them happy, who were seasonably taken away, for then he did not come with his sorrow, to be a type of what was coming, when there should be such universal confusion, that all neighbourly, friendly offices should be neglected. Men shall be in deaths so often, and even dying daily, that they shall have no time, no room, no heart, for the ceremonies that used to attend death; the sorrows shall be so ponderous as not to admit relief; and every one so full of grief for his own trouble, (3.) that he shall have no thoughts of his neighbour's. All shall be mourners then, and no comforters; every one will find it enough to bear his own burden; for, (v. 5.)

"I have taken away my peace from this people, put a full period to their prosperity, deprived them of health, and wealth, and quiet, and friends, and every thing wherewith they might comfort themselves. Whatever comfort it is, which we call joy, it is God's peace; it is his gift, and if he gives quietness, who then can make trouble? But if we make not a good use of his peace, he can and will take it away; and where are we then? Job xxxiv. 29. I will take away my peace, even my loving-kindness and mercies; these shall be shut up and restrained, which are the fresh springs from which all their fresh streams flow, and then farewell all good. Note, Those have cut themselves off from all true peace, that have thrown themselves out of the favour of God. All is gone, when God takes away from us his loving-kindness and his mercies. Then it follows, (v. 6.) Both the great and the small shall die, even in this land, the land of Canaan, that used to be called the land of the living. God's favour is our life; take away that, and we die, we perish, we all perish.

3. Jeremiah must not go to the house of mirth, any more than to the house of mourning, v. 1. It had been his custom, and it was innocent enough, when any of his friends made entertainments at their houses, and invited him to them, to go and sit with them, not merely to drink, but to eat and to drink, soberly and cheerfully. But now he must not take that liberty. (1.) Because it was unreasonable, and inconsistent with the providences of God that fell upon the land and nation. God called loud to weeping, and mourning, and fasting; he was coming forth against them in his judgments, and it was time for them to humble themselves; and it well became the prophet, who gave them the warning, to give them an example of taking the warning, and complying with it, and so to make it appear that he did himself believe it. Ministers ought to be examples of self-denial and mortification, and to show themselves affected with these terrors of the Lord, with which they desire to affect others. And it becomes all the sons of Zion to sympathize with her in her afflictions, and not to be merry with her, as is here commanded, Amos vi. 6. (2.) Because he must thus shew the people what sad times were coming upon them. His friends wondered that he would not meet them, as he used to do, in the house of feasting. But he lets them know, it was to intimate to them all that their feasting would be at an end shortly; (v. 9.) I will cause to cease the voice of mirth. You shall have nothing to feast on, nothing to rejoice in, but be surrounded with calamities that shall mar your mirth, and cast a damp upon it." God can find ways to tame the most jovial.

This shall be done in this place, in Jerusalem, that used to be the jovious city, and thought her joys were all secure to her; it shall be done in your eyes, in your sight, to be a reproach and a wonder, so saucy, and so merry; it shall be done in your days, you yourselves shall live to see it." The voice of mirth they had made to cease by their iniquities and idolatries, and therefore justly God made to cease among them the voice of mirth and gladness. The voice of God's prophets was not heard, was not heeded, among them, and therefore no longer shall the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride, of the songs that used to grace the nuptials, be heard among them. See ch. vii. 34.

10. And it shall come to pass, when thou shalt shew this people all these words, and they shall say unto thee, Wherefore hath the Lord pronounced all this great evil against us? or what is our iniquity, or what is our sin, that we have committed against the Lord our God? 11. Then shalt thou say unto them, Because your fathers have forsaken me, saith the Lord, and have walked after other gods, and have served them, and have worshipped them, and have forsaken me, and have not kept my law: 12. And ye have done worse than your fathers; (for, behold, ye walk every one after the imagination of his evil heart, that they may not hearken unto me:) 13. Therefore will I cast you out of this land into a land that ye know not, neither ye nor your fathers; and there shall ye serve other gods day and night, where I will not shew you favour.

1. An inquiry made into the reasons why God would bring those judgments upon them; (v. 10.) When thou shalt show this people all these words, the words of this curse, they will say unto thee, Wherefore has the Lord pronounced all this great evil against us? One would hope that there were some among them that asked this question with a humble, penitent heart, desiring to know what was the sin for which God contended with them, that they might cast it away, and prevent the judgment; "Show us the Jonah that raises the storm, and we will throw it overboard." But it seems here to be the language of those who quarrelled at the word of God, and challenged him to show what they had done, which might deserve so severe a punishment; 'What is our iniquity? Or, what is our sin? What crime have we ever been guilty of, proportionable to such a sentence?' Instead of humbling and condemning themselves, they stand upon their own justification; they were not guilty. They did them wrong, in pronouncing this evil against them, that he laid upon them more than was right, and that they had reason to enter into judgement with God, Job xxxiv. 25. Note, It is amazing to see how hardly sinners are brought to justify God, and judge themselves, when they are in trouble, and to own the iniquity and the sin that have procured them their miseries.

2. A plain and full answer given to this inquiry. Do they ask the prophet why, and for what reason, God is thus angry with them? He shall not stop their mouths by telling them that they may be sure there is a sufficient reason, the righteous God is never angry without cause, without good cause; but he must tell them particularly what is the cause, that they may be convinced and humbled, or, at least, that God may be justified. Let them know then,

(1.) That God visited upon them the iniquities of their fathers; (v. 11.) Your fathers have forsaken me, and have not kept my law; they shook off divine institutions and grew weary of them, they thought them too plain, too mean, and then they walked after other gods, to whose worship they were prone; being a land of variety and novelty, they served them and worshipped them; and this was the sin which God had said, in the second commandment, he would visit upon their children, who kept up these idolatrous usages, because they received them by tradition from their fathers, 1 Pet. i. 18.

(2.) That God reckoned with them for their own iniquities; (v. 12.) 'You have made your fathers' sin your own, and are become obnoxious to the punishment which in their days was deferred, for you have done worse than your fathers.' If they had made a good use of their fathers' reprove, and had been led by the patience of God to repentance, they should have fared better for it, and the judgment should have been prevented, the reprove turned into national pardon; but, making an ill use of it, and being hardened by it in their sins, they fared the worse for it, and the reprove being expired, an addition was made to the sentence, and it was executed with the more severity. They were more impudent and obstinate in sin than their fathers, walked every one after the imagination of his heart, made that their guide and rule, and were resolved to follow that on purpose that they might not hearken to God and his prophets. They designedly suffer their own lusts and passions to be noisy, that they might drown the voice of their consciences. No wonder then that God has taken up this resolution concerning them, (v. 13.) 'I will cast you out of this land, this land of light, this valley of vision; since you will not hearken to me, you shall not hear me, you shall be hurried away, not into a neighboring country which you have formerly had some acquaintance and correspondence with, but into a far country, a land that ye know not, neither you nor your fathers; in which you have no interest, nor can expect to meet with any comfortable society, to be an abode to your misery.' Justly were they punished into a strange land, which doted upon strange gods, which neither they nor their fathers knew, Deut. xxxii. Two things were made their case there very miserable, and both of them relate to the soul, the better part; the greatest calamities of their captivity were those which affected that, and debarring them from its bliss. (1.) It is the happiness of the soul to be employed in the service of God; but there shall you serve other gods day and night, you shall be in continual temptation to serve them, and perhaps compelled to do it by your cruel taskmasters; and when you are forced to worship idols, you will be as averse to it as ever you were of it when it was forbidden you by your gloomy kings. See how God often makes men's sin their punishment, and fills the backslider in heart with his own ways. 'You shall have no public worship at all, but the worship of idols, and then you will think with regret how you slighted the worship of the true God.' (2.) It is the happiness of the soul to have some tokens of the love and kindness of God, but you shall go to a strange land, where I will not show you favour.' If the Jews had had God's favour, that would have made even the land of their captivity a pleasant land; but, if they lie under his wrath, the yoke of their oppression will be intolerable to them.

14. Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be said, The Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; 15. But, The Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whether he had driven them: and I will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers. 16. Behold, I will send for many fishers, saith the Lord, and they shall fish them; and after I will send for many hunters, and they shall hunt them from every mountain, and from every hill, and out of the holes of the rocks. 17. For mine eyes are upon all their ways: they are not hid from my face, neither is their iniquity hid from mine eyes. 18. And first will I recompense their iniquity and their sin double; because they have defiled my land, they have filled mine inheritance with the carcases of their detestable and abominable things. 19. O Lord, my strength, and my fortress, and my refuge in the day of affliction, the Gentiles shall come unto thee from the ends of the earth, and shall say, Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanities, and things wherein there is no profit. 20. Shall a man make gods unto himself, and they are no gods! 21. Therefore, behold, I will this once cause them to know, I will cause them to know my hand and my might; and they shall know that my name is the Lord.

There is a mixture of mercy and judgment in these verses, and it is hard to know to which to apply some of the passages here, they are so interwoven; and some seem to look as far forward as the times of the gospel. 1. God will certainly execute judgment upon them for their idolatries. Let them expect it, for the decree is gone forth. 2. God sees all their sins, though they commit them ever so secretly, and palliate them ever so artfully; (v. 17.) Mine eyes are upon all their ways. They have not their eye upon God, have no regard to him, stand in no awe of him; but he has his eye upon them, neither they nor their sins are hid from his face, from his eyes. Note, None of the sins of sinners either can be concealed from God, or shall be overlooked by him, Prov. v. 21. Job xxxiv. 21. Ps. xxv. 4. God is highly displeased, particularly at their idolatries, v. 18. As his omniscience convicts them, so his justice condemns them; I will recompense their iniquity and their sin double; not double to what it deserves, but double to what they expect, and to what I have done formerly. Or, I will recompense it abundantly, they shall now pay for their long reprieve, and the divine patience they have had, or, the sin for which God has an exception with them, is, their having defied God's land with their idolatries, and not only alienated which he was entitled to as his inheritance, but polluted that which he dwelt in with delight as his inheritance, and made it offensive to him with the carcases of their detestable things, the gods themselves which they worshipped, the images of which, though they were of gold and silver, were as loathsome to God as the putrid carcases of men or beasts are to us; idols are carcases of detestable things, God hates them, and so should we. Or, he might refer to the sacrifices which they offered to these idols, with which the land was filled; for they had high places in all the coasts and corners of it. This was the sin which, above any other, incensed God against them.

3. He will find out and raise up instruments of his wrath, that shall cast them out of their land, according to the sentence passed upon them, (v. 16.) I will send for many fishers, and many hunters, the Chaldean army, that shall have many ways of insuring and destroying them, by fraud as fishers, by force as hunters; they shall find them out wherever they are, and shall chase and pursue them, to their ruin; they shall discover them wherever they are hid, in hills or mountains, or holes of the rocks, and shall drive them out. God has various ways of prosecuting a people with his judgments, that avoid the convictions of his word. He has men at command fit for his purpose; he has them within call, and can send for them when he pleases.

4. Their bondage in Babylon shall be sorer and much more grievous than that in Egypt, their taskmasters more cruel, and their lives made more bitter. This is implied in the promise, (v. 14, 15.) that their deliverance out of Babylon shall be more illustrious in itself, and more welcome to them, than that out of Egypt. Their slavery in Egypt came upon them gradually and almost insensibly, the galling yoke was laid upon them by degrees, and the heavier burdens were laid upon them at once, to all the aggravating circumstances of terror. In Egypt they had a Goshen of their own, but none such in Babylon. In Egypt they were used as servants that were useful; in Babylon, as captives that had been hateful.

5. They shall be warned, and God shall be glorified by these judgments brought upon them. These judgments, in some ways, shall prove a conviction and destruction to them; when God chastens them he teaches them. By this red God expostulates with them, (v. 20.) "Shall a man make gods to himself? Will any man be so perfectly void of all reason and consideration, as to think that a god of his own making can stand him in any stead? Will you ever again be such fools as you have been, to make to yourselves gods, which will not only enslave you, but destroy you, and make you call upon God whom you may call your own, who made you, and is himself the true and living God!" (2.) Honour to God; for he will be known by the judgments which he executeth. He will first recompense their iniquity, (v. 18.) and then he will this once, (v. 21.) this once for all, not by many interruptions of their peace, but this one desolation and destruction of it; or, This once and no more, I will cause them to know my hand, the length and weight of my punishing hand, how far it can reach, and how deep it can wound. And they shall know that my name is Jehovah, a God with whom there is no controul, who gives being to threatenings, and puts life into them as well as promises.

6. Yet he has mercy in store for them, intimations of which come in here for the encouragement of the prophet himself, and of these few among them that trembled at God's word. It was said, with an air of severity, (v. 13.) that God would banish them into a strange land; but that thereby they should not be altogether cut off, but should in due time, by a small company, return, there follow, immediately, words of comfort:

1. The days will come, the joyful days, when the same hand that dispeered them, shall gather them again, v. 14, 15. They are cast out, but they are not cast off; they shall be brought up from the land of the north, the land of their captivity, where they are held with a strong hand, and from all the lands whither they are driven, and where they seemed to be lost and buried in the crowd; and I will bring them again into their own land, and settle them there. As the foregoing threatenings agreed with what was written in the law, so does this promise, (Lev. xxvi. 44.) Yet will I not cast them away, Deut. xxxv. 4. Thence will the Lord thy God gather thee. And the following words (v. 16.) may be ascribed to the God who speaks, God will send for fishers and hunters, the Medes and Persians, that shall find them out in the countries where they are scattered, and send them back to their own land; or, Zerubbabel, and others of their own nation, who should fish them out, and hunt after them, to persuade them to return; or whatever instruments the Spirit of God made use of to stir up their spirits to work, which at first they were backward to. They began to nestle in Babylon; but as an eagle stirrith up her nest, and fluttereth over her young, so God did by them, Zech. ii. 7.

2. Their deliverance out of Babylon should, upon some accounts, be more illustrous and memorable than their deliverance out of Egypt was. Both were the Lord's doing, and marvellous in their eyes, both were proofs that the Lord liveth, and were to be kept in everlastings remembrance, to his honour, as the living God; but the fresh mercy shall be so surprising, so welcome, that it shall even abolish the memory of the former. Not but that new mercies should put us in mind of old ones, and give us occasion to renew our thanksgivings for them; yet, because we are apt to think that the former were better than these, and to ask, Where are all the wonders that our fathers told us of? as if God's arm were waxen short; and to cry up the age of miracles above the later ages, when mercies are wrought in a way of common providence; therefore we are allowed here comparatively to forget the bringing of Israel out of Egypt as a deliverance out of the hand of the Egyptians, that they were done by might and power, this by the Spirit of the Lord of hosts, Zech. iv. 6. In this there was more of pardoning mercy (the most glorious branch of divine mercy) than in that; for their captivity in Babylon had more in it of the punishment of sin than their bondage in Egypt; and therefore that which comforts Zerubbad in her deliverance out of Babylon, is this, that though it was their own fault, yet that the God who glorifies himself, and we must glorify him, in those mercies that have no miracles in them, as well as in those that have. And though the favours of God to our fathers must not be forgotten, yet these to ourselves in our own day we must especially give thanks for.

3. Their deliverance out of captivity shall be accompanied with blessed reformation, and they one the children of God that were scattered abroad. And this is that which so far outsighes the deliberance out of Egypt, as even to eclipse the histrice of it, and make it even to be forgone. To some apply this of the many Fishers and hunters, the preachers of the gospel, who were Fishers of men, to enlose them with the suggestiout to fish out in every mountain and hill, and secure them for Christ. Then the Gentiles came to God, some from the ends of the earth, and turned to the worship of him from the service of dumb idols.

CHAP. XVII.

In this chapter, 1. God convicts the Jews of the sin of idolatry by the notorious evidence of the fact, and condemns them to captivity for it, v. 1—4. II. He shows them the folly of all their carnal confidences, which should stand them in no stead, when God's time was to contend with them; and that this was one of the sins upon which his controversy with them was grounded, v. 5—11. III. The prophet makes his appeal and address to God, upon occasions of the midst of his enemies against him, committing himself to the divine protection, and begging of God to appear for him, v. 12—18. IV. God, by the prophet, warns the people to keep holy the sabbath-days, assuring them that, if they did, it should be the lengthening out of their tranquillity; but that, if not, God would be some desolating judgment assert the honour of his sabbaths, v. 19—27.

1. The sin of Judah is written with a pen of iron, and with the point of a diamond: it is graven upon the table of their heart, and upon the horns of your altar; 2. Whilst their children remember their altars and their groves by the green trees upon the high hills. 3. O my mountain in the field, I will give thy substance and all thy treasures to the spoil, and thy high places for sin, throughout all thy borders. 4. And thou, even thyself, shalt discontinue from thy heritage which I gave thee; and I will cause thee to serve thine enemies in the land which thou knowest not; for ye have kindled a fire in mine anger, which shall burn for ever.

The people had asked, (ch. xiv. 10.) What is our iniquity, and what is our sin? As if they could not be charged with any thing worth speaking of, for which God should enter into judgment with them; their challenge was answered there, but here we have a further reply to it; in which,

1. The indictment is fully proved upon the prisoners, both the fact and the fault; their sin is too plain to be denied, and, after they have nothing to plead either in exculcation of the crime, or in arrest and mitigation of the judgment. (1.) They cannot plead not guilty, for their sins are upon record in the book of God's omniscience, and their own conscience; nay, and they are obvious to the eye and observation of the world, v. 1, 2. They are written before God in the most legible hand, and by his own hand, and they have nothing to plead either in exculcation of the crime, or in arrest and mitigation of the judgment. (2.) They shall herein give honour to God, and make it to appear that they know both his hand in his justice, and his own in his word, and that they are brought to know his name, by what they are made to know of his hand, v. 21. This once, now at length, they shall be made to know that which they would not be brought to know by all the pains the preachers took with them. Note, So stupid are we, that nothing less than the mighty hand of divine grace, known experimentally, can make us know rightly the name of God as it is revealed to us.

4. Their deliverance out of captivity shall be a type and figure of the great salvation to be wrought out by the Messiah, who shall gather together in out, but will be produced in evidence, when the books shall be opened. Nay, we need not appeal to the tables of the heart, perhaps they will not own the consequences of their consciences. We need do no further, for proof of the charge, than the names of the altars which the blood of their idolatrous sacrifices was sprinkled, and perhaps the names of the idols, to whose honour they were erected, were inscribed. Their neighbours will witness against them, and all the creatures they have abused by using them in the service of their hunts. To complete the evidence, their own children shall be witnesses against them; they will tell truth, when they see their fathers dissemble and pretend to remember the altars and the groves to which their parents took them when they were little, v. 2. It appears that they were full of them, and acquainted with them betimes, they talk of them so frequently, simply, and with so much delight.

(2.) They cannot plead that they repent, or are come to a better mind; no, as the guilt of their sin is undeniable, so their inclination to sin is invincible and incurable. In this sense many understand v.
1, 2. Their sin is deeply engraven as with a pen of iron in the tables of their hearts; they have a rooted affection to it, it is woven into their very nature; their sin is dear to them as that is of which we say, It is engraven on our hearts. The bias of their minds is still as strong as ever toward their idols, and they are not wrought upon either by the word or rod of God to forget them, and abate their affection to them. It is written upon the horns of their altars, for they have given up their names to their idols, and resolve to abide by what they have done; they have bound themselves, as with cords, to the horns of the altars. And v. 2. may be read fully to this sense, As they remember their children, they remember their altars and their groves; they are as fond of them and take as much pleasure in them, as men do in their own children, and are as loath to part with them; they will live and die with their idols, and can no more forget them than a woman can forget her sucking child.

2. The indigent being thus fully proved, the judgment is affirmed, and the sentence ratified, v.
3, 4. For we are as they have shedded to their sins, and will not part with them.

(1.) They shall be made to part with their trea-urses, and those shall be given into the hands of strangers. Jerusalem is God's mountain in the field, it was built on a hill in the midst of a plain; all the treasures of that wealthy city will God give to the scoffers. Or, No mountain with whom the fields, thy wealth and all thy treasures, will I expose to spoil; all the products of the country, and the stores of the city, shall be seized by the Chaldeans. Justly are men stripped of that which they have served their idols with, and have made the food and fuel of their hunts. My mountain (so the whole land was, Ps. lviii. 34. Deut. xi. 11.) you have turned into your hills. Or, You have turned your altars into workshops upon your altars; (v. 2.) and you may be given for a spoil in all your borders. What we make for a sin, God will make for a spoil; for what comfort can we expect in that whereof God is disho-oured?

(2.) They shall be made to part with their inheritance, with their real estates, as well as personal properties. We have read the inscription of this山谷, (v. 4.) Thou, even thyself, or thou thyself, and those that are in thee, all the inhabitants, shall discontinue from thy heritage that I gave thee. God owns that it was their heritage, and that he gave it them; they had an unquestionable title to it, which was an aggravation of their folly in throwing themselves out of the possession of it. It is through thyself, (so some read it,) through thine own default, that they are dispossessed.

Thus shall discontinue, or interrupt, the occupation of thy land. The law appointed them to let their land rest, (it is the word here used,) one year in seven, Exod. xxviii. 11.

They did not observe that law, and now God would compel them to let it rest; The land shall enjoy her sabbaths; (v. xxvii. 34.) and (v. 11.) It shall be no rest to them, they shall serve their enemies in a land they know not. Observe, [1.] Sin works a discontinuance of our comforts, and deprives us of the enjoyment of that which God has given us. Yet, [2.] A discontinuance of the possession is not a defeasance of the right, but it is intimated, that upon their repentance, and their recovery possession in, For the pres-tent, ye have turned it to strangers in mine anger, which burns so hot, that it seems as if it would burn for ever; and so it will, unless you repent, for it is the anger of an everlasting God looking upon immortal souls; and who knows the power of that anger?

4. Thus shall the Lord, Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flessh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord: 6. For he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh; but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land and not inhabited. 7. Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is:
8. For he shall be as a tree planted by the waters, and that spreadeth out her roots by the river, and shall not see when heat cometh, but her leaf shall be green; and shall not be careful in the year of drought, neither shall she cease from yielding fruit. 9. The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it? 10. I the Lord search the heart, I try the reins, even to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings. 11. As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not; so he that getteth riches, and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days, and at his end shall be a fool.

It is excellent doctrine that is preached in these verses, in a general concern and use to us all, and it does not appear to have any particular reference to the present state of Judah and Jerusalem; the prophet's sermons were not all prophetic, but some of them practical; yet this discourse, which, probably, we have here only the heads of, would be of singular use to them by way of caution, not to misplace their confidence in the day of their dis-trusts. Let us all learn what we are taught here.

Concerning the sins of the people, and the time then they will certainly meet with who depend upon creatures for success and relief when they are in trouble;
(v. 5, 6.) Cursed be the man that trusts in man;
God pronounces him cursed for the affront he there by puts upon him; or, Cursed, that is, miserable, is the man that does so, for he leans upon a broken stick, and if it fall, he shall fall with it, but will run into his hand and pierce it. Observe, [1.] The shall sin be condemned; it is trusting in man, putting that confidence in the wisdom and power, the kindness and faithfulness, of men, which should be placed in those attributes of God only: making our applications to men, and raising our expectations from them as principal agents, whereas they are but instruments in the hand of Providence. It is making flesh the arm we stay upon, the arm we work with, and with which we hope to work our point; the arm under which we shelter ourselves, and on which we depend for protection. God is his people's Arm, Isa. xxxiii. 2. We must not think to make any creature to be that to us, which God has undertaken to be. Man is called flesh, to show the folly of those that make them their confidence; he is flesh, weak and feeble, and has no strength at all in it; he is inactive without spirit, which is a dead thing. He is mortal and dying, as flesh which soon putrefies and corrupts, and is continually wasting. Nay, he is false and sinful, and has lost his integrity; so his being flesh signifies, Gen. vi. 3. (2.) The great malignity there is in this sin; it is the departure of the evil heart of unbelief from the living God. Then that trust in man, perhaps drawn nigh to God with their mouth, and honour him with their lips, they call him their Hope, and say that they trust in him, but really their heart departs from him: they distrust him, despise him, and decline a correspondence with him. Cleaving to the cistern is leaving the Fountain, and is resented accordingly. (3.) The fatal consequences of it. If men rebel against God and will not be served with his things, they are promised to whomever do so. But this is no way of judging about which our own hearts deceive us as much as any thing; we think that we trust in God, when really we do not, as appears by this, that our hopes and fears rise or fall, according as second causes smile or frown. But it is true, in general.

1. Concerning the abundant satisfaction which they have, and will have, who make God their confidence, who live by faith in his providence and promise, who refer themselves to him and his guidance at all times, and refrain from all their own devices and cunning, and love the Lord at all times, ver. 7, 8. Observe, (1.) The duty required of us, To trust in the Lord, to do our duty to him, and then depend upon him to bear us out in doing it; when creatures and second causes either deceive or threaten us, either are false to us or fierce against us, to commit ourselves to God as all-sufficient, both to fill up the place of those who fail us, and to protect us from those who abuse us. It is to make the Lord our Hope, his favour the good we hope for, and his power the strength we hope in. (2.) The comfort that attends the doing of this duty. He that does so, shall be as a tree planted by the waters, a choice tree, about which great care has been taken to set it in the best soil, so far from being like the heath in the wilderness; like a tree that spreads out its roots, and tree up by the rivers, whereby it draws abundance of sap; which denotes both the establishment and the comfort which they have, who make God their Hope; they are easy, they are pleasant, and enjoy a continual security and serenity of mind; a tree thus planted, thus watered, shall not see when heat comes, shall not start from the ground in drought; when summer, it is so well moistened from its roots, that it shall be sufficiently guarded against drought. Those that make God their Hope, [1.] They shall flourish in credit and comfort; like a tree that is always green, whose leaf does not wither; they shall be cheerful to themselves, and beautiful in the eyes of others. These that thus give honour to God by giving him credit, God will put honour upon them, and make them the ornament and delight of the places where they live, as green trees are. [2.] They shall be fixed in an inward peace and satisfaction; they shall not be careful in a year of drought or droughts, for, like a tree, it has its seed in itself, so it has its moisture. Those who make God their Hope, have enough in him to make up the want of all creature-comforts. We need not be solicitous about the breaking of a cistern, as long as we have the fountain. [3.] They shall be fruitful in holiness, and in all good works. They who trust in God, and by faith derive strength and grace from him, shall not cease from yielding fruits; they shall still be enabled to do that which will redound to the glory of God, the benefit of others, and their own account.

Concerning the abundant satisfaction which they have, and will have, who make God their confidence, who live by faith in his providence and promise, who refer themselves to him and his guidance at all times, and refrain from all their own devices and cunning, and love the Lord at all times, ver. 7, 8. 3. Concerning the sinfulness of man's heart, and the divine inspection it is always under, v. 9, 10. It is folly to trust in man, for he is not only frail, but false and deceitful. We are apt to think that we are more wise than our own spirits. What things here promised to whomever do so. But this is no way of judging about which our own hearts deceive us as much as any thing; we think that we trust in God, when really we do not, as appears by this, that our hopes and fears rise or fall, according as second causes smile or frown. But it is true, in general.

(1.) There is that wickedness in our hearts, which we ourselves are not aware of, and do not suspect to be there; nay, it is a common mistake among the children of men to think themselves, their own hearts at least, a great deal better than they really are. The heart, the conscience of man, in his corrupt and fallen state, is deceitful above all things; it is subtle and false, it is apt to supplant; so the word properly signifies, it is that from which Jacob had his name, a supplanter. It calls evil good, and good evil; puts false colours upon things, and cries peace to those to whom peace does not belong. When men say in their hearts, suffer their hearts to whisper to them, that either there is no God, or he does not see, or he will not require, or they shall have peace, though they go on; in these, and a thousand similar suggestions, the heart is deceitful; it cheats men into the belief of things here promised to whomever do so. But this is no way of judging about which our own hearts deceive us as much as any thing; we think that we trust in God, when really we do not, as appears by this, that our hopes and fears rise or fall, according as second causes smile or frown. But it is true, in general.

(2.) Whatever wickedness there is in the heart, God sees it, and knows it, is perfectly acquainted with it, and apprized of it; I the Lord search the heart. This is true of all that is in the heart, all its thoughts of it, the thoughts and those that are most artfully disguised, and industriously concealed from others. Men may be imposed upon, but God can-
12. A glorious high throne from the beginning is the place of our sanctuary. 13. O Lord, the Hope of Israel, all that forsake thee shall be ashamed, and they that depart from me shall be written in the earth, because they have forsaken the Lord, the fountain of living waters. 14. Heal me, O Lord, and I shall be healed; save me, and I shall be saved: for thou art my praise. 15. Behold, they say unto me, Where is the word of the Lord? let it come now. 16. As for me, I have not hastened from being a pastor to follow thee; neither have I desired the woful day, thou knowest: that which came out of my lips was right before thee. 17. Be not a terror unto me: thou art my hope in the day of evil. 18. Let them be confounded that persecute me, but let not me be confounded; let them be dismayed, but let not me be dismayed: bring upon them the day of evil, and destroy them with double destruction.

Here, as often before, we have the prophet retired for private meditation, and alone with God. Those ministers that would have comfort in their work, must be much so. In his converse here with God and his own heart, he takes the liberty, which devout souls sometimes use in their soliloquies, to pass from one thing to another, without tying themselves too strictly to the laws of method and coherence.

1. He acknowledges the great favour of God to his people, in setting up a revealed religion among them, and dignifying them with divine institutions: (v. 12.) A glorious high throne from the beginning, the place of their sanctuary: the temple at Jerusalem, where God manifested his special presence, where the lively oracles were lodged, where the people paid their homage to their Sovereign, and whither they fled for refuge in distress, was the place of their sanctuary. That was a glorious high throne; it was a throne of holiness, that made it truly glorious; it was God’s throne, that made it truly high. Jerusalem is called the hight of the great King, not only Israel’s King, but the King of the whole earth, so that it might justly be deemed the metropolis, or royal city of the world. It was from the beginning so, from the first projecting of it by David, and building of it by Solomon, 2 Chron. ii. 9. It was the honour of Israel, that God set up such a glorious throne among them. As the glorious and high throne, that is, heaven, is the place of our sanctuary; so some read it. Note, All good men have a high value and veneration for the ordinances of God, and reckon the place of the sanctuary a glorious high throne. Jeremiah mentions this here, either as a plea with God for mercy to their land, in honour of the throne of his glory, (ch xiv. 21.) or as an aggravation of the sin of his people, in forsaking God, though his throne was among them, and so profaning his crown, and the place of his sanctuary.

2. He acknowledges the righteousness of God, in abandoning those to ruin, that forsook him, and revolted from their allegiance to him, v. 13. He
4. He complains of the infidelity and daring impiety of the people towards God. He greatly troubled him, and he saw before God this trouble; as the servant that had slights put upon him by the guests he was sent to invite, came and showed his Lord these things. He had faithfully delivered God's message to them; and what answer has he to return to him that sent him? Behold, they say unto this word, Where is now the new wine? Where is now the goodly meat? Where is the fountain of living waters? (v. 15.)

5. He appeals to God concerning the faithful discharge of the office to which he was called, v. 16. Seeing how many professed ministers were left, he seems here to commit his charge to God, that he might, if possible, make a settlement of his work, to exasperate him, and make him uneasy, and tempt him to prevaricate, and alter his message, for fear of displeasing them; but, "Lord," says he, "thou knowest I have not yielded to them." (1.) He continued constant to his work. His office, instead of being his credit and protection, exposed him to reproach, contempt, and injury; "Yet, Lord," says he, "I will not be ashamed, because I have not devised the trouble of wells, nor have I left my work, nor sued for a discharge, or quæstus."

6. He humbly begs of God, that he would own him, and protect him, and carry him on cheerfully in that work to which God had so plainly called him, and he had so sincerely devoted himself. Two things he here desires,

(1.) That he might have comfort in serving the God that sent him; (v. 17.) Be not thou a terror to me. Surely more is implied than is expressed;—"Be thou a comfort to me, and let thy favour rejoice my heart, and encourage me, when my enemies do all they can to terrify me, and either to drive me from my work, or to make me drive on heavily in it." Note, The best that have in them, which might justly make God a terror to them, as he was for some time to Job, (ch. vi. 4.) to Asaph, (Ps. lxx. 13.) and especially to David (Ps. lxxii. 13.)—this is that which good men, knowing the terrors of the Lord, dread and deprecate more than anything; nay, whatever frightful accidents may befall them, or how formidable soever their enemies may appear to them, they can do well enough, so long as God is not a Terror to them. He pleads, "Thou art my hope; and then nothing else is my fear, so, not in the day of evil, when it is most threatening, most pressing. My dependence is upon thee; and therefore be not a Terror to me." Note, These that by faith make God their confidence, shall have for their comfort in the worst of times, if it be not their own fault: if we make our trust, we shall not find him our terror.

(2.) That he might have courage in dealing with the people to whom he was sent. 18. They persecuted him, who should have entertained and encouraged him;—"Lord," says he, "let them be confounded, let them be overpowered by the convictions of the world, and made ashamed of their obstinacy, or else let the judgments threatened be at length executed upon them; but let not me be confounded, let not me be terrified by their menace, so as to betray my trust. If upon them mightiest have work to do, which they need not be either ashamed or afraid to go on in, but they do need to be helped by the divine grace to go on in it without shame or fear. Jeremiah had not desired the sorrowful day upon his country in general; but as to his persecutors, in a just and holy indignation at their malice, he prays, Bring upon them the day of evil; in hope that the Lord would bring it upon them mightiest; and thereby prevent the bringing of it upon the country; if they were taken away, the people would be better;—"Therefore destroy them with a double destruction, let them be utterly destroyed, root and branch; and let the prospect of that destruction be their present confusion." This the prophet prays, not at all that he might be avenged, nor so much that he might be eased, but that the Lord may be known by the judgments which he executes.

19. Thus saith the Lord unto me, Go and stand in the gate of the children of the people, whereby the kings of Judah come in, and by the which they go out, and in all the gates of Jerusalem; 20. And say unto them, Hear ye the word of the Lord, ye kings of Judah, and all Judah, and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, that enter in by these gates: 21. Thus saith the Lord, Take heed to yourselves, and bear no burden on the sabbath-day, nor bring it in by the gates of Jerusalem; 22. Neither carry forth a burden out of your houses on the sabbath-day, neither do ye any work, but hallow ye the sabbath-day, as I commanded your fathers. 23. But they obeyed not, neither inclined their ear, but made their neck stiff, that they might not hear, nor receive instruction. 24. And it shall come to pass, if ye diligently hearken unto me, saith the Lord, to bring in no burden through the gates of this city on the sabbath-day, but hallow the sabbath-day, to do no work therein; 25. Then shall there enter into the gates of this city kings and princes sitting upon the throne of David, riding in chariots and on horses, they, and their princes, the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem: and this city shall remain for ever. 26. And they shall come from the cities of Judah, and from the places about Jerusalem, and from the land of Benjamin, and from the plain, and from the mountains, and from the south, bringing burnt-offerings, and sacrifices, and meat-offerings, and incense, and bringing sacrifices of praise, unto the house of the Lord.

27. But if ye will not hearken unto me to hallow the sabbath-day, and not to bear a burden, even entering in at the gates of Jerusalem on the sabbath-day; then will I kindle a fire in the gates thereof, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem, and it shall not be quenched.

These verses are a sermon concerning sabbath-sanctification; it is a word which the prophet received from the Lord, and was ordered to deliver in the most solemn, public manner to the people; for they were sent not only to reprove sin, and to press obedience in general, but they must descend to particulars. This message must be proclaimed in all the places of concourse, and therefore in the gates, not only because through them people were continually passing and repassing, but because in them they kept their courts, and laid up their stores. It must be proclaimed (as the king or queen is usually proclaimed) at the court-gate first, the gate by which the kings of Judah come in, and go out, v. 19. Let them be told their duty first, particularly this duty; for if sabbaths be not sanctified as they should be, the rulers of Judah are to be contended with, (so they were, Neh. xiii. 17.) for they are certainly wanting in their duty. He must also preach it in all the gates of Jerusalem. It is a matter of great and general concern, therefore let all take notice of it. Let the kings of Judah hear the word of the Lord, for, high as they are, he is above them; and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for, mean as they are, he takes notice of them, and of what they say and do on sabbath-days. Observe,

1. How the sabbath is to be sanctified, and what is the law concerning it, v. 21. 22. (1.) They must rest from their usual employment on the sabbath-day, must do no servile work. They must bear no burden into the city, or out of it, into their houses, or out of them; husbandmen's burdens of corn must not be carried in, nor manure carried out; nor must tradesmen's burdens of wares or merchandises be imported or exported. There must not be a laden horse, or cart, or waggon, seen on the sabbath-day, either in the streets, or in the roads; the servants must not ply in that day, nor must the servants be suffered to fetch in provisions or fuel. It is a day of rest, and must not be made a day of labor, unless in case of necessity. (2.) They must apply themselves to that which is the proper work and business of the day; "Hallow ye the sabbath, consecrate it to the honour of God, and spend it in his service and worship." It is in order to this, that worldly business must be laid aside, that we may be entire for, and intent upon, that work which requires and deserves the whole man. (3.) They must look well to the frame of their spirits, and have a watchful eye upon every thing that borders upon the profanation of the sabbath." Where God is jealous, we must be cautious. "Take heed to yourselves, for it is at your peril, if you rob God of that part of your time which he has reserved to himself." Take heed to your souls; so the word is, in order to the right sanctifying of sabbaths, we must look well to the frame of our spirits, and have a watchful eye upon all the motions of the inward man. Let not the soul be burdened with the cares of this world on sabbath-days, but let that be employed, even all that is within us, in the work of the day. And, (4.) he refers them to the law, the statute in this case made and provided; "This is no new imposition upon you, but what I commanded your fathers; as it is an ancient law, it was an ancient command; may, it was a command to the patriarchs."

2. How the sabbath had been profaned; (v. 23.) "Your fathers were required to keep holy the sabbath-day; but they obeyed not, they hardened their necks against this as well as other commands that were given them." This is mentioned, to show that there was a reformation in this matter, that God had a just controversy with them for the long transgression of this law, which they had been guilty of. They hardened their necks against this command, that they might not hear and receive instruction concerning other commands. Where sabbaths are neglected, all religion sensibly goes to decay.

3. What blessings God had in store for them, if they would make conscience of sabbath-sanctification. Though their fathers had been guilty of the profanation of the sabbath, they should not only not smart for it, but their city and nation should recover its ancient glory, if they would keep sabbaths better, v. 24-26. Let them take care to hallow the sabbath, and do no work therein; and then,

1. The court shall flourish. Kings in succession, or the many branches of the royal family at the same time, as kings, and princes that sit upon the thrones of judgment, the thrones of the house of David, (Ps. cxvii. 5.) shall ride in great pomp through the gates of Jerusalem, some in chariots, and some on horses, attended with a numerous retinue of the men of Judah. Note, The honour of the government is the joy of the kingdom; and the support of religion would contribute greatly to this.

2. The city shall flourish. Let there be a face of religion kept up in Jerusalem, by sabbath-sanctification, that it may answer to its title, the holy city, and then it shall remain for ever, shall for ever be inhabited; (so the word may be rendered;) it shall not be destroyed and despoiled, as it is threatened to be. Whatever supports religion, tends to establish the civil interests of a land.

3. The country shall flourish. The cities of Judah and the land of Benjamin shall be replenished with vast numbers of inhabitants, and those abounding in plenty, and living in peace, which will appear by the multitude and value of their offerings which they shall present to God. By this the flourishing of a country may be judged of; What doth the Lord love? The works of the hands of God. Those that starve their religion, either are poor, or are in a fair way to be so.

(b.) The church shall flourish. Meat-offerings, and incense, and sacrifices of praise, shall be brought to the house of the Lord, for the maintenance of the service of that house, and the servants that attend it. God's institutions shall be conscientiously observed, no sacrifices and incense shall be offered to idols, and alienated from God, but every thing shall go in the right channel. They shall have both occasion and hearts to bring sacrifices of praise to God. This is made an instance of great prosperity. Then a people truly flourish, when religion flourishes among them. And this is the effect of sabbath-sanctification; when that branch of religion is kept up, other instances of it are kept up likewise, but when that is lost, devotion is lost either in superstition or in profaneness. It is a true observation which some have made, That the streams of all religion run either deep or shallow, according as the banks of the sabbath are kept up or neglected.

4. What judgments they must expect would come upon them, if they persisted in the profanation of the sabbath; (v. 27.) "If you will not hearken to me in this matter, to keep the gates shut on sabbath-days, so that there may be no unnecessary entering in, or going out, on that day; if you will break through the command, and let the gates be open for that day in common with other days, know that God will kindle a fire in the gates of your city;" intimating, that it shall be kindled by an enemy besieging the city, and assaulting the gates, who shall take this course to force their entrance. Justly shall those gates be fired, that are not used as they ought to be, to shut out sin, and to keep people in to an attendance on the great day of the Lord's greatness, for that day in common with other days, know that God will kindle a fire in the gates of your city; but it shall not be quenched, until it has laid the whole city in ruins. This was fulfilled by the army of the Chaldeans, ch. iii. 13. The profanation of the sabbath is a sin by which God has often contended with a people by fire.

CHAP. XVIII.

In this chapter, we have, 1. A general declaration of God's ways in dealing with nations and kingdoms; that he can easily do what he will with them, as easily as the potter with the clay. (v. 1. 2.) Then he comes to show what he does do what is just and fair with them. If he threaten their ruin, yet, upon their repentance, he will return in mercy and grace toward them, and when he is coming toward them in mercy, nothing but his name and his word can stop the progress of his favours, v. 7-10. II. A particular demonstration of the folly of the men of Judah and Jerusalem, in departing from their God to idols, and so bringing ruin upon themselves, notwithstanding the fair warnings given them, and God's kind intentions toward them, v. 11-17. III. The prophet's complaint to God of the base ingratitude and unreasonable malice of his enemies, persecutors, and slanderers, and his prayers against them, v. 18. 23.

1. THE word which came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying, 2. Arise, and go down to the potter's house, and there will I cause thee to hear my words. 3. Then I went down to the potter's house, and, behold, he wrought a work on the wheels. 4. And the vessel that he made of clay was marred in the hand of the potter; so he made it again another vessel, as seemed good to the potter to make it. 5. Then the word of the Lord came to me, saying, 6. O house of Israel, cannot I do with you as this potter? saith the Lord. Behold, as the clay is in the potter's hand ye in my hand, O house of Israel. 7. what instant I shall speak concerning a on, and concerning a kingdom, to pluck and to pull down, and to destroy it: 8. that nation, against whom I have proced, turn from their evil, I will repent he evil that I thought to do unto them. And at what instant I shall speak con-ing a nation, and concerning a king-i, to build, and to plant it: 10. If it do in my sight, that it obey not my voice, I will repent of the good wherewith I said I would benefit them.

The prophet is here sent to the potter's house, (he knew where to find it,) not to fire a sermon, as before to the gates of Jerusalem, but to prepare a sermon, or rather to receive it ready prepared. Those needed not to study their sermons, that had them, as he had this, by immediate inspiration.

"Go to the potter's house, and observe how he manages his work, and there I will cause thee, by silent whispers, to hear my words. There thou shalt receive a message, to be delivered to the people." Note, Those that would know God's mind, must observe his appointments, and attend there where they may hear his words. The prophet was never so much as pleasantly guided, and therefore went to the potter's house, (v. 3.) and there notice how he wrought his work upon the wheels, just as he pleased, with a great deal of ease, and in a little time. And, (v. 4.) when a lump of clay that he designed to form into one shape, either proved too stiff, or had a stone in it, or some way or other came to be marred in his hand, he presently turned it into another shape; if it will not serve for a vessel of honour, it will serve for a vessel of dishonour, just as seems good to the potter. It is probable that Jeremiah knew well enough how the potter wrought his work, and how easily he threw it into what form he pleased; but he must go, and observe it now, that, having the idea of it fresh in his mind, he might the more readily and distinctly apprehend that truth which God designed thereby to represent to him, and might more readily and distinctly explain it to the people. God used simili-tudes by his servants the prophets, (Hos. xii. 10.) and it was requisite that they should themselves understand the similitudes they used. Ministers will make a good use of their converse with the business and affairs of this life, if they learn thereby to speak more plainly and familiarly to people about the things of God, and to expand scripture comparisons. For they ought to make all their knowledge, some way or other, serviceable to their profession.

Now let us see what the message is, which Jeremiah receives, and is intrusted with the delivery of, at the potter's house. While he looks carefully upon the potter's work, God darts into his mind these two great truths, which he must preach to the house of Israel.

1. That God has both an incontestable authority, and an irresistible ability, to form and fashion kingdoms and nations as he pleases, so as to serve his own purposes: "Cannot I do with you as this potter, saith the Lord? v. 6. Have I not as absolute a power over you in respect both of might and of right?" Nay, God has a charter to a dominion over us than the potter has over the clay, for the potter only gives its form, whereas we have both matter and form from God. As the clay is in the potter's hand to be moulded and shaped as he pleases, so are ye in my hand. This intimates, (1.) That God has an incontestable sovereignty over us, is not Debon to us, may dispose of us as he thinks fit, and is not accountable to us; and that it would be as absusurd for us to dispute this as for the clay to quarrel with the potter. (2.) That it is a very easy thing with God to make what use he pleases of, and carry on what he pleases in his dealings with us, and that we cannot resist him. One turn of the wheel, quite alters the shape of the clay, makes it a vessel, unmakes it, new-makes it. Thus are our times in God's hand, and not in our own, and it is in vain for us to strive with him. It is spoken here of nations; the most politic, the most potent, are what God is pleased to make them, and no other: He designs this work by Job, (ch. xii. 23.) He increaseth the nations and destroyeth them, he equalizes the nations and straiteneth them again; (Ps. cvi. 33, &c.) and compare Job xxxiv. All nations before God are as the drop of the bucket, soon wiped away, or the small dust of the balance, soon blown away, (Isa. xl. 15.) and therefore, no doubt, as easily managed as the clay by the potter. (3.) That God will not be a Loser by any in his glory, at long run, but that he be not glorified by you, he will be glorified upon them. If the potter's vessel be marred for one use, it shall serve for another; those that will not be monuments of mercy, shall be monuments of justice: The Lord has made all things for himself, ye even the wicked for the day of evil, Prov. xvi. 4. God formed us out of the clay, (Job xxxii. 6.) and, we are still as clay in his hands, (Isa. xli. 4.) and therefore, he will be sure to make some use of us, to turn us to good account: the clay that has been over us, that the potter has over the clay? Rom. ix. 21. And are we not bound to submit, as the clay to the potter's wisdom, and will? Isa. xxix. 15, 16.—xlv. 9, 7.

2. That, in the exercise of this authority and ability, he always goes by fixed rules of equity and goodness. He dispenses favours indeed in a way of sovereignty, but never punishes by arbitrary right. High is his right hand, yet he rules not with a high hand, but, as it follows there, Justice and judgment are the habitation of his throne, Ps. lxxi. 13, 14. God asserts his despotic power, and tells us what he might do, but at the same time assures us, that he will act as a righteous and merciful Judge.

(1.) When God is coming against us in ways of judgment, the execution of them, which shall appear by this, that national repentance will stop the progress of the judgments; (v. 7, 8.) If God speak concerning a nation, to pluck up its fences that secure it, and so lay it open, its fruit-trees that adorn and enrich it, and so leave it desolate; to pull down its fortifications, that the enemy may have liberty to enter in, its habitations, that the inhabitants may be under a necessity of going out, and so destroy it, as either a vineyard or a city is destroyed; in this case, if that nation take the alarm, and repent of its sins, and reform its lives, turn every one from his evil way, and return to God, God will return in mercy to them, and though he cannot change his mind, he will change his way, so that it may be said, He repents him of the evil that he said lusts to do to them. Thus often in the time of the Judges, when the oppressed people were penitent people, still God raised them up saviours; and when they turned to God, their affairs immediately took a new turn. It was Nineveh's case, and we wish it had often been Jerusalem's; see 2 Chron. vii. 14. It is an undeniable truth, that a sincere conversion from the evil of sin will be an effectual prevention of the evil of punishment; and

(2.) When God is coming towards us in ways of mercy, if any stop be given to the progress of that mercy, it is nothing but sin that gives it; (v. 9, 10.) If God speak concerning a nation, to build and to plant it, to advance and establish all the true interests of it, is his husbandry, and his building, (1 Cor. iii. 9.) and if he speak in favour of it, is done, it is increased, it is enriched, it is enlarged, its trade flourishes, its government is settled in good hands, and all its affairs prosper, and its enterprises succeed. But if this nation, which God hath thus loaded with benefits, do evil in his sight, and obey not his voice; if it lose its virtue, and become debauched and profane; if religion grow into contempt, and vice get to be fashionable, and so be kept in countenance and reputation, and there be a general decay of all good, then God will turn his hand against them, will pluck up what he was planting, and pull down what he was building; (ch. xlv. 4.) the good work that was in the doing, shall stand still, and be let fall; and what favours were further designed, shall be withheld, and this is called his repenting of the good wherein he said he would benefit them, as he changed his purpose concerning Eliphaz’s house, (1 Sam. xi. 30.) and hurried Israel back into the wilderness, when he had brought them within sight of Canaan. Note, Sin is the great mischief-maker between God and a people; it forfeits the benefit of his promises, and spoils the success of their prayers. It defeats his kind intentions concerning them, (Hos. vii. 1.) and baffles their pleasing expectations from him. It raises their comforts, prolongs their grievances, brings them into straits, and returns their deliverances, Is. xlix. 1, 2.

11. Now, therefore, go to, speak to the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, saying, Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I frame evil against you, and devise a device against you: return ye now every one from his evil way, and make your ways and your doings good. 12. And they said, There is no hope; but we will walk after our own devices, and we will every one do the imagination of his evil heart. 13. Therefore thus saith the Lord, Ask ye now among the heathen, who hath heard such things? the virgin of Israel hath done a very horrible thing. 14. Will a man leave the snow of Lebanon which cometh from the rock of the field? or shall the cold flowing waters that come from another place be forsaken? 15. Because my people hath forgotten me, they have burnt incense to vanity, and they have caused them to stumble in their ways from the ancient paths, to walk in paths in a way not cast up: 16. To make their land desolate, and a perpetual hissing; every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished, and wag his head. 17. I will scatter them as with an east wind before the enemy: I will shew them the back, and not the face, in the day of their calamity.

These verses seem to be the application of the general truths laid down in the foregoing part of the chapter, to the nation of the Jews and their present state.

1. God was now speaking concerning them, to pluck up, and to pull down, and to destroy; for it is that part of the rule of judgment that their case agrees with; (v. 11.) “Go, and tell them,” (saith God,) “Behold, I frame evil against you, and devise a device against you. Providence in all its operations is plainly working toward your ruin. Look upon your conduct toward God, and you cannot but see that your deserve it; look upon his dealings with you, and you cannot but see that he designs it.” He frames evil, as the potter frames the vessel, so as to answer the end.

2. He invites them by repentance and reformation to meet him in the way of his judgments, and so to prevent his further proceedings against them; “Return ye now every one from his evil ways, that so according to all the ways of your fathers ye may return from the evil he had proposed to do unto you, and that providence which seemed to have been framed like a vessel on the wheel against you, shall immediately be thrown into a new shape, and the issue shall be in favour of you.” Note, The warnings of God’s word, and the threatenings of his providence, should be improved by us as strong inducements to us to reform our lives; in which it is not enough to turn from our evil ways, but we must make our ways and our doings good, conformable to the rule, to the law.

3. He foresees their obstinacy, and their perverse refusal to comply with this invitation, though it tended so much to their own benefit, v. 12. They said, “There is no hope.” If we must not be delivered unless we come from evil ways, we may even despair of ever being delivered, for we are resolved that we will walk after our own devices. It is to no purpose for the prophets to say anything more to us, to use any more arguments, or to press the matter any further; we will have our way, whatever it cost us; we will do every one the imagination of his own evil heart, and will not be under the restraint of the divine law. Note, Thus which rains sinners, is, affecting to live as they list; they call it liberty to live at large, whereas for a man to be a slave to his lusts, is the worst of slavery. See how strangely some men’s hearts are hardened by the deceitfulness of sin, that they will not so much as promise amendment; nay, they set the judgments of God at defiance; “We will go on with our own devices, and God go on with his; and we will venture the issue.”

4. He upbraids them with the monstrous folly of their obstinacy, and their hating to be reformed. Surely never were people guilty of such an absurdity, never any that pretended to reason, acted so unreasonably; (v. 13.) “Ask ye among the heathen, even those that had not the benefit of divine revelation, no oracles, no prophets, as Judah and Jerusalem had, yet, even among them, who hath heard such a thing?” The Ninevites, when thus warned, turned from their evil ways. Some of the worst of men, when they are told of their faults, especially when they begin to smart for them, will at least promise reformation, and say that they will endeavour to mend. But the virgin of Israel bids us not to repeat this answer, is ready to rush upon us no matter what conscience and Providence say to the contrary, and thus hath done a horrible thing. She should have preserved herself pure and chaste for God, who had espoused her to himself; but she has alienated herself from him, and refuses to return to him. Note, It is a horrible thing, enough to make one tremble to think of it, that those who have once been in the way of sin, and have sailed against sin, should now become so desperate by refusing to reform. Willful impenitence is the grossest self-murder; and that is a horrible thing, which we should abhor the thought of. He shows their folly in two things: 1. In the nature of the sin itself; that they were guilty of. They forsook God for idols, which was of the most horrible thing that could be, for they put a cheat upon themselves. v. 14, 15. Will a thirsty traveller leave the snow, which, being melted, runs down from the mountains of Lebanon, and, passing over the rock of the field, flows in clear, clean, crystal streams? Will he leave these, pass these by, and think to mend himself with some dirty puddle-water, which, after it has run over from one place to another, from any other place, be forsaken in the heat of summer? No; when men are parched with heat and drought, and meet with cooling, refreshing streams, they will make use of them, and not turn their backs upon them. The margin reads it, "Will a man that is travelling the road, leave my fields, which are plain and level, for a rock, which is rough and stony, and toils, that are as vain as vanity itself, that are not what they pretend to be, nor can perform what is expected from them." They had not the common wit of travellers, but even their leaders caused them to err, and they were content to be misled. (1.) They left the ancient paths, which were appointed by the divine law, which had been walked in by all the saints, which were therefore their right road, but in a dirty way, a rough way, a being well tracked, was both easy to hit, and easy to walk in. But when they were advised to keep to the good old way, they positively said that they would not, ch. vi. 16. (2.) They chose by-paths; they walked in a way not cast asp; not in the highway, the King's highway, in which they might travel safely; and which would certainly lead them to their right end, but in a dirty way, a rough way, a way in which they could not but stumble: such was the way of idolatry; such is the way of all iniquity: it is a false way, it is a way full of stumbling-blocks; and yet this way they chose to walk in, and lead others in.

2. In the mischievous consequences of it. Though the thing itself had been bad, they might have had some hope thereby; but they made themselves any good out of it. But the direct tendency of it was to make their land desolate, and, consequently, themselves miserable, (for so the inhabitants must needs be, if their country be laid waste,) and both themselves and their land a perpetual hissing. Those deserve to be hissed, that have fair warning given them, and will not take it. Every one that passes by their land shall make his remarks upon it, and shall be astonished, and wag his head, some wondering at, others commiserating, others triumphing in, the desolations of a country that had been the glory of all lands. They shall wag their heads in derision, upbraiding them with their folly in forsaking God and their duty, and so pulling this misery upon their own heads. Note, The consequence of turning from God will justly be the scorn of all about them; and, having reproached the Lord, will themselves be a reproach. Their land being made desolate, in pursuance of their destruction, it is threatened, (v. 17.) I will scatter them as with an east-wind, which is fierce and violent; by it they shall be hurried to and fro before the waters that proceed from the north, and are open to the east. They shall not only flee before the enemy, (that they may do, and yet make an orderly retreat,) but they shall be scattered, some one way, and some another. That which completes their misery, is, I will show them the back, and not the face, in the day of their calamity. Our calamities may be easily borne, if God look towards us, and smile upon us, when we are under them, if he countenance us, and show us favour; but if he turn the back upon us, if he show himself displeased, if he be deaf to our prayers, and refuse us his help; if he forsake us, leave us to ourselves, and stand at a distance from us, we are quite undone. If he hide his face, who then can hold him? Job xxxiv. 33. Here God would deal with them as they had dealt with him; (ch. ii. 27.) They have turned their back unto me, and set forth their face. It is a righteous thing with God to show himself strange to these in the day of their trouble, who have showed themselves rude and unfaithful to him in their prosperity. This will have its full accomplishment in that day, when God will say to those, though they have been professors of piety, were yet workers of iniquity. Deut. xxvii. 16. I know you not, say, I never knew you.

18. Then said they, Come, and let us devise devices against Jeremiah; for the law shall not perish from the priest, nor counsel from the wise, nor the word from the prophet: come, and let us smite him with the tongue, and let us not give heed to any of his words. 19. Give heed to me, O Lord, and hearken to the voice of them that contend with me. 20. Shall evil be recompensed for good? for they have digged a pit for my soul. Remember that I stood before thee to speak good for them, and to turn away thy wrath from them. 21. Therefore deliver up their children to the famine, and pour out their blood by the force of the sword; and let their wives be bereaved of their children, and be widows; and let their men be put to death; let their young men be slain by the sword in battle. 22. Let a cry be heard from their houses, when thou shalt bring a troop suddenly upon them; for they have digged a pit to take me, and hid snares for my feet. 23. Yet, Lord, thou knowest all their counsel against me to slay me: forgive not their iniquity, neither blot out their sin from thy sight; but let them be overthrown before thee: deal thus with them in the time of thine anger.

The prophet here, as sometimes before, brings in his own affairs, but very much for instruction to us. 1. See here what are the common methods of the persecutors. We may see this in Jeremiah's enemies, v. 18. 1. They laid their heads together, to consult what they should do against him, both to be revenged on him for what he had said, and to stop his mouth for the future. They said, Come, and let us devise devices against Jeremiah. The enemies of God's people and ministers have been often very crafty themselves, and confident with one another, to do them mischief. What they cannot act upon the prejudice of religion separately, they will try to do in concert. The wicked plots against the just. Cain's plots, and the chief priests and elders, did devise devices against our blessed Saviour himself. The opposition which the gates of hell give to the kingdom of heaven, is carried on with a great deal of cursed policy. God had said, (v. 11.) I devise a device against you; and now, as if they resolved to be quits with him, and to outwit Infinite Wisdom itself, they resolve to declare devices against God's prophet, not only against his person, but against the word he delivered to them, which they thought by their subtile management to defeat. 'O the prodigious madness of those that hope to dissuad God's counsel!

2. Herein they pretended a mighty zeal for the church, which, they suggested, was in danger, if Jeremiah was tolerated to preach as he did; "If they be not destroyed, we shall not cease to suffer; for the law shall not perish from the priest: the law of truth is in their mouths," (Mal. ii. 6.)
and there we will seek it; the administration of ordinances according to the law is in their hands, and neither the one nor the other shall be wrested from them.
"Counsel shall not perish from the wise; the administration of public affairs shall always be lodged with the privy-councillors and ministers of state, to whom it belongs; nor shall the word of truth be uttered to the prophets;" they mean those of their own choosing, who prophesied to them smooth things, and flattered them with visions of peace. Two things they insinuated, (1.) That Jeremiah could not be himself a true prophet, but was a pretender and a usurper, because he was neither commissioned by the priests, nor concurred with the other prophets, who professed to be teachers of the people; who was the better, he or they, if he be suffered to go on.
If Jeremiah be regarded as an oracle, farewell
the reputation of our priests, our wise men and prophets;
but that must be supported, which is reason enough why he must be suppressed.

(2.) That the matter of his prophecies could not be from God, because it reflected sometimes upon the prophets and priests; he had charged them with being the ring-bearers of all the mischief of ch. v. 18.
and the governors of the people; (ch. xiv. 1.) he had foretold 11 that their heart should perish, and be astonished, (ch. iv. 9.) that the wise men should be disalyzed, (ch. viii. 9, 10.) that the priests and prophets should be intoxicated; (ch. xiii. 13.) now this galled them more than any thing else; presuming upon the promise of God's presence with their priests and prophets, they could not believe that he would ever leave them. "The guides of the church must needs be infallible, and therefore who foretold their being infatuated, must be condemned as a false prophet. Thus, under colour of zeal for the church, have its best friends been run down.

3. They agreed to do all they could to blast his reputation; "Come, let us smite him with the tongue, fasten a bad character upon him, represent him to some as despicable, and fit to be slighted; to them, as dangerous, and fit to be prosecuted; to all, as odious, and not fit to be tolerated." This was their device, forteri calumniarii, aliquid adhærerit—to throw the vilest calumnies at him, in hope that some would adhere, to dress him up in bear-skins, otherwise they could not bait him. They who projected this, it is likely, were men of figure, whose tongue was no small slander, whose representations, though ever enough, were so designed as to make them obnoxious, to the justice of the one and the fury of the other. The scourge of such tongues will give not only smart lashes, but deep wounds; it is a great mercy therefore to be hid from it, Job v. 21.

4. To set others an example, they resolve that they would not themselves regard any thing he said, their confidence in his word, in regard to which they were so well confirmed as a message from God;
"Let us not give heed to any of his words; for, right or wrong, they will look upon them to be his words, and not the words of God. What good can be done with those who hear the word of God with a resolution not to heed it, or believe it? Nay,

5. That they may effectually silence him, they resolve to be the death of him; (v. 23.) All their counsel against me is to slay me; they hunt for the precious life; and a precious life indeed it was that they hunted for. Long was this Jerusalem's wretched character. Thou that killest many of the prophets, and wouldst have killed them all.

11. See here what is the common relief of the persecuted. This we may see in the course that Jeremiah took, when he met with this hard usage.
He immediately applied himself to his God by prayer, and gave himself up to his support.

1. He referred himself and his cause to God's cognizance, v. 19. They would not regard a word he said, would not admit his complaints, or take any notice of his grievances; but, Lord, (says he,) do thou give heed to me. It is matter of comfort to faithful ministers, that, if men will not give heed to their preaching, yet God will give heed to their praying. He appeals to God as an impartial Judge, and will bear both sides, as every judge ought to do; "Do not only give heed to me, but hearken to the voice of them that contend with me, hear what they have to say against me, and for themselves, and then make it to appear that then sitteth in the throne, judging right. Hear the voice of my contenders, how noisy and clamorous they are, how false and malicious all they say is, and let them be uttered against me; cause their own tongues to fall upon them."

2. He complains of their base ingratitude to him; (v. 20.)
"Shall evil be recompensed for evil, and shall it yet go unpunished? Wilt not thou recompense me good for that evil?" 2 Sam. vi. 12. To render good for good is human, evil for evil is brutish, good for evil is Christian, but evil for good is devilish; it is very absurd and wicked a thing, that we cannot think but God will avenge it. See how great the evil was, that they did against him; they dug a pit for his soul; they aimed to take away his life, no less would satisfy them, and that, not in a generous way, by an open assault, against which he might have an opportunity of defending himself, but in a base, cowardly, clandestine way, they digged fils for him, which there was no fence against, Ps.
xxviii. 53, but see how great the good was, which he had done for them; Remember that I stood before thee to speak good for thee; he had been an intercessor with God for them, had used his interest in heaven on their behalf, which was the greatest kindness they could expect from one of his character. He is a prophet, and he shall pray for thee, Gen. xxv. 7. Moses often did this for Israel, and yet they did not rise up against him; nor did they shake of stoning him. He did them this kindness when they were in imminent danger of destruction, and most needed it. They had themselves provoked God's wrath against them, and it was ready to break in upon them, but he stood in the gap, (as Moses, Ps. cxi. 23.) and turned away that wrath.
Now, (1.) This was very base in them. Call a man ungrateful, and you cannot imagine that it was not more so in them, who had forgotten their God, did not know their best friends. (2.) It was very grievous to him, as the like was to David; (Ps. xxiv. 13.—cix. 4.) For my love they are my adversaries. Thus disingenuously do sinners deal with the great Intercessor, crucifying him afresh, and speaking against him on earth, while his blood is speaking for them in heaven. It would be comfort to the prophet, that, when they were so spiteful against him, he had the testi mony of his conscience for him, that he had done his duty to them; and the same will be our rejoicing in such a day of evil. The blood-thirsty hate the upright, but the just seek his soul, Prov.
xxix. 10.

3. He impregnates the judgments of God upon them, not from a revengeful disposition, but in a
prophetical indignation against their horrid wickedness, v. 21. -23. He prays, (1.) That their families might be starved for want of bread; "Deliver up their children to the famine, to the famine in the country for want of rain, and that he may strike them through the straitness of the siege. To this let me add (2.) That they might be cut off "by the sword of war, which, whatever it was in the enemy's hand, would be, in God's hand, a sword of justice; "Pour them out (so the word is) by the hands of the sword; let their blood be shed as profusely as water, that their wives may be left childless and widowed, their husbands being taken away by death;" (some think that the prophet refers to futility;) let their young men, that are the strength of this generation, and the hope of the next, be slain by the sword in battle, (3.) That the terrors and desolations of war might seize them suddenly and by surprise, that thus their punishment might answer to their sin; (v. 22.) "Let a cry be heard from their houses, loud shrieks, when thou shalt bring a troop of the Chaldeans sud- denly upon them, to seize them and all they have, to make them prisoners, and their estates a prey;" for thus they would have done by Jeremiah, they aimed to ruin him at once ere he was aware; "They have dug a pit for me, as for a wild beast, and have hid snares for me, as for some ravenous, noxi- ous foul." (4.) They that think to insinuate themselves will justly be themselves insinuated in an evil time. (4.) That they might be dealt with according to the desert of this sin which was without ex- cuse; "Forgive not their iniquity, neither blot out their sin from thy sight; let them not escape the just punishment of it: let them lie under all the miseries of those whose sins are unpardoned." (5.) That God's wrath against them might be their ruin; "Let their sons fall down before their eyes;" that is, lets, that justice is in pursuit of them, that they endeavour to make their escape from it, but in vain; they shall be made to stumble in their flight, and, being overthrown, they will certainly be overtaken. And then, Lord, in the time of thine anger, do to them, (he does not say what he would have done to them, but,) do to them as thou holdest fit, as thou used to do with those whom thou art angry with; deal thus with them.

Now this is not written for our imitation. Jeremiah was a prophet, and, by the impulse of the spirit of prophecy, in the foresight of the ruin certainly coming upon his persecutors, might pray such prayers as we may not; and if we think, by this example, to justify ourselves in such imprega-tions, we know not what manner of spirit we are of; our Master has taught us, by his precept and pattern, to bless them that curse us, and pray for them that despitefully use us; yet it is written for our instruction, and is of use to teach us, [1.] That those who have forfeited the benefit of the prayers of God's prophets for them, may justly expect to have their prayers against them. [2.] That per- secutors of the true prisoners among them for their iniquity very fast, and will bring as sure and sore a destruction upon them as any other. [3.] Those who will not be won upon by the kindness of God and his prophets, will certainly at length feel the just resentment of both.

CHAP. XIX.

The same melancholy theme is the subject of this chapter; that was of the foregoings-the approaching ruin of Judah and Jerusalem for their sins; Jeremiah had often foretold this; here he has particular full orders to do it again. 1. He must set his sins in order before them, v. 1. -5. He must describe the particular judgments which were now coming upon them for these sins, v. 6. -9. 11. He must do this in the valley of Tophet, with great solemnity, and for some particular reasons, v. 2, 3. 4. He must summon a company of the elders together, to be witnesses of this solemn solemnity, that they might confirm this, and endeavour to affect his hearers with it, by a sign, which was, the breaking of an earthen bottle, signifying that they should be dashed to pieces like a potter's vessel, v. 10. -13. When he had done this in the valley of Tophet, he ratified it in the court of the temple, v. 14. Thus were all likely means tried to awaken this stupid, senseless people to repentance, that their ruin might be prevented; but all in vain.

1. Thus saith the Lord, Go, and get a potter's earthen bottle, and take of the ancients of the people, and of the ancients of the priests, 2. And go forth unto the valley of the son of Hinnom, which is by the entry of the east gate, and proclaim there the words that I shall tell thee; 3. And say, Hear ye the word of the Lord, O kings of Judah, and inhabitants of Jerusalem; Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, the which whosoever heareth, his ears shall tingle. 4. Because they have forsaken me, and have estranged this place, and have burnt incense in it unto other gods, whom neither they nor their fathers have known, nor the kings of Judah, and have filled this place with the blood of innocents; 5. They have built also the high places of Baal, to burn their sons with fire for burnt-offerings unto Baal, which I commanded not, nor spake it, neither came it into my mind: 6. Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that this place shall no more be called Tophet, nor, The valley of the son of Hinnom, but, The valley of slaughter. 7. And I will make void the counsel of Judah and Jerusalem in this place; and I will cause them to fall by the sword before their enemies, and by the hands of them that seek their lives; and their carcases will I give to be meat for the fowls of the heaven, and for the beasts of the earth. 8. And I will make this city desolate, and a hissing: every one that pass- eth thereby shall be astonished and hiss, because of all the plagues thereof. 9. And I will cause them to eat the flesh of their sons, and the flesh of their daughters, and they shall eat every one the flesh of his friend, in the siege and straitness wherewith their enemies, and they that seek their lives, shall straiten them.

The corruption of man having made it necessary that freewill should be upon freewill, and line upon line, (so unapt are we to receive, and so very apt to let slip, the things of God,) the grace of God has provided that there shall be, accordingly, freewill upon freewill, and line upon line, that those who are irremediable may be inexusable. For this reason, the prophet here is sent with a message to the same purpose with what he had often delivered, but with some circumstances that might make it the more taken notice of, a thing which ministers should study, for a little circumstance may sometimes be a great advantage, and they that would win souls, must be wise.

1. He may take of the elders and chief men, both in church and state, to be his auditors, and witnesses to what he said; the ancients of the people, and the ancients of the priests, the most eminent men both in the magistracy, and in the ministry, that they might be faithful witnesses, to record, as these, Isai. vii. 2. It is strange that these great men would be at the beck of a poor prophet, and obey his summons, that send him out of the city, they love counsel, and they knew what word of the Lord was there from the beginning, and the holy ones were not disaffected to him, yea, and though the generality of the elders were disaffected to him, yet it is likely that there were some few among them, who looked upon him as a prophet of the Lord, and would pay this respect to the heavenly vision. Note, Persons of rank and figure have an opportunity of honouring God by a diligent attendance on the ministry of the word, and other divine institutions; and they ought to think it an honour, and no dispensation to themselves, yea, though the circumstances be mean and desppicable. It is certain that the greatest of men is less than the least of the ordinances of God.

2. He must go to the valley of the son of Hinnom, and deliver this message there; for the word of the Lord is not bound to any one place; as good a place as any that was there, was as good as Jerusalem, as the gate of the temple, and the mount Zion, and the house of the Lord, and the altar of sacrifice, they were as good as the gates of the city, in the gate of the city. Christ preached on a mountain, and out of a ship. This valley lay partly on the south side of Jerusalem, but the prophet's way to it was by the entrance of the east gate, the sun-gate, (ver. 2.) so some render it, and suppose it to look not toward the sun-rising, but the noon-sun, the latter gate; so some. This sermon must be preached in that place, in the valley of the son of Hinnom, where they saw they had been guilty of the villest of their idolatries, the sacrificing of their children to Moloch, a horrid piece of iniquity, which the sight of the place might serve to remind them of, and upbraid with. (2.) Because there should they feel the sorest of their calamities; there the greatest slaughter should be made among them; and it being the common sink of the city, let this be a memorable instance, that a miserable spectacle this magnificent city would be, when it should be all like the valley of Tophet. God bids him go thither, and proclaim there the words that I shall tell thee, when thou comest thither; whereby it appears, (as Mr. Gataker well observes,) that God's messages were frequently not revealed to the prophets before the very instant of time wherein they were to deliver them.

3. He must give general notice of a general ruin now shortly coming upon Judah and Jerusalem, ver. 3. He must, as those that make proclamations, begin with an "Oyes, Hear ye the word of the Lord, though it be a terrible word, for you may think yourselves if it be so." Both rulers and riled must attend to it, at their peril; the kings of Judah, the king and his sons, the king and his princes, and priests, who are the heads of the people, the King of kings, for, high as they are, he is above them. The inhabitants of Jerusalem also must hear what God has to say to them. Both princes and people have contributed to the national guilt, and must concur in the national repentance, or they will both share in the national ruin. Let them all know that the Lord of hosts, who is therefore able to do so, shall lead away captives, and shall be strong against them, and shall bring back them again; yea, because he is so, will therefore punish them in this first place for their iniquities; (Amos iii. 2.) He will call evil upon this place, upon Judah and Jerusalem, so surprising, and so dreadful, that whoever hears it, his ears shall tingle: whosoever hears the prediction of it, hears the report and representation of it, it shall make such an impression of terror upon him, that he shall still think it hearing it sounding in his ears, and shall not be able to get it out of his mind. The ruin of El's house is thus described, (1 Sam. xvi. 11.) and of Jerusalem, 2 Kings xxii. 12.

4. He must plainly tell them what their sins were, for which God had this controversy with them; (ver. 4, 5.) they were, apostasy from God; They have forsaken me; abuse of the privileges of the visible church, with which they had been dignified; They have disgraced this place. Jerusalem, the holy city, the holy temple, the holy house which were designed for the honour of God, and the support of his kingdom among men, they had alienated from these purposes and (as some render the word) they had strangely abused. They had so polluted both with their wickedness, that God had disowned both, and abandoned them to ruin. He charges them with an affront for, and the adoration of, false gods, such as neither they nor their fathers have known, such as never had recommended themselves to their belief and esteem by any acts of power or goodness done for them or their ancestors, as that God had abundantly done, whom they forsook; yet they took them at a venture for their gods; nay, being fond of change and novelty, they liked them the better for their being upstarts; and new fashions in religion were dearer to them than olden things. They also stand charged with murder, wilful murder, from malicious pretexts; They have filled this place with the blood of innocents. It was Manasseh's sin, (2 Kings, xxiv. 4.) which the Lord would not pardon. Nay, as if idolatry and murder, committed separately, were not bad enough, and affront enough to God and man, they have put them together, have consolidated them into one dreadful crime, that of burning their children in the fire to Baal, (ver. 5.) which was the most inordinate defiance to all the laws both of natural and revealed religion that ever mankind was guilty of; and by it they openly declared that they loved their new gods better than ever they loved the true God, though they were such cruel taskmasters, that they required human sacrifices, inhuman I should say, for they thought that the whole lives and souls are, never demanded from his worshippers; he never shook of such a thing, nor came it into his mind. See ch. vii. 31.

5. He must endeavour to affect them with the greatness of the desolation that was coming upon them. He must tell them, (as he had done before, ch. vii. 52.) that this valley of the sons of Hinnom shall acquire a new name, the valley of slaughter, (ver. 6.) for (ver. 7) multitudes shall fall there by the sword, when either they sally out upon the besiegers, and are repulsed, or attempt to make their escape, and are seized; They shall fall before their enemies, who not only endeavour to make themselves masters of their houses and estates, but have such an implacable enmity to them, that they seek their lives, they thirst after their blood, they have no heart, no mind, I mean, to spare them, they will not allow a cartel for the burning of the slain, but their carcasses shall be meat for the fowls of the heaven and beasts of the earth. What a dismal place will the valley of Tophet be then! And as for those that remain within the city, and will not capitulate with the besiegers, they shall perish for want of food, when first they have eaten the flesh of the little children, when they have eaten the flesh of their own children, they shall have no bread for the next day, and the day after they shall be consumed with hunger, as they shall be consumed with the fire of war, as they are consumed with the fire of God. They shall be devoured, for God will not show them mercy in the day of judgment, he will not spare them, but he will make his seat of vengeance upon them; (ver. 8.) Ver. 9. This was threatened in the law, as an instance of the extremity to which the judgments of God should reduce them, (Lev. xxvi. 29. Deut. xxvii. 33.) and was accomplished, Lam. iv. 10. And lastly, the whole city shall be desolate, the houses laid in ashes, the inhabitants, sacrifices. They might have been made long since."

They that will make God's counsel, by humbling themselves under his mighty hand, will make void their counsel, and blast their projects, which they think ever so well concerted for their own preservation. There is no counsel or strength against the Lord.

10. Then shalt thou break the bottle in the sight of the men that go with thee, 11. And shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Even so will I break this people, and this city, as one breaketh a potter's vessel, that cannot be made whole again; and they shall bury them in Tophet, till there be no place else to bury. 12. Thus will I do unto this place, saith the Lord, and to the inhabitants thereof, and even make their city as Tophet: 13. And the houses of Jerusalem, and the houses of the kings of Judah, shall he defile, as the place of Tophet, because of all the houses upon whose roofs they have burnt incense unto all the host of heaven, and have poured out drink-offerings unto other gods. 14. Then came Jeremiah from Tophet, whither the Lord had sent him to prophesy; and he stood in the court of the Lord's house, and said to all the people, 15. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Behold, I will bring upon this city, and upon all her towns, all the evil that I have pronounced against it; because they have hardened their necks, that they might not hear my words.

The message of wrath delivered in the foregoing verses is here enforced, that it might gain credit, two ways.

I. By a visible sign. The prophet was to take along with him an earthen bottle, (v. 1.) and when he had delivered his message, he was to break the bottle to pieces, (v. 10.) and the same that were auditors of the sermon, must be spectators of the sign. He had compared this people, in the chapter before, to the potter's clay, which is easily marred in the making; but some might say, "It is past that with us, we have been made and hardened long since." "And what though you be," says he, "the potter's vessel is as soon broken in the hand of any man, as the vessel while it is soft clay is marred in the potter's hand, and its case is, in this respect much worse; that the vessel, while it is soft clay, though it be marred, may be moulded again, but after it is hardened, when it is broken, it can never be pieced again." Perhaps what they see will affright them more than what they only hear talk of; that is the intention of sacramental signs, and teaching by symbols was anciently used. In the explication of this sign, he must inculcate what he had before said, with a further reference to the place where this was done, in the valley of Tophet.

1. As the bottle was easily, irresistibly, and irrecoverably broken, so shall Jerusalem be broken by the Chaldean army, v. 11. They depended much upon the firmness of their constitution, and the fixedness of their course, which they thought hardened them like a vessel of brass; but the prophet shows that all that did but harden them like a vessel of earth, which, though hard, is brittle, and sooner broken than that which is not so hard. Though the vessels were not all they still they were vessels of earth, and so they shall be made to know, if they dishonour God and themselves, and serve not the purposes for which they were made. It is God himself who made them that resolves to unhackle them; I will break this people, and this city, dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel; the doom of the heathen, (Ps. ii. 9. Rev. ii. 27.) but now Jerusalem's doom, xxx. 14. A potter's vessel, when once broken, cannot be made whole again; cannot be cured, so the word is. The ruin of Jerusalem shall be an utter ruin; no hand can repair it, but his that broke it; and if they return to him, though he has torn, he will heal.

2. This was done in Tophet to signify two things, (1.) That Tophet should be the receptacle of the sins; They shall be cast into a city intended to bury elsewhere; (so some read it;) and if they had had conveniences any where else, they would not have buried there, where all the fifth of the city was carried. Or, as we read it, They shall bury in Tophet, till there be no place to bury any more there; they shall justly for room to lay their dead; and a very little room will then serve these, who, while they lived, laid,burse to house, and earth to field. They that would be placed alone in the midst of the earth, while they were above ground, and obliged all about them to keep their distance, must lie with the multitude when they are under ground, for they are innumerable before them.

(2.) That Tophet should be a resemblance of the whole city; (v. 12.) I will make this city as Tophet. As they should break the whole clay vessel, so all the sin which they sacrificed to their idols, so God will fill the whole city with the slain, that shall fall as sacrifices to the justice of God. We read (2 Kings xxiii. 10.) of Josiah's defiling Tophet, because it had been abused to idolatry; which he did, (as should seem, v. 14.) by filling it with the bones of men; and, whatever it was before, thenceforward it was loaded upon as a detestable place. Dead carcasses, and other filth of the city, were carried thither, and a fire continually kept there, for the burning of it. This was the posture of that valley, when Jeremiah was sent thither to prophesy; and so execrable a place was it looked upon to be, that in the language of our Saviour's time, hell was called, in allusion to it, Gehenna, the valley of Hinnom. It was also, (says God,) since that blessed reformation, when Tophet was defiled, did not proceed as it ought to have done, nor prove a thorough reformation, but though the idols in Tophet were abolished and made odious, these in Jerusalem remained, there fore will I do with the city as Josiah did by Tophet, fill it with the bodies of men, and make it an heap of rubbish. Even the houses of Jerusalem, and those of the kings of Judah, the royal palaces not excepted, shall be defiled as the place of Tophet, (v. 15.) and for the same reason, because of the idolatries that have been committed there; since they will not defile them by a reformation, God will defile them by a destruction, because upon the roof of their houses they have burnt incense unto the host of heaven. The flat roofs of their houses were sometimes used by devout people as convenient places for prayer, (Acts x. 6.) and by idolaters they were used as high places, on which they sacrificed to strange gods, especially to the host of heaven, the sun, moon, and stars, that there they might be so much the more and the more full of their wickedness and corruption. We read of those that worshipped the host of heaven on the house-tops, (Zeph. i. 5.) and of altars on the top of the upper chamber of Ahaz, 2 Kings xxiii. 12. This sin upon the house-tops brought a curse into the house, which consumed it, and made it a dunghill like Tophet.

II. By a solemn recognition and ratification of what we have heard and seen in the course of the Lord's house, v. 14, 15. The prophet returned from Tophet to the temple, which stood upon the hill over that valley, and there confirmed, and, probably, repeated, what he had said in the valley of Tophet, for the benefit of those who had not heard it: what he had said he would stand to. Here, as often before, he both assures them of judgments coming upon them, and assigns the cause of them, which was their sin. Both these are brought by him together in one place, with a reference to all that had gone before. 1. The accomplishment of the prophecies is here the judgment threatened. The people flattered themselves with a conceit that God would be better than his word; the threatening was but to frighten them, and keep them in awe a little: but the prophet tells them that they deceive themselves if they think so. For thus saith the Lord of hosts, who is almighty, and will make his words good, I will bring upon this city, and upon all her towns, all the lesser cities that belong to Jerusalem the metropolis, all the evil that I have pronounced against it. Note, Whatever men may think to the contrary, the executions of Providence will fully answer the predictions of the word; and God will appear as terrible against sin and sinners as the scripture makes him, nor shall the unbelief of men make either his promise or his threatenings of no effect, or of less effect than it was thought to be of. 2. The contempt of the prophecies is here the sin charged upon them, as the procuring cause of this judgment. It is because they have hardened their necks, and would not bow and bend them to the yoke of God's commands, would not hear my words, would not heed them, and yield obedience to them, the people that is settled among their sins, in their sinful ways, is altogether their own fault; if their necks are hardened, it is their own act and deed, they have hardened them; if they are deaf to the word of God, it is because they have stopped their own ears. We have need therefore to pray that God, by his grace, would deliver us from hardness of heart, and contempt of his word and commandments.

CHAP. XX.

Such plain dealing as Jeremiah used in the foregoing chapter, if it did not convince and humble men, would provoke and exasperate them; and so it did; for here we find, I. Jeremiah persecuted by Pashur, for preaching that sermon, v. 1, 2. II. Pashur threatened for so doing, and the word, which Jeremiah had preached, confirmed, v. 3-6. III. Jeremiah complaining to God concerning it and the other instances of hard measure that he had since he began to be a prophet, and wherein he had been so treated, (v. 7-10.) encouraging himself in God, lodging his appeal with him, not doubting but that he shall yet praise him, by which it appears that he had much grace, (v. 11-13.) and never measured the day of his probation, (v. 14, 15.) by which it appears that he had had sad remembrances of corruption in him too, and was a man subject to like passions as we are.

I. NOW Pashur, the son of Immer the priest, who was also the chief governor in the house of the Lord, heard that Jeremiah prophesied these things. 2. Then Pashur smote Jeremiah the prophet, and put him in the stocks that were in the high gate of Benjamin, which was by the house of the Lord. 3. And it came to pass on the morrow, that Pashur brought forth Jeremiah out of the stocks. Then said Jeremiah unto him, The Lord hath not called thy name Pashur, but Magor-missabib. 4. For thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will make thee a terror to thyself, and to all thy friends; and they shall fall by the sword of their enemies, and thine eyes shall behold it: and I will give all Judah into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall carry them captive into Babylon, and shall slay them with the sword. 5. Moreover, I will deliver all the strength of this city, and all the labours thereof, and all the precious things thereof, and all the treasures of the kings of Judah will I give into the hand of their enemies, which shall spoil them, and take them, and carry them to Babylon. 6. And thou, Pashur, and all that dwell in thy house, shall go into captivity: and thou shalt come to Babylon, and there thou shalt die, and shalt be buried there, thou, and all thy friends, to whom thou hast prophesied lies.

Here is,

I. Pashur's unjust displeasure against Jeremiah, and the fruits of that displeasure, v. 1, 2. This Pashur was a priest, and therefore, one would think, should have protected Jeremiah, who was of his own order, a priest too; and the more, because he was a prophet of the Lord, whose interests the priests, his ministers, ought to consult: but this priest was a persecutor of him whom he should have patronized. He was the son of Immier; he was of the sixteenth course of the priests, of which course, Immier, whom these priests were first settled by, was father, (1 Chron. xxiv. 14.) as Zechariah was of the order of Abiah, Luke i. 5. Thus this Pashur is distinguished from another of the same name, mentioned ch. xxii. 1. who was of the fifth course. This Pashur was chief governor in the temple; perhaps he was only so pro tempore — for a short period, the course he was head of being now in waning; or he was sufficing, by the High Priest; or, perhaps, captain of the temple, or of the guards about it, Acts iv. 1. This was Jeremiah's great enemy. The greatest malignity to God's prophets was found among those that professed sanctity, and concern for God and the church.

We cannot suppose that Pashur was one of those ancient of the priests that went with Jeremiah to the valley of Tophet, to heap him reproaches, unless we are with those who design to make no charge against him; but when he came into the courts of the Lord's house, it is probable that he was himself a witness of what he said, and so it may be read, (v. 1.) He heard Jeremiah prophesying these things. As we read it, the information was brought him by others, whose examinations he took; He heard that Jeremiah prophesied these things, and could not bear it; especially that he should dare to preach in the courts of the Lord's house, where he was chief governor, without his leave. When power in the church is abused, it is the most dangerous power that can be employed against it. Being incensed at Jeremiah. 1. He smote him, struck him with his hand, or staff of authority. Perhaps it was a blow intended only to disgrace him, like that which the High Priest ordered to be given Paul; (Acts xxvii. 2.) he struck him on the mouth, and bade him hold his peace. He was guilty of many bloody sins, intended to hurt him; he beat him severely, as a malefactor. It is charged upon the husbandmen, (Matt. xxi. 35.) that they beat the servants. The method of proceeding here was illegal; the High Priest, and the rest of the priests, ought to have been consulted, Jeremiah’s credentials examined, and the matter inquired into, whether he had an authority, or not. But what rules of justice are set aside, and despised, as mere formalities; right or wrong, Jeremiah must be run down. The enemies of piety would never suffer themselves to be bound by the laws of equity. 2. He put him in the stocks. Some make it only a place of confinement; he imprisoned him. It rather seems to be an instrument of closer restraint, and intended to put him both to pain and shame. Some think it was a pillory for his neck and arms; others (as we) a pair of stocks for his legs; whatever engine it was, he continued in it all night, and in a public place too, in the high gate of Benjamin, which was in, or by the house of the Lord; probably, a gate through which they passed between the city and the temple. Pashur intended thus to chastise him, but little as long as he was unjustly imprisoned, to expose him to contempt, and render him odious, that he might not be regarded if he did prophecy. Thus have the best men met with the worst treatment from this ungracious, ungrateful world; and the greatest blessings of their age have been counted as the off-scouring of all things. Would it not raise a pious indignation, to see such a man as Pashur upon the bench, and such a man as Jeremiah in the stocks? It is well that there is another life after this, when persons and things will appear with another face. II. God’s just displeasure against Pashur, and the tokens of it. On the morrow, Pashur gave Jeremiah’s discharge, brought him out of the stocks; (v. 3.) it is probable that he continued him there, in little cases, as long as he found it convenient to keep him in that punishment. And now Jeremiah has a message from God to him. We do not find that, when Pashur put Jeremiah in the stocks, the latter gave him any check for what he did; he appears to have quietly and silently submitted to the abuse; when he suffered, he threatened not; but, when he brought him out of the stocks, then God put a word into the prophet’s mouth, which would awaken his conscience, if he had any. For when the prophet of the Lord was bound, the word of the Lord was not.—What can we think Pashur aimed at, in smiting and abusing Jeremiah? Whatever it is, we shall see by what God says to him, that he is disappointed. 1. Did he aim to establish himself, and make himself easy, by silencing one that told of his faults, and would be likely to lessen his reputation with the people? He shall not gain this point; for, (1.) Though the prophet should be silent, his own conscience shall fly in his face, and make him always uneasy. To confirm this, he shall have a name given him, Mager-missabib—Terror round about, or, Fear on every side. God himself shall give him this name, whose calling him so, will make him so. It seems to be a proverbial expression, bespeaking a man not only in distress, but in despair; not only in danger on every side, (that a man may be, and yet by fath may be in no terror, as David, Ps. iii. 6. xxvii. 3.) but in fear on every side; and that a man may be when there appears no danger; The wicked flee when no man pursues; are in great fear where no fear is. This shall be Pashur’s case; (v. 4.) “Behold, I will make thee a terror to thyself; thou shalt be subject to continual frights, and thy own fancy and imagination shall create thee a constant uneasiness.” Note, God can make the most daring sinner in fear for himself, and render him a way to frighten those that frighten his people from doing their duty. And those that will not hear of their faults from God’s prophets, that are reprovers in the gate, shall be made to hear of them from conscience, which is a reprover in their own bosoms, that will not be daunted or silenced. And miserable is the man that is thus made a terror to himself! Yet this is not all, all his calamities are ordered for his present good, and for his everlasting glory; they shall be turned into blessing, and cause him to be a terror to others. (2.) His friends, whom he put a confidence in, and perhaps, studied to oblige, in what he did against Jeremiah, shall fall all. God does not presently strike him dead for what he did against Jeremiah, but lets him live longer, for the sake of his friends, and to teach him by his own proceedings, what a continual castigation, that, wherever he goes, he shall be a monument of divine justice; and when it is asked, “What makes this man in such continual terror?” it shall be answered, “It is God’s hand upon him for putting Jeremiah in the stocks.” His friends, who should encourage him, shall all be cut off; they shall fall by the sword of the enemy, and by the hand of their enemies. This is a very just and justifiable design, to increase his terror. (3.) He shall find, in the issue, that his terror is not causeless, but that divine vengeance is waiting for him; (v. 6.) he and his family shall go into captivity, even to Babylon; he shall neither die before the evil comes, as Josiah, nor live to survive it, as some did, but he shall die a captive, and shall in effect, be buried in his chains, and burned with the remains of his bones, with the remains of Pashur. Let persecutors read it, and tremble; tremble to repentance before they be made to tremble to their ruin. 2. Did he aim to keep the people easy, to prevent the destruction that Jeremiah prophesied of, and by sinking his reputation to make his words fall to the ground? It is probable that he did; for it appears by v. 6. that he did himself set up for a prophet, and told the people that they should have peace; he prophesied lies to them, and because Jeremiah’s prophecy contradicted his, and tended to awaken those whom he endeavored to rock asleep in their sins, therefore he set himself against him. But could he gain his point? No, Jeremiah stands to what he has said against Judah and Jerusalem; and God by many means frustrates it. Men get nothing by silencing those who reprove and warn them, for the word will have its course; so it had here. (1.) The country shall be ruined: (v. 4.) I will give all Judah into the hand of the king of Babylon. It had long been God’s own land, but he will now transfer his title to it to Nebuchadnezzar, he shall be master of the country, and dispose of the inhabitants; some to the sword, and some to captivity, as he pleases, but none shall escape him. (2.) The city shall be ruined too, v. 5. The king of Babylon shall spoil that, and carry all that is valuable in it to Babylon. [1.] He shall seize their magazines and military stores, *•••• called the
1. Here is a sad representation of the wrong that was done him, and the affronts that were put upon him; and this representation, no doubt, was according to truth, and deserves no blame, but was very justly and very fitly made to him that sent him, and no doubt, would bear him out. He complains, 1. That he was ridiculed and laughed at; they made a jest of every thing he said and did; and this cannot but be a great grievance to an innocent mind; (v. 7.) I am his master and teacher; he was put upon him, and made themselves and one another merry with him, as if he had been a fool, good for nothing but to make sport. Thus he was continually; I was in derision daily; thus he was universally; Every one mocks me; the greatest so far forget their own gravity, and the meanest so far forgot mine. Thus our Lord Jesus, on the cross, was reviled by both the soldiers and priests; and the reviling of each had their peculiar aggravation. And what was it that thus exposed him to contempt and scorn? It was nothing but his faithful and zealous discharge of his office; (v. 8.) they could find nothing for which to deride him, but his preaching; it was the word of the Lord that was made a reproach; that for which they should have honoured and respected him; but that to deliver God's message to the Lord to them, was the very thing for which they reproached and reviled him. He never preached a sermon, but, though he kept as closely as possible to his instructions, they found something or other in it, for which to banter and abuse him. Note, It is sad to think that, though divine revelation be one of the greatest blessings and honours that ever was bestowed upon the world, yet it has been turned very much to the reproach of the most zealous preachers and believers of it. Two things they derided him for, (1.) The manner of his preaching: Since he spake, he cried out. He had always been a lively, affectionate preacher, and since he began to speak in God's name, he always spake as a man in earnest; he cried aloud, and did not spare, spared neither himself, nor them to whom he preached; and this was enough for them to laugh at, who hated to be serious. It is common for these that are unaffected with, and disaffected to, the things of God themselves, to ridicule those that are much affected with them. Lively preachers are the scorn of careless, unbelieving hearers. (2.) The matter of his preaching; he cried violence and spoil. He reproved them for the violence and spoil which they were guilty of; they were themselves that spoke thus to another; and he prophesied of the violence and spoil which should be brought upon them, as the punishment of that sin; for the former they ridiculed him as overprecise, for the latter as over-credulous; in both he was provoking to them, and therefore they resolved to run him down. This was bad enough, yet he complains further; (2.) That he was pithed and contrived; he was not only ridiculed as a weak man, but reproached and misrepresented as a bad man, and dangerous to the government. This he laments as his grievance, v. 10. Being laughed at, though it touches a man in point of honour, is yet a thing that may be easily laughed at again; for, as it has been well observed, it is no shame to be laughed at, but to deserve those jests and jeers and sport, and with more subtlety. (1.) They spake ill of him behind his back, when he had no opportunity of clearing himself, and were industrious to spread false report concerning him; I heard, at second-hand, the defaming of many, fear on every side, (of many Magor missabibs; so some read,) of many such men as Pashur was, and who expounded this to them. On this was the matter of their defamation, they represented Jeremiah as an instigator of instilled fears and jealousies on every side into the minds of the people, and so made them uneasy under the government, and disposed them to a rebellion. Or, had the prophets been more severe against him, that he could not but be afraid of the consequences. Nay, he was, he had reason to fear informers; so that they made him almost a Magna-missibah. These words are found in the original, verbatim, the same, Ps. xxxi. 13. I have heard the slander, or defaming of many, fear on every side. Jeremiah, in his complaint, chooses to make use of the same words that David was for so long time in distress, to furnish a comfort to him that other good men had suffered the abuses before him, and to teach us to make use of David's psalms with application to ourselves, as there is occasion. Whatever we have to say, we may from thence take with us words. See how Jeremiah's enemies contrived the matter; Report, say they, and we will report. They resolve to cast an odium upon him, and this is the method they take; "Let some very bad thing be said of him, which may render him obnoxious to the government, and though it be ever so false, we will second it, and spread it, and add to it." (For the reproaches of good men lose nothing by the carriage.) "Do you that frame a story plausible, or you that can pretend to some acquaintance with him, report it once, and then say that you heard it from him who we came into, Do you say it, and we will swear it; do you set it agoing, and we will follow it." And thus both are guilty equally, they that raise, and they that propagate, the false report. The receiver is as bad as the thief. (2.) They flattered him to his face, that they might get something from him, on which to ground an accusation, as the spies that came, Luke xx. 20.—xi. 33, 34. His familiars, that he converse freely with, and put a confidence in, watched for his halting, observed what he said, which they could by any strained innuendo put a bad construction upon, and carried it to his enemies. His case was very sad, when those betrayed him whom he took to be his friends. They said among themselves, "If we accost him kindly, and insinuate ourselves into his acquaintance, peradventure he will be addicted to own that he is in confederacy with the enemy, and a pensioner to the king of Babylon, or we shall wheedle him to speak some treasurables words; and then we shall prevail against him, and take our revenge on him for telling us of our faults, and threatening us with the judgments of God." Not the least of their devices was to connect him with the prudence of the serpent to help it, can secure men from unjust censure and false accusation. 11. Here is an account of the temptation he was in, under this affliction; his feet were almost gone, as the Psalmist's, Ps. xxxi. 2. And this is that which is to be most dreaded in affliction, being driven to it by sin. 12. As he was. He was tempted to quarrel with God for making him a prophet. This he begins with, (v. 7.) O Lord, thou hast deceived me, and I was deceived. This, as we read it, sounds very harsh. God's servants have been always ready to own that he is a faithful Mister, and never cheated them; and therefore this is the language of Jeremiah's folly and corruption. If, when God called him to be a prophet, and told him he would set him over the kingdom, (ch. i. 16.) and make him a defended city, he flattered himself with an expectation of having universal respect paid him as a messenger from heaven, and living safe and easy, and afterward it proved otherwise, he must not say that God had deceived him, but that he had deceived himself; for he knew how often the spirit of prophecy in those that were actuated by it, and had no reason to expect better treatment. Nay, God had expressly told him that all the princes, priests, and people of the land, would fight against him, (ch. i. 19.) which he had forgotten, else he would not have set the blame on God. Christ thus told his disciples what opposition they should expect, in going to Jerusalem, "Ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake. But it may be well read thus, Thou hast persuaded me, and I was persuaded; it is the same word that was used, Gen. ix. 27. margin, God shall persuade Japheth. And Prov. xxv. 15. By much forbearance is a prince persuade. And Hos. ii. 14. I will allure her. And this agrees with what the Lord says, "They think more than I, didst over-power them, and persuaded them by the influence of thy Spirit upon me, and thou hast prevailed." Jeremiah was very backward to undertake the prophetic office, he pleaded that he was under age, and unfit for the service; but God overruled his pleas, and told him that he must go, ch. i. 6, 7. Now, Lord, says he, since thou hast put this office upon me, why dost thou not stand by me in it? Had I thrust myself upon it, I might justly have been in derision; but why am I so when thou didst thrust me into it. It was Jeremiah's infirmity to complain thus of God, as putting a hardship upon him in calling him to be a prophet, which he would not have done, had he considered the lasting honour thereby done him, and the profit it would have been to him. 13. Note, As long as we see ourselves in the view of God and duty, it is weakness and folly, when we meet with difficulties and discouragements in it, to wish we had never set out in it. 2. He was tempted to quit his work, and give it over; partly because he himself met with so much hardship in it, and partly because those to whom he was sent, instead of being edified and made better, were exasperated and made worse; (v. 9.) Then I said, Since by prophesying in the name of the Lord I gain nothing to him or myself but dishonour and disgrace, I will not make mention of him as my Author for any thing I say, nor speak any more in his name, since my enemies do all they can to silence me, I will even silence myself, and speak no more, since I may as well speak to the stones as to them." Note, It is strong temptation to poor ministers to resolve that they will preach no more, when they see their preaching slighted and wholly ineffectual. But let people dread putting their ministers into this temptation. Let not their labour be in vain with us, lest we provoke them to say that they will take no more pains with us, and provoke God. Yet let not ministers hearken to this temptation, but go on in their duty, notwithstanding their discouragements, for this is the more thank-worthy; and though Israel be not gathered, yet they shall be glorious. 11. Here is an account of his faithful adherence to this work, and cheerful dependence on his God, notwithstanding. 1. He found the grace of God mighty in him to keep him to his business, notwithstanding the temptation he was in to throw it up; "I said, in my haste, I will speak no more in his name, what I have in my heart to deliver I will stifle and suppress; but I soon found it was in my heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones, which glued inwardly, and must have vent, it was impossible to smother it; I was like a man in a burning fever, uneasy, and in a continual agitation; while I kept silence from good, my heart was hot within me, it was pain and grief to me, and I must speak, that I may be refreshed;" Ps. xxxix. 2, 3. Job xxxvii. 20. While I kept silence, my bones were ached, Ps. xxxvii. 3. See the power of the spirit of prophecy in those that were actuated by it, and thus will a holy zeal for God even eat men up, and make them forget themselves. I believed, therefore have I spoken. Jeremiah was soon weary with forbearing to preach, and could not contain himself; nothing puts faithful ministers to pain so much as being silenced, nor to terror so much as silencing themselves. Their convictions will soon triumph over temptations of that kind; for, Wo is unto me if I preach not the gospel, whatever it cost me, 1 Cor. iv. 16. And it is really a mercy to have the word of God thus mightily in us to overpower our convictions.

He was assured of God's presence with him, which would be sufficient to baffie all the attempts of his enemies against him; (v. 11.) "They say, We shall prevail against him, the day will undoubtedly be our own; but I am sure that they shall not prevail; they shall not prosper, I can safely set them all at defiance, for the Lord is with me, is on my side, to take my part against them," (Rom. viii. 31.) to protect me from all their malicious designs upon me. He is with me, to support me and keep me up under the burthen which now presses me down. He is with me, to make the word I preach answer the end he designs, though not the end I desire. He is with me as a mighty terrible one, to strike a terror upon them, and so to overcome them. Note, Even that in God which is terrible, is really comfortable to his servants that trust in him, for it shall stand to their good. The terrible God, and the terri-\footnote{13}ble people. God's being a mighty God, bespeaks him a terrible God to all those that take up arms against him, or any one that, like Jeremiah, was commissioned by him. How terrible will the wrath of God be to those that think to damn all about them, and will themselves be damned by nothing! The most formidable enemies that act against us, appear despis-\footnote{14}ible when we see the Lord for us, when the presence of God is as a terrible one, Neh. iv. 14. Jeremiah speaks now with a good assurance, "If the Lord be with me, my persecutors shall stumble, so that when they pursue me, they shall not overtake me, (Ps. xxvii. 2.) and then they shall be greatly ashamed of their impotent malice and fruitless attempts. Nay, their everlasting confusion and infamy shall never be for-\footnote{15} gotten; they shall not forget it themselves, but it shall be to them a constant and lasting vexation, whenever they think of it; others shall not forget it, but it shall leave upon them an indelible reproach." 3. He appeals to God against them as a righteous Judge, and prays judgment upon his cause, v. 12. He looks upon God as the God that tries the righte-\footnote{16}ous, takes cognizance of them, and of every cause that they are interested in. He does not judge in favor of them, but in destroying the wicked, he is found finding that they have right on their side, and their persecutors wrong them and are injurious to them, he gives sentence for them. He that tries the righteous, tries the unrighteous too, and he is very well qualified to do both. For he sees the reins and the heart, he certainly knows men's thoughts and affections, their aims and intentions, and therefore can pass an un-\footnote{17}derstanding judgment on their words and actions. Now this is the God, (1.) To whom the prophet here refers himself, and in whose court he lodges his appeal; Unto thee have I opened my cause. Not but that God perfectly knew his cause, and all the merits of it, without his opening; but the cause we commit to God we must spread before him, he knows it, but he will know it from us, and allows us a share in the honor of the open confession of it, as well to find out, as to confess our faults to him, but to affect ourselves. Note, It will be an ease to our spirits, when we are oppressed and burthened, to open our cause to God, and pour out our complaints before him. (2.) By whom he expects to be righted; Let me see thy vengeance upon them; such vengeance as thou thinkest fit to take for their conviction and my vindication, the vengeance thou must to take on persecutors. Note, Whenever injuries are done us, we must not study to avenge ourselves, but must leave it to that God to do it, to whom vengeance belongs, and who hath said, I will repay. 4. He greatly rejoices and praises God, in a full confidence that God would appear for his deliver-\footnote{18}ance, v. 13. So full is he of the comfort of God's presence with him, the divine protection he is under, and the divine promise he has to depend upon, that in a transport of joy he stirs up himself and others to praise God the giver of it; Sing unto the Lord, praise ye the Lord. Here is a great change with him since he began this dis-\footnote{19}course; the clouds are blown over, his complaints all silenced, and turned into thanksgivings. He has now an entire confidence in God whom (v. 7.) he was disturbing; he stirs up himself to praise that Name which (v. 9.) he was resolving no more to make mention of. It was the lively exercise of his soul, that turned his sighs into songs, and his tremblings into triumphs. It is proper to express our hope in God by our praising him, and our praising God by our singing to him. That which is the matter of the praise is, He hath delivered the soul of the poor from the hand of the evil-doers; he means especially himself, his own poor soul. He hath delivered me from the wicked who desire my soul to perish, and to cast me into the net of the hand of Pashur, and he will continue to deliver me, 2 Cor. i. 10. He will deliver my soul from the sin that I am in danger of falling into, when I am thus persecuted. He hath delivered me from the hand of evil-doers, so that they have not gained their point, nor had their will. Note, Those that are faithful in well-doing need not fear those that are spiteful in evil-doing, for they have a God to trust to, who has well-doers under the hand of his protection, and evil-doers under the hand of his restraint. 14. Cursed be the day wherein I was born; let not the day wherein my mother bare me be blessed. 15. Cursed be the man that brought tidings to my father, saying, A man-child is born unto thee; making him very glad. 16. And let that man be as the cities which the Lord overthrew, and repented not; and let him hear the cry in the morning, and the shouting at noon-\footnote{20}tide; 17. Because he slew me not from the womb; or that my mother might have been my grave, and her womb to be always great with me. 18. Wherefore came I forth out of the womb to see labour and sorrow, that my days should be consumed with shame? What is the meaning of this? Does there proceed out of the same mouth blessing and cursing? Could he that said so cheerfully, (v. 13.) Sing unto the Lord, praise ye the Lord, say so passionately, (v. 14.) Cursed be the day wherein I was born? How shall we reconcile these? What have we in these verses the prophet records, I suppose, to his own shame and humiliation, to set his people upon taking him, but to affect ourselves. Note, It will be an ease to our spirits, when we are oppressed and burthened, to open our cause to God, and pour out our complaints before him.
be ashamed of ourselves and our own folly, may admire the goodness of God in not taking us at our word, and may be warned by it to dissolve our guard upon our spirits, another time. See here how strong the temptation was, which the prophet, by divine assistance, got the victory over, and how far he yielded to it, that we may not despair, if we through the weakness of the flesh be at any time thus tempted. Let us see here,

1. What the prophet's language was, in this tempta-

(1.) He fastened a brand of infamy upon his birthday, as Job did in a heat; (ch. iii. 1.) "Curst be the day wherein I was born. It was an ill day to to me, (v. 14.) because it was the beginning of sorrows, and an inlet to all this misery." It is a wish that he had never been born. Judas in hell had reason to wish so; (Matth. xxvi. 24.) but no man on earth has reason to wish so, because he knows not but that he may yet become a vessel of mercy, much less has any good man reason to wish so. Whereas some keep their birth-day, at the return of the year, with gladness, he will look upon his birth-day as a melancholy day, and will solemnize it with sorrows, and will have it looked upon as an ominous day.

(2.) He wished ill to the messenger that brought his father the news of his birth, v. 15. It made his father very glad to hear that he had a child born, (perhaps it was his first-born,) especially that it was a man-child, for then being of the family of the priests, he might live to have the honour of serving God's altar; and yet he is ready to curse the man that brought him the tidings, when perhaps the father to whom they were brought, gave him a gra-unity for it. Here Mr. Gataker well observes, "That parents are often much rejoiced at the birth of their children, when, if they did foresee what misery they are born to, they would rather lament over them than rejoice in them." He is very free and very fierce in the curses he pronounces upon the messenger of his birth; (v. 16.) "Let him be as the cities of Sodom and Gomorrath, which the Lord utterly overthrew, and repented not, did not in the least mitigate or alleviate their misery. Let him hear the cry of the invading, besieging enemy in the morning, as soon as he is stirring, then let him take the alarm, and by noon let him hear their shouting for victory. And thus let him live in constant terror."

(2.) He is angry that the fate of the Hebrews' children in Egypt was not his, that he was not slain from the womb, that his first breath was not his, and that he was not strangled as soon as he came into the world, v. 17. He wishes the mesgenger of his birth had been better employed, and had been his murderer; nay, that his mother of whom he was born, had been, to her great misery, and his, in the very womb, and he, in the very womb, in which he was conceived, would have lived, without more ado, as a grave for him to be buried in.
Job intimates a near alliance and resemblance between the womb and the grave; (Job i. 21.) Naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked shall I return thither.

(4.) He thinks his present calamities sufficient to justify these passionate wishes; (v. 18.) "Wherefore came I forth out of the womb, where I lay hid, was not seen, was not hated, where I lay safe, and knew no evil, to see all this labour and sorrow, may to have my days consumed with shame, to be continually vexed and abused, to have my life not only spent in trouble, but wasted and worn away by troubles."

2. What use we may make of this. It is not recorded for our imitation, and yet we may learn good lessons from it.

(1.) See the vanity of human life, and the vexation of spirit that attends it. If there were not another life after this, we should be tempted many a time to wish that we had never known this, for our few days here are full of trouble.

(2.) See the folly and absurdity of sinful passion, how unreasonably it talks when it is suffered to ramble. What nonsense is it to curse a day—to curse a messenger for the sake of his message! What a brutish, barbarous thing for a child to wish his own mother had never been delivered of him!

(3.) See the weakness even of good men, who are but men at the best. See how much those who think they stand, are concerned to take heed lest they fall, and to pray daily, Father in heaven, lead us not into temptation!

CHAP. XXI.

It is plain that the prophecies of this book are not placed here in the same order in which they were preached; for there are chapters after this, which concern Jehoiakim, Jehoiakim, and Jeconiah, who all reigned before Zede-kiel, in which some of the prophetic words in this chapter appear.

Here is, 1. The message which Zedekiah sent to the prophet, to inquire of him to the Lord for them, v. 1, 2. 2. The answer which Jeremiah, in God's name, sends to that message; in which, 1. He foretells the certain and inevitable ruin of the city, and the fruitless-ness of their attempts for its preservation, v. 3, 7. 2. He advises the people to make the best of bad, by going over to the king of Babylon, v. 8, 10. 3. He advises the king and his family to repent and reform, (v. 11, 12,) and not to trust to the strength of their city, and grow secure, v. 13, 14.

1. T

HE word which came unto Jeremiah from the Lord, when king Zedekiah sent unto him Paschur the son of Melchiah, and Zephaniah the son of Maaseah the priest, saying,

2. Inquire, I pray thee, of the Lord for us; for Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon maketh war against us; if so be that the Lord will deal with us according to all his wondrous works, that he may go up from us. 3. Then said Jeremiah unto them, Thus shall ye say to Ze-dekiah, 4. Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Behold, I will turn back the weapons of war that are in your hands, wherewith you fight against the king of Babylon, and against the Chaldeans, which besiege you without the walls, and I will assemble them into the midst of this city. 5. And I myself will fight against you with an outstretched hand, and with a strong arm, even in anger, and in fury, and in great wrath. 6. And I will smite the inhabitants of this city, both man and beast: they shall die of a great pestilence. 7. And afterward, saith the Lord, I will deliver Zedekiah king of Judah, and his servants, and the people, and such as are left in this city from the pestiulence, from the sword, and from the famine, into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of those that seek their life: and he shall smite them with the edge of the sword; he shall not spare them, neither have pity, nor have mercy.

Here is, a very humble, decent message which King Zedekiah sent to Jeremiah the prophet, when he was in distress. It is indeed charged upon this Zedekiah, that he humbled not himself before Jeremiah the prophet, speaking from the mouth of the Lord; (2 Chron. xxxvi. 12,) he did not always humble himself as he did sometimes; he never humbled himself till necessity forced him to it; he humbled himself so far as to desire the prophet's assistance, but not so far as to take his advice, or to be ruled by him. Observe,

1. The distress which King Zedekiah was now in; "Behold, these nations, which go forth against thee, which came up against thee, are such as ate flesh in the mountains, dwelt in the thickness of the forests; they said, Let us lie in wait for the Lord, and his pasture, because of his anointing; let us lie in wait for all his shepherds; and we will smite them without cause. But I will raise up against them such an enemy as they have not known; I will confound them with their own counsels: and I will turn their own weapons against them. For I am the Lord, the God of all flesh: is there a thing too hard for me?" Is. xlv. 19. 20, 21.

2. The messengers he sent, Pashur and Zephaniah, one belonging to the fifth course of the priests, the other to the 24th. 1 Chron. xxiv. 9, 18. It was well that he sent, that he sent persons of rank; it had been better if he had desired a personal conference with the prophet, which, no doubt, he might easily have had if he would so far have humbled himself. Perhaps these priests were no better than the rest, and yet, when they were commanded by the king, they must carry a respectful message to the prophet, which was both a mortification to them and an honour to Jeremiah. He had rashly said, (ch. xx. 18.) My days are consumed with shame; and yet here we find that he lived to see better days than these were, when he made that complaint; now he appears in reputation. Note, It is folly to say, when things are bad with us, "They will always be so." It is possible that those who are despised, may come to be respected; and it is promised, that those who honour God, he will honour, and that those who have afflicted his people, shall bow to them. Isa. lx. 14.

3. The message itself, Inquire, I pray thee, of the Lord for us, v. 2. Now that the Chaldean army was got into him, but came to their bowels, they were at length convinced that Jeremiah was a true prophet, though loath to own it, and brought too late to it. Under this conviction, they desire him to stand their friend with God, believing him to have that interest in heaven, which none of their other prophets had, who had flattered them with hopes of peace. They now employ Jeremiah, (1.) To consult the mind of God for them; "Inquire of the Lord for us." He is consulted with reference to the present distress, for the measures we have hitherto taken are all broken." Note, Those that will not take the direction of God's grace, how to get clear of their sins, would yet be glad of the directions of his providence, how to get clear of their troubles. (2.) To seek the favour of God for them: so some read it; "Entreat the Lord for us; be an intercessor for us;" and (as before,) Not in vain, for the prayers of God's people and ministers when they are in prosperity, may perhaps be glad of an interest in them when they come to be in distress. Give us of your oil. The benefit they promise themselves, is, It may be, the Lord will deal with us now according to the wondrous works he wrought for our fathers, that the enemy may rise the siege, and go lift from us. Observe, [1.] All their care is, to get rid of their trouble: not to make their peace with God, and be reconciled to him; "That our enemy may go up from us," not, "That our God may return to us." Thus Pharaoh, (Exod. x. 17.) Entreat the Lord that he may take away this death. [2.] All their hope is, that God had done wondrous works formerly in the deliverance of Jerusalem when Sennacherib besieged it, at the prayer of Isaiah: so we are told, 2 Chron. xxxii. 29, 31. And why do we not find that they now tell how they must make haste to tell their messengers, to be did what God will do at the prayer of Jeremiah? But they did not consider how different the character of Zedekiah and his people was from that of Hezekiah and his people: those were days of general reformation and piety, these of general corruption and apostacy. Jerusalem is now the reverse of what it was then. Note, It is folly to think that God should do for us while we hold fast our iniquity, as he did for those that held fast their integrity.

4. A very startling, cutting reply, which God, by the prophet, sent to that message. If Jeremiah had been to have answered the message of himself, we have reason to think that he would have returned a comfortable answer, in hope their sending of such a message was an indication of some good purposes in them, which he would be glad to make the most of. But he did not let the king know their hearts better than Jeremiah does, and sends them an answer which hath scarcely one word of comfort in it. He sends it in the name of the Lord God of Israel, (v. 3.) to intimate to them, that though God allowed himself to be called the God of Israel, and had done great things for Israel formerly, and had still great things in store for Israel, may not we use the covenants with them, yet this should stand the present generation in no stead, who were Israelites in name only, and not in deed, any more than God's dealings with them should cut off his relation to Israel as their God. It is here foretold,

1. That God will render all their endeavours for their own security fruitless and ineffectual; (v. 4.) I will be so far from teaching your hands to war, and putting an edge upon your swords, that I will turn back the weapons of war that are in your hand, when you sally out upon the besiegers to beat them off, so that they shall not give the stroke you design; nay, they shall recoil into your own faces, and be turned upon yourselves. Nothing can make for those who have God against them.

2. That the besiegers shall in a little time make themselves masters of Jerusalem, and of all its wealth and glory; "Jerusalem, the city, who are now surrounding it. Note, If that place, which should have been a centre of devotion, be made a centre of wickedness, it is not strange if God make it a rendezvous of destroyers."

3. That God himself will be their Enemy; and then I know not who can befriend them, no, nor Jeremiah himself; (v. 5.) "I will be so far from preserving Egypt, as has been the case, that myself will fight against you." Note, Those who rebel against God may justly expect that he will make war upon them; and that, (1.) With the power of a God who is irresistibly victorious: I will fight against you with an outstretched arm, which will reach far, and with a strong arm, which will strike home, and wound deep. (2.) With the wrath of his angry justice; "and in fury, and in great wrath; it is a sentence sworn in wrath, against which there will be no exception; and it will soon be found what a fearful thing it is to fall into the hands of the living God."

4. That these who, for their own safety, decline sallying out upon the besiegers, and so avoid their sword, shall yet not escape the sword of God's justice; (v. 6.) I will smite those that abide in the city, himself hath set his face against this city for evil, and not for good, to lay it waste, and not to protect it, for evil which shall have no good mixed with it, because they have not forsaken the ways of their fathers, and that therefore if you would make the best of bad, you must stagger out of the Chaldeans, and surrender prisoners of war."

In vain did Rabshakeh persuade the Jews to do this while they had God for them, (Isa. xxxvi. 16.) but it was the best course they could take now that God was against them. Both the law and the prophets had often set before them life and death in another sense—life through his grace, and death by his wrath.

They persist in disobedience, (Deut. xxx. 19.) but they had slighted that life which would have made them truly happy, to upbraid them with which the prophet here uses the same expression; (v. 8.) Behold, I set before you the way of life and the way of death, which denotes not, as that, a fair proposal, but a melancholy dilemma, advising them of two evils to choose the least; and that lesser evil, a shameful and wretched captivity, is all the life now left for them to propose to themselves. He that abides in the city, and trusts to that to secure them, shall certainly die either by the sword without the walls, or famine or pestilence within. But he that can so far bring down his spirit, and quit his vain hopes, as to set his heart and hands upon it, the Chaldeans, his life shall be given him for a prey; and they shall not steal, but with much difficulty and hazard, as a prey is taken from the mighty. It is an expression like that, He shall be saved, yet so as by fire. He shall escape, but very narrowly; or, he shall have such surprising joy and satisfaction in escaping with his life from such a universal destruction, as shall equal all that he had lost. They thought they had made a prey of the camp of the Chaldeans, as their ancestors did that of the Assyrians, (Isa. xxxviii. 23.) but they will be sadly disappointed; if by yielding discretion they can but save their lives, that is all the prey they must promise themselves. New e we would think this advice from a prophet, in God's name, should have gained some credit with them, and been universally followed; but, for aught that appears, there were few or none that took it; so wretchedly were their hearts hardened to their destruction.

2. He advises the king and princes to reform, and make conscience of the duty of their place. Because it was the king that sent the message to him, in the reply there shall be a particular word for the house of the king; and the godly repentance made to them, (that was no part of a prophet's business, no more then they did him the honour to send to him,) but to give them wholesome counsel; (v. 11, 12.) "Execute judgment in the morning; do it carefully and diligently. Those magistrates that would fill up their place with duty, had need rise betimes. Do it quickly, and do not delay to do justice upon offenders made to you, nor tire out patience with them, before you have done. Do not lie in your beds in a morning, to sleep away the debauch of the night before, nor spend the morning in panpering the body, (as those princes, Eccl. x. 16.) but spend it in the despatch of business. You would be delivered out of the hand of those that distress you, and expect that thereon God should do you justice; see then that you do justice to those that apply themselves to you, and deliver them out of the hand of their oppressors, let my fury go out like fire against you in a particular manner, and you fare worst, who think to escape best, because of the evil of your doings." Now, (I.) This intimates that it was their neglect to do their duty, that brought all this desolation upon the people. It was the neglect of them that kindled the fire of God's wrath. Thus plainly does he deal even with the house of the king; for those that would have the benefit of a prophet's prayers, must think-fully take a prophet's reproofs. (2.) This directs them to take the right method for a national reformation. The priests must begin, and set a good example, and then the people will be invited to reform. They must use their power for the punishment of wrong, and then the people will be obliged to reform. He reminds them that they are the House of David, and therefore should treat in his steps, who executed judgment and justice to his people. (3.) This gives them the reason why he encouraged him to hope that he may be a lengthening of their trouble and want. He is a rock of the plain, which makes it difficult for an army to undermine them. These advantages of their situation they trusted to more than to the power and promise of God; and thinking their city by these means to be impregnable, they set the judgments of God at defiance, saying, "Who shall come down against us? None of our neighbours dare make a descent upon us; or, if they do, who shall enter into our cities?" They had good colour for this confidence; for it appears to have been the sense of all their neighbours that no enemy could force his way into Jerusalem, Lam. iv. 12. But those are least safe, that are most secure. God soon shows the vanity of that challenge, Who shall come down against us? when he says, (v. 13.) Behold, I am against you. They had indeed by their wickedness driven God out of their city, when he would have tarried with them as a Friend; but they could not by their bulwarks keep him out of their city, when he came against them as an Enemy. If God be for us, who can be against us? But if he be against us, who can be for us, to stand us in any stead? Nay, he comes against them not as an Enemy that may lawfully and with some hope of success be resisted, but as a Judge that cannot be resisted; for he says, (v. 14.) I will punish you, by due course of law, according to the fruit of your doings, according to the merit of them, and the direct tendency of them. That shall be brought upon you, which is the natural product of sin. Nay, he will not only come with the anger of an enemy, and the justice of a judge, but with the force of a consuming fire, which has no compassion, as a judge sometimes has, nor spares any thing combustible, that comes in its way. Jeremiah is become a leper, and like him, he son of Jehoiakim, saith the Lord, will kindle a fire that shall consume all before it; for our God is himself a consuming Fire; and who is able to stand in his sight, when once he is angry.

CHAP. XXII.

Upon occasion of the message sent in the foregoing chapter to the house of the king, we have here recorded some sermons which Jeremiah preached at court, in some preceding reigns, that, as a great comfort, they had had warning long before that fatal sentence was pronounced upon them, and were put in a way to have prevented it. Here is, I. A message sent to the royal family, as it should seem, in the reign of Jehoiakim, relating partly to Jehozekiah, who was made away, and partly to his father, and partly to Jehoiakim, who succeeded him, and was now upon the throne. The king and princes are exhorted to exercise judgment, and are assured that, if they do so, the royal family and kingdom shall prosper; but otherwise it should be ruined, v. 1-9. Jehozekiah, called here, Shallum, is lamented, v. 10, 11. Jehoiakim is reproved and reproached, v. 12-15. II. Another message sent them in the reign of Jehoiakim, and ala, Jehoiachin, the son of Jehoiakim. He is charged with an obstinate refusal to hear, and is threatened with destruction, and it is foretold, that in him Solomon's house should fall, v. 16, 17.

1. Thus saith the Lord, Go down to the house of the king of Judah, and speak there this word, 2. And say, Hear the word of the Lord, O king of Judah, that sittest upon the throne of David, thou, and thy servants, and thy people that enter in by these gates; 3. Thus saith the Lord, Execute ye judgment and righteousness, and deliver the spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor: and do no wrong, do no violence to the stranger, the fatherless, nor the widow, neither shed innocent blood in this place. 4. For if ye do this thing indeed, then shall there enter in by the gates of this house kings, sitting upon the throne of David, riding in chariots and on horses, he, and his servants, and his people. 5. But if ye will not hear these words, I swear by myself, saith the Lord, that this house shall become a desolation. 6. For thus saith the Lord unto the king's house of Judah, Thou art Gilead unto me, and the head of Lebanon: yet surely I will make thee a wilderness, and cities which are not inhabited. 7. And I will prepare destroyers against thee, every one with his weapons: and they shall cut down thy choice cedars, and cast them into the fire. 8. And many nations shall pass by this city, and they shall say every man to his neighbour, Wherefore hath the Lord done thus unto this great city? 9. Then they shall answer, Because they have forsaken the covenant of the Lord their God, and worshipped other gods, and served them.

Here we have,

1. Orders given to Jeremiah to preach before the king. In the chapter before, Zedekiah sent messengers to the prophet, but here the prophet is bidden to go, in his own proper person, to the house of the king, and demand his attention to the word of the King of kings; (v. 2.) Hear the word of the Lord, O king of Judah. Subjects must own, that where the word of a king is, there is power over them; but kings must own, that where the word of the Lord is, there is power over them. The King of Judah is here spoken to, as sitting upon the throne of David, who was a man after God's own heart, as holding their dignity and power by the covenant made with him; let them therefore conform to his example, that they may have the benefit of the promises made to him. With the king his servants are spoken to, because a good government depends upon a good prince, and a good prince being the key of good government. II. Instructions given him what to preach. 1. He must tell them what was their duty, what was the good which the Lord their God required of them, v. 3. They must take care, (1.) That they do all the good they can with the power they have. They must do justice, in defence of those that were injured, and must deliver the spoilt out of the hand of their oppressors. This was the duty of the king, Ps. Lxxxii. 3. Herein they must be ministers of God for good. (2.) That they do no hurt with it, no wrong, no violence. That is the greatest wrong and violence, which is done under colour of law and justice, and by those whose business it is to punish and protect from wrong and violence.
They must do no wrong to the stranger, fatherless, and widow, for these God does in a particular manner patronize, and take under his tuition, Exod. xxii. 21, 22.

2. He must assure them that the faithful discharge of their duty would advance and secure their prosperity, v. 4. There shall then be a succession of kings, an uninterrupted succession, upon the throne of David, and of his line; these enjoying a perfect tranquillity in every external blessing that could contribute to the dignity, riding on chariots, and horses, as before, ch. xvii. 25. Note, The most effectual way to preserve the dignity of the government, is, to do the duty of it.

3. He must likewise assure them that the iniquity of their family, if they persisted in it, would be the ruin of their family, though it was a royal family; v. 5. If they will not hear, will not obey, this house shall become a desolation, the palace of the kings of Judah shall fare no better than other habitations in Jerusalem. Sin has often been the ruin of royal palaces, though ever so stately, ever so strong. This sentence is ratified by an oath; I swear by myself, (and God can swear by no greater, Heb. vi. 13.) that this house shall be laid in ruins. Note, Sin will be the ruin of the houses of princes as well as of mean men.

4. He must show how fatal their wickedness would be to their kingdom as well as to themselves, to Jerusalem especially, the royal city, v. 6-9. (1.) It is confessed that Judah and Jerusalem had been valuable in God's eyes, and considerable in their own; Thou art Gilead unto me, and the head of Lebanon. But they were cast in a place that was rich and pleasant as Gilead; Zion was a strong hold, as stately as Lebanon: this they trusted to as their security. But, (2.) This shall not protect them; the country that is now fruitful as Gilead, shall be made a wilderness. The cities that are now strong as Lebanon, shall be cities not inhabited; and when the country is laid waste, the cities must be despeckled. See how easily God's judgments can ruin a nation, and how certainly sin will do it.

When this desolating work is to be done, [1.] There shall be those that shall do it effectually; (v. 7.) "I will prepare destroyers against thee; I will sanctify them," (so the word is,) "I will appoint them to this service and use them in it." Note, When destruction is designed, destroyers are prepared; they are in the preparing, and things are working toward the designed destruction, and are getting ready for it, long before. And who can contend with the destroyers of God's preparing? They shall destroy cities as easily as men fell trees in a forest; They shall cut down the choice cedars; and yet, when they are down, shall value them no more than thorns or briers; they shall be consumed, for their choicest cedars are become rotten ones, and good for nothing else. [2.] There shall be those who shall be ready to justify God in the doing of it; (v. 8, 9.) persons of many nations, when they pass by the ruins of this city in their travels, will ask, "Therefore hath the Lord done thus unto this city? How came so strong a city to be overpowered? So rich a city to be impoverished? So holy a city to be profaned? And a city that had been so dear to God, to be abandoned by him? The reason is so obvious, that it shall be ready in every man's mouth.

Ask them that go by the way, Job xxxi. 29. Ask the next man you meet, and he will tell you it was because they changed their gods, which other nations new to do. They forsook God, the covenant servant of Jehovah their God, derived from their allegiance to him, and from the duty which their covenant with him bound them to; and they worshipped other gods, and served them, in contempt of him; and therefore he gave them up to this destruction. Note, God never casts any off until they first cast him off. "Go," says God to the prophet, "and preach this to the royal family."

10. Weep ye not for the dead, neither bewail him; but weep sore for him that goeth away: for he shall return no more, nor see his native country. 11. For thus saith the Lord touching Shallum the son of Josiah king of Judah, which reigned instead of Josiah his father, which went forth out of this place, He shall not return thither any more: 12. But he shall die in the place whither they have led him captive, and shall see this land no more. 13. Wo unto him that buildeth his house by unrighteousness, and his chambers by wrong; that useth his neighbour's service without wages, and giveth him not for his work; 14. That saith, I will build me a wide house, and large chambers, and cutteh him out windows: and it is eedled with cedars, and painted with vermilion! 15. Shall thou reign because thou closest thyself in cedar? Did not thy father eat and drink, and do judgment and justice, and then it was well with him? 16. He judged the cause of the poor and needy; then it was well with him: was not this to know me? saith the Lord.

17. But thine heart and thy heart are not but for thy coveitiveness, and for to shed innocent blood, and for oppression, and for violence to do it. 18. Therefore thus saith the Lord concerning Jehoahkim the son of Josiah king of Judah: They shall not lament for him, saying, Ah my brother! or, Ah sister! they shall not lament for him, saying, Ah lord! or, Ah his glory! 19. He shall be buried with the burial of an ass, drawn and cast forth beyond the gates of Jerusalem.

Kings, though they are gods to us, are men to God, and shall di[e] like men; so it appears in these verses, where we have a sentence of death post upon two kings who reigned successively in Jerusalem, two brothers, and both the ungracious sons of a very pious father.

1. Here is the doom of Shallum, who doubtless is the same with Jehoahaz, for he is that son of Josiah, king of Judah, who reigned in the stead of Josiah his father, (v. 11.) which Jehoahaz did by the act of the people who made him king, though he was not the eldest son, 2 Kings xxii. 30. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 1. Among the sons of Josiah (1 Chron. iii. 15.) there is one Shallum mentioned, and not Jehoahaz. Perhaps the people preferred him before his elder brother, because they thought him a more active, daring young man, and fitter to rule; but God soon showed them the folly of their injustice, and that it could not prosper, for within three months the kings of Egypt came upon them, deposed him, and carried him away prisoner into Egypt, as God had threatened. Deut. xxxxxiv. 6. It does not appear that any of the people were taken into captivity with him. We have the story, 2 Kings xxiii. 34. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 4. Now here,

1. The people are directed to lament him rather than his father Josiah: "Weep not for the dead, weep not any more for Josiah." Jeremiah had been himself a true mourner for him, and had stirred up the people to mourn for him; (2 Chron. xxxv. 25.) yet now he will have them go out of mourning for him, though it was but three months after his death, and to turn their tears into another channel, they must weep and mourn for the destruction of Tyre, and not that there was any great loss of him to the public, as there was of his father, but that his case was much more deplorable. Josiah went to the grave in peace and honour, was prevented from seeing the evil to come in this world, and removed to see the good to come in the other world; and therefore, Weep not for him, but for his unhappy son, who is like to have no prospect of his father's event: in wretched captivity. Note, Dying saints may be justly envied, while living sinners are justly pitied. And so dismal perhaps the prospect of the times may be, that tears even for a Josiah, even for a Jesus, must be restrained, that they may be reserved for ourselves and our children, Luke xxiii. 28.

2. The reason given is, because he shall never remove his bones, but shall lie where he died, and shall die there. They were loath to believe this, therefore it is repeated here again and again, and shall return no more, v. 10. He shall never have the pleasure of seeing his native country, but shall have the continual grief of hearing of the desolations of it. He is gone forth out of this place, and shall never return, v. 11. He shall die in the place whither they have led him alive, v. 12. This cannot be forsaking the good example of his father, and usurping the right of his elder brother. In Ezekiel's lamentation for the princes of Israel, this Jeconiah is represented as a young lion, that soon learned to catch the prey, but was taken, and brought in chains to Egypt, and was long expected to return, but in vain. See Ezek. xix. 3—5.

11. Here is the doom of Jeconiah, who succeeded him. Whether he had any better right to the crown than Shallum, we know not; for though he was elder than his predecessor, there seems to be another son of Josiah, elder than he, called Johanan, 1 Chron. iii. 15. But this we know, he ruled no better, and fared no better at last. Here is,

1. His sins faithfully reproved. It is not fit for a private person to say to a king, Thou art wicked; but a prophet, who represents God, and does not take away his trust if he does not deliver it, be it ever so unpleasing, even to kings themselves. Jehoiakim is not here charged with idolatry, and, probably, he had not yet put Urijah the prophet to death, (as we find afterward he did, ch. xxvi. 22, 23.) for then he would have been told of it here; but the crimes for which he is here reproved, are, (1.) Pride, and affection of pomp and splendor. God had been so rich a king, as to look great, and to do good were to be the least of his care. He must build him a stately palace, a wide house, and large chambers, v. 14. He must have windows cut out after the newest fashion, perhaps like sash-windows with us. The rooms must be ceiled with cedar, the richest sort of wood. His house must be as well roofed and wainscotted as the temple itself, or else it must look like a poorハウス, as Kings vi. 15. Nay, it must exceed that, for it must be painted with minim, or vermilion, which dyes red, or, as some read it, with indigo, which dyes blue. No doubt, it is lawful for princes and great men to build and beautify and furnish their houses, so as is agreeable to their dignity; but he that knows what is in men, knew that Jeconiah did this in the pride of his heart, that it might be as a vainglorious reproach to the temple of the Lord. And (2.) Covetousness, which is in itself lawful. Those therefore that are enlarging their houses, and making them more sumptuous, have need to look well to the frame of their own spirits in the doing of it, and carefully to watch against all the workings of vanity. But that which was particularly amiss in Jehoiakim's case, was, that he did this when he could not but perceive, both by the word of God, and by his providence, that divine judgments were breaking in upon him. He reigned his three first years like other monarchs of his house, and not as one who had been the governor of Egypt, and all the rest by the permission and allowance of the king of Babylon; and yet he that was no better than a viceroy, will covet to vie with the greatest monarch in building and furniture. Observe how preposterous it is in this resolution; "I will build me a wide house; I am resolved I will, whoever advises me to the contrary." Note, It is often against the interest of kings to spend much in building, to keep up their estates, to covet to make a fair show. Many have unhallowed hearts under humbling providences, and look most naughtily then when God is bringing them down. This is striving with our Maker. (2.) Carnal security and confidence in his wealth, depending upon the continuance of his prosperity, as if his mountain now stood so strong, that it could never be moved; when he must reign without any disturbance or interruption, and he had himself in cedar, (v. 15.) as if that were too fine to be assaulted, and too strong to be broken through, and as if God himself could not, for pity, give up such a stately house as that to be burned. Thus when Christ spake of the destruction of the temple, his disciples came to him, to show him what a magnificent structure it was, Matt. xxiii. 21. It is good to think of this. See xxxv. 25. 1. Note, Those were the wise ones among themselves, who think their present prosperity is a lasting security, and dream of reigning, because they are enclosed in cedar. It is but in his own conceit, that the rich man's wealth is his strong city. (3.) Some think he is here charged with sacrilege, and robbing the house of God to beautify and adorn his own houses. He cuts him out my windows; so it is in the margin, which some understand as if he had taken windows out of the temple to put into his own palace, and then painted them (as it follows) with vermilion, that it might not be discovered, but might look of a piece with his own building. Note, Those cheat themselves, and ruin themselves at last, who think to enrich themselves by robbing God and his house; and however they may disguise their actions by such seeming advantages, it will be found in the end that they have been the poor instruments of extortions and oppression, violence and injustice. He built his house by unrighteousness, with money unjustly got, and materials which were not honestly come by, and perhaps upon ground obtained as Ahab obtained Naboth's vineyard. And because he went beyond what he could afford, he defrauded his workmen of their wages, which is one of the greatest crimes in the ears of the Lord of hosts, Jer. v. 4. God takes notice of the wrong done by the greatest of men to their poor servants and laborers, and will repay them, in justice, that will not in justice pay those whom they employ, but use their neighbours' service without wages. Observe, The greatest of men must look upon the meanest as their neighbours, and he just to them accordingly, and love that cries themselves the inhabitation of Jehovah, Psa. vii. 19. So Jeconiah, not only in his buildings, but in the administration of his government. He did not do justice, made no conscience of shedding innocent blood, when it was to serve the purposes of his ambition, avarice, and revenge. He was all for oppression and violence; not to threaten it only, but to do it; and when he was set upon any act of injustice, nothing should stop him, but he would go through with it. And this was as much as to say, Do as you please, with any impudence, and no one will tell you it is unseasonable, that love of money, which is the root of all evil. Thine eyes and thine heart are not but for covetousness; they were for that, and nothing else. Observe,
In covetousness the heart walks after the eyes: it is therefore called the lust of the eye, 1 John ii. 16. Job xxxi. 7. It is setting the eyes upon that which is not, Prov. xxxix. 5. "The eyes and the heart are then for covetousness, when the aims and affections are wholly set upon the wealth of this world; and where they are so, the temptation is strong to murmur, oppress and murder, and murder, and murder!" (v. 15.) Than which aggravated all his sins, was, that he was the son of a good father, who had left him a good example, if he would but have followed it; (v. 15, 16.) Did not thy father eat and drink? When Jehoiakim enlarged and enlightened his house, it is probable that he spoke scornfully of his father for containing himself with such a mean and inconvenient dower, as he and his family were possessed of. That which was a dull fancy, a low spirit, that could not find in his heart to lay out his money, nor cared for what was fashionable; that should not serve him, that served his father: but God, by the prophet, tells him that his father, though he had not the spirit of building, was a man of an excellent spirit, a better man than he, and did better for himself, and for his father's sake, that did not abuse his power for the support of wrong, but he used it for the maintaining of right. He judged the cause of the poor and needy, was ready to hear the cause of the meanest of his subjects, and do them justice. Note, The care of magistrates must be, not to support their grandeur and take their case, but to do good; not only not to oppress the poor themselves, but to defend those that are oppressed.

[2.] That he was encouraged to do his duty by his father's prosperity. First, God accepted him; "Was not this to know me, saith the Lord? Did he not hereby make it to appear that he rightly knew God, and worshipped him, and, consequently, was known and owned of him?" Note, The right knowledge of God consists in doing our duty, pursuant to his will, and, for that, God will own and, for that, God will own and value us. Those that despise the duty of their place and station in the world. Secondly, He himself had the comfort of it; Did he not eat and drink soberly and cheerfully, so as to fit himself for his business, for strength, and not for drunkenness? Exod. x. 17. He did eat, and drink, and do judgement; he did not (as perhaps Jehoiakim and his princes did) drink, and forget the law, and pervert the judgement of the afflicted, Prov. xxxix. 5. He did eat and drink; God blessed him with great plenty, and he had the comfortable enjoyment of it himself, and gave handsome entertainments to his friends, was very hospitable, and very charitable. It was Jehoiakim's pride, that he had built a fine house, but Josiah's true praise, that he kept a good house. Many times those who have least in them of true generosity, yet excel in the duties of their station in life; so did the afflicted (Prov. xxxix. 5.) He did eat and drink; he lived comfortably, his own subjects, and all his neighbours, respected him; and, whatever he put his hand to, prospered. Note, While we do well, we may expect it will be well with us. This Jehoiakim knew, that his father found the way of duty to be the way of comfort, and yet he would not tread in his steps. Note, It should engage us to keep up religion in our day, that our godly parents kept it up in theirs, and recommended it to us from their own experience of the benefit of it. They told us that they had found the promises which godliness has, of the enjoyment of prosperity, and piety are friendly to outward prosperity.

So that we are inexcusable, if we turn aside from that good way.

2. Here we have Jechiah's doom faithfully read, v. 18, 19. We may suppose that it was in the utmost peril of his own life, that Jeremiah here foretold the shameful death of Jechiah; but Thus shall it be with the Levites, foretold by Haggai, ii. 10, 11, was written some years after, and according to the style of the prophet, to tell Jechiah that he should be lamented at his death, for he conducted himself better than Jechiah had done, ch. xxxiv. 5. His relations shall not lament him; no, not with the common expressions of grief used at the funeral of the meanest, where they cried, Ah, my brother! or, Ah, sister! His subjects shall not lament him, nor cry cut, as they used to do at the graves of their princes, Ah, lord! or, Ah, his glory! It is said for any to live so, that, when they die, none will be sorry to part with them. Nay, (2.) He shall be uncircumcised; this is worse than the former. Even these that have no tears to grace the funerals of the dead with, would willingly have them buried out of their sight; but Jechiah shall be buried with the burial of an ass, he shall have no burial at all, but his dead body shall be cast into a ditch, or upon a dunghill; it shall be drawn, or dragged, ignominiously, and cast forth without the gates of Jerusalem. It is said, in the story of Jechiah, (2 Chron. xxxvi. 6.) that Nebuchadnezzar bound him in fetters, to carry him to Babylon, and (Ezek. xix. 9.) that he was brought in chains to the king of Babylon. But it is probable that he died a prisoner, before he was carried away to Babylon, as was intended; perhaps he died for grief, or, in the pride of his heart, hastened his own destruction. He was then in the prime of his age, as self-murderers usually are with us. Josephus says that Nebuchadnezzar slew him at Jerusalem, and left his body thus exposed, somewhere at a great distance from the gates of Jerusalem. And it is said, (2 Kings xxiv. 6.) He slept with his fathers. When he built himself a stately house, no doubt he designed himself a stately sepulchre; but see how he was disappointed. Note, Those that are lifted up with great pride, are commonly reserved for some great disgrace in life or death.

20. Go up to Lebanon, and cry; and lift up thy voice in Bashan, and cry from the passages; for all thy lovers are destroyed. 21. I spake unto thee in thy prosperity; but thou saidst, I will not hear: this hath been thy manner from thy youth, that thou obeyest not my voice. 22. The wind shall eat up all thy pastures, and thy lovers shall go into captivity: surely then shalt thou be ashamed and confounded for all thy wickedness. 23. O inhabitant of Lebanon, that maketh thy nest in the cedars, low grumous shalt thou be when pangs come upon thee, the pain as of a woman in travail. 21. As I said, saith the Lord, though Coniah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah were the signet upon my right hand, yet would I pluck thee thence; 22. And I will give thee into the hand of them that seek thy life, and into the hand of them whose face thou fearest, even into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of the Chaldeans. 23. And I will cast thee out, and thy mother that bare thee, into another country, where ye were not born; and there shall ye die. 24. But to the land wherein they desire to return, thither shall they not return.

28. Is this man Coniah a despised broken idol? is he a vessel wherein is no pleasure! wherefore are they cast out, he and his seed, and are cast into a land which they know not? 29. O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord: 30. Thus saith the Lord. Write ye this man childless, a man that shall not prosper in his days: for no man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David, and ruling any more in Judah.

This prophecy seems to have been calculated for the ungracious, inglorious reign of Jeconiah, or Jehoiachin, the son of Jehoiakim, who succeeded him in the kingdom, resigned but three months, and was then carried captive to Babylon, where he lived many years, Jer. li. 31. We have, in these verses, a prophecy,

1. Of the desolations of the kingdom, which were now hastening on, v. 20. 23. Jerusalem and Judah are here spoken to, or the Jewish state as a single person, and we have it here under a threefold character.

1. Very haughty in a day of peace and safety; (v. 21.) "I spake unto thee in thy prosperity; spake, by my servants the prophets, reproves, admonitions, counsels, but thou saidst, I will not hear, I will not heed, thou obeyedst not my voice, and wasd resolved that thou wouldst not, and hast the front to tell me so." It is common for those that live at ease, to live in a nest of the word of God. Jehovah waved fat, and kicked. This is so much the worse, that they had it by kind; This has been thy manner from thy youth. They were called transgressors from the womb, Isa. xlvii. 8.

2. Very timorous upon the alarms of trouble; (v. 26.) "When thou seest all thy lovers destroyed, when thou findest thine ideals unable to help thee, and thy foreign alliances failing thee, then wilt thou go up to Babylon, and cry, as one mourns; and giving up all for lost, cry with a bitter cry; then wilt cry, Help, help, or we are lost; thou wilt lift up thy voice in fearful shrieks, upon Lebanon and Bashan, two high hills, in hope to be heard from thence by the advantage of the rising ground. Thou wilt cry from the passages, from the roads, where thou wilt ever and anon be in distress." Thou wilt cry from Assyria, as the other land, a famous mountain in the border of Moab. Thou wilt cry, as those that are in great consternation use to do, to all about thee; but in vain, for, (v. 22.) the wind shall eat up all thy pastors, or rulers, that should protect and lead thee, and provide for thy safety; they shall be blasted, and withered, and brought to nothing, as buds and blossoms are by a bleak or freezing wind; they shall be devoured sunder, insensible, and irresistibly, as fruits by the wind. Thy lovers, that thou didst depend on, and hast an attraction for, shall go into captivity, and shall be so far from saving thee, that they shall not be able to save themselves."

3. Very tame under the heavy and lasting pressures of trouble; "When there appears no relief from any of thy confederates, and thy own priests are at a loss, then shall thou be ashamed and confounded all thy wickedness;" v. 22. Note, Many will never be ashamed of their own sins, but are brought by them to the last extremity; and it is well if we get this good by our straits, by them to be brought to confession for our sins. The Jewish state is here called an inhabitant of Lebanon, because that famous forest was within their border, (v. 23.) and all their country was wealthy, and well guarded with Lebanon's natural fastnesses; but so proud and haughty were they, that they are said to make their nest in the cedars, where they thought themselves out of the reach of all danger, and whence they looked with contempt upon all about them. "But, how gracious wilt thou be when tidings come upon thee! Then thou wilt humble thyself before God, and promise amendment. "When they art overthrown in stony places, thou wilt be glad to hear them cry, I am in miseries, and in desolations, thou wouldst not hear, Ps. cxlii. 6. Then the Lord will endeavour to make thyself acceptable with that God whom, before, thou most light of." Note, Many have their pangs of piety, who, when the pangs are over, show that they have no true piety. Some give another sense of it; "What will all thy pangs, and state, and wealth avail thee! What will be of all, or what comfort shall thou have of it, when thou wilt be in these distresses? No more than a woman in travail, full of pains and fears, can take comfort in her ornaments while she is in that condition." So Mr. Gataker, Note, Those that are proud of their worldly advantages, would do well to consider how they will look when pangs come upon them, and how they will then have lost all their beauty.

11. Here is a prophecy of the disrace of the king; his name was Jeconiah, but he is here once and again called Coniah, in contempt. The prophet shortens his name, and gives him, as we say, a nickname, perhaps to denote that he should be despised of his dignity, that his reign should be shortened, and the number of his months cut off in the midst. Two instances of dishonour are here put upon him. He shall be ashamed, and covered with shame, and shall spend and end his days in bondage. He was born to a crown, but it should quickly fall from his head, and he should exchange it for fetters. Observe the steps of this judgment.

(1.) God will abandon him, v. 24. The God of truth says it, and confirms it with an oath; "Though he were the signet upon my right hand, (his predecessors had been so, and he might have been so, but he had done well; but he had done ill,) I will pluck him thence." The godly kings of Judah had been as signets on God's right hand, near and dear to him; he had gloried in them, and made use of them as instruments of his government, as the prince does of his signet-ring, or signet-manual: but Coniah has made himself utterly unworthy of the honour, and therefore the privilege of being God's signet, or seal. Hence the property of the signet, not being his by right or law, and standing that, he shall be thrown off. Answerable to this threatening against Jeconiah is God's promise to Zerubbabel, when he made him his people's guide in their return out of captivity; (Hag. ii. 23.) I will take thee, O Zerubbabel, my servant, and make thee as a signet. Those that think themselves as signets on God's right hand, must not be secure, but fear lest they be plucked thence.
(2.) The king of Babylon shall seize him. Those who knew not what enemies and mischances they were exposed to had reason to look to their lives out of God's protection, v. 25. The Chaldeans are here said to be such as had a spite to Coniah, they sought his life; no less than that, they thought, would satisfy their rage; they were such as he had a dread of. (They are those whose face thou forgettest,) which would make it the more terrible to him to fall into their hands, especially when he thought of himself that gave him into their hands. And if God deliver him to them, who can deliver him from them? He and his family shall be carried to Babylon, where they shall wear out the many tedious years of their lives in a miserable captivity; he and his mother, (v. 26.) he and his seed, (v. 28.) he and all the royal family, (for he had no children of his own when he went into captivity;) or, he and his children of his lots; they shall all be cast out to another country, to a strange country, a country where they were not born, nor such a country as that where they were born, a land which they knew not, in which they have no acquaintance with whom to converse, or from whom to expect any kindness. Thither they shall be carried, from a land where they were, to a country where they were not. Which lands and countries they shall be compelled to servitude. Have they no hopes of seeing their own country again? No, To the land whereunto they desire to return, thither shall they not return, v. 27. They conduct ed themselves ill in it, when they were in it, and therefore they shall never see it more. Jehoahaz was carried to Egypt, the land of the south, (v. 10.) Jeconiah to Babylon, the land of the north, both for remote, the quite contrary way. Which lands and countries they shall be compelled to servitude. Have they no hopes of seeing their own country again? Those that had abused the dominion they had over others, were justly brought thus under the dominion of others. Those that had indulged and gratified their sinful desires, by their oppression, luxury, and cruelty, were justly denied the gratification of their own desire to see their own native country again. We may observe something very emphatical in that part of this threatening, (v. 26.) To the country where ye were not born, there shall ye die. As there is a time to be born, and a time to die, so there is a place to be born in, and a place to die in. We know where we were born, but where we shall die we know not; it is enough that God knows it. Let it be known to every nation, that we die in Christ, and then it will be well with us wherever we die, though it should be in a far country.

(4.) This shall render him very mean and despis able in the eyes of all his neighbours. They shall be ready to say, (v. 28.) "Is this Coniah a despised, broken idol? Yes, certainly he is, and much despised from what he was." [1.] Time was when he was exalted, i.e., when he was most thought of; this people, when he saw his father lately despised, were ready to adore him when they saw him upon the throne; but now he is a despised, broken idol, which, when it was whole, was worshipped, but, when it is rotten and broken, is thrown by and despised, and nobody regards it, or remembers what it has been. Note, What is idolized will, first or last, be despised and broken; what is unaccountably honoured, will in a short time be contemptible and rivals with God will be the scorn of man. Whatever we idolize we shall be disappointed in, and then shall despise. [2.] Time was, when he was delighted in; but now he is a vessel in which is no pleasure, or to which there is no desire, either because grown out of fashion, or because cracked or dirtied, and so rejected by the ubiquitous. Those that have been, in the sight of God, has no pleasure in, will, some time or other, be so mortified, that men will have no pleasure in them. He shall leave no posterity to inherit his honours. The prediction of this is ushered in with a solemn prefix, (v. 29.) "O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord." Let all the inhabitants of the world take notice of these judgments of God upon a nation and a family that had been near and dear to him, and hence infer that God is impartial in the administration of justice. Or, it is an appeal to the earth itself, on which we tread, since those that dwell on earth are so dear and careless, like Jeconiah, (Isa. 24.) Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth, that is, the earth itself; for its ear has been heard; the earth itself will be made to hear it, and yield to it, when it, and all the works that are therein, shall be burnt up. Or, it is a call to men that mind earthly things, that are swallowed up in those things, and are inordinate in the pursuit of them; such have need to be called upon again and again, and a third time, to hear the word of the Lord. Or, it is a call to men, considered as mortal, of the earth, and hastening to the earth again; we all are so, earth we are, dust we are, and, in consideration of that, are concerned to hear and regard the word of the Lord, that, though we are earth, we may be found among those whose names are written in heaven.

Now this which is here to be taken notice of, is that Jeconiah is written childless, (v. 30.) that is, as it follows, No man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David. In him the line of David was extinct as a royal line. Some think that he had children born in Babylon, because mention is made of his seed being cast out there, (v. 28.) and that they died before him. We read in the genealogy, (1 Chron. 3.) of seven sons of Jeconiah Assur, that is, Jeconiah the captive, of which Salathiel is the first. Some think that they were only his adopted sons, and that, when it is said, (Matth. i. 12.) Jeconiah begat Salathiel, no more is meant than that he bequeathed to him what claims and pretensions he had to the government; the rather, because Salathiel is called the son of Levi, (Luke iii. 27.) of the house of Nathan, v. 31. Whether he had children begotten, or only adopted, this far he was childless, that none of his seed ruled as kings in Judah. He was the Augustus of that empire, in whom it determined. Whoever are childless, it is God that writes them so; and those who take no care to do good in their days, cannot expect to prosper in their days.

CHAP. XXIII.

In this chapter, the prophet, in God's name, is dealing with the reproofs and threatenings, 1. Among the careless princes, or pastors of the people; (v. 1, 2.) yet promising to take care of the flock, which they had been wanting in the duty to, v. 3. 8. II. Among the wicked prophets and priests, whose bad character is here given at large in divers instances, especially their imposing upon the people with their pretended inspirations, at which the prophet is astonished, and for which they must expect to be punished, v. 9. 32. III. Among the profane people, who ridiculed God's prophets, and hasted them, v. 33. 40. When all have thus corrupted their way, they must all expect to be told faithfully of it.

1. Wo be unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture! saith the Lord. 2. Therefore thus saith the Lord God of Israel against the pastors that feed my people, Ye have scattered my flock, and driven them away, and have not visited them: behold, I will visit upon you the evil of your doings, saith the Lord. 3. And I will gather the remnant of my flock out of all countries whither I have driven them, and will bring them again to their folds; and they shall be fruitful and increase. 4. And I will set up shepherds over them, which shall feed them; and they shall fear no more, nor be dismayed, neither shall they be lacking, saith the LORD. 5. Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. 6. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely; and this is his name whereby he shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS. 7. Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that they shall no more say, The LORD liveth, which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; 8. But, The LORD liveth, which brought up, and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all countries whither I had driven them; and they shall dwell in their own land.

Here is, 1. A word of terror to the negligent shepherds; the day is at hand when God will reckon with them concerning the trust and charge committed to them; Go be to the pasture, to the rulers, both in church and state, who are to be the watchmen, as pastors to lead them, feed them, protect them, and take care of them. They are not owners of the sheep; God here calls them the shefih of my pasture, whom I am interested in, and have provided good pasture for. Wo be to those therefore who are commanded to feed God's people, and pretend to do it; but who, instead of that, scatter the flock, and drive them away, by their violence and oppression, and have not visited them, nor taken any care for their welfare, nor concerned themselves at all to do them good. In not visiting them, and doing their duty to them, they did in effect scatter them, and drive them away. The beasts of prey scattered them, and the shepherds are in the fault, who should have kept them together. Wo be to them, when God will visit upon them the evil of their doings, and deal with them as they deserve. They would not visit the flock in a way of duty, and therefore God will visit them in a way of vengeance.

II. Here is a word of comfort to the neglected sheep. Though the under-shepherds take no care of them, no pains with them, but betray them, the chief Shepherd will look after them; When my Father and I are in agreement, there shall be no lack. Though the interests of God's church in the world are neglected by those who should take care of them, and postponed to their own private secular interests, yet they shall not therefore sink. God will perform his promise, though those he employs do not perform their duty. 1. The dispersed Jews shall at length return to their own land, and be glad when the Lord be exalted upon mount Zion, and is over all the earth. 2. And God will make them fruitful and increase in numbers. And though their former shepherds took no care of them, it does not therefore follow that they shall have no more. If some have abused a sacred office, that is no good reason why it should be abolished; "They destroyed the sheep, but I will set shepherds over them, which shall feed them," says he. Formerly, they were continually exposed and disturbed with some alarm or other; but now they shall fear no more, nor be dismayed; they shall be in no danger from without, in no fright from within. Formerly, some or other of them were ever and anon picked up by the beasts of prey; but now none of them shall be lacking, none of them missing. Though the times may be long ere this promise should have its accomplishment; the days come, but they are not yet; I shall see him, but not now; but all the rest intimate that the accomplishment of them will be glorious.

(1.) Christ is here spoken of as a Branch from David, the Man the Branch; (Zech. iii. 8.) his appearance mean, his beginnings small, like those of a bud or sprout, and his rise seemingly out of the earth, but growing to be great, to be lifted up with glory, and to sit upon the right hand of the Majesty on high, when it seemed to be a root in a dry ground, buried, and not likely to revive. Christ is the Root and Offspring of David, Rev. xvii. 16. In him doth the horn of David bud, Ps. cxviii. 17, 18. He is a Branch of God's raising up; he sanctified him, and sent him into the world, gave him his commission and qualifications. He is a righteous Branch, Lamb and cedar, in which all the righteous are made; and many, even all that are his, are made righteous; as an Advocate, he is Jesus Christ the righteous.

(2.) He is here spoken of as his church's King. This Branch shall be raised as high as the throne of his father David, and there he shall reign and prosper, not as the kings that now were of the house of David, who went backward in all their affairs; no, but Goliath slain, and the Philistines and Amalekites overthrown, victorious over all opposition. In the chariot of the everlasting gospel he shall go forth, he shall go on conquering and to conquer. If God raise him up, he will prosper him, for he will own the work of his own hands; what is the good pleasure of the Lord, shall prosper in the hands of those to whom it is committed. He shall prosper, for he shall execute judgment and justice in the earth, all the world over, Ps. cv. 13. The present kings of the house of David were unjust and oppressive, and therefore it is no wonder that they did not prosper; but Christ shall, by his gospel, break the usurped power of Satan, institute a perfect rule of holy living, and, as far as it prevails, make all the world righteous. The effect of this shall be a holy society and serenity of mind in all his faithful, loyal subjects. In his days, under his dominion, Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely; all the spiritual seed of believing Abraham and praying Jacob shall be protected from the curse of heaven and the malice of hell; shall be privileged from the arrests of God’s law, and delivered from the attendant guilt and dominion of it, and then shall dwell safely, and be quiet from the fear of all evil. See Luke i. 74, 75. Those that shall be saved hereafter from the wrath to come, may dwell safely now; for if God be for us, who can be against us? In the days of Christ’s government in the soul, when he is uppermost there, the soul dwells at ease.

(3.) He is here spoken of as The Lord our Righteousness. Observe, [1.] Who said what he is. As God, he is Jehovah, the incomunicable name of God, denoting his eternity and self-existence. As Mediator, he is our righteousness; by making satisfaction to the justice of God for the sin of man, he has brought in an everlasting righteousness, and so made it over to us in the covenant of grace, that, upon our believing, coming to God through him, we are pronounced righteous. His name Jehovah our Righteousness implies that he is so our righteousness, as no creature could be. He is a sovereign, all-sufficient, eternal Righteousness. All our righteousness has its being from him, and by him it subsists, and we are made the righteousness of God in him. [2.] The profession and declaration of this; This is the name whereby he shall be called, not only he shall be so, but he shall be known to be so. God shall call him by this name, for he shall appoint him to be our Righteousness. By this name Israel shall call him, every true believer shall call him, and call upon him. That is our righteousness, by which, as an allowed plea, we are justified before God, acquitted from guilt, and accepted into favour; and nothing else have we to plead but this, “Christ has died, yea, rather is risen again,” and we have taken him for our Lord.

3. This great salvation, which will come to the Jews in the latter days of their state, after their return out of Babylon, shall be so illustrious as far to outshine the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt; (v. 7, 8.) They shall no more say, The Lord liveth, that brought up Israel out of Egypt; but, The Lord liveth, that brought them up out of the north. This was said before, ch. xvi. 14, 15. But here it seems to point more plainly than it did there to the days of the Messiah, and to compare not so much the two deliverances themselves, giving the preference to the latter, as the two states to which the church by degrees grew after these deliverances. Observe the proportion: Just 480 years after they were come out of Egypt, Solomon’s temple was built, (1 Kings vi. 1.) and at that time that nation, which was so wonderfully brought up out of Egypt, was gradually arrived to its height, to its zenith. Just 490 years (70 weeks) after they came out of Babylon, Messiah the Prince set up the gospel-temple, which was the greatest glory of that nation that was so wonderfully brought out of Babylon; see Dan. ix. 24, 25. Now the spiritual glory of the second part of that nation, especially as transferred to the gospel-church, is much more admirable and illustrious than all the temporal glory of the first part of it in the days of Solomon; for that was no glory, compared with the glory which excelleth.

9. My heart within me is broken because of the prophets; all my bones shake: I am like a drunken man, and like a man whom wine hath overcome, because of the Lord, and because of the words of his holiness. 10. For the land is full of adulterers; for because of swearing the land mourneth, the pleasant places of the wilderness are dried up, and their course is evil, and their force is not right. 11. For both prophet and priest are profane; yea, in my house have I found their wickedness, saith the Lord. 12. Wherefore their way shall be unto them as slippery ways in the darkness; they shall be driven on, and fall therein: for I will bring evil upon them, even the year of their visitation, saith the Lord. 13. And I have seen folly in the prophets of Samaria; they prophesied in Baal, and caused my people Israel to err. 14. I have seen also in the prophets of Jerusalem a horrible thing: they commit adultery, and walk in lies: they strengthen also the hands of evil-doers, that none doth return from his wickedness: they are all of them unto me as Sodom, and the inhabitants thereof as Gomorrah. 15. Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts concerning the prophets, Behold, I will feed them with wormwood, and make them drink the water of gall: for from the prophets of Jerusalem is profundeness gone forth into all the land. 16. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Hearken not unto the words of the prophets that prophesy unto you; they make you vain: they speak a vision of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of the Lord. 17. They say still unto them that despise me, The Lord hath said, Ye shall have peace; and they say unto every one that walketh after the imagination of his own heart, No evil shall come upon you. 18. For who hath stood in the counsel of the Lord, and hath perceived and heard his word? who hath marked his word, and heard it? 19. Behold, a whirlwind of the Lord is gone forth in fury, even a grievous whirlwind: it shall fall grievously upon the head of the wicked. 20. The anger of the Lord shall not return, until he have executed, and till he have performed, the thoughts of his heart: in the latter days ye shall consider it perfectly. 21. I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran: I have not spoken to them, yet they prophesied. 22. But if they had stood in my counsel, and had caused my people to hear my words, then they should have turned them from their evil way, and from the evil of their doings. 23. Am I a God at hand, saith the Lord, and not a God afar off? 24. Can any hide himself in secret places that I shall not see him? saith the Lord. Do not I fill heaven and earth? saith the Lord. 25. I have heard what the prophets said, that prophesy lies in my name, saying, I have dreamed, I have dreamed. 26. How long shall this be in the heart of the prophets that prophesy lies? yea, they are prophets of the deceit of their own heart: 27. Which think to cause my people to forget my name by their dreams, which they tell every man to his neighbour, as their fathers have forgotten my name for Baal. 28. The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream; and he that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord. 29. Is not my word like as a fire? saith the Lord; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces? 30. Therefore, behold, I am against the prophets, saith the Lord, that steal my word, every one from his neighbour. 31. Behold, I am against the prophets, saith the Lord, that use their tongues, and say, He saith. 32. Behold, I am against them that prophesy false dreams, saith the Lord, and do tell them, and cause my people to err by their lies, and by their lightness; yet I sent them not, nor commanded them: therefore they shall not profit this people at all, saith the Lord.

Here is a long lesson for the false prophets. As none were more bitter and spiteful against God's true prophets than they, so there were none on whom the true prophets were more severe, and justly. The prophet had complained to God of those false prophets, (ch. xiv. 13.) and had often foretold that they should be involved in the common ruin; but here they have woes of their own. Jeremiah was a man that laid things much to heart, and what was any way threatening to his country, made a deep impression upon his spirits. He is here in trouble. Because of the prophets, and their sin, the false doctrine they preached, the wicked lives they lived; especially it filled him with horror, to hear them making use of God's name, and pretending to have their instructions from him. Now Jeremiah was a man who used the words of his holiness, as by these men. Note, The dishonour done to God's name, and the profanation of his holy word, are the greatest grief imaginable to a gracious soul. 2. Because of the Lord, and his judgments, which by this means are brought in upon us like a deluge. He trembled to think of the ruin and desolation which were coming from the face of the Lord, (so the word is,) and from the face of the word of his holiness, which will be inflicted by the power of God's wrath, according to the threatening of his word, confirmed by his holiness. Note, Even those that have God for them, cannot but tremble to think of the miseries of those that have God against them.

II. He laments the abounding abominable wickedness of the land, and the present tokens of God's displeasure they were under for it. (v. 10.) The land is full of adulterers, it is full both of spiritual and corporal whoredom; they go a whoring from God, and, having cast off the fear of him, no marvel that they abandon themselves to all manner of lewdness; and having dishonoured themselves and their own bodies, they dishonour God and his name by rash and false swearing, because of which the land is barren. Both the profest and common swearers are sins, for which a great deal must be laid to the charge of the church; and, if it be not soon stopped, or it will be made to mourn under the judgments of God. Their land mourned now under the judgment of famine; the pleasant places, or, rather, the features, or, as some read it, the habitations of the wilderness, are dried up for want of rain, and yet we see no signs of repentance; they answer not the end of the correction; the tenour and tendency of it is to make the people yet more wicked, their name, as bad as ever, and they will not be diverted from it. They have a great deal of resolution, but it is turned the wrong way, they are zealously affected, but not in a good thing, their force is not right; their heart is firmly set in them to do evil, and they are not valiant for the truth, have not courage enough to break off their evil courses, though they see God thus bringing in judgments against them.

III. He charges it all upon the prophets and priests, especially the prophets. They are both profane; (v. 11.) the priests profane the ordinances of God they pretend to administer, the prophets profane the word of God they pretend to deliver; their converse and all their conversation are profane, and then it is not strange that the people are so debauched. They both play the hypocrite; so divine read it; under sacred pretensions they carry on the vilest designs; yea, not only in their own houses, and the bad houses they frequent, but in my house have I found their wickedness; in the temple, where the priests ministered, where the prophets prophesied, there were they guilty both of idolatry and immorality. See a woful instance in Hepinie and Phinehas, 1 Sam. ii. 22. God searches his house, and finds it full of cherubim and false prophesies, and I will turn it out; and the nearer it is to him, the more offensive it is. Two things are charged upon them: 1. That they taught people to sin by their examples. He compares them with the prophets of Samaria, the head city of the kingdom of the ten tribes, which had been long since laid waste. It was the folly of the prophets of Samaria, that they prophesied in Baal, in Baal's name; so Ahik's prophet did, and so they caused my breath Israel to err, to forsake the service of the true God, and to worship Baal, v. 13. Now the prophets of Jerusalem did not so, they prophesied in the name of the true God, and valued themselves upon that, that they were not like the prophets of Samaria, who prophesied in Baal; but what the better, when they debouched the nation as much by their impiety as the nation did by their idolatry? It is a horrible thing in the prophets of Jerusalem, that they make use of the name of the holy God, and yet wallow in all manner of impurity! They make nothing of committing adultery, they make use of the name of the God of truth, and yet walk in lies, they not only prophesy lies, but in their common conversation one cannot believe a word they say. It is well either to contend with the fand or to be silent; Thus they encourage sinners to go on in their wicked ways; for every one will say, "Surely we may do as the prophets do; who can expect that we be should be better than our teachers" By this means it is, that none returns from his wickedness but they all say that they shall have peace, though they go on, for their prophets tell them so. By this means Judah and Jerusalem are become as Sodom and Gomorrah, that were wicked, and sinners before the Lord exceedingly; and God looked upon the city with woe, and he caused to destroy them, as they were, with fire and brimstone.

2. That they encouraged people in sin by their false prophecies. They made themselves believe that there was no harm, no danger in sin, and practiced accordingly; and then no marvel that they made others believe so too, v. 16. They speak a vision of their own heart; it is the product of their own imagination; they have no regard to the plain statement, but it is not out of the mouth of the Lord; he never dictated it to them, nor does it agree either with the law of Moses, or with what God has spoken by other prophets. They tell sinners that it shall be well with them, though they persist in their sins, v. 17. See here who they are that they encourage; those that despise God, that slight his authority, and have low and mean thoughts of his institutions, and those that walk after the imagination of their own heart, that are worshippers of idols, and slaves to their own lusts; those that are devoted to their pleasures, put contempt upon their God. Yet see how these prophets caressed and flattered them; they should have been still saying, There is no peace to them that go on in their evil ways; Those that shall have peace, though they go on. Wo, and a thousand woes, to them; but they still said, Ye shall have peace, no evil shall come upon you. And, which was worst of all, they told them, God has said so; so making him to patronize sin, and to contradict himself. Note, Those that are resolved to go on in their evil ways, will justly be given up to believe the strong delusions of those who tell them that they shall have peace, though they go on. Wo, and a thousand woes, to them; but they still said, Ye shall have peace, no evil shall come upon you.

IV. God disowns all that these false prophets said to soothe people up in their sins; (v. 21.) I have not sent these prophets; they never had any mission from God, they were not only not sent by him on his errand, but they were never sent by him on any errand, he never had employed them in any service or business for him; and as to this matter, what good would it have done to have sent them to him to assure this people of peace, he declares that he never gave them any such instructions; yet they were very forward, they ran, they were very bold, they prophesied without any of that difficulty with which the true prophets sometimes struggled. They said to sinners, You shall have peace. But v. 18. "Who hath stood in the counsel of the Lord? Who of you has, that are so confident of this? You deliver this message with a great deal of assurance; but have you consulted God about it? No, you never considered whether it be agreeable to the discoveries God has made of himself, whether it will consist with the honour of his holiness and justice, to let sinners go unpunished. You have not perceived and heard his word, nor marked that, you have not compared this with the scriptures of life; You take that message, you deliver this message, with a great deal of assurance; but have you consulted God about it? No, you never considered whether it be agreeable to the discoveries God has made of himself, whether it will consist with the honour of his holiness and justice, to let sinners go unpunished.

2. They would have made the conversion of souls their business, and would have aimed at that in all their preaching; they would have done all they could to turn people from their evil way in general, from all the particular evil of their doings. They would have encouraged and assisted, the reformation of manners, they would have made that their work in all their preaching, to part between the living and the dead; but it appeared that this was a thing they never aimed at, but, on the contrary, to encourage sinners in their sins. 5. They would have had some seals of their ministry. This sense our translation gives it; If they had stood in my counsel, and the words they had preached had been my words, then they should have continued according to the evil way; a divine power should have gone along with them, and for the conviction of sinners; God would bless his own institutions. Yet this is no certain rule; Jeremiah himself, though God sent him, prevailed with but few to turn from their evil way.

V. God threatens to punish these prophets for their wickedness. They promised the people peace; to show them the folly of that, God tells them that they should have no peace themselves. They have been very unfit to warrant the people, and pass their word to them, that no evil shall come upon them, when all evil is coming upon themselves, and they are not aware of it, v. 12. Because the prophets and priests are profane, therefore their ways shall be unto them as slippery ways in the darkness. They pretend to think they have the light, but they mislead them, and know they do so, they shall themselves have no comfort in their way. 1. They pretend to show others the way, but they shall themselves be in the dark, or in a mist; their light or sight shall fail, so that they shall not be able to look before them, shall have no forecast for themselves. 2. They pretend to give assurances to others, but they themselves shall find no firm footing; Their ways shall be unto them as slippery ways, in which they shall not go with any steadiness, safety, or satisfaction. 3. They pretend to make the people easy with their f equalities, but they shall themselves be uneasy: They shall be driven, forced forward as captives, or making their escape as those that are pursued, and they shall fail in the way by which they say they have got where they are. 4. They pretend to prevent the evils that threatens others, but God will bring evil upon them, even the year of their visitation, the time fixed for calling them to an account; such a time is fixed concerning all that do not judge themselves, and it will be an evil time. The year of visitation is the year of recompenses. It is further threatened, (v. 15.) I will feed them with wormwood, or poison, in which that is not only nauseous, but noxious, and make them drink waters of gall, or, as some read it, juice of hemlock; see ch. ix. 15. Justly is the cup of trembling put into their hand first, for from the prophets of Jerusalem, who should have been patterns of piety and every thing that is pious and virtuous, even from them to profaneness gone forth into the land, and thence has spread abroad, and debauched a nation, than the debauchery of ministers.

VI. The people are here warned not to give any credit to these false prophets; for though they flattered them with hopes of impunity, the judgments of God would certainly break out against them, unless they repented (v. 16.) "Take notice of what God says, and hearken not to the words of these prophets; for you will find, in the issue, that God's word shall stand, and not theirs. God's word will make you sin us, but they make you vain, feed you with vain hopes, which will fail you at last. They tell you, No evil shall come upon you; but hear what God says, (v. 19.) Behold, a whirlwind of the Lord is there is no light in them. 2. They would have made the conversion of souls their business, and would have aimed at that in all their preaching; they would have done all they could to turn people from their evil way in general, from all the particular evil of their doings. They would have encouraged and assisted, the reformation of manners, they would have made that their work in all their preaching, to part between the living and the dead; but it appeared that this was a thing they never aimed at, but, on the contrary, to encourage sinners in their sins. 5. Behold, a whirlwind of the Lord is gone forth in fury: they tell you, All shall be calm and serene; but God tells you, There is a storm coming, a whirlwind of the Lord, of his sending, and therefore there is no standing before it; it is a whirlwind raised by divine wrath; it is gone forth in fury, a wind that is brought forth out of the treasures of divine vengeance, and therefore it is a grievous whirlwind, and shall shake the earth, and shall tread upon the head of the wicked, which they cannot avoid, nor find any shelter from. It shall fall upon the wicked prophets themselves who deceived the people, and the wicked people who suffered themselves to be deceived. A horrible tempest shall be the portion of their end. Ps. xi. 6. This sentence is bound on as irreversible; (v. 20.) The anger of the Lord shall be raised against them, when they are gone forth, God will not alter his mind, nor suffer his anger to be turned away, till he have executed the sentence, and performed the thoughts of his heart. God's whirlwind, when it comes down from heaven, returns not thither, but accomplishes that for which he sent it, Isa. lv. 11. This they will not consider now; but in the latter days he shall consider it perfectly, consider it with understanding, (so the word is,) and shall have no doubt but that the stream will not fear the threatenings, shall feel the execution of them, and will then perfectly understand what they will not now admit the evidence of, what a fearful thing it is to fall into the hands of a just and jealous God. They that will not consider in time, will be made to consider when it is too late. Son, remember.

VII. Divers things are here offered to the consideration of these false prophets for the conviction of their impostures, that, if possible, they might be brought to recant their error, and acknowledge the cheat they had put upon God's people.

1. Let them consider, that though they may impose upon men, God is too wise to be imposed upon. Men cannot see through their fallacies, but God can, and does. Here.

(1.) God assigns his own omnipresence and omniscience in general, v. 23, 24. When they told the people that no evil should befall them though they went on in their evil ways, they went upon atheistical principles, that the Lord doeth not see their sin, that he cannot judge through the dark cloud, that he will not require it; and therefore they must be taught the first principles of their religion, and confronted with the most incontestable, self-evident truths, that God's throne is prepared, in the heavens, and this earth seems to be at a distance from him, yet he is a God here in this lower world, which seems to be afar off, as well as in the upper world, which seems to be at hand. v. 23. The eye of God is the same on earth that it is in heaven; here it runs to and fro as well as there; (2 Chron. xvi. 9,) and what is in the minds of men, whose spirits are veiled in flesh, is as clearly seen by him, as what is in the mind of angels, those inviolate spirits above, that surround his throne. The power of God is the same on earth among its inhabitants that it is in heaven among his armies. With us, nearness and distance make a great difference both in our observations and in our operations, but it is not so with God; to him darkness and light, at hand, and afar off, are all alike. [2. 3.] They have no secrets from him, nor can he distinguish themselves and their own characters and counsels, they cannot possibly be concealed from God's all-seeing eye; (v. 24.) "Can any hide himself in the secret places of the earth, that I shall not see him? Can any hide his projects and intentions in the secret places of the heart, that I shall not see them? No arts of concealment can hide from the eye of God, nor deceive his judgment of them. [3.] That he is every where present; he does not only rule heaven and earth, and uphold both by his universal providence, but he fills heaven and earth by his essential presence, Ps. cxlviii. 7, 8, &c. No place can either include him, or exclude him.

(2.) He applies this to these prophets, who had a notable art of disguising themselves; (v. 25, 26.) I have heard what the prophets said, that prophesy lies in my name. They thought that he was so far from knowing the arts they used to hide the truth, that he had no leisure to take cognizance of what passed in this. But God will make them know that he knows all their impostures, all the shams they have put upon the world, under colour of divine revelation. What they intended to humour the people with, they pretended to have had from God in a dream, when there was no such thing. This they could not discover; if a man tell me that he dreamed so and so, I cannot contradict him, because God discovered the fraud. Perhaps the false prophets whispered what they had to say in the ears of such as were their confidants, saying, So and so I have dreamed; but God overheard them. The heart-searching eye of God traced them in all the methods they took to deceive the people, and he cries out, How long? Shall I always bear with them? Is it possible (so much do I love them) to be ever prophesying lies, and prophesying the deceits of their own hearts? Will they never see what an affliction they put upon God, what an abuse they put upon the people, and what judgments they are preparing for themselves?

2. Let them consider that their palming upon people counterfeit revelations, and gathering their own strength upon divine inspiration, was the real God's way to bring all religion into contempt, and make men turn atheists and infidels; and this was the thing they really intended, though they frequently made mention of the name of God, and prefaced all they said with, Thus saith the Lord. Yet, says God, They think to cause my people to forget my name, by their dreams. They designed to draw people off from the worship of God, from all regard to God's laws and ordinances, and the true prophets, as their fathers forgot God's name for Baal. Note, The great thing Satan aims at, is, to make people forget God, and all that whereby he has made himself known; and he has many subtle methods to bring them to this: sometimes he does it by setting up false gods; (bring men in love with Baal, and they soon forget the name of God;) sometimes by misrepresenting God's revealed word, and perhaps such a one as ourselves. Pretences to new revelation may prove as dangerous to religion as the denying of all revelation; and false prophets in God's name may perhaps do more mischief to the power of godliness than false prophets in Baal's name, as being less guarded against.

3. Let them consider what a vast difference there was between these impostures and those that were delivered by the true prophets of the Lord; (v. 28.) The prophet that has a dream, which was the way of inspiration that the false prophets most pretended to, if he has a dream, let him tell it as a dream; so Mr. Gataker reads it. "Let him lay by no more stress upon it than men do upon their dreams, nor expect any more regard to be had to it; let them only take it for a dream. They pretend they have a message from God; let them own it, and call it a false dream or vision, and God will declare it, and it will easily appear which is of God, and which is not. Those that have spiritual senses exercised will be able to distinguish; for what is the chaff to the wheat? The promises of peace which these prophets make to you, are no more to be compared to God's promises, than chaff to wheat. Men's fancies are light, and vain, and worthless, as the chaff which the wind drives away. But the travail of the earth, the substance in it; the very food for the soul, the bread of life. Wheat was the staple commodity of Canaan, that valley of vision, Deut. viii. 8. Ezek. xxvii. 17. There is as much difference between the vain fancies of men, and the pure word of God, as between the chaff and the wheat.

(1.) The law was a fiery law; (Deut. xxxii. 2) and of the gospel, Christ says, I am come to send fire on the earth, Luke xii. 49. Fire has different effects, according as the matter is on which it works; it hardens clay, but softens wax; it consumes the dross, but purifies the gold; so the word of God is to some a savour of life unto life, to others of death unto death. God appeals here to the conscience of those to whom the word was sent: "Is not my word like a fire, saith the Lord? Is there no one to enter in? Has it the power and efficacy that the word of God has? Nothing like it; there is no more comparison between painted fire and real fire. There is like an ignus furiosus—a deceiving meteor, leading men into by-paths and dangerous precipices. Note, The word of God is like fire.

2. Let them consider that while they went on in the course of things against the truth, they were told this, v. 2, 31, 32. Behold, I am against the prophets. They pretended to be for God, and made use of his name, but were really against him; he looks upon them as they were, really, and is against them. How can they be long safe, or at all easy, that have a God of almighty power against them? While these prophets were promising peace to the people, God was proclaiming war against them. They stood indicted here.

(1.) For robbery: They steal my word every one from his neighbour. Some understand it of that word which the good prophets preached; they stole their sermons, their expressions, and mingled them with their own, as hucksters mingled bad wares with some that are good, to make them vendible. In some that were strangers to the spirit of the true prophets, mimicked their language, picked up some good sayings of theirs, and delivered them to the people as if they had been their own, but with an ill grace; it was not of a piece with the rest of their discourses. The legs of the lambs are not equal, so is a parable in the mouth of fools, Prov. xxvi. 7. Others understand it of the word of God as it was received by some corrupted, not wholly uncorrupted, but they stole it out of their hearts, as the wicked one in the parable is said to steal the good seed of the word, Matt. xiii. 19. By their insinuations they diminished the authority, and so weakened the efficacy, of the word of God upon the minds of those that seemed to be under convictions by it.

(2.) They stand indicted for conspiring the destruction of the house of God. Thus I am against them, (v. 31.) because they use their tongues at their pleasure in their discourses to the people, say what they themselves think fit, and then father it upon God, pretend they had it from him, and say, He saith it. Some read it, They smooth their tongues; they are very complaisant to the people, and say nothing but what is pleasing and plausible; they never reprove them or threaten them, but their words are smoother than butter; thus they ingratiate themselves with them, and get money by them, and they have the impudence and impiety to make God the Patron of their lies; they say, "He saith so." What greater indignity can be done to the God of truth than to have the blots of the father of lies at his door?

(3.) They stand indicted as common cheats; (v. 32.) I am against them, for they prophesy false dreams, pretending that to be a divine inspiration, which is but an invention of their own; this is a horrid fraud; nor will it excuse them to say, Correct corruptor—Let the buyer take care of himself, and Sip Julietus unde decept, deception—if people will be deceived, let them. No, it is the people's fault that they err, that they take things upon trust, and do not try the spirits; but it is much more their fault, that they cause God's people to err by their lies, and by their lightness, by the flatulencies of their preaching, soothing them up in their sins, and by the looseness and lewdness of their conversation, en couraging them to persist in it. [1.] God dis owns their having any commission from him; I sent them not, nor commanded them; they are not God's messengers, nor is what they say his message. [2.] He therefore justly denies his blessing with them, Therefore they shall not profit this people at all. All the profit they aim at, to make them easy; but they shall not so much as do that, for God's providences will at the same time be making them uneasy. They do not profit God's people, whose care is implied as is expressed; they not only do them no good, but do them a great deal of hurt. Note, Those that corrupt the word of God, while they pretend to preach it, are so far from edifying the church, that they do it the greatest mischief imaginable.

33. And when this people, or the prophet, or a priest, shall ask thee, saying, What is the burden of the Lord? thou shalt then say unto them, What burden! I will even forsake you, saith the Lord. 34. And as for the prophet, and the priest, and the people, that shall say, The burden of the Lord, I will even punish that man and his house. 35. Thus shall ye say every one to his neighbour, and every one to his brother, What hath the Lord answered? and, What hath the Lord spoken? 36. And the burden of the Lord shall ye mention no more; for every man's word shall be his burden: for ye have perverted the words of the living God, of the Lord of hosts our God. 37. Thus shalt thou say to the prophet, What hath the Lord answered thee? and, What hath the Lord spoken? 38. But since ye say, The burden of the Lord; therefore thus saith the Lord, Because you say this word, The burden of the Lord, and I have sent unto you, saying, Ye shall not say, The burden of the Lord; 39. Therefore, behold, I, even I, will utterly forget you, and I will forsake you, and the city that I gave you and your fathers, and cast you out of my presence: 40. And I will bring an everlasting reproach upon you, and a perpetual shame, which shall not be forgotten.

The profaneness of the people, with that of the priests and prophets, is here reproved in a particular instance, which may seem of small moment in comparison of their greater crimes; but profaneness in common discourse, and the debauching of the language of a nation, being a notorious evidence of the prevalence of wickedness in it, we are not to think it strange that this matter was so largely and warmly insisted on.

1. The sin here charged upon them is, bantering God's prophets, and the dialect they used, and jesting with sacred things. They asked, What is the burthen of the Lord? v. 33, and v. 34. They say, The burthen of the Lord, v. 38. This was the word that gave great offence to God, that, whenever they spoke of the word of the Lord, they called it, in scoffing and derision, the word of a actor. (1.) They called it a word that the prophets much used, and used it seriously, to show what a weight the word of God was upon their spirits, of what importance it was, and how pressingly it should come upon those that heard it. The words of the false prophets had nothing ponderous in them, but God's words had; those were as chaff, these as wheat. Now the preface scoffers took this word, and made a jest out of it, as if there were nothing serious in it, that so, when the prophets used it, they might not make people serious with it. Note, It has been the artifice of Satan, in all ages, to obstruct the efficacy of sacred things by turning them into matter of sport and ridicule; the mocking of God's messengers was the buffing of his messages. (2.) Perhaps this word was caught at and reproached by the scoffers as an improper word, now adopted by the prophets, and pronounced by any一字less. It was only in this and the last age, that the word of the Lord was called the burthen of the Lord, and it could not be found in their lexicons to have that signification. But if men take a liberty, as we see they do, to form new phrases which they think more expressive and significant in other parts of learning, why not in divinity? But especially we must observe it as a rule, that the Spirit of God is not tied to our rules of speaking. (3.) Some think that, because, when the word of the Lord is called a burthen, it signifies some word of reproof and threatening, which would lay a load upon the hearers, (yet I know not whether that observation will always hold,) that in using this word, the burthen of the Lord, in a cajoling way, they reflected upon God as always bearing hard upon them, always to call them to account for their faults, doing the word of God a perpetual unseasoness to them. They make the word of God a burthen to themselves, and then quarrel with the ministers for making it a burthen to them. Thus the scoffers of the latter days, while they slight heaven and salvation, reproach faithful ministers for preaching hell and damnation. Upon the whole, we may observe, That light he who ever may make of it, the great God takes notice of, and is much displeased with, those who burlesque sacred things, and who, that they may make a jest of scripture-truths and laws, put jests upon scripture-language. In such wit as this I am sure there is no wisdom, and so it will appear at last. Be ye not mockers, lest your bands be made strong. Those that were here grief of this sin, were some of the priests, who perhaps came to seek occasions against them, on which to ground an information, and some of the people, who had learned of the profane priests and prophets to play with the things of God. The people would not have affronted the prophet and his God thus, if the priests and the prophets, those ringleaders of men, had not shown them the way.

2. When they are reproved for this profane way of speaking, they are directed how to express them selves more decently. We do not find that the prophets are directed to make no more use of this word; we find it used long after this; (Zech. ix. 1, Mal. i. 1. Nah. i. 1, Hab. i. 1,) and we do not find it once used in this sense by Jeremiah either before or after. It is true indeed, that in many cases it is advisable to make no use of such words and things as some have made bad use of, and it may be prudent to avoid such phrases as, though innocent enough, are in danger of being perverted and made stumblingblocks. But here God will have the prophet keep to his rule; (ch. xv. 19.) Let them return unto thee, but return not thou unto them. Do not thou leave off using this word, but let them leave off abusing it; ye shall not mention the burthen of the Lord any more, and remember that, when you are in the business of perverting the words of the living God, and making a bad use of them, which is an impious, dangerous thing; for consider, he is the Lord of hosts our God. Note, If we will but look upon God, as we ought to do, in his greatness and goodness, and be but duly sensible of our relation and obligation to him, it may be hoped that we shall not dare to abuse either his name or his word, by using a sacred and imprudent thing to abuse him that is the living God, the Lord of hosts and our God. How then must they express themselves? He tells them, (v. 37.) Thus shalt thou say to the prophet, when thou art inquiring of him, What hath the Lord answered thee? And what hath the Lord spoken? And they must say thus, when they inquire of their neighbors, v. 35. Note, We must always speak of the things of God reverently and seriously, and as becomes the oracles of God. It is a commendable practice to inquire after the mind of God, to inquire of our brethren what they have heard, to inquire of our prophets what they have to say from God; but then, to show that we do it for a right end, we must do it after a right manner. Ministers may learn here, when they reprove people for what they say and do amiss, to teach them how to say and do better.

3. Because they would not leave off this bad way of speaking, though they were admonished of it, God threatens them here with utter ruin. They would still say, The burthen of the Lord, though God had sent to them to forbid them, v. 38. What little regard have those to the divine authority, that will not be persuaded by it to leave an idle word! Be it seen what a tremendous terror God is here afraid to give. (1.) Those shall be severely reckoned with, that thus pervert the words of God, that put a wrong construction on them, and make a bad use of them; and it shall be made to appear that it is a great provocation to God, to mock his messengers; I will even punish that man and his house, whether he be prophet or priest, or one of the common people, it shall be visited upon him, v. 34. Reverting God's word, and ridiculing the preachers of it, are sins, that bring ruinous judgments upon families, and entail a curse upon a house. Another threatening we have, v. 36. Every man's word shall be his own burthen; the guilt of this sin shall be so heavy upon him, as to sink him into the pit of destruction. God shall make their own tongue to fall upon themselves, verses 34, 35. It is as if God had said, so that the burthen of the Lord they shall have no heart to mention any more; it will be too heavy to make a jest of. They are as the madman that casts firebrands, arrows, and death, while they pretend to be in sport. (2.) The words of God, though thus perverted, shall be accomplished. Do they ask, What is the burthen of the Lord? Let the prophet ask them, What burthen do you mean? Is it this? I will even forsake you, v. 35. This is the burthen that shall be laid and bound upon them, (v. 39. 40.) "Behold, I even I, will utterly forget you, and I will forsake you, and have no thoughts of returning to you. Those are miserable indeed, that are forsaken and forgotten of God; and men's bantering God's judgments will not baffle them. Jerusalem was the city God had taken to himself as a holy city, and then given to them and their fathers; but that shall now be forsaken and forgotten. God had taken them to be a people near to him, but they have despised the days of their birth. They had been great and honourable among the nations, but now God will bring upon them an everlasting reproach and a perpetual shame; both their sin and their punishment shall be their lasting disgrace. It is here upon record, to their infamy, and will remain so to the world's end. Note, God's word will be magnified and made honourable, when those that mock it shall be vilified and made contemptible. They that despise me shall be lightly esteemed.

CHAP. XXIV.

In the close of the foregoing chapter, we had a general pre-duction of the utter ruin of Jerusalem, that it should be forsaken and forgotten; which, whatever effect it had upon others, we have reason to think, made the prophet himself very melancholy. Now, in this chapter, God encourages him, by showing him that though the destruction of Jerusalem, and all the miseries of the people, be universal, yet all were not equally involved in it, but God knew how to distinguish, how to separate, between the precious and the vile. Some were gone into captivity already, and were over there at Jerusalem lamented, but God tells him that it should turn to their good; others yet remained hardened in their sins, against whom Jeremiah had a just indignation; but those, God tells him, should go into captivity, and it should prove to their hurt. To inform the prophet of this, and affect him with it; here is, I. A vision of two baskets of figs, one very good, and the other very bad, v. 1-5. II. The explication of this vision, applying the good figs to the good, and the bad figs to the bad, as fruit for their good, (v. 4. 7.) the bad figs to those that should hereafter be sent into captivity for their hurt, v. 8. 10.

1. THE Lord showed me, and, behold, two baskets of figs were set before the temple of the Lord, after that Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon had carried away captive Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, and the princes of Judah, with the carpenters and smiths, from Jerusalem, and had brought them to Babylon. 2. One basket had very good figs, even like the figs that are first ripe; and the other basket had very naughty figs, which could not be eaten, they were so bad. 3. Then said the Lord unto me, What seest thou, Jeremiah? And I said, Figs; the good figs, very good; and the evil, very evil, that cannot be eaten, they are so evil. 4. Again the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, 5. Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, Like these good figs, so will I acknowledge them that are carried away captive of Judah; whom I have sent out of this place into the land of the Chaldeans for their good. 6. For I will set mine eyes upon them for good, and I will bring them again to this land: and I will build them, and not pull them down; and I will plant them, and not pluck them up. 7. And I will give them a heart to know me, that I am the Lord; and they shall be my people, and I will be their God: for they shall return unto me with their whole heart. 8. And as the evil figs, which cannot be eaten, they are so evil; surely thus saith the Lord, So will I give Zedekiah the king of Judah, and his princes, and the residue of Jerusalem, that remain, in this land, and them that dwell in the land of Egypt; 9. And I will deliver them to be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth for their hurt, to be a reproach and a proverb, a taunt and a curse, in all places whither I shall drive them. 10. And I will send the sword, the famine, and the pestilence, among them, till they be consumed from off the land that I gave unto them and to their fathers.

This short chapter helps us to put a very comfortable construction upon a great many long ones, by showing us that the same providence which to some is a savour of death unto death, may by the grace and blessing of God be made to others a savour of life unto life; and that though God's people were with others in the same calamity, yet that it is not the same to them that it is to others, but is designed for their good, and shall issue in their good; to them it is a correcting rod in the hand of a tender Father, while to others it is an avenging sword in the hand of a righteous Judge.

Observe, I. The date of this sermon. It was after, a little after, Jeconiah's captivity, v. 1. Jeconiah was himself a despised, broken reed, but with him were carried away some very valuable persons, Ezekiel for one; (ch. i. 2.) many of the princes of Judah then went into captivity; Daniel and his fellows were carried off a little before; of the people only the carpenters and the smiths were forced away, either because the Chaldeans needed some ingenious men of those trades, (they had a great plenty of astrologers and stargazers, but a great scarcity of carpenters and smiths,) or because the Jews would severely feel the loss of them, and would, for want of them, be unable to fortify their cities, and furnish themselves with weapons of war. Now, it should seem, there were many good people carried away in that captivity, which the pious prophet laid much to heart, while there were those that triumphed in it, and insulted over those to whom let it fall to go into captivity. Note, We must not conclude concerning the first and greatest sufferers, that they were the worst and greatest sinners; for perhaps it may appear quite otherwise, as it did here.

II. The vision by which this distinction of the captives was represented to the prophet's mind. He saw two baskets of figs, before the temple, which were ready to fall, the one containing good figs, and the other of God. Perhaps the priests, being remiss in their duty, were not ready to receive them, and dispose of them, according to the law, and therefore Jeremiah sees them standing before the temple. But that which was the significance of the vision, was, that the figs in one basket were extraordinarily good, those in the other basket extremely bad. The children of men are all as the fruits of the first tree, capable of being made serviceable to God and man; (Judg. ix. 11.) but some are as good figs, than which nothing is more pleasant, others as damaged, rotten figs, than which nothing is more nauseous. What creature viler than a wicked man, and what more valuable than a godly man? The good figs were like those that are first ripe, which are most acceptable,
JEREMIAH, XXIV.

(Mic. vii. 1.) and most prized, when newly come into season. "The bad figs are such as could not be eaten, they were so evil; they could not answer the end of their creation, were neither pleasant, nor good for food; and what then were they good for? If Corinthians were the worst of men, hypocrites, the rest of sinners, and any service, they are even like the bad figs, that cannot be eaten, that will not answer any good purpose; if the salt have lost its savour, it is thenceforth fit for nothing but the dunghill. Of the persons that are presented to the Lord at the door of his tabernacle, some are sincere, and they are very good; others dissimulate with God, and they are very bad; some are the worst of men, hypocrites, the rest of sinners. Corruptio optimiti est progressio—That which is best becomes, when corrupted, the worst.

III. The exposition and application of this vision. God intended by it to raise the dejected spirits of those that were gone into captivity, by assuring them of a happy return, and to humble and awaken the proud and secure spirits of those who continued yet in Jerusalem, by assuring them of a miserable captivity.

1. Here is the moral of the good figs, that were very good, the first ripe; these represented the pious captives, that seemed first ripe for ruin, for they went first into captivity, but should prove first ripe for mercy, and their captivity should help to ripen them; these are pleasing to God, as good figs are to us, and shall be carefully preserved for use. Now observe it is thus.

1. Those that were already carried into captivity, were the good figs that God would own. This shows, [1.] That we cannot determine of God's love or hatred by all that is before us. When God's judgments are abroad, they are not always the worst that are first seized by them. [2.] That early sufferings sometimes prove for the best to us. The sooner the child is corrected, the better effect the correction is likely to have: those that went first into captivity were as the son whom the father loves, and chastens betimes, chastens while there is hope, and it did well; but those that stayed behind were like a child long left to himself, who, when afterward corrected, is stubborn, and made worse by it, Lam. iii. 27.

2. Those that are carried into captivity to be his doing; whoever are the instruments of it, he ordered and directed it; (v. 5.) I have sent them out of this place into the land of the Chaldeans. It is God that puts his gold into the furnace, to be tried; his hand is, in an especial manner, to be eyed in the afflictions of good people. The judge orders the malefactor into the hand of an executioner, but the father corrects the child with his own hand.

3. Even this disgraceful, uncomfortable captivity, God intended for their benefit; and we are sure that his intentions are never frustrated; I have sent them into the land of the Chaldeans for their good. It seemed to be every way for their hurt, not only as it was the ruin of their estates, honours, and liberties, parted them from their relations and friends, and put them under the hand of the world, myriads and opposers, but as it sunk their spirits, discouraged their faith, deprived them of the benefit of God's oracles and ordinances, and exposed them to temptations; and yet it was designed for their good, and proved so, in the issue, as to many of them. Out of the eater came forth meat. By their afflictions they were convinced of sin, humbled under the sight of their own weakness, and the sins of their parents, taught to pray, and turned from their iniquity, particularly they were cured of their inclination to idolatry: and thus it was good for them that they were afflicted, Ps. exix. 67, 71.

4. God promises that he will own them in their captivity; though they seemed abandoned, they shall be acknowledged; the scornful relations they left behind will scarcely own them, or their kindred to them, but God says, I will acknowledge them. Note, The Lord knows them that are his, and will own them in all conditions; nakedness and inward shame shall be the occasion of the glory of their person, and their foreign excellency, and their beauteous and preciousness.

5. God assures them of his protection in their trouble, and a glorious delivery out of it in due time, v. 6. Being sent into captivity for their good, they shall not be lost there; but it shall be with them as it is with gold which the refiner puts into the furnace. [1.] He has his eye upon it while it is there, and it is a careful eye, to see that it sustain no damage; [2.] I will set mine eyes upon them for good, to order every thing for the best, that all the circumstances of the affliction may concur to the answering of the great intention of it. [2.] He will be sure to take it out of the furnace again, as soon as the work designed upon it is done; I will bring them again to this land. They were sent abroad for improvement awhile, under a divine discipline: but they shall be fetched back, when they have gone through their trial there, to their Father's house. [3.] He will fashion his gold when he has refined it, will make it a vessel of honour fit for his use; so, when God has brought them back from their trial, he will build them, and make them a habitation for himself, will plant them, and make them a vineyard for himself. Their captivity was a contrary to their expectations, but they are fit for his building, to prune up the young trees, and make them fit for his planting.

6. He engages to prepare them for these temporal mercies which he designed for them, by bestowing spiritual mercies upon them, v. 7. It is this that will make their captivity be for their good; this shall be both the improvement of their affliction, and their qualification for deliverance; we shall not be wholly delivered, sanctified to us, then we may be sure that they will end well. Now which is promised, is, [1.] That they should be better acquainted with God; they shall learn more of God by his providences in Babylon than they had learned by all his oracles and ordinances in Jerusalem; thanks to divine grace, for if that had not wrought mightily upon them in Babylon, they would for ever have been a forgotten people. It is promised, I will give them, not so much a head to know me, as a heart to know me, for the right knowledge of God consists not in notion and speculation, but in the convictions of the practical judgment directing and governing the will and affections. A good understanding have all they that do his commandments, Ps. cxii. 10. Where God gives a sincere desire and inclination to know him, he will give that knowledge. It is God himself that gives a heart to know him, else we should perish for ever in our ignorance.

[2.] That they should be entirely converted to God; to his will as their rule, his service as their business, and his glory as their end; They shall return to me with their whole heart. God himself undertakes for them that they shall; and if he does so, we shall be as sure of this as of any event that is for the interest of those that have a heart to know God aright, will not only turn to him, but turn with their whole heart; for those that are either obstinate in their rebellion, or hypocritical in their religion, may truly be said to be ignorant of God. [3.] That thus they should be again taken into covenant with God, as much to their comfort as ever they have been before; and we will be their God, God will own them, as formerly, for his people, in the discoveries of himself to them, in his acceptance of their services, and in his gracious appearances on their behalf, and they shall have liberty to own him for their God, in their prayers to him, and their expectations from him. Note, Those that have back-hidden from God, if they do in sincerity return to him, are admitted as freely as any to all the privileges and comforts of the everlasting covenant, which is hereina well ordered, that every transgression in the covenant does not throw us out of cove-Hant, and that affections are not only consistent with, but flowing from covenant.

2. Here is the moral of the bad fics, Zedekiah and his princes and partisans yet remain in the land, proud and secure enough, Ezek. xi. 3. Many were led into Egypt for shelter, and they thought they had shifted well for themselves and their own safety, and boasted that though therein they had gone contrary to the command of God, yet they had acted prudently for themselves. Now as to these that looked so scornfully upon those that were gone into captivity, it is here threatened, (1.) That, whereas those who were already carried away were settled in one country, where they had the comfort of one another's society, though in captivity, these should be dispersed and removed into all the kingdoms of the earth, where they should have no joy one of another.

(2.) That, whereas those were carried away captives for their good, these should be removed into all countries for their hurt. Their afflictions should be so far from humbling them, that they should harden them; not bring them nearer to God, but set them at a greater distance from him. Doubtless, this is a hard thing for them who should have the honour of being owned of God in their troubles, should have the shame of being abandoned by all mankind: In all places whither I shall drive them, they shall be a reproach and a proverb. "Such a one is as false and proud as a Jew;" "Such a one is as poor and miserable as a Jew." All their neighbours shall make a jest of them, and the calamities brought upon them shall be the occasion of mirth.

(4.) That, whereas those should return to their own land, these shall be consumed from that land, never to see it more, and it shall be of no avail to them to plead, that it was the land God gave to their fathers, for they had it from God, and he gave it them upon condition of their obedience.

(5.) That, whereas those were reserved for better times, these were reserved for worse: whereas they are removed, the sword, and famine, and festi-tleness, shall be sent after them, shall soon overtake them, and, coming with commission so to do, shall overcome them. God has variety of judgments wherewith to prosecute those that fly from justice; and those that have escaped one, may expect another, till they are brought to repent and reform.

Doubtless, this prophecy had its accomplishment in the men of that generation; yea, because we read not of any such remarkable difference between those of Jeconiah's captivity and those of Zedeki-ah's, it is probable that this was a typical reference to the last destruction of the Jews by the Romans, in which those of them that believed were taken care of, but those that continued obstinate in unbe-liefs, were cut off without mercy, for a torment and a curse, and so they remain to this day.

CHAP. XXV.

The prophecy of this chapter bears date some time before those prophecies in the chapters next foregoing, for they are not ordered of time in which they were delivered. This is dated in the first year of Nebu-chadrezzar, that remarkable year when the sword of the Lord began to be drawn and furnished. Here is, I. A review of the prophecies that had been delivered to Judah and Jerusalem for many years past, by Jeremiah himself and other prophets, with the little regard given to them, and the little success of them, v. 1. II. A very full description of the destruction of Judah and Jerusalem, by the king of Babylon, for their contempt of God and their continuance in sin, v. 8. To which is annexed a promise of their deliverance out of their captivity in Babylon, after 70 years, v. 12. III. A prediction of the devastation of divers other nations about, by Nebuchadrezzar, represented by a cup of fury put into the mouth of Nebuchadrezzar, (v. 13.) by a hand sustaining them, (v. 29-33.) and a desolation made among the shepherds, and their flocks and pastures; (v. 34-38.) so that we have here judgment beginning at the house of God, but not ending there.

1. THE word that came to Jeremiah concerning all the people of Judah, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, that was the first year of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon; 2. The which Jeremiah the prophet spake unto all the people of Judah, and to all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, saying, 3. From the thirteenth year of Josiah the son of Amon king of Judah, even unto this day, (that is the third and twentieth year,) the word of the Lord hath come unto me, and I have spoken unto you, rising early and speaking; but ye have not hearkened. 4. And the Lord hath sent unto you all his servants the prophets, rising early and sending them; but ye have not hearkened, nor inclined your ear to hear. 5. They said, Turn ye again now every one from his evil way, and from the evil of your doings, and dwell in the land that the Lord hath given unto you and to your fathers for ever and ever; 6. And go not after other gods to serve them, and to worship them, and provoke me not to anger with the works of your hands; and I will do you no hurt. 7. Yet ye have not hearkened unto me, saith the Lord; that ye might provoke me to anger with the works of your hands to your own hurt.

We have here a message from God concerning all the people of Judah, (v. 1.) which Jeremiah de-ivered, in his name, unto all the people of Judah, v. 2. Note, That which is of universal concern, ought to be of universal cognizance. It is fit that the word which concerns all the people, as the word of God does, the word of the gospel particularly, should be divulged to all in general, and as far as may be, addressed to each in particular. Jeremiah had been sent to the house of the king, (ch. xxii. 1.) and he took courage to deliver his message there; here he is sent to all the people, and he takes the pains to deliver his message to them, probably when they were all come up to Jerusalem, to worship at some of the solemn feasts; then he had them together, and it was to be hoped then, if ever, that they would be well disposed to hear counsel and receive instruction.

This prophecy is dated in the 4th year of Jehoiakim, and the 1st of Nebuchadrezzar. It was in the latter end of Jehoiakim's 3d year, that Nebuchadrezzar began to reign himself alone, (having reigned some time before in conjunction with his father,) as appears, Dan. i. 1. but Jehoiakim's 4th year was three years before Nebuchadrezzar's 1st year was completed. Now that that active, daring, martial prince began to set up for the world's master, God, by his prophets, gives notice that he is his servant, and intimates what work he intends to employ him in, that his growing greatness, which was so formidable to the nations, might not be construed as any reflection upon the power and providence of God in the-

JEREMIAH, XXV.

VERMERNENT of the world. Nebuchadrezzar should not bid so far for universal monarchy, (I should have said universal tyranny,) but that God had purposes of his own to serve by him; in the execution of which, the world shall see the meaning of God's all-perpetting and ordering a thing that seemed such a reflection on his sovereignty and goodness.

Now in this message we may observe the great pains that had been taken with the people to bring them to repentance, which they are here put in mind of, as an aggravation of their sin, and a justification of God in his proceedings against them.

1. Jeremiah, for his part, had been a constant preacher of this prophecy for 25 years; he began in the 13th year of Josiah, who reigned 19 years, so that he prophesied about 18 or 19 years in his reign, then in the reign of Jehoiakim, and now 4 years of Jehoiakim's reign. Note, God keeps an account, whether we do or no, how long we have enjoyed the means of grace; and the longer we have enjoyed them, the heavier will our account be if we have not improved them. These three years (these three and twenty years) have I come seeking fruit on this fig-tree. All this while, (1.) God had been constant in sending messages to them, as there was occasion for them; "From that time to this very day, the word of the Lord has come unto me, for your use." Though they had the substance of the warning sent them already in the books of Moses, yet, because they were not duly regarded and applied, God sent to enforce them, and make them more particular, that they might be without excuse. Thus God's Spirit was striving with them, as with the old world, Gen. vi. 3. (2.) Jeremiah had been faithful and industrious in delivering these messages; he could appeal to themselves, as well as to God and his own conscience, concerning this: I have spoken to you, rising early and speaking. The high esteem of God, he had taken a great deal of care and pains to discharge his trust in such a manner as might be most likely to win and work upon them. What men are solicitous about and intent upon, they rise up early to prosecute. It intimates that his head was so full of thoughts about it, and his heart so intent upon doing good, that it broke his sleep, and made him get up before his proper hour as a man might not, to act with that care and carelessness he would be most likely to do them good. He rose early, both because he would lose no time, and because he would lay hold on and improve the best time to work upon them, when, if ever, they were sober and sedate. Christ came early in the morning to preach in the temple, and the people as early to hear him, Luke xxii. 38. Morning-lectures have their advantages. My voice shall they hear in the morning.

2. Beside him, God had sent them other prophets, on the same errand, ver. 4. Of the writing prophets, Micah, Nahum, and Habakkuk, were a little before him, and Zephaniah contemporary with him. But, beside these, there were many other of God's servants the prophets, who preached awakening sermons, which were never published. They are here called, and all the public preaching of him himself is said to rise early and send them; intimating how much his heart also was upon it, that this people should turn and live, and not go on and die, Ezek. xxxiii. 11.

3. All the messages sent them were to the purpose, and much to the same purpose, ver. 5, 6. (1.) They all told them of their faults, their evil way, and the evil of their doing. Those are not of God's servants, who will not tell them of the evil that is among them. (2.) They all reproved them particularly for their idolatry, as a sin that was in a special manner provoking to God; their going after other gods, to serve them, and to worship them, gods that were the work of their own hands. (3.) They all called on them to repent of their sins, and to reform their lives. This was the burden of every song. Turn ye now every one from his evil way. Note, Personal and particular reformation must be insisted on as necessary to national deliverance; every one must turn from his own evil way. The street will not be clean unless every one sweep before his own door. (4.) They all assured them, that, if they did so, it would certainly be the lengthening out of their troubles. The mercies they enjoyed should be continued to them; You shall dwell in the land, dwell at ease, dwell in peace, in this good land, which the Lord has given you and your fathers. Nothing but sin will turn you out of it, and that shall not if you turn from it. The judgments they feared should be prevented; Provoke me not, and I will do you no hurt. Note, We should never receive from God the evil of punishment if we did not provoke him by the evil of sin. God deals fairly with us, never corrects his children without cause, nor causes grief to us unless we give offence to him.

4. Yet all was to no purpose. They were not wrought upon to take the right and only method to turn away the wrath of God. Jeremiah was a lively, affectionate preacher, yet they hearkened not to him, ver. 3. The other prophets dealt faithfully with them, but neither did they hearken to them, nor incline their ear, ver. 4. That very particular sin which they were told of, all others, was most offensive to God, and made them obnoxious to his justice, they wilfully persisted in; You provoke me with the works of your hands, to your own hurt. Note, What is a provocation to God will prove, in the end, hurt to ourselves, and we must bear the blame of it. O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself.

5. Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, Because ye have not heard my words, ver. 5. Behold, I will send and take all the families of the north, saith the Lord, and Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon my servant, and will bring them against this land, and against the inhabitants thereof, and against all these nations round about, and will utterly destroy them, and make them an astonishment, and a hissing, and perpetual desolations. Moreover, I will take from them the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride, the sound of the millstones, and the light of the candle. And this whole land shall be a desolation, and an astonishment; and these nations shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years. 12. And it shall come to pass, when seventy years are accomplished, that I will punish the king of Babylon, and that nation, saith the Lord, for their iniquity, and the land of the Chaldeans, and will make it perpetual desolations. 13. And I will bring upon that land all my words which I have pronounced against it, even all that is written in this book, which Jeremiah hath prophesied against all the nations. 14. For many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of them also: and I will recompense them according to their deeds, and according to the works of their own hands.

Here is the sentence grounded upon the foregoing charge. "Because ye have not heard my words, I must take another course with you," v. 8. Note, When men will not regard the judgments of God's mouth, they may expect to feel the judgments of his hands; to hear the rod, since they would not hear the word; for the sinner must either be parted from his sin, or perish in it. Wrath comes not without remedy against those who continue in sin without repentance. It is not so much men's turning aside that ruins them as their not returning.

1. The ruin of the land of Judah by the king of Babylon's armacles is here decreed, v. 9. God sent them, his servants the prophets, and they were not heeded, and therefore God will send for his servant the king of Babylon, whom they cannot mock, and despise, and persecute, as they did his servants the prophets. Note, The messengers of God's wrath will be sent against those that would not receive the messengers of his mercy. One way or other, God will be heeded, and will make men know that he is the Lord. Nebuchadrezzar, though a stranger to the true God, the God of Israel, nay, an enemy to him, and afterward a rival with him, was yet, in the descent he made upon this country, God's servant, and Nebuchadrezzar's act was not a sin, but was an instrument in his hand for the correction of his people. He was really serving God's designs when he thought he was serving his own ends. Justly therefore does God here call himself, The Lord of hosts, (v. 8.) for here is an instance of his sovereign dominion, not only over the inhabitants, but over the armies, of this earth, in which he made use of Nebuchadrezzar, and an instrument in his hand for the correction of his people. He was them all at his command; the most potent and absolute monarchs are his servants. Nebuchadrezzar, who is an instrument of his wrath, is as truly his servant, as Cyrus is an instrument of his mercy. The land of Judah being to be made despised, God here musters his army that is to do it, gathert it together, takes all the families of the north, if there be occasion for them, lends them on as their Commander in chief, brings them against this land, gives them success, not only against Judah and Jerusalem, but against all the nations round about, that there might be no dependence upon them as allies, or assistants against that threatening force. The utter destruction of this and all the neighbouring lands is but the prelude of it. If, that shall be total; The whole land shall be a desolation, not only one city, but a desolation itself, both city and country shall be laid waste, and all the wealth of both be made a prey of; it shall be lasting, even perpetual desolations; they shall continue so long in ruins, and after long waiting there shall appear so little prospect of relief, that every one shall call it perpetual. This desolation shall be then in their credit among the heathen, and shall show them, that in the dust, shall make them an astonishment and an hissing; every one will be amazed at them, and hiss them off the stage of action with just disgrace, for deserting God who would have been their protection, for impostors who would certainly be their destruction. It will likewise be the ruin of all their comfort among themselves; it shall be final and everlasting, and therefore these words are prefixed to the doom of the land, not only because it is the most illustrious part of it, and of which the people more particularly lamented the destruction, but because it is the means of the destruction of the city and country. God would not have them boast of their mirth, hang their harps on the willow trees, and put them out of tune for songs. I will take from them the voice of mirth; they shall neither have cause for it, nor hearts for it. They would not hear the voice of God's word, and therefore the voice of mirth shall no more be heard among them. They shall be deprived of food; the sound of the milestone shall not be heard, for when the enemy has seized their stores, the sound of the grinding must needs be low, Eccl. xii. 4. An end shall be put to all business, there shall not be seen the light of a candle, and there shall be no work to be done worth candle-light. And lastly, they shall be stripped of all their liberty; Those nations shall serve the king of Babylon 70 years. The fixing of the time during which the captivity should last, would be of great use, not only for the confirmation of the prophecy, when the event (which in this particular could by no human sagacity be foreseen) should exactly answer the prediction, but for the comfort of the people of God in their calamities; and the carrying out of this prophecy by means of his providence and grace. Daniel, who was himself a prophet, had an eye to it, Dan. ix. 2. Nay, God himself had an eye to it, (2 Chron. xxxvi. 22.) for thereby he stirred up the spirit of Cyrus, that the word spoken by the mouth of Jeremiah might be accomplished. Known unto God are all his works, from the beginning of the world; which appears by this, that, when he has thought fit, some of them have been made known to his servants the prophets, and by them to his church.

2. The ruin of Babylon, at last, is here likewise foretold, as it had been, long before, by Isaiah, v. 12.—14. The destroyers must themselves be destroyed, and the rod thrown into the fire, when the correcting-work is done with it. This shall be done when 70 years are accomplished, the period which the king of Babylon must make way for the deliverance of the captives. It is a great doubt when these 70 years commence; some date them from the captivity in the 4th year of Jehoiakim, and 1st of Nebuchadrezzar; others from the captivity of Jehoiachin eight years after. I rather incline to the former, because then these nations began to serve the king of Babylon, and because historically God has taken the earliest time from which to reckon the accomplishment of a promise of mercy, as will appear in computing the 400 years' servitude in Egypt. And if so, 18 or 19 years of the 70 were run out before Jerusalem and the temple were quite destroyed in the 11th year of Zedekiah. However that be, when the time, the set time, to favour Zion is come, the king of Babylon must be visited, and all the instances of his tyranny reckoned for; then that nation shall be punished for their iniquity, as the other nations have been punished for theirs. That land must then be a perpetual desolation, such as they had made other lands; for the Judge of all the earth will both do right, and avenge wrong, as King of nations, and King of saints. Let proud conquerors and oppressors be made rash in the sight of God, for power and success, for it will come at last to their own turn to suffer; their day will come to fall. In this destruction of Babylon, which was to be brought about by the Medes and Persians, reference shall be had, (1.) To what God had said; I will bring upon that land all my words; for all the wealth and honour of Babylon shall be sacrificed to the truth of what God foretold. The divine word being rather than one iota or title of God's word shall fall to the ground. The same Jeremiah that prophesied the destruction of other nations by the Chaldeans, foretold also the destruction of the Chaldeans themselves; and this must be brought upon them, v. 13. It is with reference to this very event, that God says, I will confirm the word of my servant, and perform the words of my servant. (2.) To what they had done; (v. 14.) I will recommence them according to their deeds, by which they transgressed the law of God, even then when they were made to serve his purposes. They had made many nations to serve them, and trampled upon them with the greatest insolence imaginable; but now that the measure of their iniquity is full, many nations and great kings, that are in alliance with, and come in to the assistance of, Cyrus king of Persia, shall serve themselves of them also, shall make them selves masters of their country, enrich themselves with their spoils, and make them the footstool by which to mount the throne of universal monarchy. They shall make use of them for servants and soldiers. He that leads into captivity, shall go into captivity.

15. For thus saith the Lord God of Israel unto me, Take the wine-cup of this fury at my hand, and cause all the nations to whom I send thee, to drink it. 16. And they shall drink, and be moved, and be mad, because of the sword that I will send among them. 17. Then took I the cup at the Lord's hand, and made all the nations to drink, unto whom the Lord had sent me: 18. To wit, Jerusalem, and the cities of Judah, and the kings thereof, and the princes thereof, to make them a desolation, an astonishment, a hissing, and a curse; (as it is this day;) 19. Pharaoh king of Egypt, and his servants, and his princes, and all his people; 20. And all the mingled people, and all the kings of the land of Uz, and all the kings of the land of the Philistines, and Ashkelon, and Azzah, and Ekron, and the remnant of Ashdod. 21. Edom, and Moab, and the children of Ammon, 22. And all the kings of Tyrus, and all the kings of Zidon, and the kings of the Isles which are beyond the sea, 23. Dedan, and Tema, and Buz, and all that are in the utmost corners, 24. And all the kings of Arabia, and all the kings of the mingled people that dwell in the desert, 25. And all the kings of Zimri, and all the kings of Elam, and all the kings of the Medes, 26. And all the kings of the north, far and near, one with another, and all the kingdoms of the world, which are upon the face of the earth: and the king of Sheshach shall drink after them. 27. Therefore thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Drink ye, and be drunken, and spue, and fall, and rise no more, because of the sword which I will send among you. 28. And it shall be, if they refuse to take the cup at thy hand to drink, then shalt thou say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Ye shall certainly drink. 29. For, lo, I begin to bring evil on the city which is called by my name, and should ye be utterly unpunished? Ye shall not be unpunished; for I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth, saith the Lord of hosts.

Under the similitude of a cup going round, which all the company must drink of, is here represented the universal desolation that was now coming upon that part of the world, which Nebuchadrezzar, who just now began to reign and act, was to be the instrument of, and which should at length recoil upon his own country. The cup in the vision is to be a sword in the accomplishment of it: so it is explained, v. 16. It is the sword that I will send among them, the sword of war, that should be irresistibly strong and implacably cruel. Observe,

1. Whence this destroying sword should come; from the hand of God, it is the sword of the Lord, (ch. xlvii. 6.) bathed in heaven, Isa. xxxxiv. 5. Wicked men are made use of as his sword, Ps. xxvii. 13. It is the wine-cup of his fury. It is the just anger of God that sends this judgment; the nations have provoked him by their sins, and they must fall under the tokens of his wrath. They are herefore compelled to some intoxicating liquor, which they shall be forced to drink of, as formerly condemned malefactors were sometimes executed by being compelled to drink poison. The wicked are said to drink the wrath of the Almighty, Job xxi. 20. Rev. xiv. 10. Their share of troubles in this world is represented by the drinks of a cup of red wine full of mixture, Ps. lxxv. 8. See Ps. xi. 6. The wrath of God in this world is but as a cup, in comparison of the full streams of it in the other world.

2. By whose hand it should be sent them; by the hand of Jeremiah, as the judge set over the nations, (ch. iv. 10.) to pass this sentence upon them; and by the hand of Nebuchadrezzar, as the executioner. What a much greater figure then does the poor prophet make, that we may see, when we look upon their relation to God, though in the eye of the world it was the reverse of it! Jeremiah must take the cup at God's hand, and compel the nations to drink it. He foretells no hurt to them, but what God appoints him to foretell; and what is foretold by a divine authority, will certainly be fulfilled by a divine power.

3. On whom it should be sent; on all the nations within the sphere of Israel's acquaintance, and the lines of their communication. Jeremiah took the cup, and made all nations to drink of it, that is, he prophesied concerning each of the nations here mentioned, that they should share in this great desolation that was coming. Jerusalem and the cities of Judah are put first; (v. 18.) for judgment begins at the house of God, (1 Pet. iv. 17.) at the sanctuary, Ezek. xvi. 18. Zorohbaal had his eye principally upon Jerusalem and Judah in this expedition or no, does not appear; probably he had; for it was as considerable as any of the nations here mentioned; however, God had his eye principally to them. And this part of the prophecy was already begun to be accomplished; this is denoted by that melancholy parenthesis, (as it is this day;) for in the 4th year of Jehoiakim things were come into a very bad posture, and all the foundations were cut of course. Pharaoh, king of Egypt, comes next, because the Jews trusted to that broken reed; (v. 19.) the remains of them fled to Egypt, and then Jeremiah particularly foretold the destruction of that country, ch. xlvii, 10. 11. All the other nations that bordered upon Canaan, must pledge Jerusalem in this bitter cup, this cup of trembling. The mingled people, the Aramians, so some; some rovers of divers nations that lived by rapine, so others; the kings of the land of Uz, joined to the country of the Edomites. The Philistines had been vexatious to Israel, but now their cities and their lords became a prey to this mighty conqueror. Edom, Moab, Ammon, Tyre, and Zidon, are places well known to border upon Israel; the Isles beyond, beside, to whom the potent banece makes its Phœnicia and Syria, that lay upon the coast of the Mediterranean sea. Dedan, and the other countries mentioned, (v. 23, 24.) seem to have lain upon the confines of Idumea and Arabia the desert. These of Elam are the Persians, with whom the Medes are joined, now looked upon as incomconsiderable, and yet afterward able to make reprisals upon Babylon for themselves and all their neighbours. The kings of the north, that lay nearer to Babylon, and others that lay up at some distance, will be sure to be seized on, and made a prey of, by the victorious sword of Nebuchadrezzar. Nay, he shall push on his victories with such incredible fury and success, that all their hopes. Whatever they may call it, shall be bloody. That is, if they are not known, should be sacrifices to his ambition. Thus Alexander is said to have conquered the world, and the Roman empire is called the world, Luke ii. 1. Or it may be taken as reading the doom of all the kingdoms of the earth; one time or other they shall feel the dreadful effects of war. The world has been, and will be, a great cockpit, while mankind as a war as they do till their members, Jam. iv. 1. But that the conquerors may see their fate with the conquered, it concludes, The king of Sheshach shall drink after them, that is, the king of Babylon himself, who has given his neighbours all this trouble and vexation, shall at length have it return upon his own head. That by Sheshach is meant Babylon, is plain, from ch. li. 41. but whether it be the former name of the same city, or the name of another city of the same kingdom, is uncertain. Babylon's ruin was foretold, v. 12, 13. Upon this prophecy of its being the author of the ruin of so many nations, it was very fitly repeated here again. 4. What should be the effect of it? The desolations which the sword should make in all these kingdoms, are represented by the consequences of eating, and drinking, and being moved, and being mad. They shall be drunken and spue, and fall and rise no more, v. 27. Now this may serve, (1.) To make us loathe the sin of drunkenness, that the consequences of it are made use of to set forth a most woful and miserable condition. Drunkenness deprives men, for the present, of the use of their reason, makes them mad. It takes from them likewise that which, next to reason, is the most valuable blessing, and that is health; it makes them sick, and endangers the bones and the life. Men in drink often fall, and rise no more; it is a sin that is its own punishment. How wretchedly are they intoxicated and besotted, that suffer themselves at any time to be intoxicated, especially to be, by the frequent commission of this sin, besotted with wine or strong drinking. (2.) To make us loathe the sin of war. When God sends the sword upon a nation, with warrant to make it desolate, it soon becomes like a drunken man, filled with confusion at the alarms of war, put into a hurry; its counsellors mad, and at their wit's end, staggering in all the measures they take, all the motions they make; sick at heart with continual vexation; vomiting up the riches they have greedily swallowed it on; (Job xx. 13.) feeling do not before the enemy, and as unable to get up again, or do any thing to help themselves, as a man dead drunk is, Hab. ii. 16. 5. The undoubted certainty of it, with the reason given for it, v. 28, 29. They will refuse to take the cup at thy hand; not only they will be loath that the judgment should come, but they will be loath to backward; ch. xvii. 28. They have no longer credit to the prediction of so despicable a man as Jeremiah; but he must tell them that it is the word of the Lord of hosts, he hath said it; and it is in vain for them to struggle with Omnipotence: Ye shall certainly drink. The prophet must give them this reason, It is a time of visitation, it is a reckoning day, and Jerusalem has been called to an account for every encroachment they have committed; it is called by my name; its relation to me will not exempt it from punishment, and should ye be utterly unpunished? No, If this be done in the green tree, of the shepherds, and a howling of the principal of the flock, shall be heard: for the Lord hath spoiled their pasture. 37. And the peaceable habitations are cut down, because of the fierce anger of the Lord. 38. He hath forsaken his covert, as the lion: for their land is desolate, because of the fierceness of the oppressor, and because of his fierce anger.

We have in these verses, a further description of those terrible desolations which the king of Babylon with his armies should make in all the countries and provinces over which the empire of Nebuchadnezzar extended, and over which God had erected his temple; there were his oracles and ordinances which the neighboring nations should have attended to, and might have received benefit by; thither they should have applied themselves for the knowledge of God and their duty, and then they might have had reason to bless God for their neighbourhood to Jerusalem; but they, instead of that, took the opportunity which they had, not to disturb that holy city, when God came to reckon with Jerusalem, (because it learned so much of the way of the nations,) he reckoned with the nations because they learned so little of the way of Jerusalem.

They will soon be aware of Nebuchadnezzar’s making war upon them; but the prophet is here bidden to tell them that it is God himself that makes war upon them, a God with whom there is no contending.

1. The war is here proclaimed; (v. 50.) The Lord shall roar from on high; not from mount Zion and Jerusalem, (as Joel iii. 16. Amos i. 2.) but from heaven, from his holy habitation there; for now Jerusalem is one of the places against which he roars; he shall mightily roar upon his habitation on earth from that above. He has been longsighed, and seemed not to take notice of the wickedness of the nations; the times of this ignorance God winked at; but now he shall give a shout, as the assailants in battle do, against all the inhabitants of the earth, to whom it shall be a shout of terror, and yet a shout of joy in heaven, as theirs that tread the grapes; for when God is reckoning with the proud enemies of his kingdom among men, there is a great voice of much people heard in heaven, saying, Hallelujah. Rev. xiv. 1. He roars as a lion, (Amos iii. 4, 8.) as a lion that has forsaken his covert, (v. 38.) and is going abroad to seek his prey, upon which he roars, that he may the more easily seize it.

2. The manifesto is here published, showing the causes and reasons why God proclaims this war; (v. 31.) The Lord has a controversy with the nations; he has just cause to contend with them, and he will make them feel the weight of his anger. His quarrel with them is, in one word, for their wickedness, their contempt of him, and his authority over them, and kindness to them; He will give them that are wicked to the sword. They have provoked God to anger, and thence comes all this destruction; it is because of the fierce anger of the Lord, (v. 37.) and again (v. 58.) the fierceness of the oppressor; or as in a better read, the fierceness of the oppressing sword (for the word is feminine) is because of his fierce anger; and we are sure that he is never angry without cause; but who knows the power of his anger?

3. The alarm is here given and taken; A noise will come even to the ends of the earth, so loud shall it roar, so far shall it reach, v. 31. The alarm is not given by sound of trumpet, or beat of drum, but by a whirlwind, a great whirlwind, storm or tempest, which shall be raised up from the coasts, the remote coasts of the earth, v. 32. The Chaldean army shall be like a hurricane raised in the north, but thence carried on with incredible fierceness and swiftness, bearing down all before it. It is like the whirlwind out of which God answered Job, which was exceeding terrible, Job xxxvii. 1.—xxxviii. 1. And when the wrath of God thus roars like a lion from heaven, no marvel if it be bound to work wonders from earth; for who can choose but tremble when God thus speaks in displeasure? See Hosea xi. 10. Now the shepherds shall howl and cry, the kings and princes, and great ones of the earth, the principal of the flock; they used to be the most courageous and secure, but now their hearts shall fail them, they shall swallow themselves in the ashes, v. 34. Seeing that they once contended against the enemy, and seeing their country, which they have the charge of, and a concern for, inevitably ruined, they shall abandon themselves to sorrow. There shall be a voice of the cry of the shepherds, and a howling of the principal of the flock shall be heard, v. 36. Those are great calamities indeed, that strike such a terror upon the great and powerful, and so dishearten them; The Lord hath spoiled their pastures, in which they kept their flocks, and out of which they fed themselves; the spoiling of that makes them cry out thus. Perhaps, carrying on the metaphor of a lion roaring, it alludes to the great fright that shepherds are in when they hear a roaring lion coming toward their flocks, and find they have no way to flee (v. 33.) for their war is secure, neither can the principal of the flock escape. It is an enemy to the nations so furious, so sedulous, and the extent of their armies so vast, that it will be impossible to avoid falling into their hands. Note, As we cannot outface, so we cannot outrun, the judgments of God. This is that for which the shepherds howl and cry.

4. The progress of this war is here described; (v. 32.) Behold, evil shall go forth from nation to nation; as the cup gets round, so every nation shall have its share, and take its turn, because one does not take warning by the calamities of another to repent and reform. Nay, as if this were to be a little representation of the last and general judgment, it shall reach from one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth, v. 33. The day of vengeance is in his heart, and now his hand shall find out all his enemies wherever they are, Ps. xxxi. 5. Note, With our neighbour’s failure and catastrophe we should be concerned for our own. When one nation is a seat of war, every neighbouring nation should hear, and fear, and make its peace with God.

5. The dismal consequences of this war are here foretold; The days of slaughter and dissipations are accomplished, they are fully come, (v. 34.) the time fixed in the divine counsel for the slaughter of some and the dispersal of the rest which will make the nations completely desolate. Multitudes shall fall by the sword of the merciless Chaldeans, so that the slain of the Lord shall be every where found; they are slain by commission from him, and are sacri- ficed to his justice. The slain for sin are the slain of the Lord. To complete the misery of their slaughter, they shall not be lamented in particular, so general shall the number of lambs which are reduced, that they have not to be buried, for they shall have no friends left to do it, and the enemies shall not have so much humanity in them as to do it; and then they shall be as dung upon the earth, so vile and noisome: and it is well, as dung manures the earth, and makes it fruitful, so these horrid spectacles, which lie as monuments of divine justice, might be a means to awaken the inhabitants of the earth to learn righteousness. The effect of this war will be the desolation of the whole land that is the seat of it, (v. 38.) one land after another. But here are two expressions more, that seem to make the case in a particular manner piteous, (1.) Ye shall fall like a pleasant vessel, v. 34. The most desirable persons among them who most valued themselves, and were most valued, shall fall by the sword; who were led upon as vessels of honour. Ye shall fall as a Venice glass or a China dish, which is soon broken all to pieces: even the tender and delicate shall share in the common calamity; the sword devours one as well as another. (2.) Even the peaceable habitation are cut down. Those that used to be quiet, and not molested, the habitations in which ye have long dwelt in peace, shall now be no longer such, but cut down by the war; or, Those who used to be quiet, and not molesting any of their neighbours, those who lived in peace, easily, and gave no provocation to any, were then those that were to escape. Told was of and of the direful effects of war, that even those who were most harmless and insensible suffered hard things. Blessed be God, there is a peaceable habitation above for all the sons of peace, which is out of the reach of fire and sword.

CHAP. XXVI.

As in the history of the Acts of the Apostles, that of their preaching and that of their sufferings are not over, even it is in the account we have of the prophet Jeremiah; witness this chapter, where we are told, I. How faithfully he preached, v. 1, 6. II. How spiritually he was persecuted for so doing by the priests and the prophets, v. 7—11. III. How bravely he stood to his doctrine, in the face of his persecutors, v. 12—15. IV. How wonderfully he was protected and delivered by the providence of the princes and elders, v. 16—19. Though he is not here called the Lord's prophet, yet Jeremiah met with those that sheltered him, v. 24.

1. In the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim, the son of Josiah king of Judah, came this word from the Lord, saying, 2. Thus saith the Lord, Stand in the court of the Lord's house, and speak unto all the cities of Judah, which come to worship in the Lord's house, all the words that I command thee to speak unto them: diminish not a word: 3. If so be they will hearken, and turn every man from his evil way, that I may repent me of the evil, which I purpose to do unto them because of the evil of their doings. 4. And thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord. If ye will not hearken to me, to walk in my law which I have set before you, 5. To hearken to the words of my servants the prophets, whom I sent unto you, both rising up early, and sending them, but ye have not hearkened; 6. Then will I make this house like Shiloh, and will make this city a curse to all the nations of the earth.

We have here the sermon that Jeremiah preached, which gave such offence, that he was in danger of losing his life for it. It is here left upon record, as it were, by way of appeal to the judgment of impartial men in all ages, whether Jeremiah was worthy to die for delivering such a message as this from God, and whether his persecutors were not very wicked and unreasonable men.

2. God directed him where to preach this sermon, and when, and to whom auditory, v. 2. Let not even Jeremiah be as indirect in the choice of place and time, nor say that he might have delivered his message more privately, in a corner, among his friends that he could confide in, and that he deserved to smart for not acting more cautiously; for God gave him orders to preach in the court of the Lord's house, which was within the peculiar jurisdiction of his sworn enemies the priests, and who would therefore take themselves to be in a particular manner afflicted. He must preach this, as it would seem, at the time of one of the most solemn festivals, when persons were come from all the cities of Judah to worship in the Lord's house. These worshippers, we may suppose, had a great veneration for their priests, would credit the character they gave of men, and be exasperated against those whom they defamed, and would, consequently, side with them and strengthen their hands against Jeremiah; but none of these things must move him to the least fear, he was sent to bear this message to them, which, if it were mere preaching, would be very provoking. And because the prophet might be in some temptation to palliate the matter, and make it better to his hearers than God had made it to him, to exchange an offensive expression for one more plausible, therefore God charges him particularly not to diminish a word, but to speak the truth. He might, indeed, have said to the people, the words that he had commanded him. Note, God's anointed, must not keep close to their instructions, and not in the least vary from them, either to please men, or to save themselves from harm. They must neither add nor diminish, Deut. iv. 2.

II. God directed him what to preach, and it is that which could not give offence to any but such as were resolved to go on still in their trespasses. 1. He must assure them that if they would repent of their sins, and turn from them, though they were in imminent danger of ruin, and desolating judgments were just at the door, yet a step should be put to them, and God would proceed no further in his controversy with them; (v. 3.) this was the main thing God intended in sending him to them, to try if they would return from their sins, that so God might turn from his anger, and turn away the judgments that threatened them; which he was not only willing, but very desirous, to do, as soon as he could do it without prejudice to the honour of his justice and holiness. See how God waits to be gracious, waits till we are duly qualified, till we are fit for him to be gracious to, and in the mean time tries a variety of methods to bring us to be so.

2. He must, on the other hand, assure them that if they continued obstinate to all the calls God gave them, and would persist in their disobedience, it would certainly end in the ruin of their city and temple, v. 4—6. (1.) That which God required of them, was, that they should be observant of what he had said to them, both by the written word and by his ministry. This was the true test of all his laws, which he set before them, the law of Moses, with the ordinances and commandments of it; and that they should hearken to the words of his servants the prophets, who pressed nothing upon them but what was agreeable to the law of Moses, which was set before them as a touchstone to try the spirits by: and by this they were distinguished from the false prophets, whose delusions they should reject, and instead of drawing them to them. The law was, that God would himself set before them. The prophets were his own servants, and were immediately sent by him to them, and sent with a great deal of care and concern, rising early to send them, lest they should come too late, when their prejudices had got possession, and were become invincible. They had hitherto been deaf both to the law and to the prophets; Ye have not hearkened; all he expects now, is, that at length they should heed what he said, and make his word their rule. A reasonable demand! (2.) That which is threatened in case of refusal, is, that this city, and the temple in it, shall fare as their predecessors did, Shiloh and the tabernacle there, for a like refusal to walk in God’s law and hearken to his prophets, then when the present dispensation of prophecy just began in Samuel.
Now could a sentence be expressed more unexcceptionably? Is it not a rule of justice, Parium fur-sit ratio—Let those whose cases are the same, be dealt with alike? If Jerusalem be like Shiloh in respect of sin, why should it not be like Shiloh in respect of punishment? Can any other be expected?
This was not the first time he had given them warning to this effect; see ch. xii. 14. When the temple, which was the glory of Jerusalem, was destroyed, the city was thereby made a curse; for the temple was that which made it a blessing. If the salt lose that savour, it is thenceforth good for nothing.
It shall be a curse, it shall be the pattern of a curse; if a man would curse any city, he would say, God make it like Jerusalem! Note, Those that will not be subject to the commands of God, make themselves subject to the curse of God.

7. So the priests, and the prophets, and all the people, heard Jeremiah speaking these words in the house of the Lord. 3.
Now it came to pass, when Jeremiah had made an end of speaking all that the Lord had commanded him to speak unto all the people, that the priests, and the prophets, and all the people, took him, saying, Thou shalt surely die. 9. Why hast thou prohesied in the name of the Lord, saying, This house shall be like Shiloh, and this city shall be desolate without an inhabitant? And all the people were gathered against Jeremiah in the house of the Lord. 10. When the princes of Judah heard these things, then they came up from the king’s house unto the house of the Lord, and sat down in the entry of the new gate of the Lord’s house.
11. Then spake the priests and the prophets unto the princes, and to all the people, sayging, This man is worthy to die; for he hath prophesied against this city, as ye have heard with your ears. 12. Then spake Jeremiah unto all the princes, and to all the people, saying, The Lord sent me to prohesy against this house, and against this city, all the words that ye have heard. 13.
Therefore now amend your ways and your doings, and obey the voice of the Lord your God; and the Lord will repent him of the evil that he hath pronounced against you. 14. As for me, behold, I am in your hand; do with me as seemeth good and meet unto you: 15. But know ye for certain, that if ye put me to death, ye shall surely bring innocent blood upon yourselves, and upon this city, and upon the inhabitants thereof: for of a truth the Lord hath sent me unto you, to speak all these words in your ears.

One would have hoped that such a sermon as that in the foregoing verses, so plain and practical, so rational and pathetic, and delivered in God’s name, should have wrought upon even this people, especially meeting them now at their devotions, and should have prevailed with them to repent and reform; but instead of awakening their convictions, it did but exasperate their temptations, as appears by this account of the effect of it.
I. Jeremiah is charged with it as a crime, that he had preached such a sermon, and is apprehended for it as a criminal. The priests and false prohets, heard him speak these words, v. 7.
They had patience, it seems, to hear him out, did not disturb him when he was preaching, nor give him any interruption till he had made an end of speaking a few words against Jerusalem; for so far they were fairer with him than some of the persecutors of God’s ministers have been; they let him say all he had to say, and yet perhaps with a bad design, in hopes to have something worse yet to lay to his charge; but, having no worse, this shall suffice to ground an indictment upon; He hath said, This house shall be like Shiloh. See how unfair they were in representing his words. He had had nothing in God’s name. If ye will not hearken to me, then will I make this house like Shiloh; but they leave out God’s hand in the desolation, (I will make it so,) and their own hand in it, in not hearkening to the voice of God, and charge it upon him, that he blasphemed this holy place; the crime charged both on our Lord Jesus and on Stephen; He said, This house shall be like Shiloh. Well might he complain, as David does, (Ps. cxlv. 5.) I heard not the voice of the Lord; and we must not think it strange if we,
and what we say and do, be thus misrepresented.
When the accusation was so weakly grounded, no marvel that the sentence passed upon it was unjust, Thou shalt surely die. What he had said agreed with what God had said when he took possession of the temple, (1 Kings ix. 6—8.) If you shall at all turn from following after me, then this house shall be abandoned; and yet he is condemned to die for saying it. It is not out of any concern for the honour of the temple, that they appear thus warm, but because they are resolved not to part with their sins, in which they flatter themselves with a conceit that the temple of the Lord will protect them;
therefore, right or wrong, Thou shalt surely die.
This outcry of the priests and prophets, we are told, was made against Jeremiah, in a popular tumult, ready to pull him to pieces; were gathered about him; (so some read it;) they fetched together, some crying one thing, and some another. The people that were at first present, were at last against him, (v. 8.) but their clamours drew more together, only to see what the matter was. 11. He is brought before and indicted for it before the highest court of judicature they had. Here, 1. The princes of Judah were his judges, v. 10. These that filled the thrones of judgment, the thrones of the house of David, the elders of Israel, they, hearing of this tumult in the temple, came up from the king’s house, where they usually sat near the court, to the house of the Lord, to inquire into this matter, to see how this thing was done disorderly. They sat down in the entry of the new gate of the Lord’s house, and held a court, as it were, by a special commission of Oyer and Terminer. 2. The priests and prophets were his persecutors and accusers, and were violently set against him. They appealed to the princes and to all the people, to the court and the jury, whether this man be not worthy to die, v.
11. The corrupt priests and counterfeit prophets have always been the most bitter enemies of the prophets of the Lord; they had ends of their own serve, which they thought such preaching as this would be an obstruction to. When Jeremiah prophesied in the house of the king concerning the fall of the royal family, (ch. xxii. 1.) the court, though very corrupt, bore it patiently, and we do not find that they persecuted him for it; but when he comes into the house of the Lord, and touches the copyhold of the priests, and contradicts the lies and histories of the false prophets, then he is adjudged worthy of death by false guilt, and the priests bore by rule their means, Jer. v. 31. Observe, When Jeremiah is indicted before the princes, the stress of his accusation is laid upon what he said concerning the city, because they thought the princes would be most concerned about that. But concerning the words spoken, they appeal to the people, Ye have heard what he hath said, it be given in evidence."

III. Jeremiah makes his defence before the princes and the people. He does not go about to deny the words, or to diminish aught from them; what he has said he will stand to, though it cost him his life; he owns that he had prophesied against this house, and this city.

1. He asserts that he did this by good authority: not maliciously, not falsely, not out of any ill-will to his country, or any disaffection to the government in church or state, but, The Lord sent me to prophesy thus; so he begins his apology, (v. 12.) and so he concludes it, for this is that he resolves to abide by as sufficient to hear him out; (v. 13.) Of a truth the Lord hath sent me unto you, to speak all these words. As long as ministers keep close to the instance they have from heaven, they need not fear the opposition they may meet with from hell or earth. He pleads that he is but a messenger, and if he faithfully deliver his message, he must bear no blame; but he is a messenger from the Lord, to whom they were accountable as well as he, and therefore might demand regard. If he speak but what God appointed him to speak, he is under the divine protection, and whatever affront they offer to the ambassador, will be resented by the Prince that sent him.

2. He shows them that he did it with a good design, and that it was their fault if they did not make a good use of it. It was said, not by way of fatal sentence, but of fair warning; if they would take the warning, they might prevent the execution of the sentence. 14. If it were so that I spake by the mouth of the Lord, and ye said, The innovation of the Lord; I have heard it, I have forgotten it, or I have made it not my business to attend to it; it would be no matter, I have indeed (says Jeremiah) prophesied against this city; but if you will now amend your ways and your doings, the threatened ruin shall be prevented, which was the thing I aimed at in giving you the warning. They are very unjust who complain of ministers for preaching hell and damnation, when it is only to keep them from that place of torment, and to bring them to heaven and salvation.

3. He therefore warns them of their danger, if they proceeded against him; (v. 14.) As for me, the matter is not great what becomes of me; behold, I am in your hand; you know I am; I neither have any property nor estate; I am the vine, you are the branches, you nor is it so much my concern to save my own life; do with me as seems meet unto you; If I be led to the slaughter, it shall be as a lamb. Note, It becomes God's ministers, that are warm in preaching, to be calm in suffering, and to behave submissively to the powers that are over them, though they be persecuting powers. But for themselves, he tells them, I will not only put them on their guard to death; Ye shall surely bring innocent blood upon yourselves, v. 15. They might think that killing the prophet would help to defeat the prophecy, but they would prove wretchedly deceived, it would but add to their guilt, and aggravate their ruin. Their own consciences could not but tell them, that if Jeremiah was (as certainly he was) sent of God to bring them this message, it was at their utmost peril if they treated him for it as a malefactor. Those that persecute God's ministers, hurt not them so much as themselves.

16. Then said the princes and all the people unto the priests and to the prophets, This man is not worthy to die; for he hath spoken to us in the name of the Lord our God. 17. Then rose up certain of the elders of the land, and spake to all the assembly of the people, saying, 18. Micah the Morashite prophesied in the days of Hezekiah king of Judah, and spake to all the people of Judah, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Zion shall be ploughed like a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of a forest. 19. Did Hezekiah king of Judah and all Judah put him at all to death? did he not fear the Lord, and besought the Lord, and the Lord repented him of the evil which he had pronounced against them? Thus might we procure great evil against our souls. 20. And there was also a man that prophesied in the name of the Lord, Urijah the son of Shemaiah of Kirjath-jeirmim, who prophesied against this city, and against this land, according to all the words of Jeremiah: 21. And when Jehoiakim the king, with all his mighty men, and all the princes, heard his words, the king sought to put him to death; but when Urijah heard it, he was afraid, and fled, and went into Egypt; 22. And Jehoiakim the king sent men into Egypt; namely, Eliakim the son of Achbor, and certain men with him into Egypt: 23. And they fetched forth Urijah out of Egypt; and brought him unto Jehoiakim the king, who slew him with the sword, and cast his dead body into the graves of the common people. 24. Nevertheless, the hand of Ahikam the son of Shaphan was with Jeremiah, that they should not give him into the hand of the people to put him to death. Here is, 1. The acquitting of Jeremiah from the charge exhibited against him. He had indeed spoken the words as they were laid in the indictment, but they are not looked upon to be seditions or treasonable, ill-intended, or of any bad tendency, and therefore the court and country agree to find him not guilty. The priests and prophets, notwithstanding his rational plea for himself, continued to demand judgment against him; but the princes, and all the people, are clear in it, This man is not worthy to die; (v. 16.) for (say they) he hath spoken to us, not of himself, but in the name of the Lord our God. And are they willing to own that he did indeed speak to them in the name of the Lord, and that that Lord is their God? Why then did they not amend their ways and doings, and take the method he prescribed to prevent the ruin of their country? If they say, His prophecy is from God, it may justly be asked, and how then can we not then believe it? Matth. xxi. 25. Note, It is pity that those who are so far convinced of the divine original of gospel-preaching, as to protect it from the malice of others, do not submit to the power and influence of it themselves.

2. A precedent quoted to justify them in acquitting Jeremiah. Some of the elders of the land, either the same before mentioned, or the more ancient men of the people, stood up, and put the assembly in mind of a former case, as is usual with us in giving judgment; for the wisdom of our predecessors is a direction to us. The case referred to is that of Micah. We have extant the book of his prophecy among the minor prophets. (1.) Was it thought strange that Jeremiah prophesied against this city and the temple? Micah did so before him, even in the reign of Hezekiah, that reign of reformation, v. 18. Micah said it as publicly as Jeremiah had now spoken to the same purport, Zion shall be ploughed like a field, the building shall be all destroyed, so that nothing shall hinder but it may be ploughed; Jerusalem shall become heaps of ruins, and the mountain of the house on which the temple is built shall be as the high places of the forest, overrun with briars and thorns. This prophet not only spake this, but wrote it, and left it on record; we find it, Mic. iii. 12. By this it appears that a man may be, as Micah was, a true prophet of the Lord, and yet may prophesy the destruction of Zion and Jerusalem. When we threaten secure sinners with the taking away of the Spirit of God and the kingdom of God from them, and declining churches with the removal of the candlestick, we say no more than what he did: we say nothing that we have warrant from the word of God to say. (2.) Was it thought fit by the princes to justify Jeremiah in what he had done? It was what Hezekiah did before them in a like case. Did Hezekiah, and the people of Judah, the representatives of the people, the commons in parliament, did they complain of Micah the prophet? Did they imprison him, or make an act to silence him, and put him to death? No; on the contrary, they took the warning he gave them, Hezekiah, that renowned prince, of blessed memory, set a good example before his successors, for he feared the Lord as Noah, who, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, was moved with fear. Micah's preaching drove him to his knees; he besought the Lord to turn away the judgment threatened, and to be reconciled to them; and he found it was not in vain to do so, for the Lord repented him of the evil, and returned in mercy to them; he sent an angel, who routed the army of the Assyrians, that threatened to have ploughed Zion like a field, v. 19. Hezekiah got good by the preaching, and then you may be sure he would do no harm to the preacher. These elders conclude that they might as well behave toward them, the commonwealth, as the Lord, and both commonwealth and state, if they should gratify the importunity of the priests and prophets in putting Jeremiah to death; Thus might we procure great evil against our souls, for it would be adding sin to sin. Jehoiakim, the present king, had slain one prophet already, and now this man threatened to kill another. Hezekiah, who protected Micah, was preserved; but did Jehoiakim prosper, who slew Urijah? No, they all saw the contrary. As good examples, and the good consequences of them, should encourage us in that which is good, so the examples of bad men, and the bad consequences of them, should deter us from that which is evil. But some good interpreters think this narrative from the historian who penned the book, Jeremiah, and his immediate or Belochick, who, to make Jeremiah's deliverance by means of the princes the more wonderful, takes notice of this that happened about the same time; for both were in the reign of Jehoiakim, and this in the beginning of his reign, v. 1. Observe, (1.) Urijah's prophecy; it was against this city, and this land, according to all the words of Jeremiah. The prophets of the Lord are proved in their testimony, and one would have thought that cut of the mouth of so many witnesses the word should have been regarded. (2.) The prosecution of him for it, v. 21. Jehoiakim and his courtiers were exasperated against him, and sought to put him to death; in this wicked design the king himself was principally concerned. (3.) His abounding thereupon; When he heard that the king was determined against him, he removed his life, he was afraid, and fled, and went into Egypt. This was certainly his fault, and an effect of the weakness of his faith, and it sped accordingly. He distrusted God, and his power to protect him and bear him out; he was too much under the power of that fear of man, which brings a snare. It looked as if he durst not stand to what he had said, or was ashamed of his Master, who was so justly looking to abandon the land of Israel, and to throw himself quite out of the way of being useful. Note, There are many that have much grace, but they have little courage; that are very honest, but withal very timorous. (4.) His execution notwithstanding. Jehovah's malice, one would have thought, might have contented itself with his banishment, and it might have been more just for God to have given him his life; but they are blood thirsty that hate the upright; (Prov. xxix. 10.) it was the life, that precious life, that he hunted after, and nothing else would satisfy him. So implacable is his revenge, that he sends a party of soldiers into Egypt, some hundreds of miles, and they bring him back by force of arms. It would not sufficiently gratify him to have him slain in Egypt, but he must feed his eyes with the bloody spectacle; they brought him to Jehoiakim, and he slew him with the sword, for aught I know, with his own hands. Yet neither did this satisfy his insatiable malice, but he loads the dead body of the good man with infamy, would not allow it the decent respects usually and justly paid to the remains of men of distinction, but cast it into the graves of the common people, and he列为 the people of the Lord; thus was the shield of Saul violently cast away, as though he had not been anointed with oil. Thus Jehovah hoped to ruin his reputation with the people, that no heed might be given to his predictions, and to deter others from prophesying in like manner; but in vain; Jeremiah says the same. There is no contending with the word of God. Herod though he had given God the point of a needle, could not baptize the Baptist's head, but found himself deceived, when, soon after, he heard of Jesus Christ, and said, in a fright, This is John the Baptist. 4. Here is Jeremiah's deliverance. Though Urijah was lately put to death, and persecutors, when they have tasted the blood of saints, are apt to thirst after more, (as Herod, Acts xii. 2, 3,) yet God wonderfully preserved Jeremiah, though he did not
IN the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim, the son of Josiah king of Judah, came this word unto Jeremiah from the Lord, saying, 2. Thus saith the Lord to me, Make thee bonds and yokes, and put them upon thy neck. 3. And send them to the king of Edom, and to the king of Moab, and to the king of the Ammonites, and to the king of Tyre, and to the king of Zidon, by the hand of the messengers which come to Jerusalem unto Zedekiah king of Judah; 4. And command them to say unto their masters, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Thus shall ye say unto your masters: 5. I have made the earth, the man and the beast that are upon the ground, by my great power, and by my out-stretched arm, and have given it unto whom it seemed meet unto me. 6. And now have I given all these lands into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon, my servant; and the beasts of the field have I given even also to serve him. 7. And all nations shall serve him, and his son, and his son's son, until the very time of his land come; and then many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of him. 8. And it shall come to pass, that the nation and kingdom which will not serve the same Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon, and that will not put their neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon, that nation will I punish, saith the Lord, with the sword, and with the famine, and with the pestilence, until I have consumed them by his hand. 9. Therefore hearken not ye to your prophets, nor to your diviners, nor to your enchanter, nor to your sorcerers, which speak unto you, saying, Ye shall not serve the king of Babylon: 10. For they prophesy a lie unto you, to remove you far from your land; and that I should drive you out, and ye should perish. 11. But the nations that bring their neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and serve him, those will I let remain still in their own land, saith the Lord; and they shall till it, and dwell therein.
II. He is to send this, with a sermon annexed to it, to all the neighbouring princes; those, as mentioned, (v. 3.) that lay next to the land of evanam. It should seem, there was a treaty of alliance or gott between the King of Judah and all those other kings. Jerusalem was the place appointed for the first, that they should bind themselves in a league offensive and defensive, to stand by one another, in opposition to the common enemy, Nebuchadnezzar, and to reduce his exorbitant power. They had great confidence in their strength thus united, and were ready to call themselves the High Allies; but when the envoys were returning to their respective masters, with the ratification of this treaty, Jeremiah gives each of them a yoke to carry to his master, to signify to him, that he must either by consent or by compulsion become a servant to the king of Babylon, let him choose which he will. In the sermon upon this sign,

1. God asserts his own indisputable right to dispose of kingdoms as he pleases. (v. 5.) He is the Creator of all things; he made the earth at first, established it, and abides; it is still the same, though one generation passeth away, and another comes; he still by a continued creation maintains the beast upon the earth, and it is by his great power and outstretched arm. His arm has infinite strength, though it be stretched out. Upon this account, he may give and convey a property and dominion to whomsoever he pleases. As he hath graciously given the earth to the children of men in general, (Ps. cxv. 16.) so he gives to each his share of it, be it more or less. Note, Whatever aid and help he can bestow upon the good of his creatures, it is what God sees fit for their good: we ourselves should therefore be content, though we have ever so little, and not envy any their share, though they have ever so much.

2. He publishes a grant of all these countries to Nebuchadnezzar. Know all men by these presents. Scint presents of futuri.—Let those of the present and those of the future age know. This is to certify all whom it may concern, that I have given all these lands, with all the wealth of them, into the hands of the king of Babylon, even the beasts of the field, whether tame or wild, have I given to him, parks and pastures, they are all his own. Nebuchadnezzar was a proud, wicked man, an idolater; and yet God, in his providence, gives him this large dominion, these vast possessions. Note, The things that are the best things, for God often gives the largest share of them to bad men, that are rivals with him, and rebels against him. He was a wicked man, and yet what he had, he had by divine grant. Note, Dominion is not founded in grace. Those that have not any colourable title to eternal happiness, may yet have a justifiable title to their temporal good things. Nebuchadnezzar is that wise man, wisdom and understanding, that he might peaceably enjoy it, he bowed his shoulder to bear, and became a servant to tribute, (Gen. xlv. 14, 15.) as these are here advised to do; Serve the king of Babylon, and you shall till the land and dwell therein. Some would condemn this as the evidence of a mean spirit, but the prophet recommends it as that of a meek spirit, which yields to necessity, and by a quiet submission to the hardest yoke of Providence, makes the best of bad: it is better to do so, than by struggling to make it worse.

6. He puts them in a fair way to prevent their destruction, by a quiet and easy submission, v. 11. The nations that will be content to serve the king of Babylon, and pay him tribute for seventy years, (ten apprenticeships,) those will I let remain still in their own land. They that will bend shall not break. Perhaps the dominion of the king of Babylon may bear no harder upon them than that of their own kings had done. It is often more a point of honour than true wisdom, to prefer liberty before life. It is not mentioned to the disgrace of Issachar, that because he was great in understanding and pleasant, that he might peaceably enjoy it, he bowed his shoulder to bear, and became a servant to tribute, (Gen. xlv. 14, 15.) as these are here advised to do; Serve the king of Babylon, and you shall till the land and dwell therein. Some would condemn this as the evidence of a mean spirit, but the prophet recommends it as that of a meek spirit, which yields to necessity, and by a quiet submission to the hardest yoke of Providence, makes the best of bad: it is better to do so, than by struggling to make it worse.

12. I spake also to Zedekiah king of Judah according to all these words, saying Bring thy necks under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and serve him and his people, and live 13 Why will ye die, thou and Medes and Persians, served themselves of him, as before, xxv. 14. Thus Adonibezek was trampled upon himself, as he had trampled on other kings.
thy people, by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence, as the Lord hath spoken against the nation that will not serve the king of Babylon? 14. Therefore hearken not unto the words of the prophets that speak unto you, saying, Ye shall not serve the king of Babylon: for they prophesy a lie unto you. 15. For I have not sent them, saith the Lord, yet they prophesy a lie in my name, that I might drive you out, and that ye might perish, ye, and the prophets that prophesy unto you. 16. Also I spake to the priests, and to all this people, saying, Thus saith the Lord, Hearken not to the words of your prophets that prophesy unto you, saying, Behold, the vessels of the Lord's house shall now shortly be brought again from Babylon: for they prophesy a lie unto you. 17. Hearken not unto them; serve the king of Babylon, and live: wherefore should this city be laid waste? 18. But if they be prophets, and if the word of the Lord be with them, let them now make intercession to the Lord of hosts, that the vessels which are left in the house of the Lord, and in the house of the king of Judah, and at Jerusalem, go not to Babylon. 19. For thus saith the Lord of hosts concerning the pillars, and concerning the sea, and concerning the bases, and concerning the residue of the vessels that remain in this city, 20. Which Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon took not, when he carried away captive Jeconiah, the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, from Jerusalem to Babylon, and all the nobles of Judah and Jerusalem; 21. Yea, thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, concerning the vessels that remain in the house of the Lord, and in the house of the king of Judah and of Jerusalem; 22. They shall be carried to Babylon, and there shall they be until the day that I visit them, saith the Lord: then will I bring them up, and restore them to this place.

What was said to all the nations, is here with a particular tenderness applied to the nation of the Jews, for whom Jeremiah was sensibly concerned. The case at present stood thus; Judah and Jerusalem had often contended with the king of Babylon, and still were worsted; many both of their valuable persons and their valuable goods were carried to Babylon already, and some of the vessels of the Lord's house particularly. Now, how this struggle would issue, was the question. They had those among them at Jerusalem, who pretended to be prophets, who bade them hold out, and they should, in a little time, be too hard for the king of Babylon, and recover all that they had lost. Now Jeremiah is sent to bid them yield and knock under; for that, instead of recovering what they had lost, they should otherwise lose all that remained; and to press them to this, is the scope of these verses.

1. Jeremiah humbly addresses the king of Judah, to persuade him to surrender to the king of Babylon; his act would be the people's, and would determine them, and therefore he speaks to him as to them all; (v. 12.) Bring your necks under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and live. Is it their wisdom to submit to the heavy iron yoke of a cruel tyrant, that they may secure the lives of their bodies; and is it not much more our wisdom to submit to the freedom and yoke of our rights? James 4:13. Whether then ye be wise or foolish hath no matter; be ye humble, and submit to the yoke of Christ, and it will be found of great advantage to you.

11. He addresses himself likewise to the priests and the people, (v. 16.) to persuade them to serve the king of Babylon, that they might live, and might prevent the desolation of the city; (v. 17.) And the better for their doing it be, if it be to be well with you. They were well advised to serve Nebuchadnezzar, and return from Babylon, the case being so uncertain, whether they would be better in Babylon, or else where, and what would be the effect of remaining in Babylon. It is the case of all who are compelled to leave their homes, and the cities of their choice, to live under a government which they do not approve of, and to have to do with governors, of whom they can have no confidence. We are to serve them, whether we like it or not, and our duty is to do all in our power for our preservation.

12. In these addresses he warns them against giving credit to the false prophets that mocked them asleep in their security, because they saw that they loved to slumber; Hearken not to the words of the prophets, (v. 14.) your prophets, v. 16. They are not God's prophets, he never sent them, they do not serve him, nor seek to please him; they are yours, for they say what you would have them say, and aim at nothing but to please you. Two things their prophecies flattered them into the belief of.

1. That the power which the king of Babylon had gained over them, should now shortly be broken. They said, (v. 14.) You shall not serve the king of Babylon; you need not submit voluntarily, for you shall not be compelled to submit. This was the false philosophy in the name of the Lord, (v. 13.) as if God had sent them to the people on this errand, in kindness to them, that they might not disspare themselves by an inglorious surrender. But it was a lie. They said that God sent them; but that was false, he disowns it, I have not sent them, saith the Lord. They said that they should never have brought into subjection to the king of Babylon; but this was false too, the event proved it so. They said that to hold out to the last would be the way to secure themselves and their city; but that was false, for it would certainly end in their being driven out and perishing. So that it was all a lie, from first to last; and the prophets that deceived the people with these lies, did, in the issue, but deceive themselves, the blind leaders and the blind followers fell together into the ditch; that ye might perish, ye, and the prophets that prophesy unto you; which will be so far from warranting your security, that they will be the means of securing them. Note, They that encourage sinners to go on in their sinful ways, will in the end perish with them.

2. They prophesied that the vessels of the temple, which the king of Babylon had already carried away, should now shortly be brought back; (v. 16.) this they fed the priests with the hopes of, knowing how to propound it so as to be to them a golden treasure of the temple better than the temple that sanctified the gold. These vessels were taken away when Jeremiah was carried captive into Babylon, v. 20. We have the story, and it is a melancholy one, 2 Kings xxiv. 13.-15. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 10. All the goodly vessels, that is, all the vessels of gold that were in the house of the Lord, with all the treasures, were taken as prey, and brought to Babylon. This was grievous to them above any thing, for the temple was their pride and confidence, and the stripping of that was too plain an indication of that which the true prophet told them, that their God was departed from them. Their false prophets therefore had no other way to make them easy than by telling them that the king of Babylon should be forced to restore them in a little while. Now, here, (1.) Jeremiah thinketh of preserving the vessels that remained, by their prayers, rather than of bringing back those that were gone, by their prophecies; (v. 18.) If they be prophets, as they pretend, and if the word of the Lord be with them—if they have any intercourse with Heaven, and any interest there, let them improve it for the stopping of the progress of the judgment, let them step into the gap, and stand between the Lord and the sanctuary, the living and the dead; between that which is carried away and that which remains, that the plague may be stayed; let them make intercession with the Lord of hosts, that the vessels which are left go not after the rest. [1.] Instead of prophesying, let them pray. Note, Prophets must be praying men; by being much in prayer they must make it to appear, that they keep up a correspondence with Heaven. We may have all their prophecies, but none of their prayers. Do we not often hear those, who do not frequently by prayer send thither, By praying for the safety and prosperity of the sanctuary they must make it to appear that, as becomes prophets, they are of a public spirit; and by the success of their prayers it will appear that God favours them. [2.] Instead of being concerned for the retrieving of what they had lost, they must betake themselves for the securing of what was left, and take it as a great favour if they can gain that point. When God's judgments are abroad, we must not seek great things, but be thankful for a little.

(2.) He assures them that even this point should not be gained, but the brazen vessels should go after the golden ones, v. 19.-22. Nebuchadnezzar had found so good a booty once, that he would be sure to come again, and take all he could find, not only in the holy temple, but in the king's house. They shall all be carried to Babylon in triumph, and there shall they be. But he concludes with a gracious promise, that the time should come when they should all be returned; Until the day that I visit them in mercy, according to appointment, and then I will bring those vessels up again, and restore them to this place, to their place. Surely they were under the protection of a special Providence, they had been melted down, and put to some other use; but there was to be a second temple, for which they were to be reserved. We read particularly of the return of them, Ezra i. 8. Note, Though the return of the church's prosperity do not come in our time, we must not therefore despair of it, for it will come in God's time. Though they who said, The vessels of the Lord's house shall shortly be brought again, prophesied a lie, (v. 16.) yet he that said, They shall at length be brought again, prophesied the truth. We are apt to set our clock before God's dial, and then to quarrel because they do not agree; but the Lord is a God of judgment, and it is fit that we should wait for him.

CHAP. XXVIII.

In the foregoing chapter, Jeremiah had charged those prophets with lies, who foretold the speedy breaking of the yoke of the king of Babylon, and the speedy return of the vessels of the sanctuary; now here we have his contest with a particular prophet upon those heads. I. Hananiah, a pretender to prophecy, in contradistinction to Jeremiah, foretold the sinking of Nebuchadnezzar's power, and the return both of the persons and of the vessels that were carried away; (v. 1. 4.) and, as a sign of this, he brake the yoke from the neck of Jeremiah, v. 10, 11. II. Jeremiah wished his words might prove true, but appealed to the event, whether they were so or no, not doubting but they would disprove them, v. 5. 9. III. The doom both of the deceived and the deceiver is here read. The people that were deceived, should have their yoke of wood turned into a yoke of iron, (v. 12. 14.) and the prophet that was the deceiver, should be shortly cut off by death, and he was so, accordingly, within two months, v. 15. 17.

1. And it came to pass the same year, in the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah king of Judah, in the fourth year, and in the fifth month, that Hananiah the son of Azur the prophet, which was of Gibeah, spake unto me in the house of the Lord, in the presence of the priests, and of all the people, saying, 2. Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, I have broken the yoke of the king of Babylon. 3. Within two full years will I bring again into this place all the vessels of the Lord's house that Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon took away from this place, and carried them to Babylon: 4. And I will bring again into this place all the vessels of the Lord's house that Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon took away from this place, and carried them to Babylon: 5. Then the prophet Jeremiah said unto the prophet Hananiah, in the presence of the priests, and in the presence of all the people that stood in the house of the Lord. 6. Even the prophet Jeremiah said, Amen: the Lord do so; the Lord perform thy words which thou hast prophesied, to bring again the vessels of the Lord's house, and all that is carried away captive, from Babylon into this place. 7. Nevertheless, hear thou now this word that I speak in thine ears, and in the ears of all the people; 8. The prophets that have been before me, and before thee of old, prophesied both against many countries, and against great kingdoms, of war, and of evil, and of pestilence. 9. The prophet which prophesieth of peace, when the word of the prophet shall come to pass, then shall the prophet be known that the Lord hath truly sent him.

This struggle between a true prophet and a false one, is said here to have happened in the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah, and yet in the fourth year, long four years after it. God could not have been called the beginning, or former part of it, because during these years he reigned under the dominion of the King of Babylon, and as a tributary to him; whereas the rest of his reign, which might well be called the latter part of it, in distinction from that former part, he reigned in rebellion against the king of Babylon. In this fourth year of his reign, he went in person to Babylon, (as we find, ch. ii. 39,) and it is probable that this gave the people some time that his negotiation in person would put a good end to the war, in which hope the false prophets encouraged them, this Hananiah particularly, who was of Gibeah, a priest's city, and therefore probably, himself a priest, as well as Jeremiah. Now here we have,

The prediction which Hananiah delivered publicly, solemnly, in the house of the Lord, and in the name of the Lord, in an august assembly, in the presence of the priests, and of all the people, who, probably, were expecting to have some message from heaven. In delivering this prophecy, he faced Jeremiah, he spake it to him, (v. 1.) designing to confront and contradict him, as much as to say, "Jeremiah, thou liest." Now his prediction is, that the Lord "will speedily break within two full years the vessels of the temple, should be brought back, and Jerusalem, and all the captives that were carried away with him, should return; whereas Jeremiah had foretold that the yoke of the king of Babylon should be bound on yet faster, and that the vessels and captives should not return for 70 years, v. 2. Now, upon the reading of this sham prophecy, and comparing it with the messages that God sent by the true prophets, we may observe what a vast difference there is between them. Here is nothing of the spirit and life, the majesty of style and sublimity of expression, that appear in the discourses of God's prophets, nothing of that divine flame and fluxus. But that which is especially wanting here, is an air of prayer; he speaks with a great deal of confidence of his own prosperity, in that prosperity, but here is not a word of good counsel given them to repent and reform, and return to God, to pray, and seek his face, that they might be prepared for the favours God had in reserve for them. He promises them temporal mercies, in God's name, but makes no mention of those spiritual mercies which God always promised should go along with them, ch. xxvii. 2. I will give thee that which is good. By all which it appears that, whatever he pretended, he had only the spirit of the world, not the Spirit of God, (1 Cor. ii. 12.) that he aimed to please, not to profit. II. Jeremiah's reply to this pretended prophecy: 1. He heartily wishes it might prove true; such an affliction has he for his country, and so truly desires, is he of the welfare of it, that he would be content to lie under the imputation of a false prophet, that their ruin might be prevented. He said, Amen, the Lord do so, the Lord perform thy words, v. 5, 6. This was not the first time that Jeremiah had prayed for his people, though he had prophesied against them, and deprecated the judgments that should follow upon their refractory. Jeremiah, v. 20. Christ prayed, Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me, when yet he knew it must not pass from him. Though, as a faithful prophet, he foresaw and foretold the destruction of Jerusalem, yet, as a faithful Israelite, he prayed earnestly for the preservation of it, in obedience to that command, Pray for the peace of Jerusalem. Though the will of God's purpose is the rule of prophecy and patience, the will of his precept is the rule of prayer and practice. God himself, though he has determined, does not desire, the death of sinners, but would have all men to be saved. Jeremiah often interceded for his people, ch. xxviii. 20. The false prophets thought it fit to ingratiate themselves with the people by promising them peace; now the prophet shows that he bore them as great a good-will as their prophets did, whom they were so fond of; and though he had no warrant from God to promise them peace, yet he earnestly desired it, and prayed for it. How strangely they besought, who earnestly loved them, and persecuted him who did them the greatest service imaginable by interceding for them! See ch. xxviii. 18. 2. He appeals to the event, to prove it false, v. 7. —9. The false prophets reflected upon Jeremiah, as Ahab upon Micaiah, because he never prophesied concerning them, but evil; now he pleads that this had been the case of some house prophets, as well as other prophets had delivered, so that it ought not to be looked upon as a strange thing, or as rendering his mission doubtful, for prophets of old prophesied against many countries and great kingdoms, so bold were they in delivering the messages which God sent by them, and so far from fearing men, or seeking to please them, as Hananiah did; they made no account of that, so boldly, I say, that the destruction foretold, whether good or evil, came to pass, as the case of Jonah, the destruction of Nineveh, that destroy ing war, famine, and pestilence, and was at last regarded as coming from God; who then should Jeremiah be run down as a pestilent fellow, and a sower of sedition, who preached no otherwise than God's prophets had always done before him? Other prophets had foretold destruction, and sometimes the destruction did not come, which yet did not disprove their divine mission, as in the case of Jonah, for God is gracious, and ready to turn away his wrath from those that turn away from their sins: but the prophet that prophesied of peace and prosperity, especially as Hananiah did, absolutely and unconditionally, without adding that necessary proviso, that they do not by wilful sin put a bar in their own door, and stop the current of God's favours, will be proved a true prophet, and only by the accomplishment of his prediction; if it come to pass, then it shall be known that the Lord has sent him, but if not, he will appear to be a cheat and an impostor. 10. Then Hananiah the prophet took the yoke from off the prophet Jeremiah's neck, and brake it. 11. And Hananiah spake in the presence of all the people, saying, Thus saith the Lord, Even so will I break the yoke of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon from the neck of all nations, within the space of two full years. And the prophet Jeremiah went his way. 12. Then the word of the Lord came into Jeremiah the prophet, (after that Hananiah the prophet had broken the yoke from off the neck of the prophet Jeremiah,) saying, 13. Go and tell Hananiah, saying, Thus saith the Lord, Thou hast broken the yokes of wood; but thou shalt make for them yokes of iron. 14. For thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, I have put a yoke of iron upon the neck of all these nations, that they may serve Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon; and they shall serve him: and I have given him the beasts of the field also. 15. Then said the prophet Jeremiah unto Hananiah the prophet, Hear now, Hananiah, The Lord hath not sent thee; but thou makest this people to trust in a lie. 16. Therefore thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will cast thee from off the face of the earth: this year thou shalt die, because thou hast taught rebellion against the Lord.

17. So Hananiah the prophet died the same year, in the seventh month.

We have here an instance,

1. Of the insolence of the false prophet. To complete the affront he designed Jeremiah, he took the yoke from off his neck, which he carried as a mark of what he had prophesied concerning the enslaving of the nations to Nebuchadnezzar, and he brake it, that he might give a sign of the accomplishment of his prophecy, as Jeremiah had given of his, and might seem to have conquered him, and to have defeated the intention of his prophecy. See how the lying spirit in the mouth of this false prophet mimics the language of the Spirit of truth: Thus said the Lord, and made brake the yoke of the king of Babylon, not only from the neck of this nation, but from the neck of all nations, within two full years. Whether by the force of a heated imagination Hananiah had persuaded himself to believe this, or whether he knew it to be false, and only persuaded them to believe it, does not appear; but it is plain that he speaks with abundance of assurance. It is no new thing for lies to be fathered upon the God of Truth.

11. Of the patience of the true prophet. Jeremiah quietly went his way, and, when he was reviled, he reviled not again, and would not contend with one that was in the height of his fury, and in the midst of the priests and people that were violently set against him. The reason why he went his way, was not because he had nothing to answer, but because he was willing to stay till God was pleased to furnish him with a direct and immediate answer, which as yet he had not received. He expected that God would send a special message to Hananiah, and he would say nothing till he had received that; I, as a deaf man, heard not, for thou wilt hear, and thou shalt answer, Lord, for me. It may sometimes be our wisdom rather to retreat than to contend.

111. Of the justice of God in giving judgment between Jeremiah and his adversary. Jeremiah went his way, as a man in whose mouth there was no re- buke, but God soon put a word into his mouth, for he will appear for those who silently commit their cause to him.

1. The word of God, in the mouth of Jeremiah, is ratified and confirmed. Let not Jeremiah himself dispute the truth of what he had delivered in God's name, because it met with such a daring opposition and contradiction. If what we have spoken be the truth of God, we must not unsay it because men gainsay it; for great is the truth, and will prevail. It will stand, therefore let us stand to it, and not fear that men's unbelief or blasphemy will make it not so. Hananiah had broken the yoke of wood, but Jeremiah must make for them yokes of iron, which cannot be broken; (v. 13.) for (says God) I have put a yoke of iron upon the neck of all these nations, which shall lie heavier, and bind harder, upon them, (v. 14.) that they may serve the king of Babylon, and not be able to shake off the yoke; however they may struggle, for they shall serve him whether they will or no; and who is he that can contend with God's counsel? What was said before is repeated again, I have given him the beasts of the field also, and all the following things, in such a manner that men had by their wickedness made themselves like the beasts that perish, and therefore deserved to be ruled by an arbitrary power, as beasts are ruled, and such a power Nebuchadnezzar ruled with, for whom he would be sted, and whom he would he kept alive.

2. Hananiah is sentenced to die for contradicting it, and Jeremiah, when he has received commission from God, boldly tells him so to his face; though, before he received that commission, he went away, and said nothing.

(1.) The crimes of which Hananiah stands convicted, are, cheating the people, and affronting God; Thou makest this people to trust in a lie, encouraging them to hope that they shall have peace, which will make their destruction the more terrible to them when it comes; yet this was not the worst; Thou hast taught rebellion against the Lord, thou hast taught them to despise all the good counsel given them in God's name by the true prophets, and hast rendered it ineffectual. Those have a great deal to answer for, who, by telling sinners that they shall have peace though they go on, harden their hearts in a contempt of the reprovs and admonitions of the word, and the means and methods he has given to them to repentance.

(2.) The judgment given against him, is, I will cast thee off from the face of the earth, as unworthy to live upon it; then shalt be buried in it; this year thou shalt die, and die as a rebel against the Lord, to whom death will come with a sting and a curse.

This sentence was executed, v. 17. Hananiah died the same year, within two months: for his prophecy had come to pass (1.) and his death came in the seventh. Good men may perhaps be suddenly taken off by death, in the midst of their days, and in mercy to them, as Josiah was; but this being foretold, as the punishment of his sin, and coming to pass accordingly, it may safely be construed as a testimony from Heaven against him, and a confirmation of Jeremiah's mission. And if the people's hearts had not been wretchedly hardened by the deceitfulness of sin, it would have prevented their being further hardened by the deceitfulness of their prophets.

CHAP. XXIX.

The contest between Jeremiah and the false prophets was carried on before by preaching; here by writing: there we had sermon against sermon; here we have letter against letter; for some of the false prophets are now carried away into captivity in Babylon, while Jeremiah remains in his own country. Now here is, 1. A letter which Jeremiah wrote to the captives in Babylon, against their prophets that they had there, (v. 1-13.) in which letter, 1. He endeavours to reconcile them to their captivity, to be easy under it, and to make the best of it, v. 4-7. 2. He cautions them not to give any credit to their false prophets, who foretold speedy release, v. 8, 9. 3. He assures them that God would restore them in mercy to their own land again, at the end of 70 years, v. 10-14. 4. He foretells the destruction of those prophets, and the continuance of their calamities, v. 15-19. 5. He promises the destruction of two of their false prophets that they had in Babylon, and to show them that they should be persecuted with one judgment after another, and sent at last into captivity, v. 15-19. 6. He promises that he that prophesied the destruction of two of their false prophets that they had in Babylon shall be put to a hard school, that they should set them bad examples; (v. 20, 21.) and this is the purport of Jeremiah's letter. 11. Here is a letter which Shemaiah, a false prophet in Babylon, wrote to the priests at Jerusalem, to stir them up to persecute Jeremiah, (v. 24-29.) and a denunciation of God's wrath against him for writing such a letter, v. 30, 32. Such struggles as these have there always been between the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent.

1. Now these are the words of the letter that Jeremiah the prophet sent.
from Jerusalem unto the residue of the elders which were carried away captives, and to the priests, and to the prophets, and to all the people whom Nebuchadnezzar had carried away captive from Jerusalem to Babylon. 2. (After that Jeremiah the king, and the queen, and the eunuchs, the princes of Judah and Jerusalem, and the carpenters, and the smiths, were departed from Jerusalem.) 3. By the hand of Elasah the son of Shaphan, and Gemariah the son of Hilkiah, (whom Zedekiah king of Judah sent unto Babylon to Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon,) saying, 4. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, unto all that are carried away captives, whom I have caused to be carried away from Jerusalem unto Babylon, 5. Build ye houses, and dwell in them; and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them; 6. Take ye wives, and beget sons and daughters; and take wives for your sons, and give your daughters to husbands, that they may bear sons and daughters; that ye may be increased there, and not diminished. 7. And seek the peace of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captives, and pray unto the Lord for it: for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace.

We are here told,

1. That Jeremiah wrote to the captives in Babylon, in the name of the Lord. Jeremiah had surrendered himself a prisoner, with the queen his mother, the chamberlains of his household, called here the eunuchs, many of the princes of Judah and Jerusalem, who were at that time the most active men; the carpenters and smiths likewise, being demanded, were yielded up, that those who remained might not have any proper hands to fortify their city, or furnish themselves with weapons of war; by this tame submission it was hoped that Nebuchadnezzar would be pacified; such fierce conquerors (Jer. 10:8) are disposed to be content when their hands are on, and carries them to Babylon. The case of these captives was very melancholy, the rather, because they, being thus distinguished from the rest of their brethren who continued in their own land, looked as if they were greater sinners than all men who dwelt at Jerusalem. Jeremiah therefore writes a letter to them to comfort them, assuring them that they had no reason either to despair of the Lord's mercy, or to envy their brethren that were left behind. Note, 1. The word of God written, is as truly given by inspiration of God as his word spoken was; and this was the proper way of spreading the knowledge of God's will among his children scattered abroad. 2. We may serve God, and do good, by writing to our friends at a distance pious letters of seasonable comfort and wholesome counsels. Whom we cannot speak to, we may write to; that which is written remains. This letter of Jeremiah's was sent to the captives in Babylon by the hands of the ambassadors whom king Zedekiah sent to Nebuchadnezzar, probably to seek his tribute, and renew his submission to him, or to treat of peace with him, in which treaty the captives might perhaps hope that they should be included, v. 3. By such messengers Jeremiah chose to send this message, to put an honour upon it because it was a message from God. Or, perhaps, because there was no settled way of sending letters to Babylon, but as such an occasion as this offered. And then it made the condition of the captives there the more melancholy, that they could rarely hear from their friends and relations they had left behind, which is some reviving and satisfaction to those that are separated from one another.

II. We are here told what he wrote. A copy of a letter at large follows here to v. 24. In these verses,

1. He assures them that he wrote in the name of the Lord of hosts the God of Israel, who entitled the letter; Jeremiah was but the scribe or amanuensis. It would be comfortable to them, in their captivity, to hear that God is the Lord of hosts, of all hosts; and is therefore able to help and deliver them; and that he is the God of Israel still, so God in covenant with his people; that he will be concerned with them, and their enemies for the present are too hard for them; this would likewise be an admonition to them to stand upon their guard against all temptations to the idolatry of Babylon, because the God of Israel, the God whom they served, is Lord of hosts. God's sending to them in this letter might be an encouragement to them in their captivity, as it was an evidence that he had not cast them off, had not abandoned them and dispossessed them, though he was displeased with them and corrected them; for if the Lord had been pleased to kill them, he would not have written to them.

2. God by him owns the hand he had in their captivity; I have caused you to be carried away, (v. 4.) and again, v. 7. All the force of the king of Babylon could not have done it, if God had not ordered it; nor could he have any power against them, but what was given him from above. If God caused them to be carried captives, they might be sure that he neither did them any wrong, nor meant them any hurt. Note, It will help very much to reconcile us to our troubles, and to make us patient under them, to consider that they are what God appoints and ordains, and may be for our good; I offended not my mouth, because they did it.

3. He bids them think of nothing but settling there; and therefore let them resolve to make the best of it; (v. 5, 6.) Build ye houses, and dwell in them, &c. By all this it is intimated to them, (1.) That they must not feed themselves with hopes of a speedy return out of that place, but keep themselves still unsettled, and, consequently, uneasy; they would apply themselves to no business, take no comfort, but be always tiring themselves, and provoking their conquerors, with the expectations of relief; and their disappointment at last would sink them into despair, and make their condition much more miserable than otherwise it would be. Let them therefore make up their minds to remain there, and accommodate themselves to it as well as they can. Let them build, and plant, and marry, and dispose of their children there, as if they were at home in their own land; let them take a pleasure in seeing their families built up and multiplied, for though they must expect themselves to die in captivity, yet their children may live to see better days. If they live in the fear of God, why should hinder them but they may live comfortably in Babylon? They cannot but reap sometimes when they remember Zion; but let not weeping hinder sowing, let them not sorrow as those that have no hope, no joy, for they have both. Note, In all conditions of life, it is our wisdom and duty to make the best of that which is, and not to throw away the comfort of what we may have, because we have not all we would have. We have a natural affection for our native country, it strangely draws our minds; but it is with a wise mind that we can give no good account of the sweet attraction; and therefore if Providence remove us to some other country, we must resolve to live easily there, to bring our mind to our condition, when our condition is not in every thing to our mind; if the earth be the Lord's, then, wherever a child of God goes, he does not go off his father's ground; Patria est ubicunque bene est. That place is our country in which we are well off. If thins be not as they have been, instead of fretting at that, we must live in hopes that they will be better than they are.

JEREMIAH, XXIX.

3. For thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Let not your prophets and your diviners, that be in the midst of you, deceive you, neither hearken to your dreams which ye cause to be dreamed. 9. For they prophesy falsely unto you in my name; I have not sent them, saith the Lord. 10. For thus saith the Lord, That after seventy years be accomplished at Babylon I will visit you, and perform my good word towards you, in causing you to return to this place. 11. For I know the thoughts that I think toward you, saith the Lord, thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you an expected end. 12. Then shall ye call upon me, and ye shall go and pray unto me, and I will hearken unto you. 13. And ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart. 14. And I will be found of you, saith the Lord; and I will turn away your captivity, and I will gather you from all the nations, and from all the places whither I have driven you, saith the Lord; and I will bring you again into the place whence I caused you to be carried away captive.

To make the people quiet and easy in their captivity,

1. God takes them off from building upon the false bottom which their pretended prophets laid, v. 8, 9. They told them that their captivity should be short, and therefore that they must not think of taking root in Babylon, but be upon the wing to go back: "Now, herein, they deceive you," (saith God,) "they prophesy a lie to you, though they prophesy in my name. But let them not deceive you, suffer not yourselves to be deluded by them." As long as we have the word of truth to try the spirits by, it is our own fault if we be deceived; for by it we may be undeceived. Hearken not to your dreams, which ye cause to be dreamed. He means either the dreams or fancies which the people pleased themselves with, and with which they filled their own heads; by thinking and speaking of nothing else but a speedy enlargement when they were awake, they caused themselves to dream of it when they were asleep, and then took that for a good omen, and with it strengthened themselves in their vain expectations; or, the dreams which the prophets dreamed, and grounded their prophecies upon. God tells the people, They are your dreams, because they pleased them, were the dreams that they desired and wished for; they caused them to be dreamed, for they hearkened to them, and encouraged the prophets to put such decrees upon them, desiring them to prophesy nothing but smooth things, Isa. Lxxx. 18. Be not deceived. False prophets would not flatter people in their sins, but that they love to be flattered, and speak smoothly to their prophets that their prophecies may speak smoothly to them.

11. He gives them a good bottom to build their hopes upon. We would not persuade people to pull down the house they have built upon the sand, but that there is a rock underneath. Here God here promises them, that though they should not return quickly, they should return at length, after 70 years be accomplished. By this it appears, that the 70 years of the captivity are not to be reckoned from the last captivity, but the first. Note, Though the delivery of the church do not come in our time, it is sufficient that it will come in God's time, and we are sure that that is the best time. The promise is, that God will visit them in mercy; though he had long seemed to be strange to them, he will come among them, and appear for them, and put honour upon them, as great men do upon their inferiors, by coming to visit them. He will put an end to their captivity, and turn away all the calamities of it. Though they are dispersed, some in one country, and some in another, he will gather them from all the places whither they are driven, will set up a standard for them all to resort to, and will be with them again. When they are at a great distance, they shall be brought again to their own land, to the place whence they were carried captive, v. 14.

Now, 1. This shall be the performance of God's promise to them; (v. 10.) I will perform my good word toward you. Let not the failing of those predictions which are delivered as from God, lessen the reputation of his word, or his people. That which is indeed God's word, is a good word, and therefore it will be made good, and not one iota or tittle of it shall fall to the ground. Hath he said, and shall he not do it? This will make their return out of captivity very comfortable, that it will be the performance of God's good word to them, the product of a gracious promise.

2. This shall be in accordance of God's purposes concerning them; (v. 11.) I knew the thoughts that I think toward you. Known unto God are all his works, for known unto him are all his thoughts, (Acts xv. 18.) and his works agree exactly with his thoughts: he doeth all according to the counsel of his will. We often do not know our own thoughts, not know our own mind, but God is never at any uncertainty within himself. We are sometimes ready to fear that God's designs concerning us are all against us; but he knows the contrary concerning his own people, that they are thoughts of good, and not of evil; even that which seems evil, is designed for good. His thoughts are all working toward the expected end, which he will give in due time. The end they expect will come, though perhaps not when they expect it. Let them have patience till the fruit is ripe, and then they shall have it. He will give them an end, and expectation; so it is in the original. (1.) He will give them to see the end, the comfortable period of their trouble; though it last long, it shall not last always; the time to favour Zion, yea, the set time, will come; when things are at the worst, they will begin to mend; and he will give them the glorious perfection of their deliverance; for, as for God, his work is perfect. He that in the beginning finished the heavens and the earth, and all the hosts of both, will finish all the blessings of both to his people. When he begins in ways of mercy, he will make an end. God does nothing by halves. (2.) He will give them to see the expectation, that end which they desire and hope for, and have been long waiting for. He will give them to know the expectations of their fears, or the expectations of their fancies, but the expectations of their faith; the end which he has promised, and which will turn for the best to them.

3. This shall be in answer to their prayers and supplications to God, v. 12.-14. (1.) God will stir them up to pray; Then shall ye call upon me, and ye shall go, and ye shall call upon me. When God has been pleased to bless his people the expected good, he pours out a spirit of prayer, and it is a good sign that he is coming toward them in mercy. Then when you see the expected end approaching, then you shall call upon me. Note, Promises are given, not to supersede, but to quicken and encourage, prayer; and when deliverance is coming, we must be sure to go forward to meet it. When Israel understood that the 70 years were near expiring, then he set his face with more fervency than ever to seek the Lord, Dan. ix. 2, 3. (2.) He will then stir up himself to come and save them, (Ps. lxxv. 2.) I will hearken unto you, and I will be found of you. God has said it, and we may depend upon it; seek, and ye shall find. We have a general rule laid down, (v. 13.) Ye shall find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart. In seeking God, we must search for him, accomplish a diligent search, search for directions in seeking him, and encouragements to our faith and hope. We must continue seeking, and take pains in seeking, as others do to search; and this we must do with our heart, in sincerity and uprightness, and with our whole heart, with vigour and fervency, putting forth all that is within us, in prayer; those who thus seek God, shall find him, and shall find him their bountiful Rewarder, Heb. xi. 6. He never said to such, Seek ye me in vain.

15. Because ye have said, The Lord hath raised us up prophets in Babylon; 10. Know that thus saith the Lord of the king that sitteth upon the throne of David, and of all the people that dwelleth in this city, and of your brethren that are not gone forth with you into captivity; 17. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Behold, I will send upon them the sword, the famine, and the pestilence, and will make them like vile figs, that cannot be eaten, they are so evil. 18. And I will persecute them with the sword, with the famine, and with the pestilence, and will deliver them to be removed to all the kingdoms of the earth, to be a curse, and an astonishment, and a hissing, and a reproach, among all the nations whither I have driven them: 19. Because they have not hearkened to my words, saith the Lord, which I sent unto them by my servants the prophets, rising up early and sending them; but ye would not hear, saith the Lord. 20. Hear ye, therefore, the word of the Lord, all ye of the captivity, whom I have sent from Jerusalem to Babylon: 21. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, of Ahab the son of Koaiah, and of Zedekiah the son of Maaseiah, which prophesy a lie unto you in my name, Behold, I will deliver them into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and he shall slay them before your eyes; 22. And of them shall be taken up a curse by all the captivity of Judah which are in Babylon, saying, The Lord make thee as Zedekiah, and like Ahab, whom the king of Babylon roasted in the fire; 23. Because they have committed villany in Israel, and have committed adultery with their neighbours' wives, and have spoken lying words in my name, which I have not commanded them; even I know, and am a witness, saith the Lord.

Jeremiah, having given great encouragement to those among the captives whom he knew to be serious and well-affected, assuring them that God had very kind and favourable intentions concerning them, here turns to those among them who slighted the counsels and comforts that Jeremiah ministered to them, and depended upon what the false prophets flattered them with. When this letter came from Jeremiah, they would be ready to say, "Why should he make himself so busy, and take upon him to advise us? The Lord has raised us up prophets in Babylon," v. 15. We are satisfied with those prophets, and can depend upon them, and have no occasion to hear from any prophets in Jerusalem. So are they with the wickedness of this people; as the prophets, when they prophesied lies, said that they had them from God, so the people, when they invited those prophets thus to flatter them, fathered it upon God, and said that it was the Lord that raised them up those prophets. Whereas we may be sure that those who harden people in their sins, and deceive them with false and groundless hopes of God's mercy, are no prophets of God's raising up. These prophets of their own told them that no more should be carried captive, but that those who were in captivity should shortly return. Now, in answer to this,

1. The prophet here foretells the utter destruction of those who remained still at Jerusalem, notwithstanding what those false prophets said to the contrary. As God's judgments were to be renovation, the first, now, by whom, you think, will be ready to bid you welcome when you return, you are deceived, they shall be followed with one judgment after another, sword, famine, and pestilence, which shall cut off multitudes; and the poor and miserable remains shall be removed into all kingdoms of the earth," v. 16—18. And thus God will make them, or rather deal with them, like vile figs; they have made them selves so by their wickedness, and God will use them accordingly; as the salt that has lost its savour, which, being good for nothing, is cast to the dung-hill; and so are rotten figs. This refers to the vision, and the prophecy upon it, which we had, ch. xxix. And the reason given for these proceedings against them, is the same that has often been given, and will justify God in the eternal ruin of impenitent sinners, (v. 19.) Because they have not hearkened to my words; I called, but they refused.

2. He foretells the judgment of God upon the false prophets in Babylon, who deceived the people of God there. He calls upon all the children of the captivity, who boasted of them as prophets of God's raising up; (v. 20.) "Stand still, and hear the dooms of the prophets you are so fond of." The two prophets are named here, Ahf and Zedekiah, v. 21. Others of these prophets charged upon them impiety and immorality; They prophesied lies in God's name, (v. 21.) and again, (v. 23.) They have spoken lying words in my name. Lying was bad, lying to the people of God to delude them into a false hope was worse, but fathering their lies upon the God of truth was worst of all. And no marvel if they that had the face to do it, could allow themselves the confession of the false affections to which God, in a way of righteous judgment, gave them up. They have done villany in Israel, for they have committed adultery with their neighbours' wives. Adultery is villany, and it is an aggravation of it, if it be villany in Israel, and in such as pretend to be prophets, who by such wickedness manifestly disprove their own pretensions. They are, as such, proved to be the most abominable morons. He is the Lord God of the holy prophets, not of such impure ones. Here it appears why they flattered others in their sins—because they could not reprove them without condemning themselves. These low practices of theirs they knew how to conceal from the eye of the world, that they might preserve their credit; but I knew it, and I am a Witness, with the Lord. The most secret sins are known to God, he can see the villany that is covered with the thickest cloak of hypocrisy, and there is a day coming when he will bring to light all these hidden works of darkness, and every man will appear in his own colours. (2.) The judgments threatened against them; "The king of Babylon shall slay them before your eyes; nay, he shall put them to a miserable death, must them in the fire," v. 22. We may suppose that it was not for their impiety and immorality that Nebuchadnezzar punished them thus severely, but for the insubordination and some of their turbulent spirits upon the public peace, and stirring up the people to revolt and rebel. So much of their wickedness shall then be detected, and in such a wretched manner they shall end their days, that their names shall be a curse among the captives in Babylon, v. 22. When men would improve the greatest evil upon one they hated, they would think they could not load them with a heavier curse, in fewer words, than to say, "The Lord make thee like Zedeki,' and like Ahf!" Thus were they made ashamed of the prophets they had been proud of, and convinced at least of their folly in hearkening to them. God's faithful prophets were sometimes charged with being the troublemakers of the land, and, as such, were tortured and slain but their work was blessed when they were gone; their memory sweet, not as those here. As malefactors are attended with infamy and disgrace, so martyrs with glory and honour.

24. Thus shalt thou also speak to She'mai'hah the Nehelamite, saying, 25. Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, Because thou hast sent letters in thy name unto all the people that are at Jerusalem, and to Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah, the priest, and to all the priests, saying, 26. The Lord hath made thee priest in the stead of Jehoiada the priest, that ye should be officers in the house of the Lord, for every man that is mad, and maketh himself a prophet, a prophet shalt thou put him in prison, and in the stocks; 27. Now, therefore, why hast thou not reproved Jeremiah of Anathoth, which maketh himself a prophet to you? 28. For therefore he sent unto us in Babylon, saying, This captivity is long; build ye houses, and dwell in them; and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them. 29. And Zephaniah the priest read this letter in the ears of Jeremiah the prophet. 30. Then came the word of the Lord unto Jeremiah, saying, 31. Send to all of them of the captivity, saying, Thus saith the Lord concerning Shemaiah the Nehelamite; Because that Shemaiah hath prophesied unto you, and I sent him not, and he caused you to trust in a lie; 32. Therefore thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will punish Shemaiah the Nehelamite, and his seed; he shall not have a man to dwell among this people; neither shall he behold the good that I will do for my people, saith the Lord; because he hath taught rebellion against the Lord.

We have perused the contents of Jeremiah's letter to the captives in Babylon, who had reason, with a great deal of thanks to God and him, to acknowledge the receipt of it, and lay it up among their treasures. 2. Zech. viii. 16. The false prophets had among them were enraged at it, for it gave them their true character. Now here we are told concerning one of them, 1. How he discovers his malice against Jeremiah.

This base fellow is called Shemaiah the Nethaneel; the dreamer, (so the margin reads it,) because all his prophecies he pretended to have received from God, and therefore to be as certain as if they would be made to capitalize their captives, or had heard it read, or information was given to him concerning it, and it met them exceedingly; and he will take pen in hand, and answer it, yea, that he will. But how? He does not write to Jeremiah in justification of his own mission, nor offer any rational arguments for the support of his prophecies concerning the speedy return of the captives; but he writes to the priests, those faithful patrons of the false prophets, and instigates them to persecute Jeremiah. He writes in his own name, not so much as pretending to have the people's consent to it, but, as if he must be dictator to all mankind, he sends a circular letter (as it should seem) among the priests at Jerusalem, and the rest of the people, probably by the same messenger that brought the letter from Shemaiah. But it is chiefly directed to Zephaniah, who was either the immediate son of Maaseiah, or of the twenty-fourth course of the priests, of which Maaseiah was the father and head. He was not the High Priest, but sagan or suffragan to the High Priest, or in some other considerable post of command in the temple service. For perhaps he was chairman of that committee of priests that was appointed in a particular manner to take cognizance of those that pretended to be prophets, of which there were very many at this time, and to give judgment concerning them. Now, 1. He puts him and the other priests in mind of the duty of their place; (v. 26.) The Lord hath made thee priest instead of Jehoiada the priest. Some think that he refers to the famous Jehoiada, that great reformer in the days of Josiah; and (says Mr. Gataker) he would insinuate that this Zephaniah is for spirit and zeal such another as he, and raised up, as he was, for the glory of God and the good of the church; and therefore it was expected from him that he should proceed against Jeremiah. This may be true in many cases of such ambitious and sprin-gious, but that wicked wretches and false prophets will not only attempt it, but colour it also with some suspicious pretence of piety, and zeal for God's glory, Is. lxvi. 3. John xvi. 2. Or, rather, it was some other Jehoiada, his immediate predecessor in this office, who perhaps was carried to Babylon among the priests, v. 1. Zephaniah is advanced, sooner than they had this place of trust and power, and Shemaiah would have him think that Providence had preferred him, that he might persecute God's prophets, that he was come to this government for such a time as this, and that he was unjust and ungrateful, if he did not thus improve his power, or, rather, abuse it. Their hearts are wretchedly hard, who can justify the doing of mischievous things with this heart. 2. His priests' business was to examine every man that is mad, and makes himself a prophet. God's faithful prophets are here represented as prophets of their own making, usurpers of the office, and lay-intruders; and as men that were mad, actuated by some demon, and not divinely inspired; or as distracted men, and men in a frenzy. Thus the characters of the false prophets were set as a warning to all that if this had been indeed their character, they ought to be bound as madmen and punished as pretenders, and therefore he concludes that Jeremiah must be so done to. He does not bid them examine whether Jeremiah could produce any proofs of his mission, nor would it have been proper to ask him for no, that is taken for granted, and when once he has had a bad name given him, he must be run down of course. 2. He informs them of the letter which Jeremiah had written to the captives; (v. 28.) He sent unto us in Babylon, with the authority of a prophet, saying, This captivity is long, and therefore resolve to make the captivity short. The words of Shemaiah were there in this, that it should be objected to him as a crime? The false prophets had formerly said that the captivity would never come, ch. xiv. 13. Jeremiah had said that it would come, and the event had already proved him right, which obliged them to give credit to him, who now said that it would be long, rather than to them who said it would be short, but had once before been found liars. 3. He demands judgment against him; taking it for granted that he is mad, and makes himself a prophet. He expects that they will order him to be put in prison, and in the stocks, (v. 26.) that they will thus punish him, and by putting him to disgrace possess the people with prejudices against him, ruin his reputation, and so prevent the giving of any credit to his prophecies at Jerusalem, hoping that if they could gain that point, the captives in Babylon would not be influenced by him. Nay, he takes upon him to chide Zephaniah for his neglect, (v. 27.) Why hast thou not rebuked and restrained Jeremiah of Anathoth? See how insolent and impetuous these false prophets were grown, that though they were in captivity, they would give law to the priests, who were not only at liberty but in power. It is common for those that pretend to more knowledge than their neighbours, to be thus assuming. Now here is a remarkable instance of the hardness of the hearts of sinners, and it is enough to make us all fear, lest our hearts be at any time hardened. For here we find, (1.) That these sinners would not be convinced by the clearest evidence. God had confirmed his word in the mouth of Jeremiah, it had taken hold of them; (Zech. i. 6.) and yet, because he does not prophesy to them the smooth things they desired, they are resolved to look upon him as not duly called to the office of a prophet. None so blind as those that will not see. (2.) That they would not be reclaimed and reformed by the punishment of the man they were so very willing to put into a miserable thraldom for mocking the messengers of the Lord, and misusing his prophecies; this was the sin for which God now contended with them; and yet in their distress they treasppr yet more against the Lord, 2 Chron. xxxviii. 22. This very sin they are notoriously guilty of in their captivity, which shows that afflictions will not of themselves cure men of their sinfulness and grace. God work with them, but will rather extend his operations they are intended to mortify; so true is that adage of Solomon, (Prov. xxiv. 22.) Though thou shouldest bray a fool in a mortar, yet will not his foolishness depart from him. 11. How Jeremiah came to the knowledge of this; (v. 29.) Zephaniah read this letter in the ears of Jeremiah. He could not but be highly pleased with the manner in which Shemaiah would have him, but, as it should seem, had great respect for Jeremiah, (for we find him employed in messages to him as a prophet, ch. xxi. 1.—xxviii. 3.) and therefore protected him. He that continued in his dignity and power, stood more in awe of God and his judgments than he that was now a captive. Nay, he made Jeremiah acquainted with the contents of the letter so that he might see what enemies he had even among the captives. Note, It is kindness to our friends, to let them know their foes. 11. What was the sentence passed upon She-manah for writing this letter. God sent him an answer, for to him Jeremiah committed his cause: it was ordered to be sent not to him, but to them of the captivity, who encouraged and countenanced him, as if he had been a prophet of God's raising up, v. 31, 32. Let them know,

1. That Shemaiah had made fools of them; he pretended to be a peac- tor, and they, as teaching. He had counterfeited the broad seal of Heaven to it, and made the people to trust in a lie, and by preaching false and lies to them deprived them of true conscience; nay, he had not only made fools of them, but, which was worse, had made traitors of them, he had taught rebellion against the Lord, as Hana-

2. That Shemaiah had done, ch. xxviii. 16. And if vengeance shall be taken upon them that rebel, much more upon them that teach rebellion by their doctrine and example.

2. That at his end he shall also be a fool; (as the expression is, ch. xvii. 11.) his name and family shall be extinct, and shall be buried in oblivion; he shall leave no issue behind him to bear up his name, his pedigree shall end in him; he shall not have a son, and his name shall go out from him, nor any that come from him, shall behold the good that I will do for my people. Note, Those are unworthy to share in God's favours to his church, that are not willing to stay his time for them. Shemaiah was angry at Jeremiah's advice to the captives, to see to the building up of their families in Babylon, that they might be increased, and thereby they and their children just as the written childless there. Those that slight the blessings of God's word, deserve to lose the benefit of them. See Amos vii. 16, 17.

CHAP. XXX.

The sermon which we have in this and the following chapter, is of a very different complexion from all those before

The prophet does indeed, by direction from God, change his voice. Most of what he had said hitherto, was by way of reproof and threatening; but these two chapters are wholly taken up with precious promises of a return out of captivity, and that typical of the glorious things reserved for the church in the days of the Messiah.

This is not only to preach this, but to write it, because it is in itself, and for the comfort of the generation to come, v. 1. 3. It is here promised, I. That they should hereafter have a joyful restoration. 1. Though they were now in a great deal of pain and terror, yet their condition would be very strong, v. 8, 9. 3. Though a full end was made of other nations, and they were not restored, v. 11. 4. Though all means of their deliverance seemed to fail and be off, v. 12, 14. Yet though God himself had sagged them into captivity, and justly, for their sins, v. 15, 16. 6. Though all about them looked upon their case as desperate, v. 17. II. That after their joyful restoration they should have a happy settlement; that their city should be rebuilt, (v. 18.) their numbers increased, (v. 19, 20.) their government established, (v. 21.) God's covenant with them renewed, (v. 22.) and their enemies destroyed and cut off, v. 23, 24.

1. THE word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying, 2. Thus speaketh the Lord God of Israel, saying, Write thee all the words that I have spoken unto thee in a book. 3. For, lo, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel and Judah, saith the Lord; and I will cause them to return to the land that I gave to their fathers, and they shall possess it. 4. And these are the words that the Lord spake concerning Israel, and concerning Judah. 5. For thus saith the Lord, We have heard a voice of trembling, of fear, and not of peace. 6. Ask ye now, and see whether a man doth travail with child? wherefore do I see every man with his hands on his loins, as a woman in travail, and all faces are turned into paleness? 7. Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it: it is even the time of Jacob's trouble; but he shall be saved out of it. 3 For it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord of hosts, that I will break his yoke from off thy neck, and will burst thy bonds and strangers shall no more serve themselves of him: 9. But they shall serve the Lord their God, and David their king, whom I will raise up unto them.

Here,

I. Jeremiah is directed to write what God had spoken to him; which perhaps refers to all the foregoing prophecies; he must write them and publish them, in hopes that they who had not profited by it upon once hearing it, might take more notice of it when, in reading it, they had leisure for a more considerate review. Or, rather, it refers to the promises of their enlargement, which had been often mixed with his other discourses. He must collect them and put them together, and God will now add unto them many like words. He must write them for the generations to come, who should see them accomplished, and thereby have their faith in the prophecy confirmed. He must write it not in a letter, as he might have done, to the captivity, but in a book, to be carefully preserved in the archives, or among the public rolls or registers of the state. Daniel understood by these books when the captivity was about coming to an end, Dan. ix. 2. He must write it in a book, not in loose papers; For the days come, and are yet at a great distance, when I will bring again the captivity of Israel and Judah great numbers of the ten tribes, with those of the two, v. 3. And it must be written, that it may be read there also, that so it may appear how exactly the accomplishment answers the prediction, which is one end of the writing of prophecies. It is intimated that they shall be beloved for their fathers' sakes; (Rom. xi. 28.) for therefore God will bring them again to Canaan, because it was the land that he gave to their fathers, therefore they shall possess.

II. He is directed what to write. The very words are such as the Holy Ghost teaches, v. 4. These are the words which God ordered to be written; and those promises which are written by his order, are as truly his word as the ten commandments, which were written with his finger.

He must write a description of the right and consternation which the people were now in, and were likely to be still in upon every attack that the Chaldeans made upon them, which will much magnify both the wonder and the wellcomeliness of their deliverance; (v. 5.) We have heard a voice of trembling—the shrieks of terror echoing to the alarms of danger. The false prophets told them that they should have peace, but there was fear, and not peace; so the margin reads it. No marvel that when without are fightings, within are fears. The men, even the men of war, shall be quite overpluswhelmed with the calamities of their nation, shall sink under them, and yield to them, and shall look like women in labour, whose pains come upon them in great extremity, and they know that they cannot escape them, v. 6. You never heard of a man travaling with child, and yet here you find not here and there a timorous man, but every man, with his hands on his loins, in the utmost anguish and agony, as women in travail, when they see their cities burnt and their countries laid waste. But this pain is compared to that of a woman in travail, not to that of a death-bed, because it shall end in joy at last, and the pain, like that of a travelling woman, shall be forgotten. All faces shall be turned into paleness. The word signifies not only such pale-ness as arises from a sudden fright, but that which is the effect of a long-standing malady, the end of which is fatal sickness. The prophet laments the calamity, upon the foresight of it; (v. 7.). Alas, for that day is great, a day of judgment, which is culled the great day, the great and terrible day of the Lord; (Joel ii. 31. Jule 6.) great, so that there has been none like it. The last destruction of Jerusalem is thus spoken of by our Saviour as unparalleled, Matth. xxiv. 21. It is even the time of Jacob’s trouble, a sad time, when God’s professing people shall be in distress, above other people. The whole time of the captivity was a time of Jacob’s trouble; and such times ought to be greatly lamented by all that are concerned for the welfare of Jacob, and the honour of the God of Jacob.

He must write the assurances which God had given, that a happy end should at length be put to these calamities, (1.) Jacob’s troubles shall cease; He shall be saved out of them. Though the afflictions of the church may last long, they shall not last always. Salvation belongs to the Lord, and shall be wrought for his church. (2.) Jacob’s troubles shall be disabled to do him any further mischief, and shall be reckoned with for the mischief they have done him, v. 1. The Lord of hosts, who has all power in his hand, undertakes to do it; I will break his yoke from off thy neck, which has long lain so heavy, and hath so sorely galled thee; I will burst thy bonds and restore thee to liberty and ease, and thou shalt no more be at the beck and command of strangers, shalt no more serve them, nor shall they any more serve themselves of thee, they shall no more enrich themselves either by thy possessions or by thy labours.” And, (3.) That which crowns and completes the mercy is, that they shall be restored to the free exercise of their religion again, v. 9. They shall be delivered from serving their enemies, not that they may live at large, and do what they please but that they may serve the Lord their God, and have their king, and their king shall come again in order, under the established government both in church and state. Therefore they are brought into trouble and made to serve their enemies, because they had not served the Lord their God as they ought to have done, with joyfulness and gladness of heart, Deut. xxxvii. 47. But when the time is come the Lord shall be merciful, and end their trouble, God will prepare and qualify them for it, by giving them a heart to serve him; and will make it doubly comfortable, by giving them opportunity to serve him. Therefore we are delivered out of the hands of our enemies, that we may serve God, Luke i. 74, 75. And their deliverances out of temporal calamities are mercies indeed to us, when like James come to us, and shall be sorely vexed, and cast off in the service of God. They shall serve their own God, and neither be inclined, as they had been of old in the day of their apostasy, nor compelled, as they had been of late in the day of their captivity, to serve other gods. They shall serve David their king, such governors as God should from time to time put over them, the line of the house of David, and of the house of Jesse; or, at least, as set down on the thrones of judgment, the thrones of the house of David, as Nebuchadnezzar. But certainly this has a further meaning. The Chaldee Paraphrase reads it, They shall obey, or hearken to, the Messiah, or Christ, the Son of David, their king. To him the Jewish interpreters apply it. That dispensation, which commenced at their return out of captivity, brought them to the Messiah. He is called David their king, because he was the Son of David, (Matth. xxii. 42.) and he answered to the name. Matth. xx. 31, 32. David was an illustrious type of him both in his humiliation and his exaltation. The covenant of royalty made with David had principal reference to him, and in him the promises of that covenant had their full accomplishment. God gave him the throne of his father David, he raised him up unto them, set him upon the holy hill of Zion. God is often in the New Testament said to have raised up Jesus, raised him up as a King, Acts iii. 26,—xxii. 23, 33. Observe, [1.] Those that serve the Lord as their God, must also serve David their King, must give up themselves to Jesus Christ, to be ruled by him. For all men must honour the Son as they honour the Father, and come into the service and worship of God by him as Mediator. [2.] Those that are delivered out of spiritual bondage, must make it appear that they are so by giving up themselves to the service of Christ. They to whom he gives rest, must take his yoke upon them.

10. Therefore fear thou not, O my servant Jacob, saith the Lord; neither be dismayed, O Israel: for, lo, I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and shall be in rest and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid. 11. For I am with thee, saith the Lord, to save thee; though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee; but I will correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished. 12. For thus saith the Lord, Thy bruise is incurable, and thy wound is grievous. 13. There is none to plead thy cause, that thou mayest be bound up: thou hast no healing medicines. 14. All thy lovers have forgotten thee; they seek thee not: for I have wounded thee with the wound of an enemy, with the chastisement of a cruel one, for the multitude of thine iniquity; because thy sins were increased. 15. Why criest thou for thine affliction? thy sorrow is incurable for the multitude of thine iniquity: because thy sins were increased I have done these things unto thee. 16. Therefore all they that devour thee shall be devoured; and all thine adversaries, delivered every one of them, shall go into captivity; and they that spoil thee shall be a spoil, and all that prey upon thee will I give for a prey. 17. For I will restore health unto thee, and I will heal thee of thy wounds, saith the Lord; because they called thee an Outcast, saying, This is Zion, whom no man seeketh after.

In these verses, as in those foregoing, the deplorable case of the Jews in captivity is set forth, but many precious promises are given them, that in due time they should be relieved, and a glorious salvation wrought for them.
1. God himself appeared against them; he scattered them; (v. 11.) he did all these things unto them, v. 15. All their calamities came from his hands; whoever were the instruments, he was the principal Agent. And this made their case very sad, that God, even their own God, spake concerning them, to pull down and to destroy. Now, (1.) This was intended as a lively instance of the despair of their case; (v. 11.) "I will correct thee in measure, according to judgment, with discretion, no more than thou deservest, nay, no more than thou canst well bear." What God does against his people, is in a way of correction, and that correction is always moderated, and always proceeds from love. "I will not leave thee altogether unpunished, as thou art ready; this shall be the measure and condition of thy case," notes A. 2. A profession of religion, though ever so plausible, will be far from securing us impunity in sin. God is no Respecter of persons, but will show his hatred of sin, wherever he finds it, and that he hates it most in those that are nearest to him. God here corrects his people for the multitude of their iniquity, and because their sins were increased, v. 14. It is not he who has increased their sin and their calamity, but he who has counted their sin and their calamity, and made them more than they are, and do they increase? We must acknowledge that it is because our sins have been multiplied, and they have increased. Iniquities grow in us, and therefore trouble grows upon us. But, (2.) What God intended as a fatherly chastisement, they and others interpreted as an act of hostility; they looked upon him as having wounded them with the wound of an enemy, and with the chastisement of a gewl, a fearful thing. 3. If he had owned their ruin, and neither mitigated the correction, nor had any mercy in reserve for them. It did indeed seem as if God had dealt thus severely with them, as if he had turned to be their Enemy, and had fought against them. Isa. liii. 10. Job complains that God was become cruel to him, and multiplied his wounds. When troubles are great and long, we have need carefully to watch over our own hearts, that we entertain not such hard thoughts as these of God and his providence. His are the chastisements of a merciful one, not of a cruel one, however they may appear. 4. Their friends forsook them, and were shy of them; none of those who had counted them in their prosperity, would take notice of them now in their distress; nor of those who had been their professors of the commonwealth, or sham friends. In two cases we are glad of the assistance of our friends, and need their service; (1.) If we be impeached, accused, or reproached, we expect that our friends should appear in vindication of us, should speak a good word for us, when we cannot put on a face to speak for ourselves; but here there is none to plead their cause, none stand up in their behalf, nor need we to intercede for thee with thine oppressors; therefore God will plead their cause, for he might well wonder there was none to uphold a people that had been so much the favourites of heaven, Isa. liii. 5. (2.) If we be sick, or sore, or wounded, we expect our friends should attend us, advise us, sympathize with us, and, if possible, bend a hand for us as a fatherly clascing is meet. But here, there is none to do that, none to bind up thy wounds, and by counsel's and comforts to make proper applications to thy case; nor, v. (14.) All thy lovers have forgotten thee; out of sight out of mind; instead of seeking thee they forsake thee. Such as this has often been the case of religion and serious godliness in the world; those, that from their education, the relation to holy beings, our minds might have expected to have been its friends and lovers, its patrons and protectors, desert it, forget it, and have nothing to say in its defence, nor will do anything toward the healing of its wounds. Observe, Thy lovers have forgotten thee, for I have wounded thee. When God is against a people, who will be for them? Who can be for them, so as to do them any kindness? See Job xxxi. 11. Now, upon this account, their case seemed desperate and past relief; (v. 12.) Thy bruise is in incurable; and, v. 13. Thy wound is incurable; the condition of their lives in captivity was such as no human power could redress the grievances of; there they were like a valley full of dead and dry bones, which nothing less than omnipotence can put life into. Who could imagine that a people so diminished, so impoverished, should ever be restored to their own land, and restored there! So many were the aggravations of their calamity, that their sorrow would not admit of any alleviation, but they seemed to be hardened in it, and their souls refused to be comforted, till divine consolations proved strong ones, too strong to be borne down even by the floods of grief that overwhelmed them. Thy sorrow is incurable, because thy sins, instead of being repented of and forsaken, were increased. Note, Incurable griefs are incurable to them who will not appear in a reasonable and a consistent condition; they are looked upon with disdain; (v. 17.) They called thee an outcast, abandoned by all, abandoned to ruin; they said, This is Zion, whom no man seeks after. When they looked on the place where the city and temple had been built, they called that an outcast; now all was in ruins, there was no resort to it, no residence in it, none asked them where they went to. They go to the city, and no man seeks after it. When they looked on the people that formerly dwelt in Zion, but were now in captivity, (and we read of Zion dwelling with the daughter of Babylon, Zech. ii. 7.) they called them outcasts; these are they who belong to Zion, and talk much of it, and weep at the remembrance of it, but no man seeks after them, or inquires concerning them. Note, It is often the lot of Zion to be deserted and despised by those about her. 5. For all this, God will work deliverance and salvation for them in due time. Though no other hand, may, because no other hand, can cure their wound, his will and shall. (1.) Though he seemed to stand at a distance from them, yet he assures them of his presence with them, his powerful and gracious presence. 2 Tim. i. 7. The Lord is my strength and my song, and he is become my salvation. I will exalt him, I will not set up false gods beside thee; v. 11. When they are in their troubles, he is with them, to save them from sinking under them; when the time is come for their deliverance, he is with them, to be ready upon the first opportunity, to save them out of their trouble. (2.) Though they were at a distance, remote from their own land, afar off in the land of their captivity, yet there shall salvation find them out, he shall set it fetch them, them and their seed, for they also shall be known among the Gentiles, and distinguished from them, that they may return, v. 10. (3.) Though they were now full of tears, and continually alarmed, yet the time shall come when they shall be in rest and quiet, safe and easy, and none shall make them afraid, v. 10. (4.) Though the nations shall be scattered and dispersed, then, he shall bring to ruin, yet they should be preserved from that ruin; (v. 11.) Though I make a full end of the nations whither I have scattered thee, and there might be danger of thy being lost among them, yet I will not make a full end of thee. It was promised that in the peace of these nations they should have peace; (ch. xxix. 7.) and yet in the destruction of the Gentiles, the case of the Jews should be different. God's church may sometimes be brought very low, but he will not make a full end of it, ch. v. 10, 18. (5.) Though God correct them, and justly, for their sins, their manifold transgreswith pain upon the head of the wicked.
24. The fierce anger of the Lord shall not return, until he have done it, and until he have performed the intents of his heart: in the latter days ye shall consider it.

We have here further intimations of the favour God had in reserve for them after the days of their captivity and bondage. It is probably,

1. That the city and temple should be rebuilt. (v. 18.) Jacob's tents, and his dwelling-places, felt the effects of the captivity, for they lay in ruins when the inhabitants were carried away captives: but when they are returned, the habitations shall be repaired, and raised up out of their ruins, and therein God will have mercy upon their dwelling-places, that had been monuments of his justice. Then the king of Jerusalem shall be built upon her own heap, her own hill; though now it be no better than a ruinous heap. The situation was unexceptionable, and therefore it shall be rebuilt upon the same spot of ground. He that can make of a city a heap, (Isa. xxxiii. 2.) can, when he pleases, make of a heap a city again.

2. The palace, the temple, God's palace shall remain after the manner thereof. It shall be built after the old model; and the service of God shall be constantly kept up there, and attended as formerly.

3. That the sacred feasts should again be solemnized. (v. 19.) Out of the city, and the temple, and all the dwelling-places of Jacob, shall proceed thanksgiving, and the voice of them that make merry. They shall go with expressions of joy to the temple-service, and with the like shall return from it. Observe, The voice of thanksgiving is the same with the voice of them that make merry; for whatever is the matter of our joy, should be the matter of our praise. Is any merry? Let him sing psalms. What makes us cheerful should make us thankful. Serve the Lord with gladness.

4. That the people should be multiplied and increased, and made considerable; They shall not be few, they shall not be small, but shall become numerous and illustrious, and make a figure among the nations; for I will multiply them and I will glorify them. It is for the honour of the church to have many added to it, that shall be saved; this would make them to be of some weight among their neighbours. Let a people be ever so much diminished and despised, God can multiply and glorify them. They shall be restored to their former honour, their children shall be as aforetime, playing in the streets; (Zech. viii. 5.) they shall inherit their parents' estates and honours as formerly, and their congregations shall, both in civil and sacred things, be established before me. There shall be a constant succession of faithful magistrates in the congregation of the elders, to establish that, and of faithful worshippers in the congregation of the saints. As one generation passes away, another shall be raised up, and so the congregation shall be established before God.

18. Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will bring again the captivity of Jacob's tents, and have mercy on his dwelling-places; and the city shall be built upon her own heap, and the palace shall remain after the manner thereof. 19. And out of them shall proceed thanksgiving, and the voice of them that make merry: and I will multiply them, and they shall not be few; I will also glorify them, and they shall not be small. 20. Their children also shall be as aforetime, and their congregation shall be established before me, and I will punish all that oppress them. 21. And their nobles shall be of themselves, and their governor shall proceed from the midst of them; and I will cause him to draw near, and he shall approach unto me: for who is this that engaged his heart to approach unto me? saith the Lord. 22. And ye shall be my people, and I will be your God. 23. Behold, the whirlwind of the Lord goeth forth with fury, a continuing whirlwind; it shall fall his heart, made a covenant with it, and brought it into bonds, to approach unto me?" How few are there that do so! None can do it but by the special grace of God, causing them to draw near. Note, Whenever we are called to a task, in any body of ordinance, we must engage our hearts to do it; the heart must be prepared for the duty, employed in it, and kept close to it. The heart is the main thing that God looks at and requires; but it is deceitful, and will start aside, if a great deal of care and pains be not taken to engage it to bind this sacrifice with cords.

Or, (2.) It may be understood of the govern-ror, for it is a single person that is spoken of; their governor being called for office, is to draw near to God to consult him upon all occasions. God will cause him to approach to him, for otherwise, who would engage to take care of so weak a people, and let this ruin come under their hand? But when God has work to do, though attended with many discouragements, he will raise up instruments to do it. But it looks further, to Christ, to him as Mediator. Note, [1.] The proper work and office of Christ, as Mediator, is to draw near and approach unto God, not for himself only, but for us, and in our name and stead, as the High Priest of our profession. The priests are said to draw nigh to God, Lev. x. 3.—xxi. 17. Moses drew near, Exod. xx. 21. [2.] God the Father did cause Jesus Christ thus to draw near and approach to him, as Mediator. He commanded, and appointed him to do it, he sanctified and sealed him, commended him for this purpose, and accepted of him, and declared himself well-pleased in him. [3.] Jesus Christ, being caused by the Father to approach unto him as Mediator, did engage his heart to do it, he bound and obliged himself to it, undertook for his heart, (so some read it,) for his soul, that, in the fulness of time, it should be made an offering for sin. His own voluntary acceptance of the office, and of his Father's will, and in compassion to fallen man, engaged him, and then his own honour kept him to it. It also intimates that he was hearty and resolute, free and cheerful, in it, and made nothing of the difficulties that lay in his way. Isa. lvi. 3.—

5. [4.] Jesus Christ was, in all this, truly wonderful; we may well ask, with admiration, Who is this that engageth his heart to such an undertaking? [5.] That they shall be taken again into covenant with God, according to the covenant made with their fathers; (ver. 22.) Ye shall be my people; and it is God's good work in us, that makes us to him, a people, a people for his name, Acts xvi. 14. I will be your God; it is his good-will to us, that is the summary of that part of the covenant. [6.] That their enemies shall be reckoned with and brought down; (ver. 20.) I will punish all them that oppress them, so that it shall appear to all a dangerous thing to touch God's anointed, Ps. cv. 15. The two last verses come under this head, The whirlwind of the Lord shall fall with pain upon the head of the wicked. These two verses we had before: (ch. xxiii. 19, 20.) there they were a denunciation of God's wrath against the wicked hypocrites in Israel; here, against the wicked oppressors of Israel; the expressions, exactly agreeing, speak the same with that, (Isa. li. 22, 25.) I will take the cup of trembling out of thy hand, and put it into the hand of them that afflict thee. The wrath of God against the wicked is here represented to be, (1.) Very terrible, like a whirlwind, surprising and irresistible. (2.) Very grievous; it shall fall with pain to their souls, they shall be much hurt as frightened. (3.) It shall pursue them; whirlwinds are usually short, but this shall be a continuing whirlwind. (4.) It shall accomplish that for which it is sent; The anger of the Lord shall not return, till he have done it; the purposes of his wrath, as well as the purposes of his love, will all be fulfilled; he will perform the intents of his heart: and, (5.) Those that will not lay this to heart now, will then be unable to put off the thoughts of it; In the latter day we shall consider it, when it will be too late to prevent it.

CHAP. XXXI.

This chapter goes on with the good words and comfortable words which we had in the chapter before, for the encouragement of the captives, assuring them that God would in due time return them or their children, to their own land, and make them a great and happy nation again, especially by sending them the Mediator, in whose kingdom and grace many of these promises were to have their full accomplishment. 1. They shall be restored to peace and honour, and joy great and plenty, v. 1—14. Their sorrow for the loss of their children shall be at an end, v. 15—17. III. They shall repent of their sins, and God will graciously accept them in their repentance, v. 18—20. IV. They shall be multiplied and increased, both their children and their cattle, and not be cut off and diminished as they had been, v. 21—30. V. God will renew his covenant with them, and enrich it with spiritual blessings, v. 31—34. VI. These blessings shall be secured to theirs after them, even to the spiritual seed of Israel for ever, v. 35—37. VII. As an earnest of this, the city of Jerusalem shall be rebuilt, v. 38—40. These exceeding great and precious promises were firm foundations of hope, and full foundations of joy, to the poor captives, and the莓may apply them to ourselves, and mix faith with them.

1. At the same time, saith the Lord, will I be the God of all the families of Israel, and they shall be my people. 2. Thus saith the Lord, The people which were left of the sword found grace in the wilderness; even Israel, when I went to cause him to rest. 3. The Lord hath appeared of old unto me, saying, Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee. 4. Again I will build thee, and thou shalt be built; O virgin of Israel: thou shalt again be adorned with thy tabrets, and shalt go forth in the dances of them that make merry.

5. Thou shalt yet plant vines upon the mountains of Samaria: the planters shall plant, and shall eat them as common things. 6. For there shall be a day, that the watchmen upon the mount Ephraim shall cry, Arise ye, and let us go up to Zion unto the Lord our God. 7. For thus saith the Lord, Sing with gladness for Jacob, and shout among the chief of the nations: publish ye, praise ye, and say, O Lord, save thy people, the remnant of Israel. 8. Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth, and with them the blind and the lame, the woman with child and her that travaileth with child together; a great company shall return. 9. They shall come with weeping, and with supplications will I lead them: I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble; for I am a father to Israel. 10. And Ephraim is my first-born.
God here assures his people,

1. That he will again take them into a covenant-relationship to himself, from which they seemed to have been cut off. At the same time, when God's anger breaks out against the wicked, (ch. xxx. 24.) his own people shall be owned by him as the children of his love; I will be the God, I will show myself to be the God, of all the families of Israel, (v. 1.) not only of Aaron, the family of the high priest, nor of the house of Aaron only, and the families of Levi, but of all of their families; not only their state in general, but their particular families, and the interests of them, shall have the benefit of a special relation to God. Note, The families of good people, in their family-capacity, may apply themselves to God, and stay themselves upon him as their God. If we and our houses serve the Lord, we and our houses shall be protected and blessed by him, Prov. iii. 33.

2. That he will do for them, in bringing them out of Babylon, as he had done for their fathers when he delivered them out of Egypt, and as he had purposed to do when he first took them to be his people. (1.) He puts them in mind of what he did for their fathers, and their fathers' fathers, when he brought them out of Egypt; (v. 2.) they were then, as these were, a people left of the sword, that sword of Pharaoh, with which he cut off all the male children as soon as they were born, (a bloody sword indeed they had narrowly escaped,) and that sword with which he threatened to cut them off when he pursued them to the Red Sea. They were then in the wilderness, where they seemed to be lost and forgotten, they wandered now in a strange land, and yet they found grace in God's sight, were owned and highly honoured by him, and blessed with wonderful instances of his peculiar favour, and he was at this time going to cause them to rest in Canaan. Note, When we are brought very low, and inapplicable difficulties appear in the way of our deliverance, it is good to remember that it has been so with the church formerly, and yet that it has been raised up from its low estate, and has got to Canaan through all the hardships of a wilderness; and God is still the same. (2.) They put him in mind of what God had done for their fathers, intimating that they now saw not such signs, and were ready to ask, as Gideon did, *Where are all the wonders that our fathers told us of? * (Jud. vi. 11.) Lo, how have they been cut off old unto me, in Egypt, in the wilderness, hath appeared with me, and for me, hath been seen in his glory as my God; the years of ancient times were glorious years; but now it is otherwise; what good will it do us, that he appeared of old to us, when now he is a God that hides himself from us? Is. xlv. 15. Note, It is hard to take comfort from former smiles, under present frowns. (3.) To this he answers, with an assurance of the constancy of his love, Yea, I have loved thee, not only with an ancient love, but with an everlasting love, a love that shall never fail, however the comforts of it may for a time be suspended. It is an everlasting love, therefore have I extended or drawn out loving-kindness unto thee also, as well as to thine ancestors; or, with loving-kindness have I drawn into myself as thy God, from all the idols to which thou hadst turned aside. Note, It is the happiness of those who are through grace interested in the love of God, that it is an everlasting love, (from everlasting in the counsels of it, to everlasting in the continuance and consequences of it,) and that nothing can separate them from that love. Those who have God's love with them, love all who draw into covenant and communion with himself, by the influences of his Spirit upon their souls; he will draw them with loving-kindness, with the cords of a man, and bands of love, than which no attractive can be more powerful.

3. That he will again form them into a people, and give them a very joyful settlement in their own land, v. 4. 5. Is the church of God his house, his temple? Is it now in ruins? It is so; but, Again I will build thee, and thou shalt be built, Aye the parts of this building dispersed! They shall be collected, and be built up in that edifice, in their own place. If God undertake to build them, they shall be built, whatever opposition may be given to it. Is Israel a beautiful virgin? Is she now stripped of her ornaments, and reduced to a melancholy state? She is so; but thou shalt again be adorned, and made fine, adorned with thy tabrets, or timbrels, the ornaments of thy chamber, and made merry. They shall resume their harps which had been laid upon the willow trees, shall tune them, and shall themselves be in tune to make use of them; they shall be adorned with their tabrets, for now their mirth and music shall be seasonable, it shall be a proper time for it, God in his providence shall call them to it, and then it shall be an ornament to them; whereas tabrets, at a time of common calamity, when great calamities were hanging over them, were a shame to them. Or, it may refer to the worship of their tabrets, that is, to the solemnizing of their religious feasts, and their going forth in dances then, as the daughters of Shiloh, Judg. xxi. 19, 21. Our mirth is then indeed an ornament to us, when we serve God and honour him with it. Is the joy of the city maintained by the products of the country? It is so; and therefore it is promised, (v. 5.) Thou shalt yet plant vines upon the mountains of Samaria, which had been the head city of the kingdom of Israel, in opposition to that of Judah; but they shall now be united, (Ezek. xxxvii. 22.) and there shall be such perfect peace and security, that the orchardists shall plant, and apply themselves wholly to the improvement of their ground; the planters shall plant, not fearing the soldiers coming to eat the fruits of what they had planted, or to pluck it up; but they themselves shall eat them freely, as common things, not forbidden fruits, not forbidden by the law of God, (as they were till the fifth year, Lev. xix. 23—25.) not forbidden by the owners, because there shall be such plenty as to yield enough for all, for each.

4. That they shall have liberty and opportunity to worship God in the ordinances of his worship, and shall have those encouragements and inclinations to do so; (v. 6.) There shall be a day, and a glorious day it will be, when the watchmen upon Mount Ephraim, that are set to stand sentinel there, to give notice of the approach of the enemy, finding that all is very quiet, and that there is no appearance of danger, shall desire for a time to be charged from their post, that they may go up to Zion, to praise God for the public peace. Or, the watchmen that tend the vineyards, spoken of, v. 5. shall stir up themselves, and one another, and all their neighbours, to go, and keep the solemn feast at Jerusalem. Now this implies that the service of God shall be again set up in Zion, that there shall be a general resort to it, with much affection and mutual excitement, as in David's time, Ps. cxix. 23. But that which is most observable here is, *that the watchmen of Ephraim are forward to promote the worship of God at Jerusalem, whereas formerly the watchman of Ephraim was hatred against the house of his God, (Hos. ix. 8.) and, instead of inviting people to Zion, laid snares for those that set their faces thitherward, Hos. v. 1. Note, God can and will use those that have been enemies to religion, and the true worship of God, to do good to his people, and to bless them, and leaders in them. This promise was to have its full accomplishment in the days of the Messiah, when the gospel should be preached to all these countries, and a general invitation here- by given into the church of Christ, of which Zion was a type.

5. That God shall have the glory, and the church both the honour and comfort, of this blessed change; (v. 7.) Sing ye gladness for Jacob, let all her friends and well-wishers rejoice with her, Deut. xxxii. 43. Rejoice, ye Gentiles, with his people, Rom. xvi. 10. The restoration of Jacob will be taken notice of by all the neighbours, it will be matter of joy to them all, and they shall all join with Ja- cob in his joys, and thereby pay him respect, and put a reputation upon him. Even the enemies of nations, that must take occasion, shall think it remarkable to hear them to congratulate the restoration of Jacob, and shall do themselves the honour to send their ambassadors on that errand. Publish ye, praise ye, in publishing these tidings, praise the God of Israel, praise the Israel of God, speak honourably of both. The publishers of the gospel must do it with praise, and therefore it is often spoken of in the Psalms, as mingled with praises, Ps. lxvii. 2, 3. What we either bring to others, or take to ourselves the comfort of, we must be sure to give God the praise of. Praise ye, and say, O Lord, save thy people; perfect their salvation, go on to save the remnant of Israel, that are yet in bondage; as Ps. cxxvi. 3, 4. Note, When we are praising God for what he has done, we must call upon him for the future for blessings, that it may be in need and expectation of; and in praying to him we really praise him, and give him glory; he takes it so.

6. That, in order to a happy settlement in their own land, they shall have a joyful return out of the land of their captivity, and a very comfortable pas- sage homeward, (v. 8, 9,) and this beginning of mercy shall be to them a pledge of all the other blessings here promised. (4.) Though they are scattered to places for remote, yet they shall be brought together from the north country, and from the coasts of the earth; wherever they are, God will find them out. (2.) Though many of them are very unfit for travel, yet that shall be no hinderance to them; the blind and the lame shall come; such a good-will shall they have to their journey, and such a good heart upon it, that they shall not need not be blind and lame, or any excuse for staying where they are. Their companions will be ready to help them, will be eyes to the blind, and legs to the lame, as good Christians ought to be to one another in their travels homeward, Job xxxix. 15. But, above all, their God will help them; and let none plead that he is blind, who has God for his Guide; or lame, who has God for his Strength. The women with child are heavy, one is fit that they should undertake such a journey, much less those that trav- eal with child; and yet, when it is to return to Zion, neither the one nor the other shall make any difficulty of it. Note, When God calls, we must not plead any inability to come; for he that calls us will help us, will strengthen us. (3.) Though they seem to be diminished, and to become few in numbers, yet, when they are all together, they shall be a great assembly; and so will God's spiritual Israel be, when there shall be a general rendezvous of them, though now they are but a little flock. (4.) Though their return will be matter of joy to them, yet prayers and tears will be both their stores and their artillery; (v. 9.) They shall come with weep- ing, and with supplications, weeping for joy, and weeping for joy, and with such supplications as God shall lead them to repentance; and they shall weep with more bitterness and more tenderness for sin, when they are delivered out of their captivity, than ever they did when they were groaning under it. Weep- ing and praying do well together; tears put life into prayers, and express the liveliness of them, and prayers help to wipe away tears. With favours will I lead them; (so the margin reads it;) in their journey they shall be compassed with God's favours, the fruits of his favour. (3.) Though they have a perilous journey, yet they shall be safe under a divine convoy. Is the country they pass through dry and thirsty? I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters, not the waters of a land-flood, which fail in summer. Is it a wilderness where there is no road, no track? I will cause them to walk in a straight way, which they shall not miss. Is it a rough and rocky country? Yet they shall not stumble. Note, Whithersoever God gives his people a clear call, he will either find them, or make them, a ready way; and while we are following Providence, we may be sure that Providence will not be wanting to us. And, lastly, here is a reason given why God will take all this care of his people; for I am a Father to Israel, a father that begat him, and therefore will maintain him, that have the care and compassion of a father for him; (Ps. ciii. 13.) and Ephraim is my first-born, even Ephraim, who, having gone astray from God, was no more worthy to be called a son, shall yet be owned as a first-born, particularly dear, and heir of a double portion of blessings. The same reason that was given for their release out of Egypt, is given for their release out of Babylon; they are free-born, and therefore must not be enslaved; and is given to God, and therefore must not be the servants of men; (Exod. iv. 22, 23.) Israel is my son, my first-born; let my son go, that he may serve me. If we take God for our Father, and join ourselves to the church of the first-born, we may be assured that we shall want nothing that is good for us.

10. Hear the word of the Lord, O ye na- nouns, and declare it in the isles afar off, and say, He that scattereth Israel will gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock. 11. For the Lord hath redeemed Jacob, and ransomed him from the hand of him that was stronger than he. 12. Therefore they shall come and sing in the height of Zion, and shall flow together to the good- ness of the Lord, for wheat, and for wine, and for oil, and for the young of the flock, and of the herd: and their souls shall be as a watered garden; and they shall not sor- row any more at all. 13. Then shall the virgin rejoice in the dance, both young men and old together: for I will turn their mourning into joy, and will comfort them, and make them rejoice from their sorrow. 14. And I will satiate the soul of the priests with fatness, and my people shall be satisfied with my goodness, saith the Lord. 15. Thus saith the Lord, A voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation, and bitter weeping; Rachel weeping for her children, refused to be comforted for her children, because they were not. 16. Thus saith the Lord, Re- fiany thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and they shall come again from the land of the enemy. 17. And there is hope in thine end, saith the Lord, that thy children shall come again to their own land. This paragraph is much to the same purport with the last, publishing to the world, as well as to the church, the purposes of God's love concerning his people. This is a word of the Lord, which the nations must hear, for it is a prophecy of a work of the Lord, which the nations cannot but take notice of. Let them hear the prophecy, that they may the better understand and improve the performance; and let them hear it themselves declare it to others, declare it in the ides after. It will be a piece of news that will spread all the world over. It will look very great in history; let us see how it looks in prophecy. It is foretold,

1. That those who are dispersed, shall be brought together again from their dispersions; He that scattered Israel will gather him; for he knows whither he scattered them, and therefore where to find them. v. 10. Una cademque manus virum apogenque tulit—The hand that inflicted the wound shall heal it. And when he has gathered him into one body, one fold, he will keep him, as a shepherd does his flock, from being scattered again.

2. That those who are sold and alienated, shall be redeemed and brought back, v. 11. Though the enemy has possessed of himself they shall sing to the praise of glory of God. We read that they did so when the foundation of the temple was laid there; they sang together, praiseing, and giving thanks to the Lord. Ezra iii. 11. They shall flow together to the goodness of the Lord; they shall flow in great numbers and with great readiness and cheerfulness, as streams of water, to the goodness of the Lord, to the temple where he causes his goodness, his mercy, to flow before his people. They shall come together in solemn assemblies, to praise him for his goodness, and to pray for the fruits of it, and the continuance of it; they shall come to bless him for his goodness, in giving them wheat, and wine, and oil, and the young of the flock and of the herd, which, now that they have obtained their freedom, they have an uncontested property in, and the quiet and peaceable enjoyment of; and which therefore, they honour God with the first-fruits of, and out of which they bring offerings to his altar. Note, It is comfortable to observe the goodness of the Lord in the gifts of common providence, and even in them to taste covenant-love. Having plenty, (plenty out of want and scarcity,) they shall greatly rejoice, their soul shall be as a watered garden, flourishing and growing in all the beauty and happiness of it, and abounding in all good things. Note, Our souls are never valuable as gardens but when they are watered with the dews of God's Spirit and grace. It is a precious promise which follows, and which will not have its full accomplishment any where on this side the height of the heavenly Zion, that they shall not sorrow any more at all; for it is only in that place that they are here described as saying it, and it is there that the psalmist speaks of it. Rev. xxii. 4. However, so far it was fulfilled to the returned captives, that they had not any more those causes for sorrow, that they had had; and therefore (v. 13.) young men and old shall rejoice together; so great shall the young men be in their joys, as to keep company with the old men, and so transported shall the old men be, as to associate with the young. Sabba in, sabba ex.—The state is prosperous, and the aged dance. God will turn their mourning into joy, their fasts into solemn feasts, Zech. viii. 19. It is in their return out of Babylon that they who sorrow in tears, were not to be pitied, and to joy they were not at ease. v. 6. These are comforted indeed, whom God comforts, and may forget their troubles, when he makes them to rejoice from their sorrow; not only rejoice after it, but rejoice from it; their joy shall be poured lustre from their sorrow, which shall serve as a fail to it; and the more they think of their troubles, the more they rejoice in their deliverance. That the psalms together to, shall have abundant satisfaction in what God gives them; (v. 14.) I will satiate the soul of the priests with fatness; there shall be such plenty of sacrifices brought to the altar, that they who live upon the altar, shall live very comfortably, they and their families shall be satiated with fatness, they shall have enough, and that of the best, and my people shall be satisfied with my goodness, and shall think there is enough in that to make them happy; and so there is. God's people have an abundant satisfaction in God's goodness, though they have but little of this world. Let them be satisfied of God's loving-kindness, and they will be satisfied with it, and desire no more to make them happy. All this is applicable to the spiritual blessings which the reformed church of Christ now enjoys, when things are more valuable than corn, and wine, and oil, and the satisfaction of soul which they have in the enjoyment of them.

5. That those, particularly, who had been in sorrow for the loss of their children who were carried into captivity, should have that sorrow turned into joy upon their return, v. 15.—17. Here we have, (1.) The sad lamentation which the mothers made for the loss of their children; (v. 15.) In Ramah was there a voice heard, at the time when the general captivity was, nothing but lamentation, and bitter weeping, more there than in other places, because there Nebuzaradan had the general rendezvous of his captives, as appears, ch. xl. 1. where we find him sending Jeremiah back from Ramah. Rachel is here said to weep for her children. The sepulchre of Rachel was between Ramah and Bethel, near Benjamin, one of the two tribes, and Ephraim, head of the ten tribes, were both descendants from Rachel. She had but two sons, the elder of which was one for whom his father grieved, and refused to be comforted, (Gen. xxxvii. 5.) the other she herself called Benoni—the son of my sorrow. Now the inhabitants of Ramah did in like manner grieve for their sons and their daughters that were carried away, (as I Sam. xxx. 6,) and such a voice of lamentation was there, as, to speak poetically, might even have raised Rachel out of her grave to mourn with them. The tender parents even refused to be comforted for their children, because they were not, were not with them, but were in the hands of their enemies; they were never likely to see them more. This is applied by the evangelists to the most tender and most sincere griefs of the children of Bethlem for the murder of the infants there by Herod; (Matth. ii. 17,) and this scripture is said to be then fulfilled. They wept for them, and would not be comforted, supposing the case would not admit any ground of comfort, because they were not. Note, Sorrow for the loss of children cannot but be great sorrow, especially if we so far mistake as to think they are not. (2.) Seasonable comfort administered to them in reference hereunto, v. 16. 17. They are advised to moderate that sorrow, and to set bounds to it; Reitain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears. We are not forbidden to mourn in such a case, allowances are made for natural affliction; but we must not suffer our sorrow to run into an extreme, to hinder our joy in God, or take us off from our
And there shall dwell in Judah itself, and in all the cities thereof together, husbandmen, and they that go forth with flocks. 25. For I have satiated the weary soul, and I have replenished every sorrowful soul. 26. Upon this I awaked, and beheld; and my sleep was sweet unto me.

We have here,

1. Ephraim's repentance, and return to God. Not only Judah, but Ephraim, the ten tribes, shall be restored, and therefore shall thus be prepared and qualified for it, Hos. xiv. 8. Ephraim shall say, What have I to do any more with idols? Ephraim, the people, is here spoken of as a single person, and cannot by any means shall be as one in their repentance, and shall glorify God in it with one mind and one mouth, one and all. It is likewise thus expressed, that it might be the better accommodated to particular penitents, for whose direction and encouragement this passage is intended. Ephraim is here brought in, weeping for sin, perhaps because Ephraim, the person from whom that race were descended, who was the first to commit the solemn sin in the spirit, mourned for his children many days: (1 Chron. vii. 21, 22.) and sorrow for sin is compared to that for an only son. This penitent is here brought in, (1.) Bemoaning himself, and the miseries of his present case. True penitents do thus bemoan themselves. (2.) Accusing himself, laying a load upon himself as a sinner, a great sinner. He charges himself, as he should, in the first place, with sin and has conscience told him that he was more especially guilty of at this time; and that was, impatience under correction; "Thou hast chastised me; I have been under the rod, and I needed it; I deserved it; I was justly chastised, chastised as a bullock, who had never felt the goad if he had not first rebelled against the yoke." True penitents look upon their afflictions as fatherly chastisements; "Thou hast chastised me, and I was chastised; it was well that I was chastised, otherwise I had been undone; it did me good, or at least was intended to do me good; and yet I have been impatient under it." Or, it may speak his want of feeling under the affliction; "Thou hast chastised me, and I was chastised, that was all, I was not awakened by it, and quickened by it; I brought no further than the chastisement, as I have been under the chastisement as a bullock unacquainted to the yoke, unruly and unmanageable, kicking against the pricks, like a wild bull in a net." Isa. li. 20. This is the sin he finds himself guilty of now; but (v. 19.) he reflects upon his former sins, and looks as far back as the days of his youth. The discovery of one sin should put us upon searching out more; now he remembers in the first place, the sin of his youth. Ephraim, as a people, reflects upon the misconduct of their ancestors, when they were first formed into a people. It is applicable to particular persons. Note, The sin of our youth was the reproach of our youth, and we ought often to remember it against ourselves, and to bear it in a penitential sorrow and shame. (3.) He is here brought in, angry at himself, having a bodily indignation at himself; Ephraim, folly; he smote upon his thigh, as the publican upon his breast; he was even amazed at himself, and at his own stupidity and frowardness; he was ashamed, yea, even confounded, could not with any confidence look up to God, nor with any comfort reflect upon himself. (4.) He is here recommending himself to the mercy and grace of God. He finds he is bound to God, with the power of his own keep himself close with God, much less, when he is revoluted, bring himself back to God, and therefore he prays,
Turn thou me, and I shall be turned; which implies that unless God do turn him by his grace, he shall never be turned, but wander endlessly; that therefore he is very desirous of converting grace, has a dependence upon it, and doubts not but that that grace will be sufficient for him, to help him over all the difficulties that were in the way of his return to God. See ch. xvii. 14. Heal me, and I shall be healed; that is, if he were to undertake the conversion of a soul, it will be converted. (5.) He is here pleasing himself with the experience he had of the blessed effect of divine grace; Surely after that I was turned, I repented. Note, The way God takes of converting souls to himself, is, by opening the eyes of their understandings, and all good follows thereupon; After that I was instructed, I yielded, I smote upon my thigh. When sinners come to a right knowledge, this is a way with them; it is their way of instruction, it is their way of conversion, and that did not produce the desired effect, it went no further; I was chastised, and that was all. But when the instructions of God's Spirit accompanied the corrections of his providence, then the work was done, then he smote upon his thigh, was so humbled for sin as to have no more to do with it.

1. God's compassion on Ephraim, and the kind reception he finds with God, v. 20. (1.) He owns him for a child, though he has been an unfaithful child and a prodigal; Is Ephraim my dear son? Is he a pleasant child? Thus when Ephraim bemoans himself, God bemoans him, as one whom his mother comforts, though she had chidden him. Isa. lxvi. 13. Is this Ephraim my dear son? Is this that pleasant child? Is it he that is thus said in spirit, and that complains so bitterly? So it is like that of Saul, (1 Sam. xxvi. 17.) Is this thy voice, my son David? Or, as it is sometimes supplied, Is not Ephraim my dear son? Is he not a pleasant child? Yes, now he is, now he repents and returns. Note, Those that have been unthankful, backsliding children, if they sincerely return and repent, however they have been misconducted in the way of their return, shall be accepted of God as dear and pleasant children. Ephraim had afflicted himself, but God thus heals him: and absolves himself, but God thus honors him; as the returning prodigal, who thought himself no more worthy to be called a son, yet, by his father, had the best robe put upon him, and a ring on his hand. (2.) He relents toward him, and speaks of him with a great deal of tenderness and affection; Since I spake against him, by the threatenings of the word and the rebukes of providence, I do earnestly remember him still, my thoughts toward him are thoughts of peace. Note, When God afflicts his people, yet he does not forget them; when he casts them out of their land, yet he does not cast them out of sight, nor out of mind. Even then when God's Spirit, as the greatest of all his gifts, is active for us, and designing our good in all; and this is our comfort in our affliction, that the Lord thinks upon us, though we have forgotten him. I remember him still, and therefore my bowels are troubled for him, as Joseph's yearned toward his brethren, even then when he shake roughly to them. When Israel's afflictions exerted a penitent confession and submission, it is said, that his soul was grieved for the misery of Israel; (Judg. x. 16.) for he always afflicts with the greatest tenderness. It was God's compassion that mitigated Ephraim's punishment; My heart is turned within me; (Hos. xi. 8, 9.) and now the same compassion accepted Ephraim's repentance. Ephraim had pleaded, (v. 18.) Thou art the Lord my God, therefore to thee will I return, therefore on thy mercy and grace I will depend; and God shows it was a valid plea, and prevailing, for he makes it appear both that he is God, and not man, and that he is his God. (3.) He resolves to do him good; I will surely have mercy upon him, and to the Lord will I look; not to the things that were, but to the things that were, or are about to be, in store, rich mercy, sure mercy, suitable mercy, for all that in sincerity seek him, and submit to him; and the more we are afflicted for sin, the better prepared we are for the comforts of that mercy.

2. Gracious excitements and encouragements given to the people of God in Babylon, to prepare for their return to their own land. Let them not tremble, and lose their spirits; let them not trust, and lose their time; but with a firm resolution some close application address themselves to their journey, v. 21, 22. (1.) They must think of nothing but of coming back to their own country, out of which they had been driven; Turn again, O virgin of Israel, a virgin to be again espoused to thy God, turn again to these thy cities; though they are spoiled waste and in ruins, they are thy cities, which the God of Israel will make them, and make thee glad among them. They must be content in Babylon no longer than till they had liberty to return to Zion. (2.) They must return the same way that they went, that the remembrance of the sorrows which attended them, or which their fathers had told them of, in such and such places upon the road, the sight of which would, by a local memory, put them in mind of them, and make them the more thankful for their deliverance. These that have departed from God into the bondage of sin, must return by the way in which they went astray, to the duties they neglected, must do their first works. (3.) They must engage themselves and all that is within them in this affair; Set thy heart toward the highway, bring thy mind to it; consider thy duty, thou interest, and go about it with a good will. Note, The way from Babylon to Zion, from the bondage of sin to the glorious liberty of God's children, is a highway; it is right, it is plain, it is safe, it is well tracked; (Isa. xxxv. 8.) yet none are likely to walk in it, unless they set their hearts towards it. (4.) They must furnish themselves with all needful accommodations for their journey; Set thee up way-marks, which may give warning, and make the bigger heaps, which may have such set up in all places where there is any danger of missing the road. Let those that go first, and are best acquainted with the way, set up such directions for those that follow. (5.) They must compose themselves for their journey. How long wilt thou go about, O backsliding daughter? Let not their minds first be, or be uncertain about, or resolve upon it; let them not distract themselves with care and fear; let them not seek about to creatures for assistance, nor hurry hither and thither in courting them, which had often been an instance of their backsliding from God; but let them cast themselves upon God, and then let their minds be fixed. (6.) They are encouraged to do this by an assurance given them, that he would create a new thing, strange and surprising in the earth, in that land's woman shall compass a man. The church of God, that is weak and feeble as a woman, altogether unapt for military employments, and of a timorous spirit, shall surround, besiege, and prevail against a mighty man, Isa. liv. 6. The church is compared to a woman, Rev. xii. 1. And whereas we find armed and compassed for battle, Isa. liv. 3, Rev. xii. 9.) now the camp of the saints shall compass them. Many good interpreters understand this new thing created in that land to be the incarnation of Christ, which God had an eye to in bringing them back to man, and with the seed of beast. 29. And it shall come to pass, that like as I have watched over them, to pluck up, and to break down, and to throw down, and to destroy, and to afflict; so will I watch over them, to build, and to plant, saith the Lord. 29. In those days they shall say no more, The fathers have eaten a sour grape, and the children’s teeth are set on edge. 30. But every one shall die for his own iniquity: every man that eateth the sour grape, his teeth shall be set on edge. 31. Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah; 32. Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day that I took them by the hand, to bring them out of the land of Egypt; (which my covenant they brake, although I was a husband unto them;) saith the Lord: 33. But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people. 34. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more.

The prophet, having found his sleep sweet, made so by the revelations of divine grace, sets himself to sleep again, in hopes of further discoveries, and is not disappointed; for it is here further promised.

1. That the people of God shall become both numerous and prosperous. Israel and Judah shall be replenished both with men and cattle, as if they were sown with the seed of both, v. 27. They shall increase and multiply like a field down with corn; and this is the product of God’s blessing, (v. 25,) for whom God blessed, to them he said, Be fruitful. This should be a type of the wonderful increase of the gospel-church. God will build them, and plant them, v. 28. He will watch over them, to do them good; no opportunity shall be lost, that may further their prosperity. Every thing for a long time had turned so much against them, and all occurrences have been so conspire against them, that it seemed as if for whom God blessed, to them he said, Be fruitful. This should be a type of the wonderful increase of the gospel-church. God will build them, and plant them, v. 28. He will watch over them, to do them good; no opportunity shall be lost, that may further their prosperity. Every thing for a long time had turned so much against them, and all occurrences have been so conspire against them, that it seemed as if for whom God blessed, to them he said, Be fruitful. and our Saviour tells the wicked Jews in his days, that they should smart for their fathers' sins, because they persisted in them, Matt. xxiii. 35, 36. But it is here promised that this severe dispensation with them should now be brought to an end: that God would proceed no further in his controversy with them for their fathers' sins, but remember for them his covenant with their fathers, and do them good according to that covenant:— They shall have no more complaint, as they have done, that the fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge; (which speaks something of an absurdity, and is an invidious reflection upon God's proceedings;) but every one shall die for his own iniquity still, though God will cease to punish them in their national capacity, yet he will still reckon with particular persons that provoke him. Note, Public sufferings will give no impunity, no security to private sinners: still every man that eats the sour grapes, his teeth shall be set on edge. Note, Those that eat forbidden fruit, how temptingly soever it looks, will find it a sour grape, and it will set their teeth on edge, sooner or later they will feel from it, and reflect upon it with bitterness. There is as direct an import in this short prophecy, as there is in sour grapes to set the teeth on edge.

III. That God will renew his covenant with them, so that all these blessings they shall have, not by providence only, but by promise, and thereby they shall be both sweetened and secured. But this covenant refers to gospel-times, the latter days that shall come; for of gospel-grace the Jews and Israel had been two separate kingdoms, but were united, after their return, in the joint favours God bestowed upon them: so Jews and Gentiles were in the gospel-church and covenant.

2. What is the nature of this covenant in general; it is a new covenant, and not according to the covenant made with them, when they came out of Egypt; not as if that made with them at mount Sinai were a covenant of the law, and the gospel is a covenant of grace, with Adam in the day he was created; no; that was, for substance, a covenant of grace, but it was a dark dispensation of that covenant, in comparison with this in gospel-times. Sinners were saved by that covenant, upon their repentance, and faith in a Messiah to come, whose blood, confirming that covenant, was typified by that of the legal sacrifices, Exod. xxiv. 7, 8. Yet this may upon many accounts be called new, in comparison with that; the ordinances and promises are more spiritual and heavenly, and the discoveries much more clear. That covenant God made with them when he took them by the hand, as if they had been blind or lame, or weak, to lead them out of the land of Egypt, which covenant they brake. Observe, It was God that made this covenant, but it was the people that brake it; for our salvation is of God, but our sin and ruin are of ourselves. It was an aggravation of their breach of it, that God was a Husband to them, that he had espoused them to himself, it was a marriage-covenant that was between him and them, which they brake by idolatry, that spiritual adultery. It is a great aggravation of that covenant that Adam and Eve, that he has been a Husband to us, a loving, tender, careful Husband, faithful to us, and yet wefalse to him.

3. What are the particular articles of this covenant; they all contain spiritual blessings: nor, "I will give them the land of Canaan and a numerous issue," but, "I will give them pardon, and peace, and grace, good heads and good hearts." He promises,

(1.) That he will incline them to their duty; I will put my law in their inward heart, and write it in their heart; not, I will give them a new law, (as Mr. Gataker well observes,) for Christ came not to destroy the law, but to fulfill it; but the law shall be written in their hearts by the finger of the Spirit, as formerly it was written in the tables of stone. God writes his law in the hearts of all believers, makes it ready and familiar to them, at hand when they have occasion to use it, as that which is written in the heart, Prov. iii. 3. He makes them in care to observe it, and that with a perfect alacrity about it, as he speaks of the wicked abominable, as is to lie near our hearts. He works in them a new heart, we are taught by the Scriptures, as he speaks of obedience, a conformity of thought and affection to the rules of the divine law, as that of the copy to the original. This is here promised, and ought to be prayed for, that our duty may be done conscientiously and with delight.

(2.) That he will take them into relation to himself; I will be their God, a God all-sufficient to them; and they shall be my people, a loyal, obedient people to me. God's being to us a God is the sum of all happiness, heaven itself is no more, Heb. xi. 16. Rev. xxi. 3. Our being to him a people may be taken either as the condition on our part, (those and those only shall have God to be to them a God, that are truly willing to engage themselves to be to that people,) or as a further branch of the promise, that God, who is the Father of the willing people, in the day of his power; and, whoever are his people, it is his grace that makes them so.

(3.) That there shall be an abundance of the knowledge of God among all sorts of people, and this will have an influence upon all good; for they that rightly know God's name, will seek him, and serve him, and put their trust in him. More shall we know him; all shall be welcome to the knowledge of God, and shall have the means of that knowledge; his way shall be known upon earth; whereas, for many ages, in Judah only was God known. Many more shall know God than did in the Old Testament times, which among the Gentiles were times of ignorance, through him the Gentiles are brought into favour, Eph. ii. 13. The things of God shall in gospel-times be made more plain and intelligible, and level to the capacities of the meanest, than they had been, while Moses had a veil upon his face. There shall be such a general knowledge of God, that there shall not be so much need as had formerly been of teaching. Some take it as a hyperbolic expression, (and the dulness of the Jews needed such expressions to awaken them,) designed only to show that the knowledge of God, in gospel-times should be vastly exceed that knowledge of him, which they had under the law. Or, perhaps, it intimates that in gospel-times there shall be such great plenty of public preaching, steadily and constantly, by men authorised and appointed to preach the word in season and out of season, much beyond what was under the law; that there shall be less need than there was then of fraternal teaching, by a neighbour and a brother. The priests preached not then and now, and in the temple, to a few in comparison; but now all shall or may know God by frequenting the assemblies of Christians, wherein, through all parts of the church, the good knowledge of God shall be spread. Some give this sense of it, (Mr. Gataker mentions it,) that many shall have such clearness of understanding in the things of God, that they may seem neither to have been taught by some immediate irradiation than by any means of instruction in short, the things of God shall by the gospel of Christ be brought to a clearer light than ever, (2 Tim. i. 10.) and the people of God shall by the grace of Christ be brought to a clearer sight of those things than ever, Eph. i. 17, 18.

(4.) That, in order to all these blessings, sin shall be pardoned; this is made the reason of all the rest; For I will forgive their iniquity, will not increase, that they, nor deal with them according to the desert of that, will forgive and forget; I will remember their sin no more. It is that keeps good things from us, that stops the current of God's favours; let sin be taken away by pardoning mercy, and the obstruction is removed, and divine grace runs down like a river, like a mighty stream.

35. Thus saith the Lord, which giveth the sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the moon and of the stars for a light by night, which divideth the sea when the waves thereof roar; The Lord of hosts is his name: 36. If those ordinances depart from before me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before me for ever. 37. Thus saith the Lord, If heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath, I will also cast off all the seed of Israel, for all that they have done, saith the Lord. 38. Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that the city shall be built to the Lord, from the tower of Hananeal unto the gate of the corner. 39. And the measuring-line shall yet go forth over against it upon the hill Gareb, and shall compass about to Goath. 40. And the whole valley of the dead bodies, and of the ashes, and all the fields, unto the brook of Kidron, unto the corner of the horse-gate towards the east, shall be holy unto the Lord; it shall not be plucked up, nor thrown down, any more for ever.

Glorious things have been spoken in the foregoing verses concerning the gospel-church, which that epocha of the Jewish church, that was to commence at the return from captivity, would at length terminate in, and which all those promises were to have their full accomplishments in. But may we depend upon these promises? Yes, we have here a ratification of them, and the utmost assurance imaginable given of the perpetuity of the blessings contained in them. The great thing here secured to us, is, that while the world stands, God will have a church in it, which, though sometimes it may be brought very low, shall yet be raised again, and its interests re-established; it is built upon a rock, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. Now here are two things offered for the confirmation of our faith in this promise; the continuance of the world, and the rebuilding of Jerusalem.

1. The building of the world, and the firmness and lastingness of that building, are evidences of the power and faithfulness of that God who has undertaken the establishment of his church. He that built all things at first is God, (Heb. iii. 4.) and the same is he that makes all things new. The constancy of the glories of the kingdom of nature may encourage us to depend upon the divine promise for the continuance of the glories of the kingdom of grace, for this is as the waters of Noah, Isa. lv. 9. Let us observe here,

1. The glories of the kingdom of nature, and infer hence how happy they are that have this God, the God of nature, to be their God for ever and ever. Take notice, (1.) Of the steady and regular motion of the heavens, and the power of the Creator; of that which is the Director of; He gives the sun for a light by day; (v. 35.) not only made it at first to be so, but still gives it to be so, for the light and heat, and all the influences of the sun, continually depend upon its great Creator. He gives the ordinances of the moon and stars for a light by night; their motions are called ordinances, both because they are regular and by rule, and because they are determined at first by the power of the Creator. (2.) Take notice of the government of the sea, and the check that is given to its proud billows; The Lord of hosts divides the sea, or, as some read it, sets the sea, when the waves thereof roar; (Divide, et impera—Divide, and rule;) when it is most tossed, God keeps it within compass, (Jer. v. 22.) and soon quiet it and makes it calm again. The power of God is to be magnified by us, not only in maintaining the regular motions of the heavens, but in controlling the irregular motions of the seas. (3.) Take notice of the vastness of the heavens and the unmeasurable extent of the firmament; he must needs be a great God, who manages such a great world as this is; the heavens above cannot be measured, (v. 37.) and yet God fills them. (4.) Take notice of the mysteries of the earth, that even in our own time we are not able to search out all the parts on which we cast our lot, and which we are most conversant with. The foundations of the earth cannot be searched out beneath, for the Creator hangs the earth upon nothing, (Job. xxxvi. 7.) and we know not how the foundations thereof are fastened, Job. xxxviii. 6. (5.) Take notice of the immovable steadfastness of all these; (v. 36.) These ordinances cannot depart from before me, even of all the hosts of heaven, earth continually under his eye, and all the motions of both; he has established them, and they abide, abide according to his ordinance, for all are his servants, Ps. cxix. 90, 91. The heavens are often clouded, and the sun and moon often eclipsed, the earth may quake and the sea be tossed, but they all keep their place, are moved, but not removed. Herein we must acknowledge the power, goodness and faithfulness of the Creator of the universe.

2. The securities of the kingdom of grace inferred from hence; we may be confident of this very thing, that the seed of Israel shall not cease from being a nation, for the spiritual Israel, the gospel-church, shall be a holy nation, a peculiar people; 1 Pet. ii. 9. When Israel according to the flesh is no longer a nation, the children of the promise are counted for the seed, (Heb. xi. 8.) and God will not cast off all the seed of Israel, no, not for all that they have done, though they have done very wickedly, v. 37. He justly might cast them off; but he will not. Though he cast them out from their land, and cast them down for a time, yet he will not cast them off. Some of them he casts off, but not all to this the apostle seems to refer, (Rom. xi. 1.) Hath God cast away his people? (nay,) For, (v. 3.) at this time there is a remnant, enough to save the credit of the promise, that God will not cast off all the seed of Israel, though many among them throw away themselves by unbelief. Now we may be assisted in the belief of this, by considering, (1.) That the God that has undertaken the preservation of the church, he is God of almighty power, who upholds all things, and is the Almighty by his almighty name. Our help stands in his name, who made heaven and earth, and therefore can do any thing. (2.) That God would not take all this care of the world, but that he designs to have some glory to himself out of it; and how shall ne have it but by securing to himself a church in it, a people that shall be to him for a name and a praise? (3.) That if the order of the creation therefore continues firm, because it was well fixed at first, and is not altered because it needs no alteration, the method of grace shall for the same reason continue immutable, as it was at first well settled. (4.) That he who has promised to preserve a church for himself, has approved himself faithful to the word which he has spoken, concerning the stability of the world. He that is true to his covenant with Noah and his sons, because he established it for an everlasting covenant, (Gen. xiv. 16.) will not cease, we may be sure, with Abraham and his seed, his spiritual seed, for that also is an everlasting covenant. Even that which they have done amiss, though they have done much, shall not prevail to defeat the gracious intentions of the covenant. See Ps. lxxxix. 30, &c.

II. The rebuilding of Jerusalem which was now in ruins, and the enlargement and establishment of that shall be an earnest of these great things that God will do for the gospel-church, the heavenly Jerusalem, v. 36.-40. The days will come, though they may be long in coming, 1. When Jerusalem shall be entirely built again, as large as ever it was; the dimensions are here exactly described, by the places through which the circumference passed, and, no doubt, the wall which Nechoh built, and which Jehoiakim added to; and by the place where they began, ( Neh. iii. 1.) enclosed as much ground as is here intended, though we cannot certainly determine the places here called the gate of the corner, the hill Garoth. &c. 2. When, being built, it shall be consecrated to God and to his service. It shall be built to the Lord, (v. 38.) and even the suburbs and fields adjacent shall be for the Lord for ever. It shall not be polluted with idols as formerly, but God shall be praised and honoured there; the whole city shall be as it were one temple, one holy place, as the new Jerusalem is, which therefore has no temple, because it is all temple. 3. Being thus built by virtue of the promise of God, and then devoted to the praise of God, it shall not be plucked up, or thrown down, any more forever, it shall stand to all time; the time of the new city from the return to its last destruction being full as long as that of the old from David to the captivity. But this promise was to have its full accomplishment in the gospel-church, which, as it is the spiritual Israel, and therefore God will not cast it off, so is the holy city, and therefore all the powers of men shall not shake it up, or throw it down. It may be waste for a time, as Jerusalem did, but shall recover itself, shall weather the storm, and gain its point, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

CHAP. XXXII.

In this chapter, we have, I. Jeremiah imprisoned for foretelling the destruction of Jerusalem and the captivity of king Zedekiah, v. 1.-5. II. We have him buying land, by divine appointment, as an assurance that in due time a happy end should be put to the present troubles, v. 6.-13. III. We have his prayer, which he offered up to God upon that occasion, v. 16.-25. IV. We have a message which God thereupon intrusted him to deliver to the people. 1. He must foretell the utter destruction of Judah, and the captivity of all their sons, v. 26-36. 2. At the same time he must assure them, that though the destruction was total, it should not be final, but that at length their posterity should recover the peaceable possession of all their land, v. 37-40. 3. The threats and promises of this chapter, both threatenings and promises, are much the same with what we have already met with again and again, but here are some circumstances that are very particular and remarkable.

1. The word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord in the tenth year of Zedekiah king of Judah, which was the eighteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar. 2. For then the king of Babylon's army besieged Jerusalem; and Jeremiah the prophet was shut up in the court of the prison, which was in the king of Judah's house. 3. For Zedekiah king of Judah had shut him up, saying, Wherefore dost thou prophesy, and say, Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall take it; 4. And Zedekiah king of Judah shall not escape out of the hand of the Chaldeans, but shall surely be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon, and shall speak with him mouth to mouth, and his eyes shall behold his eyes; 5. And he shall lead Zedekiah to Babylon, and there shall he be until I visit him, saith the Lord; though ye fight with the Chaldeans, ye shall not prosper. 6. And Jeremiah said, The word of the Lord came unto me, saying, 7. Behold, Hanameel, the son of Shallum, thine uncle, shall come unto thee, saying, Buy thee that is in Anathoth; for the right of redemption is thine to buy it. 8. So Hanameel, mine uncle's son, came to me in the court of the prison, according to the word of the Lord, and said unto me, Buy my field, I pray thee, that is in Anathoth, which is in the country of Benjamin; for the right of inheritance is thine, and the redemption is thine; buy it for thyself. Then I knew that this was the word of the Lord. 9. And I bought the field of Hanameel, mine uncle's son, that was in Anathoth, and weighed him the money, even seventeen shekels of silver. 10. And I subscribed the evidence, and sealed it, and took witnesses, and weighed him the money in the balances. 11. So I took the evidence of the purchase, both that which was sealed according to the law and custom, and that which was open. 12. And I gave the evidence of the purchase unto Baruch the son of Neriah, the son of Maaseiah, in the sight of Hanameel mine uncle's son, and in the presence of the witnesses that subscribed the book of the purchase, before all the Jews that sat in the court of the prison. 13. And I charged Baruch before them, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Take these evidences, this evidence of the purchase, (both which is sealed,) and this evidence which is open, and put them in an earthen vessel, that they may continue many days: 14. For thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Take these evidences, this evidence of the purchase, (both which is sealed,) and this evidence which is open, and put them in an earthen vessel, that they may continue many days: 15. For thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Houses, and fields, and vineyards, shall be possessed again in this land.
now coming very nigh to that fatal year which completed the desolations of Judah and Jerusalem by the Chaldeans. God's judgments came gradually upon them, but they not meeting him by repentance in the way of his judgments, he proceeded in his controversy till all was laid waste, which was in the eleventh year of Zedekiah; now what a picture does this make of the case of an individual!

The king of Babylon's army had now invested Jerusalem, and was carrying on the siege with vigour, not doubting but in a little time to make themselves masters of it, while the besieged had taken up a desperate resolution not to surrender, but to hold it out to the last extremity. Now,

1. Jeremiah prophesies that both the city and the country shall fall into the hands of the king of Babylon. He tells them expressly, that the besiegers shall take the city as a prize, for God, whose city it was in a peculiar manner, will give it into their hands, and put it out of its protection; (v. 3.) that though Zedekiah attempt to make his escape, he shall be overthrown, and shall be delivered a prisoner into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar, shall be brought into his presence, and be his great confusion to tell him his sins; and he, in his rage, shall break his faith with him; he shall hear the king of Babylon pronounce his doom, and see with what fury and indignation he will look upon him; his eyes shall behold his eyes, v. 4. That Zedekiah shall be carried to Babylon, and continue a miserable captive there, until God visit him, till God put an end to his life by a natural death, as Nebuchadnezzar had long before promised to do to him; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 19. He shall be shut up in a house, what is here rendered a prison, and Zedekiah shut him up in it for prophesying as he did, v. 2. 3. So far was he from humbling himself before Jeremiah, as he ought to have done, (2 Chron. xxxvi. 12.) that he hardened himself against him. Though he had formerly so far owned him to be a prophet, as to desire him to inquire of the Lord for them, (ch. xxix. 2.) yet now he chides him for prophesying, (v. 5.) and shuts him up in prison, perhaps him, and design to punish him any further, but only to restrain him from prophesying any further, which was crime enough. Silencing God's prophets, though it is not so bad as mocking and killing them, is yet a great affront to the God of heaven. See how wretchedly the hearts of sinners are hardened by the deceitfulness of sin. Persecution was one of the sins of Israel, which blazed up in the tenth, perhaps him, and yet Zedekiah persists in it even now that he was in the depth of distress. No providences, no afflictions, will of themselves part between men and their sins, unless the grace of God work with them. Nay, some are made worse by those very judgments that should make them better.

II. For prophesying thus, he is imprisoned, not in the common gaol, but in the more creditable prison that was within the verge of the palace, in the king of Judah's house, and there not closely confined, but in custodia libera, in the court of the prison, where he might have good company, good air, and good intelligence brought him, and would be sheltered from the abuses of the times. What is here rendered his prison, is his chamber, where he was a prisoner, and Zedekiah shut him up in it for prophesying as he did, v. 2. 3. So far was he from humbling himself before Jeremiah, as he ought to have done, (2 Chron. xxxvi. 12.) that he hardened himself against him. Though he had formerly so far owned him to be a prophet, as to desire him to inquire of the Lord for them, (ch. xxix. 2.) yet now he chides him for prophesying, (v. 5.) and shuts him up in prison, perhaps him, and design to punish him any further, but only to restrain him from prophesying any further, which was crime enough. Silencing God's prophets, though it is not so bad as mocking and killing them, is yet a great affront to the God of heaven. See how wretchedly the hearts of sinners are hardened by the deceitfulness of sin. Persecution was one of the sins of Israel, which blazed up in the tenth, perhaps him, and yet Zedekiah persists in it even now that he was in the depth of distress. No providences, no afflictions, will of themselves part between men and their sins, unless the grace of God work with them. Nay, some are made worse by those very judgments that should make them better.

III. Being in prison, he purchases a piece of ground out of a near relation of his, that lay in Anathoth, v. 6, 7, &c. One would not have expected,
1. That a prophet should concern himself so far in the business of this world, but why not? Though ministers must not entangle themselves, yet they may concern themselves, in the affairs of this life.
2. That one who had neither wife nor children should buy land; we find, (ch. xvi. 2.) that he had no family of his own, yet he may purchase for his own use while he lives, and leave it to the children of his body by this relation when he dies. One would little have thought that a prophet should deal in money, and how should he get money beforehand to buy land with? It is probable that he lived frugally, and saved something out of what belonged to him as a priest, which is no blemish at all to his character; but we have no reason to think that the people were kind, or that his being beforehand was owing to their generosity. Nay, 4. It was most strange of all that he should be willing to sell at all, and himself knew that the whole land was now to be laid waste, and fall into the hands of the Chaldeans; and then what good would this do him? But it was the will of God that he should buy it, and he submitted, though the money seemed to be thrown away. His kinsman came to offer it him; it was not of his own seeking; he coveted not to lay house and field to field, but Providence brought it to him, and it was, probably, a good bargain; besides, the right of redemption belonged to him, (v. 8.) and if he refused, he did not do the kinsman's part. It is true, he might lawfully refuse; but, being a prophet, in a thing of this nature, he must do that which would be for the honour of his profession; it became him to fulfill all righteousness. It was a land that lay within the suburbs of a priest's city, and if he should refuse it there was danger lest in these times of disorder, it might be sold to one of another tribe, which was contrary to the law, to prevent which it was convenient for him to buy it. It would likewise be a kindness to his kinsman, who, probably, was at this time in great want of money. Jeremiah had but a little, but what he had was willing to lay it out in such a manner as might tend most to the honour of God and the good of his friends and country, which he preferred before his own private interests. Observe,
(1.) How fairly the bargain was made. When Jeremiah knew by Hanameel's coming to him, as God had foretold he would, that it was the word of the Lord, that it was his mind that he should make this purchase, he made no more difficulty of it, but immediately purchased the land according to the money and exact in paying the money. He weighed him the money, did not press him to take it upon his report, though he was his near kinsman, but weighed it to him, current money. It was seventeen shekels of silver, amounting to about forty shillings of our money. It was, probably, but a little field, and of small yearly value, when the purchase was so low.
(2.) The right of inheritance was in Jeremiah, so that he was only to buy out his kinsman's life, the reversion was his already. Some think this was only the earnest of a greater sum; but we shall not wonder at the smallness of the price, if we consider what scarcity there was of money at this time, and how little lands were counted upon. [2.] He was very prompt and discreet in preserving the writings. They were戒指 sealed before they were burned, by which was sealed up, the other was open. One was the original, the other the counterfeit; or perhaps that which was sealed up was for his own private use, the other that was open was to be laid up in the public register of conveyances, for any person concerned to consult. Due care and caution, in things of this nature, might prevent a great deal of injustice and error. The conveyance was made in the hands of Baruch, before witnesses, and he was ordered to lay them up in an earthen vessel, (an emblem of the nature of all the securities this world can pretend to give us, brittle things, and soon broken,) that they might continue many days, for the use of Jeremiah's heirs, after the return out of captivity; for they might then have the benefit of this purchase. Purchasing reversions may be a kindness to those that come after us, and a good man thus lays up an inheritance for his children's children.

(2.) What was the design of having this bargain made? It was to signify that though Jerusalem was now besieged, and the whole country was likely to be laid waste, yet the time should come, when houses and fields and vineyards should be again possessed in this land, v. 15. As God appointed Joshua to confirm his predictions of the approaching destruction of Jerusalem, by his own practice in living unmarried, so he now appointed him to confirm his predictions of the future restoration of Jerusalem, by his own practice in purchasing this field. Note, It concerns ministers to make it to appear in their whole conversation, that they do themselves believe that which they preach to others; and that they may do so, and impress it the deeper upon their hearers, they must many a time deny themselves, as Jeremiah did in both these instances.

God having promised that this land should again come into the possession of his people, Jeremiah will, in behalf of his heirs, put in a shew. Note, It is good to manage even our worldly affairs in faith, and to do common business with an eye to the providence and promise of God. Lucius Florus relates it as a great instance of the bravery of the Roman citizens, that in the time of the second Punic war, when Hannibal besieged Rome, and was very near making himself master of it, a field on which part of his army lay, being offered to sale at that time, was immediately purchased, in a firm belief that the Roman valour would raise the siege, lib. 2. ch. 3. page 256. And concerning this venture out we all upon the word of God, and to embark in Zion's interests, which will undoubtedly be the prevailing interests at last! Non si male nunc et olim sic erit—Though now we suffer, we shall not suffer always.

16. Now when I had delivered the evidence of the purchase unto Baruch the son of Neriah, I prayed unto the Lord, saying, 17. Ah, Lord God! behold, thou hast made the heaven and the earth by thy great power and stretched-out arm, and there is nothing too hard for thee: 18. Thou shew-est loving-kindness unto thousands; and recompensest the iniquity of the fathers into the bosom of their children after them: The Great, the Mighty God, the Lord of hosts, is his name. 19. Great in counsel, and mighty in work: (for thine eyes are open upon all the ways of the sons of men; to give every one according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings;) 20. Which hast set signs and wonders in the land of Egypt, even unto this day, and in Israel, and among other men; and hast made thee a name, as at this day; 21. And hast brought forth thy people Israel out of the land of Egypt, with signs, and with wonders, and with a strong hand, and with a stretched-out arm, and with great terror; 22. And hast given them this land, which thou didst swear to their fathers to give them, a land flowing with milk and honey; 23. And they came in, and possessed it; but they obeyed not thy voice, neither walked in thy law: they have done nothing of all that thou commandedst them to do; therefore thou hast caused all this evil to come upon them. 24. Behold the mounts, they are come unto the city to take it; and the city is given into the hand of the Chaldeans that fight against it, because of the sword, and of the famine, and of the pestilence: and what thou hast spoken is come to pass; and, behold, thou seest it. 25. And thou hast said unto me, O Lord God, Buy thee the field for money, and take witnesses; for the city is given into the hand of the Chaldeans.

We have here Jeremiah's prayer to God, upon occasion of the discoveries God had made to him of his purposes concerning this nation, to pull it down, and in process of time to build it up again, and which purposed the prophet himself, who, though he delivered his messages faithfully and just in reflecting upon them, was at a loss within himself how to reconcile them; in that perplexity he poured out his soul before God in prayer, and so gave himself ease. That which disturbed him was, not the bad bargain he seemed to have made for himself in purchasing a field that he was likely to have no good of but the mind of his people, for whom he was still a kind and faithful intercessor; and he was willing to hope that if God had so much mercy in store for them hereafter as he had promised, he would not proceed with so much severity against them now as he had threatened. Before Jeremiah went to prayer, he delivered the deeds that concerned his new purchase to Baruch; which may intimate to us, that when we are going to worship God, we should get our minds as clear as may be from the cares and encumbrances of this world. Jeremiah was in prison, in distress, in the dark about the meaning of God's providences, and then he prays. Note, Prayer is a salve for every sore. Whatever is a burden to us, we may by prayer cast it upon the Lord, and then be easy.

In this prayer of meditation.

1. Jeremiah adores God and his infinite perfections, and gives him the glory due to his name as the Creator, Upholder, and Benefactor, of the whole creation; thereby owning his irresistible power, that he can do what he will, and his incontestable sovereignty, that he may do what he will, v. 17.—19. Note, When at any time we are perplexed about the particular methods and dispensations of Divine wisdom, it is good for us to have recourse to our first principles, and to satisfy ourselves with the general doctrines of God's wisdom, power, and goodness. Let us consider, as Jeremiah does here, (1.) That God is the Fountain of all being, power, life, motion, and perfection; He made the heaven and the earth with an outstretched arm; and therefore who can control him? Who can contend with him? (2.) That with him nothing is impossible, no difficulty insuperable; Nothing is too hard for thee. When human skill and power is quite overthrown, with God are strength and wisdom sufficient to master all the opposition. (3.) That he is a God of boundless, bottomless mercy; that is his darling attribute; and his goodness that is his glory; Though not only art kind, but thou showest loving-kindness, art to a few, to here and there one, but to thousands, thousands of persons, thousands of generations.” (4.)
That he is a God of impartial and inflexible justice. His reproaches are not pardons, but in mercy he spares the parents, that they may lead to repentance, yet such a hatred has he to sin, and such displeasure against sinners, that he recompenes their iniquity into the bosom of their children, and yet does them no wrong; so hateful is the unrighteousness of man, and so jealous of its own honour is the righteousness of God. (5.) That he is a God of universal dominion and command; he is the great God, for he is the mighty God; and might among men, and may not be moved. (6.) He is the Lord of hosts, of all hosts, that is his name, and he answers to his name, for all the hosts of heaven and earth, of men and angels, are at his beck. (6.) That he contrives everything for the best, and effects everything as he contrived it; he is great in counsel; so vast are the reaches, and so deep are the designs, of his wisdom; and he is mighty in doing, according to the counsel of his will. Now such a God this is not to be quarreled to, and his service is to be constantly adhered to, and all his dispositions cheerfully acquiesced in.

2. He acknowledges the universal cognizance God takes of all the actions of the children of men, and the unerring judgment he passes upon them; (v. 19.) Thine eyes are open upon all the sons of men, wherever they are, beholding the evil and the good, and upon all their ways. They are purchased with signs and wonders, which remain, in not in the marks of them, yet in the memorials of them, even unto this day; for it would never be forgotten, not only in Israel, who were reminded of it every year by the ordinance of the passover, but among other men; all the neighbouring nations speak of it, as that which recondiected exceedingly to the glory of the God of Israel, and made him a name as the day of days. (7.) That God brought them forth, not only with comforts and joys to them, but with glory to himself, with signs and wonders, (witness the ten plagues,) with a strong hand, too strong for the Egyptians themselves, and with a stretched-out arm, that reached Pharaoh, proud as he was, and with great terror to them and all about them. This seems to refer to Deut. iv. 34. (2.) He brought them into Canaan, that good land, that land flowing with milk and honey; he swore to their fathers to give it them, and because he would perform his oath, he did give it to the children, (v. 22.) and they came in, and possessed it. Jeremiah mentions this both as an aggravation of their sin and disobedience, and also as a plen of God with work delivery for them. Note, It is good for us often to reflect upon the great things that God did for our fathers, especially in the first erecting of it, that work of wonder.

4. He bewails the rebellions they had been guilty of against God, and the judgments God had brought upon them for these rebellions. It is a sad account he here gives of the ungrateful conduct of that people toward God. He had done every thing that he proposed to do, (witness the ten plagues,) and yet they had done nothing of all that he commanded them to do; (v. 23.) they made no conscience of any of his laws, they walked not in them, paid no respect to any of his calls by his prophets, for they obeyed not his voice. And therefore he owns that God was righteous in causing all this evil to come upon them. The city is besieged, is attacked by the sword without, is weakened and wasted by famine and pestilence within, so that it is ready to fall into the hands of the Chaldeans, that fight against it; (v. 24.) it is given into their hands. Now, (1.) He compares the present state of Jerusalem with the divine predictions, and finds that what God has spoken, is come to pass. God had given them fair warning of it before; if they had regarded this, the ruin had been prevented; but if they will not do what God has commanded, they can expect no other than that he should do what he has threatened. (5.) He commits the present state of Jerusalem to the divine consideration and compassion; (v. 24.) Behold the mountains, or ramparts, or the engines, which they make use of to batter the city, and beat down the wall of it. And again, "Behold, thou sest it, and takest cognizance of it. Is this the city that thou hast chosen to put the name there? And shall it be thus abandoned?" He neither complains of God for what he had done, nor prescribes to God what he should do, but desires he would behold their case, and is pleased to think that he does behold it. Whatever trouble we are in, upon a personal or public account, we may comfort ourselves with this, that God sees it, and sees how to remedy it.

3. He recounts the great things God had done for his people Israel formerly. (1.) He brought them out of Egypt, that house of bondage, with signs and wonders, which remain, in not in the marks of them, yet in the memorials of them, even unto this day; for it would never be forgotten, not only in Israel, who were reminded of it every year by the ordinance of the passover, but among other men; all the neighbouring nations speak of it, as that which recondiected exceedingly to the glory of the God of Israel, and made him a name as the day of days. (7.) That God brought them forth, not only with comforts and joys to them, but with glory to himself, with signs and wonders, (witness the ten plagues,) with a strong hand, too strong for the Egyptians themselves, and with a stretched-out arm, that reached Pharaoh, proud as he was, and with great terror to them and all about them. This seems to refer to Deut. iv. 34. (2.) He brought them into Canaan, that good land, that land flowing with milk and honey; he swore to their fathers to give it them, and because he would perform his oath, he did give it to the children, (v. 22.) and they came in, and possessed it. Jeremiah mentions this both as an aggravation of their sin and disobedience, and also as a plen of God with work delivery for them. Note, It is good for us often to reflect upon the great things that God did for our fathers, especially in the first erecting of it, that work of wonder.

4. He bewails the rebellions they had been guilty of against God, and the judgments God had brought upon them for these rebellions. It is a sad account he here gives of the ungrateful conduct of that people toward God. He had done every thing that he proposed to do, (witness the ten plagues,) and yet they had done nothing of all that he commanded them to do; (v. 23.) they made no conscience of any of his laws, they walked not in them, paid no respect to any of his calls by his prophets, for they obeyed not his voice. And therefore he owns that God was righteous in causing all this evil to come upon them. The city is besieged, is attacked by the sword without, is weakened and wasted by famine and pestilence within, so that it is ready to fall into the hands of the Chaldeans, that fight against it; (v. 24.) it is given into their hands. Now, (1.) He compares the present state of Jerusalem with the divine predictions, and finds that what God has spoken, is come to pass. God had given them fair warning of it before; if they had regarded this, the ruin had been prevented; but if they will not do what God has commanded, they can expect no other than that he should do what he has threatened. (5.) He commits the present state of Jerusalem to the divine consideration and compassion; (v. 24.) Behold the mountains, or ramparts, or the engines, which they make use of to batter the city, and beat down the wall of it. And again, "Behold, thou sest it, and takest cognizance of it. Is this the city that thou hast chosen to put the name there? And shall it be thus abandoned?" He neither complains of God for what he had done, nor prescribes to God what he should do, but desires he would behold their case, and is pleased to think that he does behold it. Whatever trouble we are in, upon a personal or public account, we may comfort ourselves with this, that God sees it, and sees how to remedy it.

5. He seems desirous to let further into the meaning of the order that God had now given him, to purchase his field; (v. 25.) "Though the city is given into the hands of the Chaldeans, no man is likely to enjoy what he has, yet that hast said unto me, Buy thee the field." As soon as he understood that it was the mind of God, he did it, and made no objections, was not disobedient to the heavenly vision; but when he had done it, he desired better to understand why God had ordered him to do it, because the thing looked strange and unaccountable. Note, Though we are bound to follow God with an implicit obedience, yet we should endeavour that it may be more and more intelligent obedience. We must never dispute God's statutes and judgments, but we may and must inquire, What mean these statutes and judgments? Deut. vi. 20. 26. Then came the word of the Lord unto Jeremiah, saying, 27. Behold, I am the Lord, the God of all flesh: is there any thing too hard for me? 28. Therefore thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the Chaldeans, and into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and he shall take it. 29. And the Chaldeans, that fight against this city, shall come and set fire on this city, and burn it, with the houses upon whose roofs they have offered incense unto Baal, and poured out drink-offerings unto other gods, to provoke me to anger. 30. For the children of Israel, and the children of Judah have only done evil before me from their youth: for the children of Israel have only provoked me to anger with the work of their hands, saith the Lord. 31. For this city hath been to me as a provocation of mine anger and of my fury, from the day that they built it, even unto this day, that I should remove it from before my face: 32. Because of all the evil of the children of Israel, and of the children of Judah, which they have done to prove me to anger, they, their kings, their princes, their priests, and their prophets, and the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem. 33. And they have turned unto me the back, and not the face: though I taught them, rising up early and teaching them, yet they have not hearkened to receive instruction. 34. But they set their abominations in the house which is called by my name, to defile it. 35. And they built the high places of Baal, which are in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to cause their sons and their daughters to pass through the fire unto Molech, which I commanded them not, neither came it into my mind, that they should do this abomination, to cause Judah to sin. 36. And now therefore thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, concerning this city, whereof ye say, It shall be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence; 37. Behold, I will gather them out of all countries whither I have driven them in mine anger, and in my fury, and in great wrath; and I will bring them again unto this place, and I will cause them to dwell safely: 38. And they shall be my people, and I will be their God: 39. And I will give them one heart, and one way, that they may fear me for ever, for the good of them, and of their children after them: 40. And I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them to do them good; but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me. 41. Yea, I will rejoice over them to do them good, and I will plant them in this land assuredly with my whole heart, and with my whole soul. 42. For thus saith the Lord, Like as I have brought all this great evil upon this people, so will I bring upon them all the good that I have promised them. 43. And fields shall be bought in this land, whereof ye say, It is desolate without man or beast; it is given into the hand of the Chaldeans. 44. Men shall buy fields for money, and subscribe evidences, and seal them, and take witnesses in the land of Benjamin, and in the places about Jerusalem, and in the cities of Judah, and in the cities of the mountains, and in the cities of the valley, and in the cities of the south: for I will cause their captivity to return, saith the Lord.

When we know not how to reconcile one word of God with another, we may yet be sure that both are true, but that the one pertains to the present age, and the other to the future, and not one iota or little of either shall fall to the ground. When Jeremiah was ordered to buy the field in Anathoth, he was willing to hope that God was about to revoke the sentence of his wrath, and to order the Chaldeans to raise the siege. "No," says God, "the execution of the sentence shall go on, Jerusalem shall be laid in ruins." Note, As grievances of present age must not be interpreted as securities from present troubles. But, lest Jeremiah should think that his being ordered to buy this field intimated that all the mercy God had in store for his people, after their return, was only that they should have the possession of their own land again; he further acquaints him that that was but a type and figure of these spiritual blessings which should then be abundantly bestowed upon them, unspeakably more valuable than fields and vineyards. So that in this word of the Lord, which came here to Jeremiah, first as dreadful threatenings, and then as precious promises as perhaps any we have in the Old Testament; life and death, good and evil, are here set before us; let us consider and choose wisely.

1. The ruin of Judah and Jerusalem is here pronounced: the decree is gone forth, and shall not be recalled.

1. God here asserts his own sovereignty and power; (v. 27.) Behold, I am Jehovah, a self-existent, self-sufficient Being; I am that I am; I am the God of all flesh, of all mankind; here called flesh, because weak, and unable to contend with God, (Ps. 89.) and because wicked and corrupt, and unapt to comply with God. God is the Creator of all, and makes what use he pleases of all. He that is the God of Israel is the God of all flesh, and of the spirits of all flesh; and, if Israel were cast off, could raise up a people to his name out of some other nation. If he be the God of all flesh, he may well ask, Is anything too hard for me? What can he do, from whom all the powers of men are derived, on whom they depend, and by whom all their actions are directed and governed? Whatever he designs to do, whether in wrath or in mercy, nothing can hinder him, or defeat his designs.

2. He abides by what he had often said of the destruction of Jerusalem by the king of Babylon; (v. 28.) I will give this city into his hand, now that it is grasping at it, and not taking it, and make a prey of it, v. 29. The Chaldeans shall set fire to it, shall burn it and all the houses in it, God's house not excepted, nor the king's neither.

3. He assigns the reason for these severe proceedings against the city that had been so much in his favour. It is sin, it is that, and nothing else, that ruins it. (1.) They were impatient and daring in sin. They have reigned iniquitous kings, as men ashamed or afraid of being discovered, but upon the tops of their houses, (v. 29.) in defiance of God's justice. (2.) They designed an affront to God herein. They did it to provoke me to anger, v. 29. They have only provoked me to anger with the works of their hands, v. 30. They could not promise themselves any pleasure, profit, or honour in it, but designed an awful punishment for God again, (v. 32.) All the evil which they have done was to provoke me to anger. They knew he was a jealous God in the matters of his worship, and there they resolved to try his jealousy and dare him to his face. Jerusalem has been to me a provocation of my anger and fury, v. 31. Their conduct was very that was provoking. (3.) They began betimes, and had continued all along provoking to God. They have done evil before me from their youth, ever since they were first formed into a pec-
Jeremiah, XXIII.

1. The fear at all times, have a good hope to support themselves in the worst of times.

2. The hope that God gives them of mercy which he had in store for them hereafter. Though their captivity must fall in captivity, yet, after their children after them should again see this good land, and the goodness of God in it.

(1.) They shall be brought up from their captivity, and shall come, and settle again in this land, v. 57. They had been under God's anger and fury, and great wrath; but now they shall partake of his grace, and love, and great favor. He had taken care of them by his power, even when they were dispersed among the nations, and formed foreign nations; these that fled dispersed themselves; those that fell into the enemy's hands were dispersed by them, in policy, to prevent combinations among them. God's hand was in both: but now God will find them out, and gather them out of all the countries which they were driven, as he promised in the law, (Deut. XXX. 4.) and the saints had prayed, Ps. civ. 47. Neh. i. 9. He had banished them, but he will bring them again to this place, which they could not but have an affection for. For many years past, while they were in their own land, they were continually exposed, and terrified with the alarms of war; but now I will cause them to dwell safely. Being reformed, and returned to God, neither their own consciences within, nor their enemies without, shall be able to handicaps them. And, if they should return, I will plant them in this land assuredly; not only I will certainly do it, but they shall here enjoy a holy security and repose, and they shall take root here, shall be planted in stability, and not again be unfixed and unshaken.

(2.) God will renew his covenant with them, a covenant of grace, the blessings of which are spiritual, and such as will work good things in them, and qualify them for the great things God intended to do for them. It is called an everlasting covenant, (v. 40.) not only because God will be ever faithful to it, but because the consequences of it will be for everlast. For, doubtless, here the promises look further than to Israel according to the flesh, and are sure to all believers, to every Israelite indeed. Good Christians may apply them to themselves, and feel the benefits of them, and take the comfort of them. [1.] God will own them for his, and make over himself to them, (v. 43.) They shall be his people. He will make them his, by working in them all the characters and dispositions of his people, and then he will protect and guide and govern them as his people. And, to make them truly, completely, and eternally happy, I will be their God. They shall serve and worship God as theirs, and cleave to him only, and he will approve himself theirs. All he is, all he has, shall be engaged and employed for their good.

[2.] God will give them a heart to fear him, (v. 39.) That which he requires of those whom he takes into covenant with him as his people, is, that they should fear him, and reverence God's name, and be afraid of his anger, and dread his wrath, stand in awe of his authority, pay homage to him, and give him the glory due unto his name. Now what God requires of them he here promises to work in them, pursuant to his choice of them as his people. Note, As it is God's prerogative to fashion men's hearts, so it is his promise to his people to fashion their aights. God gives a heart to his people, and by his grace makes it a good heart, stedfast and well-fashioned. It is repeated again, (v. 40.) I will put my fear in their hearts, work in them gracious principles and dispositions, that shall influence and govern their whole conversation. Teachers may put good things into our heads, but it is God only that can put them into our hearts, that can work in us both to will and to do.
[3.] He will give them one heart and one way. In order to their walking in one way, he will give them one heart; as the heart is, so will the way be, and one heart will rule over them, and they shall each of them one with themselves; one heart is the same with a new heart, Ezek. xi. 19. The heart is then one, when it is fully determined for God, and entirely devoted to God; when the eye is single, and God’s glory alone aimed at; when our hearts are fixed, trusting in God, and we are uniform and universal in our obedience to him; then the heart is one, as one way; and unless the heart shall be steady, the goings will not be steadfast. From this promise we may take direction and encouragement to pray, with David, (Ps. lxxxvi. 11.) Unite my heart to fear thy name; for God says, I will give them one heart, that they may fear me. Secondly, They shall be all of them one with each other. All good Christians shall be incorporated into one body, and shall be united as one soul. All that profess the gospel shall be one body, with one spirit and one consent. They that have the same root and stock, have a disposition to love one another; the gospel they profess, having it in the strongest inducements to mutual love, and the Spirit that dwells in them, being the Spirit of love. Though they may have different apprehensions about lesser things, they shall be all one in the great things of God, being renewed after the same image; though they may have many particular differences, yet they shall be all united in God.

[4.] He will effectually provide for their perseverance in grace, and the perpetuating of the covenant between him and them. They would have been happy when they were first planted in Canaan, like Adam in paradise, if they had not departed from God. And therefore now that they are restored to their happiness, they shall be confirmed in it, by the operation of the grace and promises from God, and this will complete their bliss. First, God will never leave nor forsake them; I will not turn away from them to do good. Earthly princes are fickle, and their greatest favourites have fallen under their frowns; but God’s mercy endures for ever; whom he loves, he loves to the end. God may seem to turn from his people, (Isa. liv. 8.) but even then he does not turn from doing and designing them good. Secondly, They shall never leave nor forsake him; that is the thing we are in danger of; we have no reason to distrust God’s fidelity and constancy, but our own. And therefore it is here promised, that God will give them a heart to fear him for ever, all days, to be in his fear every day, and all the day long, (Prov. xxiii. 17.) and to continue so; for so long as the grace of God is in them a principle into their hearts, that they shall not depart from him. Even those who have given up their names to God, if they be left to themselves, will depart from him; but the fear of God, ruling in the heart, will prevent their departure. That, and nothing else, will do it. If we continue close and faithful to God, it is owing purely to his almighty grace, and not to any strength or resolution of our own.

[5.] He will entail a blessing upon their seed, will give them grace to fear him, for the good of them, and of their children after them. As their departures from God had been to the prejudice of their children, so their adherence to God should be to the advantage of their children. We cannot better commend the goodness of the blessing of the law, than by keeping up, a keeping up, the fear and worship of God in our families.

[6.] He will take a pleasure in their prosperity, and will do every thing to advance it; (v. 41.) I will rejoice over them to do them good. God will therefore do them good, because he rejoices over them; they are dear to him, he makes his boast of them, and therefore will not only do them good, but will delight in doing them good. When he punishes them, it is with reluctance; How shall I give thee up, Ephraim? But when he restores them it is with delight; he rejoices in them, as the Messiah does in his people. We ought therefore to use him with pleasure, and to rejoice in all opportunities of serving him. He is himself a cheerful Giver, and therefore loves, a cheerful servant. I will plant them (says God) with my whole heart, and with my whole soul. He will be intent upon it, and take delight in it: he will make it the business of his providence to settle them again in Canaan, and the various dispensation of providence shall tend to that. All these shall appear at last so to have been working for the good of the church, that it will be said, The Governor of the world is entirely taken up with the care of his church.

[7.] These promises shall as surely be performed as the foregoing threatenings were, and the accomplishment of those, notwithstanding the security of the people, might confirm their expectation of the performance of these, notwithstanding their present despair; (v. 42.) As I have brought all this great evil upon them, pursuant to the threatenings, and for the glory of divine justice, so I will bring upon them all this good, pursuant to the promise, and for the glory of divine mercy. He that is faithful to his threatenings will much more be so to his promises; and the same good that God has given for the vanquishing of the enemy, shall be used to the advantage of the church.

[8.] As an earnest of all this, houses and lands shall again take a good price in Judah and Jerusalem, and though now they are a drug, there shall again be a sufficient number of purchasers; (v. 43, 44.) Fields shall be bought in this land, and people will cover the cities of Judah, and of Jerusalem, whether they lie on mountains, or in valleys, or in the south, in all parts of the country, men shall buy fields, and subscribe evidences. Trade shall revive, for they shall have money enough to buy land with; husbandry shall revive, for those that have money shall be able to lay it out upon lands; laws shall again have their due course, for they shall subscribe evidences, and seal them. This is mentioned to reconcile Jeremiah to his new purchase; though he had bought a piece of ground and could not go to see it, yet he must believe that this was the pledge of many a purchase, and these but faint resemblances of the pur chased possessions in the heavenly Canaan, reserved for all those who have God’s fear in their hearts, and do not depart from him.

CHAP. XXXIII.

The scope of this chapter is much the same with that of the foregoing—viz. to continue the doctrine of the re-storation of the Jews, notwithstanding the present dislocations of their country, and dispetions of their people. And these promises have, both in type and tendency, a reference as far as possible to the state of Israel as the church of the New Testament. And this second edition of the Jewish church was at length to resign its dignities and privileges. It is here promised, 1. That the city shall be rebuilt and re-established in statute quo—in its former state, v. 1—6. II. That the captives, having their sins pardoned, shall be restored, v. 7, 8. III. That this shall redound very much to the glory of God, v. 9. IV. That the country shall have both joy and felicity, v. 10—14. V. That the church shall be made ready for the coming of the Messiah, v. 15, 16. VI. That the house of David, the house of Levi, and the house of Israel, shall flourish again, and be established, and all the tribes of the kingdom of Christ: a gospel-ministry and the gospel-church shall continue while the world stands, v. 17—26.

1. Moreover, the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah the second time, while he was yet shut up in the court of the prison, saying, 2. Thus saith the Lord, the maker thereof, the Lord that formed it, to establish it; the Lord is his name; 3. Call unto me, and I will answer thee, and shew thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not. 4. For thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, concerning the houses of this city, and concerning the houses of the kings of Judah, which are thrown down by the mount, and by the sword; 5. They come to fight with the Chaldeans, but it is to fill them with the dead bodies of men, whom I have slain in mine anger, and in my fury, and for all whose wickedness I have hid my face from this city. 6. Behold, I will bring it health and cure, and I will cure them, and will reveal unto them the abundance of peace and truth. 7. And I will cause the captivity of Judah, and the captivity of Israel, to return, and will build them as at the first. 8. And I will cleanse them from all their iniquity, whereby they have sinned against me; and I will pardon all their iniquities, whereby they have sinned, and whereby they have transgressed against me. 9. And it shall be to me a name of joy, a praise and an honour before all the nations of the earth, which shall hear all the good that I do unto them: and they shall fear and tremble for all the goodness, and for all the prosperity, that I procure unto it.

Observe here,

1. The date of this comfortable prophecy which God intrusted Jeremiah with. It is not exact in the time, only that it was after the first long chapter, when things were still growing worse and worse; it was the second time; God spaketh once, yea, twice, for the encouragement of his people. We are not only so disobedient, that we have need of precept upon precept to bring us to our duty, but so distrustful, that we have need of promise upon promise to bring us to our comfort. This word, as the former, came to Jeremiah when he was in prison.

Note. No confinement can deprive God's people of his presence; no locks or bars can shut out his gracious visits; nay, oftentimes as their afflictions abound, their consolations much more abound, and they have the most reviving communications of his favour then, when the world frowns upon them. Paul's sweetest epistles were those that bare date out of a prison.

11. No prophecy itself. A great deal of comfort is wrapt up in it for the relief of the captives, to keep them from sinking into despair. Observe,

1. Who is it that secures this comfort to them, v. 2. It is the Lord, the Maker thereof, the Lord that framed it. He is the Maker and Former of heaven and earth, and therefore has all power in his hands; so it refers to Jeremiah's prayer, ch. xxxiii. 2. He is the Maker and Former of Jerusalem. Ezek. 4, built them at first, and therefore can rebuild them, built them for his own praise, and therefore will. He formed it, to establish it, and therefore it shall be established till these things be introduced, which cannot be shaken, but shall remain for ever. He is the Maker and Former of this promise; he has laid the scheme for Jerusalem's restoration, and he that has formed it will establish it, he that has made the promise will make it good; for Jehovah is his name; a God giving being to his promises by the performance of them, as he has been; a name, that name, (Exod. vi. 3,) a perfecting God; when the heavens and the earth were finished, then, and not till then, the Creator is called Jehovah, Gen. ii. 1.

2. How this comfort must be obtained and fetched in by prayer; (v. 5.) Call upon me, and I will answer thee. The prophet, having received some intimations of this kind, must be humbly explicit with God for further discoveries of his kind intentions. He had prayed, (ch. xxxii. 16,) but he must pray again. Note, Those that expect to receive comforts from God must continue instant in prayer; we must call upon him, and then he will answer us; Christ himself must ask, and it shall be given him, Ps. ii. 8. I will show thee great and mighty things, give thee a clear and full prospect of them; hidden things, which, though in part discovered already, yet thou knowest not, thou canst not understand, or give credit to. Or, this may refer not only to the prediction of these things, which Jeremiah, if he desire it, shall be favoured with, but to the performance of the things themselves, which the people of God, encouraged by this prediction, must pray for. Note, Promises are given, not to supersede, but to quicken and encourage, prayer. See Ezek. xxxvi. 37.

3. How deplorable the condition of Jerusalem was, which made it necessary that such comforts as these should be provided for it; and notwithstanding which, its restoration should be brought about in due time; (v. 4, 5.) The houses of this city, not excepting those of the kings of Judah, are thrown down by the mountains, or engines of batterie, and by the sword, or by famine, or by pestilence, which is the sense used, Ezek. xxxvi. 9. With his axes he shall break down thy towers. The strongest, stoutest houses, and those that were best furnished, were levelled with the ground. The fifth verse comes in a parenthesis, giving a further instance of the present calamitous state of Jerusalem. They that came to fight with the Chaldeans, to beat them off from their city, and to make a stand, were the more to be feared. Their enemy to be more fierce and furious in their assaults, so that the houses in Jerusalem were filled with the dead bodies of men, who died of the wounds they received in sallying out upon the besiegers. God says, that they were such as he had slain in his anger, for the enemies' sword was his sword, and their anger his anger. But it seems, the men that were slain were generally such as had distinguished themselves by their wickedness, for they were the very men for whose wickedness God did now hide himself from this city; so that he was just in all he brought upon them.

4. What the blessings are which God has in store for Judah and Jerusalem, such as will redress all their grievances.

5. Is this state diseased? Is it wounded? God will provide effectually for the healing of it, though the disease was thought mortal and incurable, ch. viii. 22. "The whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint; but, (v. 6.) I will bring it health and cure, I will prevent the death, remove the sickness, and set all to rights again," ch. xxx. 17. Note, Be the case ever so desperate, if God undertake the cure, he will effect it. The sin of Jerusalem was the sickness of it; (Isa. i. 6.) its reformation therefore will be its recovery. And the following words tell us how that is wrought; "I will reveal unto them the abundance of peace and truth; I will give it them in due time, and give them an encouraging prospect of it in the mean time." Peace stands here for all good; peace and truth are peace according to the promise, and in pursuance of that; or, peace and truth are peace and the true religion; peace and the true worship of God, in opposition to the many idolatries and deceits by which they had been led away from God. We may apply it more generally, and observe, [1.] That peace and truth are the great subject-matter of divine revelation. These promises here lead us to the gospel of Christ, and in that He has revealed to us peace and truth, the method of true peace; truth to direct us, peace to make us easy. Grace and truth, and abundance of both, come by Jesus Christ. Peace and truth are the life of the soul and Christ came, that we might have that life, and might have it more abundantly.

Christ rules by the power of truth, (John xviii. 17.) and by it He gives abundance of peace, Ps. lxxiii. 7—lxxxv. 10. [2.] That the divine revelation of peace and truth brings health and cure to all those that by faith receive it: it heals the soul of the diseases it has contracted, as it is a means of sanctification, John xvii. 17. He sent his word, and healed them. And it puts the soul into good order, and keeps it in frame, and fit for the employments and enjoyments of the spiritual and divine life.

(2.) Are they scattered and enslaved, and is their nation laid in ruins? “I will cause their captivity to return,” (v. 7.) both that of Israel and that of Judah; (for though those who returned under Zerubbabel were but a small company, and they were Levites, yet afterward many of the other tribes returned;) “and I will rebuild them, as I built them at first.” When they be repentance do their first works. God will by their restoration do his first works.

(3.) Is sin the procuring cause of all their troubles? That shall be pardoned and subsisted, and so they shall not be polluted, v. 8. By sin they are become filthy, and odious to God’s holiness, but God will cleanse them, and purify them from their iniquity; as those that were ceremonially unclean, and were therefore shut out from the tabernacle, when they were sprinkled with the water of purification, had liberty of access to it again, so had they to their own land and the privileges of it, when God had cleansed them from their iniquities. In allusion to that sprinkling, David prays, Purge me with hyssop. [2.] By sin they are become guilty, and obnoxious to his justice; but he will pardon all their iniquities, will remove the punishment to which for sin they were bound over. All who by sanctifying grace are cleansed from the filth of sin, by pardoning mercy are freed from the guilt of it.

(4.) Have both their sins and their sufferings turned to the dishonour of God? Their reformation and restoration shall redound as much to his praise, v. 9. Jerusalem, thus rebuilt, Judah, thus repopulated, shall be to me a name of joy, as pleasing to God as ever they have been provoking, and a praise and an honour before all the nations. They, being thus again returned, shall glorify God by their services, and he shall glorify himself by their favours. This renewed nation shall be as much a reputation to religion as formerly it has been a reproach to it. The nation shall bear all of the good that God has wrought in them by his grace, and of all the good he has wrought for them by his providence. The wonders of their return out of Babylon shall make as great a noise in the world as ever they did, and the power and converse out of Egypt did. And they shall fear and tremble for all this goodness. [1.] The people of God themselves shall fear and tremble; they shall be much surprised at it, shall be afraid of offending so good a God, and of forfeiting his favour, Hos. iii. 5. They shall fear the Lord and his goodness. [2.] The adjoining nations shall fear because of the prosperity of Jerusalem; shall look upon the growing greatness of the Jewish nation as really formidable, and shall be afraid of making them their enemies. When the church is fair as the moon, and down as the sun, she is terrible as an army with banners.

10. Thus saith the Lord, Again there shall be heard in this place (which ye shall be desolate without man and without beast, even in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, that are desolate without man, and without inhabitant, and without beast,) 11. The voice of joy, and the voice of gladness; the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride; the voice of them that shall say, Praise the Lord of hosts: for the Lord is good; for his mercy endureth for ever; and of them that shall bring the sacrifice of praise into the house of the Lord. For I will cause to return the captivity of the land, as at the first, saith the Lord. 12. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Again in this place, which is desolate without man and without beast, and in all the cities thereof, shall be a habitation of shepherds causing their flocks to lie down. 13. In the cities of the mountains, in the cities of the vale, and in the cities of the south, and in the land of Benjamin, and in the places about Jerusalem, and in the cities of Judah, shall the flocks pass again under the hands of him that telleth them, saith the Lord. 14. Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Israel, and to the house of Judah. 15. In those days, and at that time, will I cause the Branch of righteousness to grow up unto David; and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land. 16. In those days shall Judah be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely: and this is the name wherewith she shall be called, The Lord our righteousness.

There shall be religious joy there; temple-songs shall be revived, the Lord's songs, which they could not sing in a strange land. There shall be heard, in their private houses, and in the cities of Judah, as well as in the temple, the voice of them that shall say, Praise the Lord of hosts. Note, Nothing is now to be seen or heard of those praises and public services which God had praised and honoured among them. This shall complete the mercy of their return and restoration, that with it they shall have hearts to be thankful for it, and give God the glory of it, the glory both of the power and of the goodness by which it is effectual; they shall praise him both as the Lord of hosts, and as the God who is good, and whose word shall tend to bring the people as Naas. This, though a song of old, yet, being sung upon this auspicious occasion, will be a new song. We find this literally fulfilled at their return out of Babylon, Ezra iii. 11. They sang together in praising the Lord, because he is good, for his mercy endures for ever. The public worship of God shall be diligently and commonly attended upon; They shall bring the sacrifice of praise to the house of the Lord. All the sacrifices were inward, and inwardly; but this outward sacrifice of the spirit, which meant the spiritual sacrifice of humble adorations and joyful thanksgivings, the calves of our lips, (Hos. xiv. 2.) which shall please the Lord better than an ox or a bullock. The Jews say, that in the days of the Messiah all sacrifices shall cease, but the sacrifices of praise, and to those days this promise has a further reference. (1.) The peace of the country, which had lain long depopulated, should be replenished and stocked again. It was now desolate, without man, and without beast; but, after their return, the pastures shall again be clothed with flocks, Ps. lxx. 15. In all the cities of Judah and Benjamin there shall be a habitation of shepherds, v. 12. 13. This speaks, (1.) The wealth of the country, after their return. It shall not be a habitation of beggars, that have nothing, but of shepherds and husbandmen, men of substance, with good stocks upon the ground they are returned to. (2.) The peace of the country. It shall not be a habitation of soldiers, nor shall there be tents and barracks set up to lodge them, but there shall be shepherd's tents; for they shall hear no more the alarms of war, nor shall there be any to make even the sheepfolds afraid. See Ps. cxix. 13. 14. (3.) The people shall carry on their original plainness and simplicity, from which, in the corrupt ages, they had sadly degenerated. The seed of Jacob, in their beginning, glorified in this, that they were shepherds, (Gen. xlvii. 3.) and so they shall now be again, giving themselves wholly to that innocent employment, causing their flocks to lie down, (v. 12.) and to pass under the hands of him that telleth them; (v. 13.) for though their flocks be numerous, they are not numberless, nor shall they omit to number them, that they may know if any be missing, and may seek after it. Note, It is the prudence of those who have ever so much of the world, to keep an account of what they have. Some think that they pass under the hand of him that telleth them, that they may be tidied, Lev. xxviii. 32. These two promises make the comforts of God, which we have, when God has had his due out of it. Now because it seemed incredible that a people, reduced as now they were, should ever recover such a degree of peace and plenty as this, here is subjoined a general ratification of these promises; (v. 14.) I will perform that good thing which I have promised. Though the promise is sometimes made in such a manner, as if it were like a leaff that would never be tasted, yet it works actually. The days will come, though they are long in coming.

3. To crown all these blessings which God has in store for them, here is a promise of the Messiah, and of that everlasting righteousness which he should bring in, (v. 15, 16.) and, probably, this is that good things, that great good things, which, in the latter days, days that were yet to come, God would perform, as he had promised to Judah and Israel, and which their return out of captivity, and their settlement again in their own land, respected. For the Branch of righteousness, not a Ussurifier, for he grows up unto David, descends from his loins, with whom the covenant of royalty was made, and is that Seed with whom that covenant should be established, so that his title is unexceptionable. (2.) As a righteous King, righteous in enacting laws, waging wars, and giving judgment; righteous in vindicating those that suffer wrong, and punishing them that do wrong; for he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land. This may point at Zerubbabel in the type, who governed with equity, not as Jehoiakim had done; (ch. xxii. 17.) but it has a further reference to him to whom all judgment is committed, and who shall judge the world in righteousness. (3.) As a King that shall protect his subjects from all injury. By him Judah shall be saved from their enemies, that they may be called being so called Jerusalem shall dwell safely, quiet from the fear of evil, and enjoying a holy security and serenity of mind, in a dependence upon the conduct of this Prince of peace, this Prince of their peace. (4.) As a King that shall be praised by his subjects; This is the name whereby they shall call him; (so the Chaldee reads it, the Syrian, and vulgar Latin) this name of his they shall celebrate in triumph, and in by this name they shall call upon him: It may be read, more agreeably to the original, This is he who shall call her, The Lord our Righteousness, as Moses's altar is called Jehovah-nissi, (Exod. xviii. 13.) and Jerusalem, Jehovah-shammah, (Ezek. xviii. 33.) intimating that they glory in Jehovah as present with them, and their Banner; so here the city is called, The Lord our Righteousness, because they glory in Jehovah as their Righteousness. This name, which was before said to be the name of Christ, (says Mr. Gataker,) is here made the name of Jerusalem, the city of the Messiah, the church of Christ. He is it that imparts righteousness to her, for he is made of God to us righteousness, and she, by bearing that name, professes to have her whole righteousness, not from herself, but from him. In the Lord have I righteousness and strength, (Isa. xlix. 24.) and we are made the righteousness of God in him. The inhabitants of Jerusalem shall have this name of the Messiah so much in their mouths, that they shall themselves be called by it.

17. For thus saith the Lord, David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel; 18. Neither shall the priests the Levites want a man before me, to offer burnt-offerings, and to kindle meat-offerings, and to do sacrifice continually. 19. And the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah, saying, 29. Thus saith the Lord, If you can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season; 21. Then may also my covenant be broken with David my servant, that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne; and with the Levites the priests, my ministers. 22. As the host of heaven cannot be numbered, neither the sand of the sea measured; so will I multiply the seed of David my servant, and the Levites that minister unto me. 23. Moreover, the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah, saying, 24. Considerest thou not what this people have spoken, saying, The two families which the Lord hath chosen, he hath even cast them off? Thus they have despised my people, that they should be no more a nation before them. 25. Thus saith the Lord, If my covenant be not with day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth; 26. Then will I cast away the seed of Jacob, and David my servant, so that I will not take any of his seed to be rulers over the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: for I will cause their captivity to return, and have mercy on them.

Three of God's covenants, that of royalty with David and his seed, that of the priesthood with Aaron on the Jews; and that of peculiar favor with Abraham and his seed, seemed to have been all broken and lost while the captivity lasted; but it is here promised, that notwithstanding that interruption and discontinuance for a time, they shall all three take place again, and the true intents and meaning of them all shall be abundantly answered in the New Testament blessings typified by those contained on the Jews after their return out of captivity.

I. The covenant of royalty shall be secured, and the promises of it shall have their full accomplishment, in the kingdom of Christ, the Son of David, v. 17. The throne of Israel was overturned in the captivity, the crown was fallen from their head, there was not a man to sit on the throne of Israel, Jeconiah was written childless. After their return, the order of things was to make a figure again, but there was the Messiah that this promise is performed, that David shall never want a man to sit on the throne of Israel; and that David shall have always a Son to reign upon his throne. For as long as the Man Christ Jesus sits on the right hand of the throne of God, rules the world, and rules it for the good of the church, to which he is a quickening Head, and glorified Head over all things, as long as he is King upon the holy hill of Zion, David does not want a successor, nor is the covenant with him broken. When the First-begetten was brought into the world, it was declared concerning him, that the Lord God shall give him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever, Luke i. 33.

As a confirmation of this, it is promised, (1.) That the covenant with David shall be as firm as the ordinances of heaven; to the stability of which that of God's promise is compared, ch. xxxi. 35. 36. There is a covenant of nature, by which the common course of providence is settled, and on which it is founded, here called, a covenant of the day and the night, (v. 20, 25.) because that is one of the articles of it, that there shall be day and night in their season, according to the distinction put between them in the creation, when God divided between the light and the darkness, and established their mutual succession, and a government to each, that the sun should rule by day, and the moon and stars by night, (Gen. i. 4, 5, 16.) which establishment was renewed after the flood, (Gen. viii. 22.) and has continued ever since, Ps. xix. 2. The morning and the evening have both of them their regular outgoings; (Ps. lxxv. 8.) the day-spring knows its place, knows its time, and keeps it, so in the shadow of the evening; and while the world stands, this course shall not be broken. That ordinariness shall not be broken. The ordinances of heaven and earth, (of this communication between heaven and earth, the dominion of these ordinances of heaven upon the earth,) which God has appointed, (v. 25. compare Job xxxvii. 33.) shall never be disappointed. Thus firm shall the covenant of redemption stand firm between the Redeemer and God's Servant, but David our King, v. 21. This intimates, that Christ shall have a church on earth to the world's end, he shall see a seed in which he shall prolong his days till time and days shall be no more. Christ's kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and when the end cometh, and not till then, it shall be delivered up to God, even the Father. But it intimates that the condition of it in this world shall be intermixed and counteracted, powerful and beneficial, as well as hindered and confounded one another, as light and darkness, day and night. But this is plainly taught us, that, as sure as we may be, that though the sun will set to-night, it will rise again to-morrow morning, whether we live to see it or no, so sure we may be, that though the kingdom of the Redeemer in the world may for a time be clouded and eclipsed by corruptions and persecutions, and confusion will shine with it again, and receive its lustre, in the time appointed. (2.) That the seed of David shall be as numerous as the host of heaven, the spiritual seed of the Messiah, that shall be born to him by the efficacy of his gospel, and his Spirit working with it; from the womb of the morning he shall have the dew of their youth, to be his willing sacrifices, Ps. cx. 3. Christ's seed are not, as David's were, his successors, but his subjects; yet the day is coming when they also shall reign with him, (v. 22.) As the host of heaven cannot be numbered, so will I multiply the seed of David, so that there shall be no danger of the kingdom's being extinct, or extinct up for want of heirs. The children are numerous; and if children, then heirs.

2. The covenant of priesthood shall be secured, and the promises of it shall have their full accomplishment. This seemed likewise to be forgotten during the captivity, when there was no altar, no temple-service, for the priests to attend upon; but this also shall revive. It did so; immediately upon their coming back to Jerusalem, there were priests and Levites ready to offer burnt-offerings, and to do sacrifice continually, (Ezra ii. 2, 3.) as he here promises, v. 18. But the priesthood soon grew corrupt, the covenant of Levi was fenced, (as appears Mal. ii. 8.) and in the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans it came to a final period. We must therefore look elsewhere for the performance of this work, that the covenant with the Levites, the priests, God's ministers, shall be as firm, and last as long, as the covenant with the land and the promise of it were long accomplished, Heb. viii. 2. He is a Priest for ever. The covenant of the priesthood is called a covenant of peace, (Numb. xxv. 12.) of life and peace, Mal. iii. 5. Now we are sure that this covenant is not broken, or in the least weakened, while Jesus Christ is himself our Life and our Peace. This covenant of priesthood is here again and again joined with that of royalty, for Christ is a Priest upon his throne, as Melchizedek. (2.) In a settled gospel-ministry. While there are faithful ministers to preside in religious assemblies: all the sixth, and the seventh, eighth, of prayer and praise, the priests, the Levites do not want successors, and such as have obtained a more excellent ministry. The apostle makes those that preach the gospel, to come in the room of those that served at the altar, 1 Cor. ix. 13, 14. (3.) In all true believers, who are a holy priesthood, a royal priesthood, (1 Pet. ii. 5, 9,) who are made to God an offering, of spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God, and themselves, in the first place, living sacrifices. Of these Levites, this promise here must be understood, (v. 22.) that they shall be as numerous as the sand of the sea, the same that is promised concerning Israel in general; (Gen. xxviii. 17.) for all God's spiritual Israel are spiritual priests, Rev. v. 9, 10—vii. 9.

3. The covenant of peculiarity likewise shall be secured, and the promises of that covenant shall have their full accomplishment in the gospel-Israel. Observe, (1.) How this covenant was looked upon as broken during the captivity, v. 24. God asks the prophet, "Hast thou not heard, and dost thou not consider, what this people have spoken?" Either the enemies of Israel, who triumphed in the extinction of a people, and had made a noise in the world, or the unbelieving Israelites themselves, this people, among whom thou dwellest, they have broken covenant with God, and then quarrel with him, as if he had not dealt faithfully with them. The two families which the Lord hath chosen, Israel and Judah, whereas they were but one when he chose them, he hath even cast them off: "This hath the Lord done to me, and to thee, and to Israel, in this manner, to make thee a reproach among all the nations, as thou art despised of them, see Jer. xi. 18.

3. This prophecy concerning Zedekiah was delivered to Jeremiah, and by him to the parties concerned, before he was shut up in the prison. For we find this prediction here made the ground of his commitment, as appears by the recital of some passages out of it, ch. xxxiv. 4.

Observe, 1. The time when this message was sent to Zedekiah; it was when the king of Babylon, with all his forces, some out of all the kingdoms of the earth that were within his jurisdiction, fought against Jerusalem, and the cities thereof, (v. 1.) desiring to destroy them, having often plundered them. The cities that now remain, and yet hold out, are named, (v. 7.) Lachish and Azekah. This intimates that things were now brought to the last extremity, and yet Zedekiah obstinately stood it out, his heart being hardened to his destruction.

2. The message itself that was sent him.

(1.) Here is a threatening message, to show him that if he had been often told before, that the city shall be taken by the Chaldeans, and burnt with fire, (v. 2.) that he shall himself fall into the enemy's hands, shall be made a prisoner, shall be brought before that furious prince Nebuchadnezzar, and be carried away captive into Babylon; (v. 3.) yet Ezekiel prophesied that he should not see Babylon; nor did he, for his eyes were put out, Ezek. xii. 13. This Zedekiah brought upon himself from God, and from Nebuchadnezzar by his breaking of his faith with him.
(2.) Here is a mixture of mercy. He shall die a captive, but he shall not die by the sword, he shall die a natural death; (v. 4.) he shall end his days with some comfort, shall die in peace, v. 5. He never had been one of the worst of the kings, but we are willing to hope that what evil he had done in the sight of the Lord, he repented of it in his captivity, as Manasseh had done, and it was forgiven to him; and, God being reconciled to him, he might truly be said to die in peace. Note, A man may die in the Lord, and yet die in peace; and perhaps his days with some reputation, more than one would expect, all things considered. He shall be buried with the burnings of his fathers, with the respect usually shown to their kings, especially those that had done good in Israel. It seems, in his captivity he had conducted himself so well toward his own people, that they were willing to do him this honour; and toward Nebuchadnezzar, that he suffered it to be done. If Zedekiah had continued in his prosperity, perhaps he would have grown worse, and would have departed at last without being desired; but his afflictions wrought such a change in him, that his death was looked upon as a great loss. It is better to live and die penitent in a prison, than live and die impenetrant in a palace. They will lament them, the kings, and the princes, and the priests, and the prophets, and the profane men, v. 6. The other Jehoiakim had not, ch. xxii. 18. The Jews say that they lamented thus over him, Alas! Zedekiah is dead, who drank the dregs of all the ages that went before him, who suffered for the sins of his ancestors, the measure of iniquity being filled up in his days. They shall thus lament him, saith the Lord, for I have pronounced the word; and what God hath spoken shall without fail be made good.

3. Jeremiah's faithfulness in delivering this message; though he knew it would be ungrateful to the king, and might prove, as indeed it did, dangerous to himself, (for he was clapped up for it,) yet he spake all these words to Zedekiah, v. 6. It is a mercy to great men to have those about them that will deal faithfully with them, and tell them the evil consequences of their evil courses, that they may reform, and live.

8. This is the word that came unto Jeremiah from the Lord, after that the king Zedekiah had made a covenant with all the people which were at Jerusalem, to proclaim liberty unto them; 2. That every man should let his man-servant, and every man his maid-servant, being a Hebrew or a Hebrewess, go free; that none should serve himself of them, to wit, of a Jew his brother. 10. Now, when all the princes, and all the people which had entered into the covenant, heard that every one should let his man-servant, and every one his maid-servant, go free, that none should serve themselves of them any more; then they obeyed, and let them go. 11. But afterwards they turned, and caused the servants, and the handmaids, whom they had let go free, to return, and brought them into subjection for servants and for handmaids. 12. Therefore the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying, 13. Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, I made a covenant with your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondmen, saying, 14. At the end of seven years, let ye go every man his brother a Hebrew, which hath been sold unto thee; and, when he hath served thee six years, thou shalt let him go free from thee: but your fathers hearkened not unto me, neither inclined their ear. 15. And ye were now turned, and had done right in my sight, in proclaiming liberty every man to his neighbour; and ye had made a covenant before me in the house which is called by my name: 16. But ye turned, and polluted my name, and caused every man his servant, and every man his handmaid, whom ye had set at liberty at their pleasure, to return, and brought them into subjection, to be unto you for servants and for handmaids. 17. Therefore thus saith the Lord, Ye have not hearkened unto me, in proclaiming liberty every one to his brother, and every man to his neighbour; behold, I proclaim a liberty for you, saith the Lord, to the sword, to the pestilence, and to the famine; and I will make you to be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth. 18. And I will give the men that have transgressed my covenant, which have not performed the words of the covenant which they had made before me, when they cut the calf in twain, and passed between the parts thereof, 19. The princes of Judah, and the princes of Jerusalem, the eunuchs, and the priests, and all the people of the land, which passed between the parts of the calf; 20. I will even give them into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of them that seek their life; and their dead bodies shall be for meat unto the fowls of the heaven, and to the beasts of the earth. 21. And Zedekiah king of Judah, and his princes, will I give into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of them that seek their life, and into the hand of the king of Babylon's army, which are gone up from you. 22. Behold, I will command, saith the Lord, and cause them to return to this city; and they shall fight against it, and take it, and burn it with fire: and I will make the cities of Judah a desolation without an inhabitant.

We have here another prophecy upon a particular occasion, the history of which we must take notice of, as necessary to give light to the prophecy.

1. When Jerusalem was closely besieged by the Chaldean army, the princes and people agreed upon a reformation in one instance, and that was concerning their servants.

1. The law of God was very express, that those of their own nation should not be held in servitude above seven years, but after they had served one apprenticeship, they should be discharged, and have their liberty; yet, though they had sold themselves into servitude for the payment of their debts, or though they were sold by the judges for the punishment of their crimes. This difference was put between their brethren and strangers, that those of other nations, taken in war, or bought with money, might be held in perpetual slavery, they and theirs; but servants were to be restored to their brethren. It was a covenant, two, the longest. This God calls the covenant that he had made with them, when he brought them out of the land of Egypt, v. 13, 14. This was the first of the judicial laws which God gave them, (Exod. xxi. 2.) and there was good reason for that law.

1. God had put honour upon that nation, and he would have them thus to preserve the honour of it themselves, and to partake of it with other nations. (2.) God had brought them out of slavery in Egypt, and he would have them thus to express their grateful sense of that favour, by letting those go, to whom their houses were houses of bondage, as Egypt had been to their forefathers. That deliverance is therefore mentioned here, (v. 13.) as the ground of that law. Note, God's compassion towards such as should engage themselves and their families towards our benefactors, even to the release we are released, forgive as we are forgiven, and relieve as we are relieved. And this is called a covenant: for our performance of the duty required is the condition of the continuance of the favours God has bestowed.

2. This law they and their fathers had broken; their worldly profit swayed more with them than God's command or covenant. When these servants had lived seven years with them, they understood their business, and how to apply themselves to it, better than they did when they first came to them, and therefore they would then by no means part with them, though God himself by his law had made them free; Your fathers hearkened not to me in this matter, (v. 14.) so that from the days of their fathers they had been in this trespass; and they thought they might do it, because their fathers did it, and their servants had by discourse lost the benefit of the provision God made for them; whereas against an express law, especially against an express law of God, no custom, usage, or prescription, is to be admitted in plea. For this sin of theirs, and their fathers, God now brought them into servitude, and judged them accordingly.

3. When they were besieged, and closely shut in, by the army of the Chaldeans, they, being told of their fault in this matter, immediately reformed, and let go all their servants that were entitled to their freedom by the law of God; as Pharaoh, who, when the plague was upon him, consented to let the people go, and bound themselves in a covenant to do so. (1.) The prophets faithfully admonished them to do this, and to partake of the good news. So that they should let their Hebrew servants go free, v. 10. They might have read it themselves in the book of the law, but did not, or did not heed it, therefore the prophets told them what the law was. See what need there is of the preaching of the word; people must hear the word preached, because they will not make the use they ought to make of the word, unless they hear it. It is a good work, and a most necessary work, that all men should be brought to the knowledge of the truth. It was a contempt of the command he had given them, as if that were of no force at all, but they might either keep it, or break it, as they thought fit. It was a contempt of the covenant they had made with him, and of that wrath which they had incurred by it. As soon as ever they let their servants go free, God let them go free. When they began to think themselves safe from the besiegers, they made their servants come back into subjection to them, (v. 11.) and again, v. 16. This was a great abuse to their servants, to whom servitude would be more irksome, after they had had some taste of the pleasures of liberty. It was a great shame to themselves, that they should keep it in a good cause. And it was an especial affront to God; in doing this, they polluted his name, v. 16. It was a contempt of the command he had given them, as if that were of no force at all, but they might either keep it, or break it, as they thought fit. It was a contempt of the covenant they had made with him, and of that wrath which they had incurred by it. As soon as ever they let their servants go free, God let them go free. When they began to think themselves safe from the besiegers, they made their servants come back into subjection to them, (v. 11.) and again, v. 16.
pries are so far from being pardons, that if they be abused thus, and sinners take encouragement from them to return to sin, they are but preparatives for heavier strokes of divine vengeance.

III. For this treacherous dealing with God, they are here severely threatened; Be not deceived, God is not mocked. Those that think to put a cheat upon God by a dissembled repentance, a fallacious covenant, and a partial temporary religion, let them prove in the end that they have put the greatest cheat upon their own souls; for the Lord, whose name is Jealous, is a jealous God. It is here threatened with an observable air of displeasure against them, 1. That since they had not given liberty to their servants to go where they pleased, God would give all his judgments liberty to take their course against them without control; (v. 17.) You have not proclaimed liberty to your servants. Though they had done it, (v. 16.) yet they might truly be said not to have done it, because they did not stand to it, but undo it again; and Pactum non dietur quod non perseverat.—That is not said to be done, which does not last. The righteousness that is forsaken and turned away from, shall be forgotten, and not mentioned, any more than theotten; Prov. 10:9. Therefore I will proclaim a liberty for you; I will discharge you from my service, and put you out of my protection, which those forfeit that withdraw from their allegiance. You shall have liberty to choose which of these judgments you will be cut off by, sword, famine, or pestilence; such a liberty as was offered to David, which put him into a great servitude, and, being strong, could not expect the privileges of free-born subjects. 3. That, since they had broken the covenant which they ratified by a solemn imprecation, God would bring on them the evil which they imprecated upon themselves, in case they should break it. Out of their own mouth will he judge them, and so shall their doom be; the penalty of their bond shall be recovered by perfect execution; for so some read v. 18. I will make the men which have transgressed my covenant, as the calf which they cut in pieces; I will divide them in sunder as they divided it in sunder. 4. That, since they would not let go their servants out of their hands, God would deliver them into the hands of these that hated them. Even the princes and nobles, both of Judah and Jerusalem, of the court, the priests, and all the people, they had all dealt treacherously with God, and therefore shall all be involved in the common ruin, without exception; (v. 19.) they shall all be given into the hand of their enemies, that seek, not their wealth only, or their service, but their life. And they shall judge and destroy all of the country and that contain them: when they have their lives, they shall leave their dead bodies unburied, a loathsome spectacle to all mankind, and an easy prey to the fowls and beasts, a lasting mark of ignominy being here fastened on them. 5. That, since they had emboldened themselves in returning to their sin, contrary to their covenant, by the retreat of the Chaldean army from them, God would act upon them, and bring it upon them again; They are now gone up from you, and your fright is ever for the present, but I will command them to face about as they were; they shall return to this city, and take it and burn it.”

Note, (1.) As confidence in God is a hopeful presage of approaching deliverance, so security in sin is a sadomen of approaching destruction. (2.) When judgments are removed from a people before they have done their work, leave them, but leave them unshamed and unreformed, (it is cum animo reverserint—with a design to return,) they do but retreat to come on again with so much the greater force. So when, and if, judges, he will over come. (3.) It is just with God to disappoint the expectations of mercy which his providence had given cause for, when we disappoint those expectations of duty which our præfessions, pretensions, and fair promises, had given cause for. If we repent of the good we had purposed, God will repent of the good he had purposed. With the forward thou wilt show thyself forward.

CHAP. XXXV.

A variety of methods is tried, and every stone turned, to awaken the Jews to a sense of their sin, and to bring them to repentance and reformation. The scope and tendency of many of the prophet’s sermons was to frighten them out of their disobedience, by setting before them what would be the end thereof, if they persisted in it. The scope of this sermon, in this chapter, is to shame them out of their disobedience, if they had any sense of honour left them, for a discourse of the nature to be gotten upon. 1. He sets before them the obedience of the family of the Rechabites to the commands which were left them by Jonadab their ancestor, and how they persevered in it; and it is evident, that this would greatly have been to their advantage, v. 1-11. With this he aggravates the disobedience of the Jews to God, and their contempt of his precepts, v. 12, 15. 3. He foretells the judgments of God upon the Jews for their impossi disobedience, v. 16, 17. 4. He assures the Rechabites of the blessing of God upon them for their pious obedience to their father, v. 18, 19.

1. THE word which came unto Jeremiah from the Lord, in the days of Je-hoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, saying, 2. Go unto the house of the Rechabites, and speak unto them, and bring them into the house of the Lord, into one of the chambers, and give them wine to drink. 3. Then I took Jaazaniah the son of Jeremiah, the son of Habazimuth, and his brethren, and all his sons, and the whole house of the Rechabites; and I brought them into the house of the Lord, into the chamber of the sons of Hanan, the son of Igdalath, a man of God, which was by the chamber of the princes, which was above the chamber of Maaseiah, the son of Shallum, the keeper of the door: 5. And I set before the sons of the house of the Rechabites pots full of wine, and cups; and I said unto them, Drink ye wine. 6. But they said, We will drink no wine: for Jonadab the son of Rechab, our father, commanded us, saying, Ye shall drink no wine, neither ye nor your sons for ever: 7. Neither shall ye build house, nor sow seed, nor plant vineyard, nor have any; but all your days ye shall dwell in tents; that ye may live many days in the land where ye be strangers, 8. Thus have we obeyed the voice of Jonadab the son of Rechab, our father, in all that he hath charged us, to drink no wine all our days, we, our wives, our sons, nor our daughters; 9. Nor to build houses for us to dwell in; neither have we vineyard, nor field, nor seed: 10. But we have dwelt in tents, and have obeyed, and done according to all that Jonadab our father commanded us. 11. But it came to pass, when Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up into the land, that we said, Come, and let us go to Jerusalem for fear of the army of the Chaldeans, and for fear of the army of the Syrians: so we dwell at Jerusalem.

This chapter is of an earlier date than many of those before; for what is contained in it, was said and done in the days of Jehoiakim (v. 1) but then it must be in the latter part of his reign, for it was after the king of Babylon with his army came up into the land, (v. 11.) which seems to refer to the invasion mentioned 2 Kings xxiv. 2. which was upon occasion of Jehoiakim's rebellious against Nebuchadnezzar. After the Chaldeans had prevailed upon this rebellious people, he continued to deal with them by his prophets, to turn them from sin, that his wrath might turn away from them. He endeavours it by the example of the Rechabites, a family that kept distinct by themselves, and were no more numbered with the families of Israel than with the nations. They were originally Kenites, as appears 1 Chron. ii. 35. These are the sons of Hemath, the father of the house of Rechab. The Kenites, at least those of them that gained a settlement in the land of Israel, were of the posterity of Hobab, Moses's father-in-law, Judg. i. 16. We find them separated from the Amalekites, 1 Sam. xv. 6. See Judg. iv. 17. One family of these Kenites had their denomination from Rechab; his son, or a lined descendant from him, was Jonadab, a man famous in his time for wisdom and piety. He flourish'd in the days of Jehu, king of Israel, near 300 years before this; for there we find him courted by that rising prince, when he affected to appear zealous for God, (2 Kings x. 15, 16.) which he thought nothing more likely to confirm people in the opinion of, them to have so good a man as Jonadab ride in the chariot with him. Now we are told, that he brought the rules of living hardy, which Jonadab, probably by his last will and testament, in writing, and duly executed, charged his children, and his posterity after him, throughout all generations, religiously to observe; and we have reason to think that they were such as he himself had all his days observed. 1. He forbade them to drink wine, according to the law of the Nazarites. Wine is indeed given to make glad the heart of man, and we are allowed the sober and moderate use of it; but we are so apt to abuse it, and get hurt by it, and a good man, who has his heart made continually glad with the light of God's countenance, has so little need of it for that purpose, (Ps. iv. 6, 7.) that it is a commendable piece of self-denial, either not to use it at all, or very sparingly and medially, as Timothy used it, 1 Tim. v. 23. He appointed them to dwell in tents, and not to take root, or rent, or occupy either, v. 7. This was an instance of strictness and mortification beyond what the Nazarites were obliged to. Tents were mean dwellings, so that this would teach them to be humble; they were cold dwellings, so that this would teach them to be hardy, and not to indulge the body; they were movable dwellings, so that this would teach them not to think of settling or taking root any where in this world. They must dwell in tents all their days, not for a few days, as Israel at the feast of tabernacles, not only in summer days, as soldiers and shepherds, but all their days. They must from the beginning thus accustom themselves to endure hardness, and then it would be no difficulty to them, no, not under the decays of old age.

Now why did Jonadab prescribe these rules of living to his posterity? It was not merely to show his integrity, or his wisdom, but more, by imposing upon them what he thought fit; but it was to show his wisdom, and the real concern he had for their welfare, by recommending to them what he knew would be beneficial to them; yet, not trying them by any oath or vow, or under any penalty, to observe these rules, but only advising them to conform to this discipline, as far as they found it for education, yea, and a true and necessary, as here, v. 11. He prescribed these rules to them, (1.) That they might preserve the ancient character of their family, which, however looked upon by some with contempt, he thought its real reputation. His ancestors had addicted themselves to a pastoral life, (Exod. ii. 16.) and he would have his posterity kept to it, and not degenerated from it, as Israel had done, who, might have learnt a great deal from the posterity of Hobab, Gen. xxxiv. 34. Note, We ought not to be ashamed of the honest employments of our ancestors, though they were but mean. (2.) That they might comply with their lot, and bring their mind to their condition, Moses had put them in hopes that they should be naturalized; (Num. x. 32.) but, it seems, they were not, they were still strangers in the land, (v. 7.) had no inheritance in it, and therefore had to live here, according to what was a good reason why they should accustom themselves to hard fare and hard lodging: for strangers, such as they were, must not expect to live as the landed men, so plentifully and delicately. Note, It is our wisdom and duty to accommodate ourselves to our place and rank, and not aim to live above it. What has been the lot of our fathers, why may we not be content that it should be our lot, and live according to it? Mind not high things. (3.) That they might not be envied and disturbed by their neighbours among whom they lived. If they that were strangers should live great, raise estates, and fare sumptuously, the natives would grudge them their abundance, and have a jealous eye upon them, as the Philistines had upon Isaac, (Gen. xxxvi. 14.) and would seek occasions to quarrel with them and abuse them. Jonadab thought it would be the prudence to keep low, for that would be the way to continue long; to live meanly, that they might live many days in the land where they were strangers. Note, Humility and contentment in obscurity are often the best policy, and men's surest protection. (4.) That they might be armed against temptations to luxury and sensuality, the prevailing sin of the age and place they lived in. Jonadab saw a general corruption of manners; the drunkards of Ephraim abounded, and he was afraid lest his children should be debauched and ruined by them; and therefore he obliged them to live by themselves, retired in the country; and that, they might not run into any unlawful pleasures, to deny themselves the use even of lawful delights. They must be sober, and not to erect a distinction over them, that would contribute to the health both of mind and body, and to their living many days and easy ones, and such as they might reflect upon with comfort in the land where they were strangers. Note, The consideration of this, that we are strangers and pilgrims, should oblige us to abstain from all fleshly lusts, to live above the things of sense, and look upon them with a generous regard; and yet, lest they might be prepared for times of trouble and calamity, Jonadab might, without a spirit of prophecy, foresee the destruction of a people so wretchedly de
Jeremiah, XXXV.

12. Then came the word of the Lord unto Jeremiah, saying, 13. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Go and tell the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, Will ye not receive instruction to hearken to my words? saith the Lord. 14. The words of Jonadab the son of Rechab, that he commanded his sons not to drink wine, are performed; for unto this day they drink none, but obey their father's commandment: notwithstanding I have spoken unto you, rising early and speaking; but ye hearkened not unto me. 15. I have sent also unto you all my servants the prophets, rising up early and sending them, saying, Return ye now every man from his evil way, and amend your doings, and go not after other gods to serve them, and ye shall dwell in the land which I have given to you and to your fathers; but ye have not inclined your ear, nor hearkened unto me. 16. Because the sons of Jonadab the son of Rechab have performed the commandment of their father, which he commanded them; but this people hath not hearkened unto me: 17. Therefore thus saith the Lord God of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I will bring upon Judah, and upon all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, all the evil that I have pronounced against them: because I have spoken unto them, but they have not heard; and I have called unto them, but they have not answered. 18. And Jeremiah said unto the house of the Rechabites, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Because ye have obeyed the commandment of Jonadab your father, and kept all his precepts, and done according unto all that he hath commanded you; 19. Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Jonadab the son of Rechab shall not want a man to stand before me for ever.

The trial of the Rechabites' constancy was intended but for a sign; now here we have the application of it.

1. The Rechabites' observance of their father's charge to them is made use of as an aggravation of the disobedience of the Jews to God. Let them see it, and be ashamed. The prophet asks them, in God's name, "Will ye not at length receive instruction?" v. 13. Will nothing affect you? Will nothing fasten upon you? Will nothing prevail to discover sin and duty to you? You see how obedient the Rechabites are to their father's commandment; (v. 14.) but you have not inclined your ear unto me. (v. 15.) though one might much more reasonably expect that the people of God should have obeyed him, than that the sons of Jonadab should have obeyed him; and the aggravation is very high, for,

(1.) The Rechabites were obedient to one who was but a man like themselves, who had but the wisdom and power of a man, and was only the father of their flesh; but they were disobedient to an infinite and eternal God, who had an absolute authority over them, as the Father of their spirits.

(2.) Jonadab was long since dead, and was ignorant of them, and could neither take cognizance of their disobedience to his orders, nor give correction for it; but God lives for ever, to see how his laws are observed, and is in readiness to revenge all disobedience. (3.) The Rechabites were never put in mind of their obligations to their father; but God often sent his prophets to his people, to put them in mind of their duty to him, and yet they would not do it. This is insisted on here as a great aggravation of their disobedience; "I have myself spoken to you, rising early, and speaking, by the written word and the dictates and admonitions of conscience; (v. 14.) say, I have sent unto you all my servants the prophets, men like yourselves, whose terrors shall not make you afraid, rising up early and sending them, (v. 15.) and yet all in vain." (4.) Jonadab never did that for his seed, that God had done for his people; he left them a charge, but left them no estate to bear the charge; but God had given his people a good land, and promised them, that, if they would be obedient, they should still dwell therein, and be bountifully provided for; but their attitude and interest to be obedient, and yet they would not hear, they would not hearken. (5.) God did not tie up his people to so much hardship, and to such instances of mortification, as Jonadab obliged his seed to; and yet Jonadab's orders were obeyed, and God's were not.

2. Judgments are threatened, as often before, against Judah and Jerusalem, for their disobedience and murmuring against them, and shall condemn them, for they very punctually performed the commandment of their father, and continued and persevered in their obedience to it; (v. 16.) but this people, this rebellious and gain-saying people, have not hearkened unto me; and therefore, (v. 17.) because they have not obeyed the precepts of the word, God will send his providence, which will bring upon them, by the Chaldean army, all the evil pronounced against them, both in the law and in the prophets, for I have spoken to them, I have called to them; spoken in a still small voice to them that were near, and called aloud to them that were at a distance; tried all ways and means to convince and reduce them; spoken by my word, called by my providence, both for the same purpose, and yet all to no purpose; they have not heard, nor answered.

3. Mercy is here promised to the family of the Rechabites, for their steady and unanimous adherence to the laws of their house; though it was only for the shaming of Israel that their constancy was tried; yet, being unshaken, it was found unto praise, and honour, and glory. And God takes occasion from it to tell them that he had favours in reserve for them, (v. 18, 19.) and that they should have the comfort of him. It is promised, (1.) That the family should continue as long as any of the families of Israel, among whom they were strangers and sojourners. It shall never want a man to inherit what they had, though they had no inheritance to leave them. Note, Sometimes those that have the smallest estates have the most narratives to record to good, but he that seeks mountains, will be sure to send down them. (2.) That religion shall continue in the family: "He shall not want a man to stand before me, to serve me." Though they are neither priests nor Levites, not appear to have had any post in the temple-service, yet, in a constant course of regular devotion, they stand before God, to minister to him. Note, (1.) The greatest blessing that can be entailed upon a family, is, to have the worship of God kept up in it from generation to generation. (2.) Temperance, self-denial, and mortification to the world, do very much befriend the exercises of piety, and help to transmit the observance of them to posterity. The more dead we are to the delights of sense, the better we are disposed for the service of God; but nothing is more fatal to the entail of religion in a family than pride and luxury.

CHAP. XXXVI.

Here is another expedient tried to work upon this heedless and uncowardly people, but it is tried in vain. A roll of a book is opened, and a command is given to write all the sermons that Jeremiah had preached to them, that they might be put in mind of what they had heard, and might the better understand it, when they read it all before them at one view. Now here we have,

1. The writing of this roll by Baruch, as Jeremiah dictated it, v. 1. and 4. II. The reading of the roll by Baruch to all the people publicly on a fast-day, (v. 5. to 10.) afterward by Baruch to the priests privately, (v. 11. to 13.) and lastly by Jeremiah to the king, v. 20. and 21. III. The burning of the roll by the king, with orders to persecute Jeremiah and Baruch, v. 22. to 28. IV. The writing of another roll, with large additions, particularly of Jehovah's doom for burning the former, v. 27. to 32.

A. And it came to pass, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, that this word came unto Jeremiah from the Lord, saying, 2. Take thee a roll of a book, and write therein all the words that I have spoken unto thee, against Israel, and against Judah, and against all the nations, from the day I spake unto thee, from the days of Josiah, even unto this day. 3. It may be that the house of Judah will hear all the evil which I purpose to do unto them; that they may return every man from his evil way, that I may forgive their iniquity and their sin. 4. Then Jeremiah called Baruch the son of Neriah: and Baruch wrote from the mouth of Jeremiah all the words of the Lord, which he had spoken unto him, upon a roll of a book. 5. And Jeremiah commanded Baruch, saying, I am shut up; I cannot go into the house of the Lord: 6. Therefore go thou, and read in the roll, which thou hast written from my mouth, the words of the Lord, in the ears of the people, in the Lord's house upon the fasting-day: and also thou shalt read them in the ears of all Judah that come out of their cities. 7. It may be they will present their supplication before the Lord, and will return every one from his evil way: for great is the anger and the fury that the Lord hath pronounced against this people. 8. And Baruch the son of Neriah did according to all that Jeremiah the prophet commanded him, reading in the book the words of the Lord in the Lord's house.

In the beginning of Ezekiel's prophecy we meet with a roll written in vision, for the discovery of the things therein contained to the prophet himself, who was to receive and digest them, Ezek. ii. 10.—
1. Here in the latter end of Jeremiah's prophecy, we meet with a roll, written in fact, for the discovery of the things contained therein to the people, who were to hear and give heed to them; for the written word and other good books are of great use both to ministers and people. We have here,

1. The command which God gave to Jeremiah to write a summary of his sermons, of all the reproofs and all the warnings he had given in God's name to the people. Jeremiah was an inspired preacher, a preacher, in the 12th year of Josiah, to this day, which was in the 4th year of Jehoiakim, v. 2, 3. What had been spoken only, must now be written, that it might be reviewed, and that it might spread the further, and last the longer. What had been spoken at large, with frequent repetitions of the same things, perhaps in the same words, which has its advantage one way, must now be contracted, and put into less compass, that the several parts of it might be better compared together, which has its advantage another way. What they had heard once, must be recapitulated, and rehearsed to them again, that what was forgotten, might be called to mind again, and what made no impression upon them at the first hearing, might take hold of them when they were written. What had been not a collection perhaps already written, and published in single sermons, must be collected into one volume, that none might be lost. Note, The writing of the scripture is by divine appointment. And observe the reason here given for the writing of this roll; (v. 3.) It may be, the house of Judah will hear. Not that the divine presence was at any uncertainty concerning them, used, in the hopes that they would hear, that is, heed and regard what they heard, take notice of it, and mix faith with it: for otherwise our hearing of the word, though an angel from heaven were to read or preach it to us, would stand us in no stead. Now observe here, (1.) What is, it is hoped, they will thus hear: All that evil which I purpose to do unto them. Note, The serious consideration of the crimes of this people, recorded in the books which we have use to bring us to God. (2.) What is, it is hoped, will be produced thereby; They will hear, that they may return every man from his evil way. Note, The conversion of sinners from their evil courses, is that which ministers should aim at in preaching; and people hear the word in vain, if that point be not gained with them. To what purpose do we hear of the evil of sin, which we are put upon for sin, if we continue, notwithstanding, to do evil against him? (3.) Of what vast advantage their consideration and conversion will be to them; that I may forgive their iniquity. This plainly implies the honour of God's justice, with which it is not consistent that he should forgive the sin, unless the sinner repent of it, and turn from it; but it plainly oncises do we hear of the evil of sin, which we are put upon for sin, and only waits till the sinner be qualified to receive forgiveness, and therefore uses various means to bring us to repentance, that he may forgive.

2. The instructions which Jeremiah gave to Baruch his scribe, pursuant to the command he had received from God, and the writing of the roll accordingly, v. 4. Jeremiah wrote not, as he should seem, he had not the pen of a ready writer; he could not write fast, or fair, so as Baruch could, and therefore he made use of him as his amanuens. St. Paul wrote but few of his epistles with his own hand, Gal. vi. 11. Rom. xvi. 22. God dispenses his gifts variously; some have a good faculty of speaking, others at writing, and neither can say to the other, We have no need of you, 1 Cor. xii. 21. The Spirit of God dictated to Jeremiah, and he to Baruch, who had been employed by Jeremiah as trustee for him in his purchase of the field, (ch. xxxii. 12.) and now was advanced to be his scribe. He was an inspired minister, whom God may credit the Apocryphal book that bears his name, he was afterward himself a prophet to the captives in Babylon. Those that begin low are likely to rise high, and it is good for those that are designed for prophets to have their education under prophets, and to be serviceable to them. Baruch wrote what Jeremiah dictated in a roll of a book, on pieces of parchmen, or vellum, which were joined together, the top of one to the bottom of the other, so making one long scroll, which was rolled perhaps upon a staff.

3. The orders which Jeremiah gave to Baruch, to read what he had written to the people. Jeremiah, it seems, was shut up, and could not go to the house of the Lord himself; (v. 5.) though he might have been, for there was no occasion to send officers to seize him, (v. 26.) yet he was forbidden by the king to appear in the temple, was shut out thence, where he might be serving God, and doing good, which was as bad to him as if he had been shut up in a dungeon. Jehoiakim was ripening apace for ruin, when he thus silenced God's faithful messengers. But when Jeremiah could not go to the temple himself, he sent another, who was deputed by him, to read to the people what he would himself have said. Thus St. Paul wrote epistles to the churches which he could not visit in person. Nay, it was what he himself had often said to them. Note, The writing and repeating of the sermons that have been preached, may contribute very much toward the answering of the great ends of preaching. What we have heard and known, it is good for us to hear again, that we may know it better. To preach and write the same thing is safe and profitable, and many times very necessary, (Phil. iii. 1.) and we must be glad to hear a good word from God, though we have it, as here, at second-hand. Both ministers and people must do what they can, when they cannot do what they would. Observe, 1. The writing of the roll; Baruch, in the reading of the roll, he said, It may be, they will hear, and return from their evil ways. When Jeremiah orders it, he says, It may be, they will pray, (they will present their supplications before the Lord,) and will return from their evil ways. Note, Prayer to God for grace to turn us, is necessary in order to our turning; and those that are convinced by the word of God of the necessity of returning to him, will present their supplications to him for that grace. And the consideration of this, that great is the anger which God has pronounced against us for sin, should quicken both our prayers and our endeavours. Now according to these orders, Baruch did read out of the book the words of the Lord, whenever there was a holy convocation, v. 8.

9. And it came to pass, in the fifth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, in the ninth month, that they proclaimed a fast before the Lord to all the people in Jerusalem, and to all the people that came from the cities of Judah unto Jerusalem. 10. Then read Baruch in the book the words of Jeremiah in the house of the Lord, in the chamber of Gemariah the son of Shaphan the scribe, in the higher court, at the meeting of the new gate of the Lord's house, in the ears of all the people. 11. When Michaiah the son of Gemariah, the son of Shaphan, had heard out of the book all the words of the Lord, 12. Then he went down into the king's house, into the scribe's chamber, and, lo, all the princes sat there, even Elishama the scribe, and Delaiah the son of Shemariah, and Elthanan the son of Achbor, and Gemariah the son of Shaphan, and Zedekiah the son of Hananiah, and all the princes. 13. Then Michaiah declared unto them all the words that he had heard, when Baruch read the book in the ears of the people. 14. Therefore all the princes sent Jehudi the son of Nethaniah, the son of Shelemiah, the son of Cushi, unto Baruch, saying, Take in thy hand the roll wherein thou hast read in the ears of the people, and come. So Baruch the son of Neriah took the roll in his hand, and came unto them. 15. And they said unto him, Sit down now, and read it in our ears. So Baruch read it in their ears. 16. Now it came to pass, when they had heard all the words, they were afraid both one and other, and said unto Baruch, We will surely tell the king of all these words. 17. And they asked Baruch, saying, Tell us now, How didst thou write all these words at his mouth? 18. Then Baruch answered them, He pronounced all these words unto me with his mouth, and I wrote them with ink in the book. 19. Then said the princes unto Baruch, Go hide thee, thou and Jeremiah, and let no man know where ye be.

It should seem that Baruch had been frequently reading out of the book, to all companies that would give him the hearing, before the most solemn reading of it altogether, which is here spoken of; for the directions were given about it in the 4th year of Jehoiakim, whereas this was done in the 5th year, v. 9. But some think that the writing of the book fair over, took up so much time, that it was another year ere it was perfected; and yet perhaps it might not be past a month or two, he might begin in the latter end of the 4th year, and finish it in the beginning of the 5th, for the 9th is here reckoned from the commencement of the year in general, not to the year of that reign. Now observe here,

1. The government appointed a public fast to be religiously observed, (v. 9.) on account either of the distress they were brought into by the army of the Chaldeans, or of the want of rain; (ch. xiv. 1.) They proclaimed a fast to the people; whether the king and princes and the priest, ordered this fast, is not certain; but it was plain that God by his providence called them about to it. Note, Great shows of piety and devotion may be found even among those, who, though they keep up these forms of godliness, are strangers and enemies to the power of it. But what will such hypocritical services avail? Fasting, without reforming, and turning away from sin, will never turn away the judgments of God, Jonah iii. 10. Notwithstanding this fast, God proceeded in his contrary way with his people. 2. Baruch repeated Jeremiah's sermons publicly in the house of the Lord, on the fast-day. He stood in a chamber that belonged to Gemariah, and out of a window, or balcony, read to the people that were in the court, v. 10. Note, When we are speaking to God, we must be willing to hear from him; and therefore on days of fasting and prayer, it is requisite that the word be read and preached.

3. An account was brought of this to the princes that attended the court, and were now together in the secretary's office, here called the scribe's chamber, v. 12. It should seem, though the princes had called the people to meet in the house of God, to fast, and pray, and hear the word, they did not think fit to attend there themselves, which was a sign that it was not from a principle of true devotion, but merely for fashion-sake, that they proclaimed this fast. We are willing to hope that it was not with a bad design, to bring Jeremiah into trouble for his preaching, but with a good design, to bring the princes into trouble for their sins, that Michaiah and his fellow, having taken the precept, would read; for his father Gemariah so far constrained Baruch, as to lend him his chamber to read out of. Michaiah finds the princes sitting in the scribe's chamber, and tells them, they had better have been where he had been, hearing a good sermon in the temple, which he gives them the heads of. Note, When we have heard some good word that has affected and edified us, we should be ready to communicate it to others, that did not hear it, for their edification. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaks. 4. Baruch is sent for, and is ordered to sit down among them, and read it all over again to them, (v. 14, 15.) which he readily did, not complaining that he was weary with his public work, and therefore desiring to be excused, nor regarding the princes with their being absent from the temple, where they might have heard it when he read it there. Note, God's ministers must become all things to all men, if by any means they may gain some; must comply with them in circumstances, that they may secure the substance. St. Paul preached privately to them of reputation, Gal. ii. 2. 5. The princes were for the present much affected with the word that was read to them, v. 16. Observe, They heard all the words, they did not interrupt him, but very patiently attended to the reading of the whole book; for otherwise how could they make a competent judgment of it? And when they had heard all, they were afraid, were all afraid, one as well as another; like Felix, who trembled at Paul's reasonings. The reproofs were just, the threatenings frequent, and the prediction now in a fair way to be fulfilled; so that, laying all together, they were in a great consternation. We are not told what impressions this reading of the roll made upon the people, (v. 10.) but the princes were put into a fright by it, and (as some read it) looked one upon another, not knowing what to say. They were all convinced that it was worthy to be regarded, but not all convinced that they agreed to tell the king of all these words; and if he think fit to give credit to them, they will, otherwise not, no, though it were to prevent the ruin of the nation. And yet at the same time they knew the King's mind so far, that they advised Baruch and Jeremiah to hide themselves. (v. 19.) and to shift as they could for their own safety, expecting no other than that the king, instead of being convinced, would be exasperated. Note, It is common for sinners, under convictions, to endeavour to shake them off, by shifting off the prosecution of them to other persons, as these princes here, or to another more convenient season, as Felix.

6. They asked Baruch a trifling question, How he wrote all those words? v. 17. as if they suspected there was something extraordinary in it; but Baruch gives them a plain answer, that there was nothing but what was common in the manner of the writing—Jeremiah dictated, and he wrote, v. 18. But thus it is common for those who would avoid the convictions of the word of God, to start needless questions about the way and manner of the inspiration of it.

20. And they went in to the king into the court, but they laid up the roll in the chamber of Elishama the scribe, and told all the words in the ears of the king. 21. So the king sent Jehudi to fetch the roll; and he took it out of Elishama the scribe's chamber: and Jehudi read it in the ears of the king, and in the ears of all the princes which stood beside the king. 22. Now the king sat in the winter-house, in the ninth month: and there was a fire on the hearth burning before him. 23. And it came to pass, that when Jehudi had read three or four leaves, he cut it with the pen-knife, and cast it into the fire that was on the hearth, until all the roll was consumed in the fire that was on the hearth. 24. Yet they were not afraid, nor rent their garments, neither the king, nor any of his servants that heard all these words. 25. Nevertheless, Elathan, and Delaiah, and Gemariah, had made intercession to the king that he would not burn the roll; but he would not hear them. 26. But the king commanded Jeremiah the son of Hannelech, and Seraiah the son of Azriel, and Shelemiah the son of Abdeel, to take Baruch the scribe, and Jeremiah the prophet: but the Lord hid them. 27. Then the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah, (after that the king had burnt the roll, and the words which Baruch wrote at the mouth of Jeremiah.) saying, 28. Take thee again another roll, and write in it all the former words that were in the first roll, which Jehoiakim king of Judah had burnt. 29. And thou shalt say to Jehoiakim king of Judah, Thus saith the Lord, Thou hast burnt this roll, saying, Why hast thou written therein, saying, The king of Babylon shall certainly come and destroy this land, and shall cause to cease from thence man and beast? 30. Therefore thus saith the Lord of Jehoiakim king of Judah, He shall have none to sit upon the throne of David; and his dead body shall be cast out in the day to the heat, and in the night to the frost. 31. And I will punish him, and his seed, and his servants, for their iniquity; and I will bring upon them, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and upon the men of Judah, all the evil that I have pronounced against them: but they hearkened not. 32. Then took Jeremiah another roll, and gave it to Baruch the scribe, the son of Neriah; who wrote therein, from the mouth of Jeremiah, all the words of the book which Jehoiakim king of Judah had burnt in the fire: and there were added besides unto them many like words.

We have traced the roll to the people, and to the princes, and here we are to follow it to the king; and we find,

1. That, upon notice given him concerning it, he sent for it, and ordered it to be read to him, v. 20. 21. He did not desire that Baruch would come and read it himself, who could read it more intelligently, and with more authority and affection, than any one else; nor did he order one of his princes to do it; (though it had been no disparagement to the greatest of them;) much less would he vouchsafe to read it himself; but Jehudi, one of his pages now in waiting, who was sent to fetch it, is bid to read it, who, perhaps, scarcely knew how to make sense of it. But those who thus despise the word of God, will not make it to appear, as this king here did, that they hate it too, and have not only low but ill thoughts of it.

2. That he had no patience to hear it read through as the princes had, but that, when he had heard three or four leaves read, in a rage, he cut it with his pen-knife, and threw it piece by piece into the fire, that he might be sure to see it all consumed, v. 20. 21. This was a piece of as daring impatience as a man could lightly be guilty of, and an most impudent affront to the God of heaven, whose message this was. (1.) Thus he showed his iniquity of reproof; being resolved to persist in sin, he would by no means bear to be told of his faults. (2.) Thus he showed his indignation at Baruch and Jeremiah; he would have cut them in pieces, and burned them, as he had cut them in his reach, when he was in this passion. (3.) Thus he showed his obstinate resolution, never to comply with the designs and intentions of the warnings given him; he will do what he will, whatever God by his prophets says to the contrary. (4.) Thus he foolishly hoped to defeat the threatenings denounced against him; as if God knew not how to execute the sentence when the roll was gone in which it was written. (5.) Thus he thought he had effectually provided that the things contained in this roll should spread no further, which was the care of the chief-priest concerning the gospel, Acts iv. 17. They had told him how this roll had been read to the people and to the princes: “But,” (says he,) “I will take a course that shall prevent its being read any more.” See what a vanity there is against God in the carnal mind, and wonder at the patience of God, that he bears with such indignities done to him!

3. That neither the king himself, nor any of his princes, were at all affected with the word; They were not afraid, (v. 24.) no, not those princes that trembled at the word, when they heard it the first time, v. 16. So soon, so easily, do good impressions wear off! They showed some concern till they saw how light the king made of it, and then they shook off all that concern. They rent not their garments, as Josiah did; this Jehoiakim's own father did, when he had the book of the law read to him, though it was not so particular as the contents of this roll.

4. That there were three of the princes who had so much sense and grace left as to interpose for the preventing of the burning of the roll, but in vain, v. 27. If they had from the first foreseen that their endurance, as they ought to have done, affected with the word, perhaps they might have brought the king to a better mind, and have persuaded him to bear it patiently; but frequently they that will not do the good they should, put it out of their own power to do the good they would.

5. That Jehoiakim, when he had thus in effect brought the roll of the law before the king, which was arrested, as it were in a way of revenge, now that he thought he had got the better, signed a warrant for the apprehending of Jeremiah and Baruch, God's ministers; (v. 26.) But the Lord hid them. The princes bid them absent, (v. 19.) but it was neither the princes' care for them, nor theirs for themselves, that secured them, it was under the divine protection that they were safe. Note, God will find out a shelter for his people, though their persecutors be ever so industrious to get them into their power, till their hour be come; nay, and then he will himself be their Hiding-place.

6. That Jeremiah had orders and instructions to write in another roll the same words that were written in the roll which Jehoiakim had burnt, v. 27, 28. Note, Though the attempts of hell against the word of God be many, yet not one into the midst of it shall fall to the ground, nor shall the unbelief of man make the word of God of no effect. Enemies may prevail to burn many a Bible, but they cannot abolish the word of God, can neither extinguish it, nor defeat the accomplishment of it. Though the tables of the law were broken, they were renewed again; and so out of the ashes of the roll that was burnt arose another Phoenix. The word of the Lord endures for ever.

7. That the king of Judah, though a king, was severely reckoned with by the King of kings for this indignity done to the written word. God noticed what it was in the roll that Jehoiakim took so much offence at. Jehoiakim was angry, because it was written therein, saying, Surely the king of Babylon shall come and destroy this land, v. 29. And did not he, when he came of two years before this, and go far toward the destroying of this land? He did so, (2 Chron. xxxvi. 6, 7.) in his third year, Dan. i. 1. So that God and his prophets were therefore become his enemies, because they told him the truth, told him of the desolation that was coming, but at the same time putting him on a fair way to prevent it. But if this be the thing he takes so much amiss, let him know, (4.) That the wrath of God shall come upon him and his family, in the first place, by the hand of Nebuchadnezzar; he shall be cut off, and in a few weeks his son shall be dethroned, and exchanged his royal robes for prison-garments, so that he shall have none to sit upon the throne of David; the glory of that illustrious house shall be eclipsed, and die, in him; his dead body shall lie unburied, on which comes all to one; he shall be buried with the burial of an ass, that is, thrown into the next ditch; it shall lie exposed to all weathers, heat and frost, which will occasion its putrifying, and becoming loathsome, the sooner. "Not that his body" (says Mr. Gataker) "could be sensible of such usage, or himself, being deceased, of ought that should befal his body; but the king's body, in such a condition should, as a hideous spectacle, fill a horrid memory, of God's heavy wrath and indignation against him, unto all that should behold it." Even his seed and his servants shall fare the worse for their relation to him, (v. 31.) for they shall be punished, not for his iniquity, but so much the sooner for their own. (2.) That all the evil pronounced against Judah and Jerusalem in that roll, shall be brought upon them. Though the copy be burnt, the original remains in the divine counsel, which shall again be copied out after another manner in bloody characters. Note, There is no escaping of God's judgments by struggling with them; who ever hardened his heart against God, and prospered?

Lastly, That, when the roll was written anew, there were added to the former many like words, (v. 32.) many more threatenings of wrath and vengeance; for since they will yet walk contrary to God, he will will the furnace seven times hotter. Note, as God is in one mind, and none can turn him, so he has still more arrows in his quiver; and those who contend with God's woe, do but prepare for themselves heavier of the same kind.

CHAP. XXXVII.

This chapter brings us very near the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, for the story of it lies in the latter end of Zedekiah's reign; we have in it, 1. A general idea of the bad character of that reign, v. 1, 2. II. The message which Zedekiah, notwithstanding, sent to Jeremiah, to desire his prayers, v. 3. III. The flattering hopes which the people had received, but the Chaldeans would quit the siege of Jerusalem, v. 5. IV. The assurance God gave them by Jeremiah, (who was now at liberty, v. 4.) that the Chaldean army should renew the siege, and take the city, v. 6. V. The imprison-ment of Jeremiah, under pretence that he was a deserter, v. 11...15. VI. The kindness which Zedekiah showed him when he was a prisoner, v. 16...21.

1. A king Zedekiah, the son of Josiah, was exalted instead of Coniah, the son of Jehoiakim, whom Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon made king in the land of Judah.

2. But neither he, nor his servants, nor the people of the land, did hearken unto the words of the Lord, which he spake by the prophet Jeremiah.

3. And Zedekiah the king sent Jehucal the son of Shelemiah, and Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest, to the prophet Jeremiah, saying, Pray now unto the Lord our God for us. 4. Now Jeremiah came in and went out among the people; for they had not put him into prison.

5. Then Pharaoh's army was come forth out of Egypt: and when the Chaldeans that besieged Jerusalem heard tidings of them, they departed from Jerusalem.

6. Then came the word of the Lord unto the prophet Jeremiah, saying, 7. Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, Thus shall ye say to the king of Judah, that sent you unto me to inquire of me; Behold, Pharaoh's army, which is come forth to help you, shall return to Egypt into their own land. 8. And the Chaldeans shall come again, and fight against this city, and take it, and burn it with fire. 9. Thus saith the Lord, Deceive not yourselves, saying, The Chaldeans shall surely depart from us: for they shall not de-

10. For though ye have snitten the whole army of the Chaldeans that fight against you, and there remained but wonded men among them, yet should they rise up every man in his tent, and burn this city with fire.

Here is,
1. Jeremiah's preaching slighted, v. 1, 2. Zedekiah succeeded Coniah, or Jehochanan, and though he saw in his predecessor the fatal consequences of countenancing the word of God, yet he did not take warning, nor give any more regard to it than others had done before him; neither he, nor his courtiers, nor the people of the land, hearkened unto the words of the Lord, though they already began to be fulfilled. Note, Those have hearts wretchedly hard indeed, that see God's judgments on others, and feel them on themselves, and yet will not be humbled, and brought to heed what he says. These had proof sufficient that it was the Lord who spake by Jeremiah the prophet, and yet they would not hearken to him.

2. Jeremiah's prayers desired. Zedekiah sent messengers to him, saying, Pray now unto the Lord our God for us. He did so before; (ch. xxi. 1, 2.) and one of the messengers, Zephaniah, is the same there and here. Zedekiah is to be commended for this, and it shows that he had some good in him, some sense of his need of God's favour, and of his own unworthiness to ask it for himself, and some value for good people, and good ministers, who had an interest in Heaven. Note, When we are in distress, we ought to desire the prayers of our ministers and Christian friends, for thereby we put an honour upon prayer, and an esteem upon our brethren. Kings themselves should lock upon their praying people as the strength of the nation, Ezek. xx. 25, 26. And yet this does but help to condemn Zedekiah out of his own mouth. If indeed he looked upon Jeremiah as a prophet, whose prayers might avail much both for him and his people, why did he not then believe him, and hearken to the words of the Lord, which he spake by him? He desired his good prayers, but would not take his good counsel, nor be ruled by him, though he spake in God's name, and it appears by this that Zedekiah knew he did. Note, It is common for those to desire to be prayed for, who yet will not be advised; but herein they put a cheat upon themselves; for how can we expect that God should hear others speaking to him for us, if we will not hear them speaking to us from him, and for him? Many who despise prayer, may be in great prosperity, and they go not to it when they are in adversity; Now give us of your oil. When Zedekiah sent to the prophet to pray for him, he had better have sent for the prophet to pray with him; but he thought that below him: and how can they expect the comforts of religion, who will not stoop to the services of it.

3. Jerusalem flattered by the retreat of the Chaldean army from it. Jerusalem was now at liberty, (v. 4.) he went in and out among the people, might freely speak to them, and he spoken to by them. Jerusalem also, for the present, was at liberty, v. 5. Zedekiah, though a tributary to the king of Babylon, had entered into a private league with Pharaoh king of Egypt, (Ezek. xvii. 15.) pursuant to which, when the king of Babylon came to chastise him for his league with Pharaoh, he was not in person, but the Egyptians, through he came no more in person, after that great defeat which Nebuchadnezzar gave him in the reign of Jehoiakim. (2 Kings xxiv. 7.) yet sent some forces to relieve Jerusalem when it was besieged; upon notice of the approach of which, the Chaldeans raised the siege, probably not for fear of them, but in policy, to fight them at a distance, before any of the Jewish forces could join them. From this they encouraged the people to hope that Jerusalem was delivered for good and all out of the hands of its enemies, and that the storm was quite blown over. Note, Sinners are commonly hardened in their security by the intermissions of judgments, and the slow proceedings of them; and those who will not be awakened by the word of God, may justly be lulled asleep by the providence of God.

4. Jerusalem threatened with the return of the Chaldean army, and with ruin by it. Zedekiah sent to Jeremiah to desire him to pray for them, that the Chaldean army might not return; but Jeremiah did so, and thus he desired to go to them, and not to return; and it was gone forth, and that it was but a folly for them to expect peace, for God had begun a controversy with them, which he would make an end of; Thus saith the Lord, deceive not yourselves, v. 9. Note, Satan himself, though he is the great deceiver, could not deceive us, if we did not deceive ourselves; and thus sinners are their own destroyers by being their own deceivers; of which this is an aggravation, that they are so frequently warned of it, and cautioned not to deceive themselves; and they have the word of God, the great design of which is to undo them. Jeremiah uses no dark metaphors, but tells them plainly,

(1.) That the Egyptians shall retreat, and either give back, or be forced back, into their own land, v. 1. (Ezek. xxvi. 1.) which was said of old, (Isa. xxxvii. 7.) and is here said again, v. 7. That the Egyptians shall help in vain; they shall not dare to face the Chaldean army, but shall retire with precipitation. Note, If God help us not, no creature can. As no power can prevail against God, so none can avail without God, nor countervail his departures from us.

(2.) That the Chaldeans shall return, and shall renew the storm, and prosecute it with more vigour than ever. They shall not depart for good and all. v. 9. They shall come again; (v. 8.) they shall fight against the city. Note, God has the sovereign command of all the hosts of men, even of those that know him not, that own him not, and they are all made to serve his purposes. He directs their marches, their counter-marches, their retreats, their returns, as it pleases him; and furious armies, like stormy winds, in all their motions are fulfilling his word.

(3.) That Jerusalem shall certainly be delivered into the hand of the Chaldeans! They shall take it, and burn it with fire, v. 8. The sentence passed upon it shall he executed, and they shall be the executioners. "O but," (say they) "the Chaldeans have withdrawn from us, and there is an impracticable;" "And though they have," says the prophet, "may, though you had smitten their army, so that many were slain, and all the rest wounded, yet those wounded men should rise up, and burn this city," v. 10. This is designed to denote that the doom passed upon Jerusalem is irrevocable, and its destruction inevitable; it must be laid in ruins, and the Chaldeans will have their way of it, and it is now in vain to think of evading the stroke, or contending with it. Note, Whatever instruments God has determined to make use of in any service for him, whether of mercy or judgment, they shall accomplish that for which they are designed, whatever incapacity or disability they may lie under, or be reduced to. These by whom God has resolved to be served, if they have quitting the service of God, and are his destroyers they shall be, and they shall be, yea, though they were all wounded; for as when God has work to do, he will not want instruments to do it with, though they may seem far to seek; so when he has chosen his instruments, they shall do the work, though they may seem very unlikely to accomplish it.

11. And it came to pass, that when the army of the Chaldeans was broken up from Jerusalem for fear of Pharaoh's army,
Then Jeremiah went forth out of Jerusalem to go into the land of Benjamin, to separate himself thence in the midst of the people. 13. And when he was in the gate of Benjamin, a captain of the ward was there, whose name was Irijah, the son of Shelemiah, the son of Hananiah; and he took Jeremiah the prophet, saying, Thou fallest away to the Chaldeans. 14. Then said Jeremiah, It is false; I fall not away to the Chaldeans. But he hearkened not to him; so Irijah took Jeremiah, and brought him to the princes. 15. Wherefore the princes were wroth with Jeremiah, and smote him, and put him in prison in the house of Jonathan the scribe; for they had made that the prison. 16. When Jeremiah was entered into the dungeon, and into the cabins, and Jeremiah had remained there many days; 17. Then Zedekiah the king sent, and took him out; and the king asked him secretly in his house, and said, Is there any word from the Lord? And Jeremiah said, There is: for, said he, thou shalt be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon. 18. Moreover, Jeremiah said unto king Zedekiah, What have I offended against thee, or against thy servants, or against this people, that ye have put me in prison? 19. Where are now your prophets which prophesied unto you, saying, The king of Babylon shall not come against you, nor against this land? 20. Therefore hear now, I pray thee, O my lord the king: let my supplication, I pray thee, be accepted before thee; that thou cause me not to return to the house of Jonathan the scribe, lest I die there. 21. Then Zedekiah the king commanded that they should commit Jeremiah into the court of the prison, and that they should give him daily a piece of bread out of the bakers' street, until all the bread in the city were spent. Thus Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison.

We have here a further account concerning Jeremiah, who relates more passages concerning himself than any of the other prophets: for the history of the lives and sufferings of God's ministers have been very serviceable to the church, as well as their preaching and writing.

1. We are here told that Jeremiah, when he had an opportunity for it, attempted to retire out of Jerusalem into the country; (v. 11, 12.) When the Chaldeans had broken up from Jerusalem, because of Pharaoh's army, and they marched the multitude of them to the devil, who, in that interval of the siege, went out into the country to look after their affairs there; he endeavored to steal away in the crowd, for, though he was a man of great eminence; he could well reconcile himself to obscurity; though he was one of a thousand, he was content to be lost in the multitude, and buried alive in a corner, in a cottage.

Whether he designed for Anathoth or no, does not appear; his concerns might call him thither, but his neighbours there were such as, unless they were minded, (ch. xi. 21.) might discourage him from coming among them; or he might intend to hide himself somewhere where he was not known, and fulfil his own wish, (ch. xi. 2.) Oh that I had in the wilderness a lodging place! Jeremiah found he could do no good in Jerusalem, he laboured in vain among them, and therefore determined to leave them. Note, There are times when it is the wisdom of good men to retire into privacy, to enter into the chamber, and shut the doors about them, Isa. xxxvi. 20.

II. That in this attempt he was seized as a deserter, and committed to prison; (v. 13.—15.) He was in the gate of Benjamin, so far he had gained a point, when a captain of the ward, who, probably, had the charge of that gate, divined his design, and took him into custody. He was the grandson of Hananiah, who, the Jews say, was Hananiah the false prophet, who contested with Jeremiah, (ch. xxxviii. 16.) and that this young captain had a spite to Jeremiah upon that account. He could not arrest him without some pretence, and that which he charges upon him is, Thou fallest away to the Chaldeans: an absurd story, for the Chaldeans now gone off, Jeremiah could not reach them: or if he could, who would go over to a baffled army? Jeremiah, therefore, with good reason, and with both the confidence and the mildness of an innocent man, denies the charge, "It is false, I fall not away to the Chaldeans, I am going upon my own lawful occasions." Note, It is no new thing for the church's best friends to be represented as in the interest of her worst enemies; thus have the blackest characters been put upon the fairest, purest minds, and, in such a malicious world as this is, innocence, may, excellency itself, is no fence against the basest calumny. When at any time we are thus falsely accused, we may do as Jeremiah did, boldly deny the charge, and then commit our cause to him that judges righteously. Jeremiah's protestation of his integrity, though he be a prophet, a man of God, a man of honour and sincerity, though he is a priest, and is ready to say it in verbo sacroto—on the word of a priest, is not regarded; but he is brought before the privy-council, who, without examining him and the proofs against him, but upon the base, malicious insinuation of the captain, fell into a pass anditrust with him, they were wroth; and what justice could be expected from men of such a temper, would hear no reason? They beat him, without any regard had to his coat and character, and then put him in prison, in the worst prison they had, that in the house of Jonathan the scribe; either it had been his house, and he had quitted it for the inconveniences of it, but it was thought good enough for a prison; or it was now his house, and perhaps he was a rigid severe man, and made it a house of cruel bondage to his prisoners. Into this prison Jeremiah was thrust, into the dungeon, which was dark and cold, damp and dirty, the most uncomfortable, unhealthful place in it; in the cells or cabins, there he must lodge, among which there is no choice, for they are all alike miserable lodging places; there Jeremiah remained many days, and, for aught appears, it was not intended for life; but perhaps it was a righteous severe man, and made it a house of cruel bondage to his prisoners. See what a world this is! The wicked princes, who are in rebellion against God, lie at ease, lie in state, in their palaces, while godly Jeremiah, who is in the service of God, lies in pain, in a loathsome dungeon. It is well that there is a world to come! III. That Zedekiah at length sent for him, and showed him his way to Babylon, not till the Chaldean army was returned, and had laid their siege to the city; when their vain hopes, with which they fed themselves, (and in confidence of which they had re-enlisted their servants, ch. xxxiv. 11.) were all vanished, then they were in a greater confusion and consternation than ever; "O then" (says Zedekiah) "send in all haste for the prophet; let me have some talk with him." When the Chaldeans were withdrawn, he only sent to the prophet to pray for him; but now that they had again invested the city, he sent for him to consult him. Then gracious will men be when pangs come upon them!

1. The king sent for him to give him private audience as an ambassador from God. He asked him secretly in his house, being ashamed to be seen in his company, "Is there any word from the Lord?" v. 14. The second comfort! Canst thou give us any hopes that the Chaldeans shall again retire?" Note, Those that will not hearken to God's admonitions when they are in prosperity, would be glad of his consolations when they are in adversity, and expect that his ministers should then speak words of peace to them; but how can they expect it? What have they to do with peace? Jeremiah's life and comfort are in Zedekiah's hand, and he has now a petition to present to him for his favour, and yet, having this opportunity, he tells him plainly, that there is a word from the Lord, but no word of comfort for him or his people; Thou shalt be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon. If Jeremiah had consulted with flesh and blood, he would have given him a plausible answer, and though he would not have said that he knew not what he would do under his remit-ther he would tell him the worst at this time; what occasion was there for it, when he had so often told it him before? But Jeremiah was one that had obtained mercy of the Lord to be faithful; and would not, to obtain mercy of man, be unfaithful either to God or to his prince; he therefore tells him the truth, the whole truth. And, since there was no remedy, it would be the greatest kindness he could do to keep his doom, that being no surprise to him, it might be the less a terror, and he might provide to make the best of bad. Jeremiah takes this occasion to upbraid him and his people with the credit they gave to the false prophets, who told them that the king of Babylon should not come at all, or when he was withdrawn, should not come again against them, v. 15. There are many your prophets, who told you that you should have peace. Note, Those who receive themselves with groundless hopes of mercy, will justly be upbraided with it when the event has undeceived them.

2. He improved this opportunity for the present of a private petition, as a poor prisoner, v. 18, 20. Jeremiah's power was taken away, his voice silenced, sentence God had passed upon Zedekiah, but it was in Zedekiah's power to reverse the sentence which the princes had given against him; and therefore, since he thought him fit to be used as a prophet, he would not think him fit to be abused as the worst of malefactors. He humbly expostulates with the king; "What have I offended against thee, or thy ser-vants?" v. 18. He had no law but God's, and committed no sin, yet had I done to the common welfare, that ye have put me in prison?" And many a one that has been very hardly dealt with, has been able to make the same appeal, and to make it good. He likewise earnestly begs, and very pathetically, (v. 20.) Cause me not to return to your noisome galleon, to the house of Jonathan the scribe, lest I die there. This was the language of innocent nature, the voice of those who are grieved, and solicitous for its own preservation. Though he was not at all unwilling to die God's martyr, yet, having so fair an opportunity to get relief, he would not let it slip, lest he should die his own murderer. When Jeremiah delivered God's message, he spoke, as one having authority, with the greatest boldness; but when he presented his own request, he spake as one under authority, with the greatest submissiveness; Hear me, I pray thee, O my lord the king, let my supplications, I pray thee, be accepted before thee. Here is not a word of complaint of the princes that unjustly committed him, no offer to bring an act of false imprisonment against them, but all in a way of modest supplication to the king, to teach us that even when we act with the courage that becomes the faithful servants of God, yet we must conduct ourselves with the humility and modesty that become dutiful subjects to the government God hath set over us. A lion in God's cause, must be a lamb in his own. And we find that God gave Jeremiah favour in the eyes of the king. (1.) He gave him his request, took care that he should not have the sentence confirmed, but ordered that he should have the liberty of the court of the prison, where he might have a pleasant walk, and breathe a free air. (2.) He gave him more than his request, took care that he should not die for want, as many did that had their liberty, by reason of the strictness of the siege; he ordered him his daily bread out of the public stock (for the prison was within the verge of the court) till all the bread was spent. Zedekiah ought to have released him, nay, to have preferred him, to have made him a privy-counsellor, as Joseph was taken from prison to be the second man in the kingdom; but he had not courage to do that,—it was well he did as he did, and it is an instance of the care God takes of his elect, to make sure of securing them from the danger they are in, by making even their confinement turn to their advantage, and the court of their prison to become as green pastures to them, and raise up such friends to provide for them, that in the days of famine they shall be satisfied. At destruction and famine thou shalt laugh.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

In this chapter, just as in the former, we have Jeremiah greatly dejected under the frowns of the princes, and yet greatly honoured by the favour of the king; they used him, as a criminal, he used him as a privy-counsellor. Here, 1. Jeremiah for his faithfulness is put into the dungeon by the princes, v. 1.-6. II. At the intercession of Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, by special order from the king, he is taken up out of the dungeon, and continued only to the court of the prison, v. 7.-13. III. He has a private conference with the king upon the present juncture of affairs, v. 14.-23. IV. Care is taken to keep that conference private, v. 24.-26.

1. THEN Shephatiah the son of Mattan, and Gedaliah the son of Pashur, and Jucal the son of Shemariah, and Pashur the son of Malchiah, heard the words that Jeremiah had spoken unto all the people, saying, 2. Thus saith the Lord, He that remaineth in this city shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence: but he that goeth forth to the Chaldeans shall live; for he shall have his life for a prey, and shall live. 3. Thus saith the Lord, This city shall surely be given into the hand of the king of Babylon's army, which shall take it. 4. Therefore the princes said unto the king, We beseech thee, let this man be put to death; for thus he weakeneth the hands of the men of war that remain in this city, and the hands of all the people, in speaking such words unto them: for this man seeketh not the welfare of this people, but the hurt. 5. Then Zedekiah the king said, Behold, he is in your hand: for the king is not he that can do any thing against you. 6. Then took they Jeremiah, and cast him into the dungeon of Malchiah the son of Hammelech, that was in the court of the prison: and they let down Jeremiah with cords. And in the dungeon there was no water, but mire: so Jeremiah sunk in the mire. 7. Then when Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, one of the eunuchs, which was in the king's house, heard that they had put Jeremiah in the dungeon, (the king then sitting in the gate of Benjamin,) 8. Ebed-melech went forth out of the king's house, and spake to the king, saying, 9. My lord the king, these men have done evil in all that they have done to Jeremiah the prophet, whom they have cast into the dungeon; and he is like to die for hunger in the place where he is; for there is no more bread in the city. 10. Then the king commanded Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, saying, Take from hence thirty men with thee, and take up Jeremiah the prophet out of the dungeon, before he die. 11. So Ebed-melech took the men with him, and went into the house of the king under the treasury, and took thence old cast clouts and old rotten rags, and let them down by cords into the dungeon to Jeremiah.

2. And Ebed-melech the Ethiopian said unto Jeremiah, Put now these old cast clouts and rotten rags under thine arm-holes, under the cords. And Jeremiah did so. 13. So they drew up Jeremiah with cords, and took him up out of the dungeon: and Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison.

Here, 1. Jeremiah persists in his plain preaching: what he had many a time said, he still says, (v. 3.) This city shall be given into the hand of the king of Babylon; though it held out long, it will be taken at last; nor would he have so often repeated this unwelcome message, but that he could put them in a certain way, though not to save the city, yet to save themselves; so that every man might have his own life given him for a prey, if he would be advised. v. 2. Let him not stay in the city, in hopes to defend that, for it will be to no purpose, but let him go forth to the Chaldeans, and throw himself upon their mercy, before things come to extremity, and then he shall live; they will not put him to the sword, but give him quarter, Satis est prostrare leonem. It suffices the lion to lay his antagonist prostrate, and he shall escape the famine and pestilence, which will be the death of multitudes within the city. Note, Those do better for themselves, who patiently submit to the rebukes of Providence, than those who contend with them. And if we cannot have our liberty, we must reckon it a mercy to have our lives, and not foolishly throw them away upon a point of honour; they may be reserved for better times.

2. The princes persist in their malice against Jeremiah. He was faithful to his country, and his trust as a prophet, though he had suffered many a time for his faithfulness; and though at this time he ate the king's bread, yet that did not stop his mouth. But his persecutors were still bitter against him, and complained that he abused the liberty he had of walking in the court of the prison, for though he could not go to the temple to preach, yet he vented the same things in private conversation to those that came to visit him; and therefore (v. 4.) they represented him to the king as a dangerous man, disaffected to him, and they searched under; He seeks not the welfare of this people, but the hurt: an unjust insinuation, for no man had laid out himself more for the good of Jerusalem than he had done. They represent his preaching as having a bad tendency; the design of it was plainly to bring men to repent, and turn to God, which would have been as much as any thing a strengthening to the cords both of the solitary and of the burned city, and yet they represented it as weakening their hands, and discouraging them; if he did this, it was their own fault. Note, It is common for wicked people to look upon God's faithful ministers as their enemies, only because they show them what enemies they are to themselves while they continue impenitent.

3. Jeremiah, bereft, by the king's permission, is put into a dungeon, with a view to his destruction there. Zedekiah, though he felt a conviction that Jeremiah was a prophet, sent of God, had not courage to own it, but yielded to the violence of his persecutors, v. 5. He is in your hand; and a worse sentence he could not have passed upon him. We read in Jehoiakim's reign, that the princes were better affected to the prophet than the king was, (Isa. xxxvi. 5.) now they were worse against him, a sign that they were opening space for ruin. Had it been in a case that concerned his own honour or profit, he would have let them know that the king is he who can do what he pleases, whether they will or no; but in the cause of God and his prophet, which he was very cool in, he basely sneaks, and tralkles to them, The king is not he that can do any thing against you. Note, The prince's will will be a great deal to answer for, though they have a secret kindness for good people, dare not own it in a time of need, nor will do what they might do, to prevent mischief designed them. The princes having this general warrant from the king, immediately put poor Jeremiah into the dungeon of Malchiah, that was in the court of the prison, (v. 6.) a deep dungeon, for they had him put in his own words, against the king, and there was no water in it, but mire; and he sunk in the mire, up to the neck, says Josephus. They that put him here, doublets designed that he should die here, die for hunger, die for cold, and so die miserably, die obscurely, fearing, if they should put him to death openly, the people might be affected with what he would say, and be incensed against them. Many of God's faithful witnesses have thus been privately made away, and starved to death in prisons, whose blood will be brought to account in the day of discovery. We are not here told what Jeremiah did in this distress, but he tells us himself, (Lam. iii. 35, 37.) I called upon thy name, O Lord, out of the low dungeon, and thou didst hear, saying, Fear not.

Application is made to the king by an honest courteux, Ebed-melech, one of the gentlemen of the bed-chamber, in behalf of the poor sufferer. Though the princes carried on the matter as privately as they could, yet it came to the ear of this good man, who, probably, sought opportunities to do good. It may be, he came to the knowledge of it by hearing Jeremiah's moans out of the dungeon, for it lay in the king's house, v. 7. Ebed-melech was an Ethiopian, a stranger to the commonwealth of Israel, and yet had in him more humanity, and more divinity too, than native Israelites had. Christ found more faith among Gentiles than among Jews. Ebed-melech lived in a wicked court, and a very corrupt, degenerate age, and yet had a great sense both of equity and piety. God has his remnant in all places, among all sorts. There were saints even in Cesar's household. The king was now sitting in the gates of Benjamin, to try causes, and receive appeals and petitions, or perhaps holding a council of war there: thither Ebed-melech went immediately to him, for the case would not admit delay; though the princes had been permitted to go out of the dungeon, or point out till then he had an opportunity of speaking to the king in private. No time must be lost when life is in danger, especially so valuable a life. He boldly asserts that Jeremiah had a great deal of wrong done him, and is not afraid to tell the king so, though they were princes that did it, though they were now present in court, and though they had the king's warrant: Whither did this upbraiding innocence flee for protection but to the throne, especially when great men are its oppressors? Ebed-melech appears truly brave in this matter; he does not mince the matter; though he had a place at court, which he would be in danger of losing for his plain dealing, yet he tells the king faithfully, let him take it as he will: These men have done ill in all that they have done to Jeremiah. They dealt unjustly with him, for he had not deserved any punishment at all; and they had dealt barbarously with him, so as they used not to deal with the vilest malefactors. And they needed not to have put him to this miserable death, for if they had let him alone where he was, he was likely to die for hunger in the place where he was, in the court of the prison to which he was confined; there are more danger and death in the stores out of which he was to have his allowance, (ch. xxxvii. 21.) were in a manner spent. See how God can raise up friends for his people in distress, where they little thought of them; and spirit men for his service even beyond expectation!

5. Orders are immediately given for his release, and Ebed-melech takes care to see them executed. The king who, but now, durst do nothing against the princes, had his heart wonderfully changed on a sudden, and will now have Jeremiah released, in defiance of the princes, for therefore he orders no less than 50 men, and those of the life-guard, to be employed in fetching him out of the dungeon, lest the princes should raise a party to oppose it, v. 10. Let this encourage us to appear boldly for God—we may have our miseries, but, if we can do justice for the hearts of kings are in the hand of God. Ebed-melech gained his point, and soon brought Jeremiah the good news; and it is observable how particularly the manner of his drawing him out of the dungeon is related: (for God is not unrighteous to forget any work or labour of love which is showed to his people or ministers, no, nor any circumstance of it, Heb. vi. 10.) special notice is taken of his great tenderness in providing old soft rags for Jeremiah to put under his arm-holes, to keep the cords from hurting him, wherewith he was to be drawn up, his arm-holes being, probably, galled by the cords wherewith he was let down. Nor did he throw the rags down to him, lest they should be lost in the mines, but carefully let them down, v. 11, 12. Note: Those that are in distress should not only be relieved, but relieved with compassion and marks of respect; all which shall be placed to account, and abound to a good account in the day of recompense. See what a good use even old rotten rags may be put to, which therefore should not be made waste of, any more than broken meat: even in the king's house, and under the treasury too, these were carefully preserved for the use of the poor or sick. Jeremiah is brought up out of the dungeon, and is now where he was, in the court of the prison, v. 13. Perhaps Ebed-melech could have made interest with the king to have got him his discharge from thence also, now that he had the king's ear, but he thought him safer, and better provided for there, than he would be anywhere else. God can, when he pleases, make a prison to become a refuge and hiding-place to his people in distress and danger.

14. Then Zedekiah the king sent, and took Jeremiah the prophet unto him into the third entry that is in the house of the Lord: and the king said unto Jeremiah, I will ask thee a thing; hide nothing from me. 15. Then Jeremiah said unto Zedekiah, If I declare it unto thee, wilt thou not surely put me to death? and if I give thee counsel, wilt thou not hearken unto me. 16. So the king sware secretly unto Jeremiah, saying, As the Lord liveth, that made us this soul, I will not put thee to death, neither will I give thee into the hand of these men that seek thy life. 17. Then said Jeremiah unto Zedekiah, Thus saith the Lord, the God of hosts, the God of Israel, If thou wilt assuredly go forth unto the king of Babylon's princes, then thy soul shall live, and this city shall not be burnt with fire; and thou shalt live, and thy house: 18. But if thou wilt not go forth to the king of Babylon's princes, then shall this city be given into the hand of the Chaldeans, and they shall burn it with fire, and thou shalt not escape out of their hand. 19. And Zedekiah the king said unto Jeremiah, I am afraid of the Jews that are fallen to the Chaldeans, lest they deliver me into their hand, and they mock me. 20. But Jeremiah said, They shall not deliver thee. Obey, I beseech thee, the voice of the Lord, which I speak unto thee: so it shall be well unto thee, and thy soul shall live. 21. But if thou refuse to go forth, this is the word that the Lord hath showed me: 22. And, behold, all the women that are left in the king of Judah's house shall be brought forth to the king of Babylon's princes: and those women shall say, Thy friends have set thee on, and have prevailed against thee: thy feet are sunk in the mire, and they are turned away back. 23. So they shall bring out all thy wives and thy children to the Chaldeans; and thou shalt not escape out of their hand, but shalt be taken by the hand of the king of Babylon: and thou shalt cause this city to be burnt with fire. 24. Then said Zedekiah unto Jeremiah, Let no man know of these words, and thou shalt not die. 25. But if the princes hear that I have talked with thee, and they come unto thee, and say unto thee, Declare unto us now what thou hast said unto the king, hide it not from us, and we will not put thee to death; also what the king said unto thee; 26. Then thou shalt say unto them, I presented my supplication before the king, that he would not cause me to return to Jonathan's house, to die there. 27. Then came all the princes unto Jeremiah, and asked him; and he told them according to all these words that the king had commanded. So they left off speaking with him: for the matter was not perceived. 28. So Jeremiah abode in the court of the prison until the day that Jerusalem was taken: and he was there when Jerusalem was taken.

In the foregoing chapter, we had the king in close conference with Jeremiah, and his reply, though (v. 4.) he had given him up into the hands of his enemies; such a struggle there was, in the breast of this unhappy prince, between his convictions and his corruptions. Observe,

1. The honour that Zedekiah did to the prophet. When he was newly fetched out of the dungeon, he sent for him to advise with him privately. He met him in the third entry, or, as the margin reads it, the third gate, (ch. xxxvi. 13.) that is to say, the gate next adjoining, the house of the Lord, v. 14. In appointing this place of interview with the prophet, perhaps he intended to show a respect and reverence for the house of God, which was proper enough now that he was desiring to hear the word of God. Zedekiah would ask Jeremiah a thing; it should rather be rendered, a word; "I am here asking thou for a word of prediction, of counsel, of comfort, a word from the Lord." ch. xxxvii. 17. Whatever word thou hast for me, hide it not from me, let me know the worst." He had been told plainly what things would come to, in the foregoing chapter, but, like Balaam, he asks again, in hopes to get a more pleasing answer, as if God, who is in one mind, were altogether such a one as himself, who was in many minds.

2. The bargain that Jeremiah made with him, before he would give him his advice, v. 15. He would indent, (1.) For his own safety; Zedekiah would have him deal faithfully with him; "And if I do," says Jeremiah, "will thou not put me to death? I am afraid thou wilt;" (so some take it;)

"what else can I expect when thou art led blindfold by the princes?" says he. "Wilt thou promise that thou wilt not." Not that Jeremiah was backward to seal the doctrine he preached, with his blood, when he was called to it; but, in doing our duty, we ought to use all lawful means for our own preservation; even the apostles of Christ did so. (2.) He would indent for the success of his advice, being no less concerned for Zedekiah's welfare than for his own. He was willing to give him wholesome advice, and not disown his advice, and his advice, but acknowledge his advice, and his advice. The princes must with meekness instruct even those that oppose themselves, and render good for evil. He is desirous that he should hear counsel, and receive instruction. "Wilt thou not hearken unto me, I am in hopes to find thee pliable at last, and now in this thy day willing to know the things that belong to thy peace." Note, Then, and then only, there is hope of sinners, when they are willing to hearken to good counsel. Some read it as spoken despairingly; "if I give thee counsel, thou wilt not hearken unto me; I have reason to fear thou wilt not, and therefore I will not give it." Note, Ministers have little heart to speak to those who have long and often turned a deaf ear to them. Now, as to this latter concern of Jeremiah's, Zedekiah makes him no answer, will not promise to hearken to his advice; though he desires to know what is the mind of God, yet he will reserve himself at liberty, when he does know it, to do as he thinks fit; as if it were the prerogative of a prince not to have his ruin prevented by good counsel. But, as to the prophet's safety, he promises him, upon the word of a king, and confirms his promise with an oath, that no advantage should be taken against him for it; I will neither put thee to death, nor deliver thee into the hands of those that will, v. 16. This, he thought, was a mighty favour, and yet Nebuchadnezzar and Belshazzar, when Daniel read their doom, not only protected him, but preferred and rewarded him, Dan. ii. 29, 48. Zedekiah's oath on this occasion but forlorn, and ever that, altho' given in an oath, yet no advantage should be taken against him for it; and in all our dealings both with ourselves and others, we ought to consider this, that the living God made us these souls.

3. The good advice that Jeremiah gave him, with good reasons why he should take it, not from any prudence or politics of his own, but in the name of God, the Lord of hosts and God of Israel; not as a statesman, but as a prophet, he adviseth him by all means to surrender himself and the city to the king of Babylon's princes; "Go forth to them, and make the best terms thou canst with them," v. 17. This was the advice he had given to the people, (v. 2.) and before, (ch. xxi. 9.) to submit to divine judgments, and not think of contending with them. Note, In dealing with God, which is good counsel to the meanest, is so to the greatest, for there is no respect of persons with him. To persuade him to take this counsel, he sets before him good and evil, life and death. (1.) If he will tamely yield, he shall save his children from the sword, and Jerusalem from the flames. The white flag is yet hung out; if he will but acknowledge God's justice, he shall experience his mercy; The city shall not be delivered into their hand, and the sword shall not destroy their house. But, (2.) If he will obstinately stand it out, it will be the ruin both of his house and Jerusalem; (v. 18.) for when God judges he will overcome. This is the case of sinners with God; let them humbly submit to his grace and government, and they shall live; let them take hold on his strength, that they may make peace, and they shall make peace; but if they harden their hearts against his proposals, it will certainly be to their destruction; they must either bend or break.

4. The objection which Zedekiah made against the prophet's advice, v. 19. Jeremiah spake to him by prophecy, in the name of God, and therefore if he had had a due regard to the divine authority, wisdom, and goodness, as soon as he under stood what the king should say, and his advice, he immediately have acquiesced in it, and resolved to observe it without disputing; but, as if it had been the dictate only of Jeremiah's prudence, he advances it some prudential considerations of his own; but human wisdom is folly when it contradicts the divine counsels. All he suggests, is, "I am afraid not of the Chaldeans, their princes and officers, but of the very name of the Chaldeans, who have such enemies to the Chaldeans; when they see me follow them, who had so much opposed their going, they will laugh at me, and say, Art thou also become weak as water?"

JEREMIAH, XXXIX.

Isa. xiv. 10. Now, (1.) It was not at all likely that he should be thus exposed and ridiculed, that the Chaldeans should so far gratify the Jews, or trample upon him, as to deliver him into their hands; nor that the Jews, who were themselves captives, should be in such a gay humour, as to make a jest of the misery of their prince. Note, We often frighten ourselves from our duty by foolish, causeless, groundless fears, that are merely the creatures of our own fancy and imagination. (2.) If he should be taunted at a little by the Jews, could he not despise it all if it were done to him? Who then would do it him? Note, Those have very weak and fretful spirits indeed, that cannot bear to be laughed at for that which is both their duty and their interest. (3.) Though it had been really the greatest personal mischief that he could have imagined it to be, yet he ought to have ventured it, in obedience to God, and for the preservation of his family and city. He thought it would be looked upon as a piece of cowardice to surrender, whereas it would be really an instance of true courage cheerfully to bear a lesser evil, the mocking of the Jews, for the avoiding of a greater, the ruin of his family and kingdom.

3. The pressing importance with which Jeremiah followed the advice he had given the king. He would have him that the well of God would be the more the thing he feared should come upon him; (v. 20.) They shall not deliver thee up, but treat thee as becomes thy character. He begs of him, after all the foolish games he had played, to manage wisely the last stake, and now at length to do well for himself: Obey, I beseech thee, the voice of the Lord, because it is his voice, so it shall be well unto thee. But he tells him what would be the consequence if he would not obey. (1.) He himself would fall into the hands of the Chaldeans, as implacable enemies, whom he might now make his friends, by throwing himself into their hands. If he must fall, he should contrive how to fall easily; Thus shalt thou not escape, as thou hast hope to do, v. 23. (2.) He would himself be chargeable with the destruction of Jerusalem, which he pretended a concern for the preservation of: Thus shalt thou cause this city to be burned with fire, for by a little submission and self-denial thou mightest have prevented it. Thus subjects often suffer for the pride and wilfulness of their rulers, who should be their protectors, but prove their destroyers. (3.) Whereas he causelessly feared an unjust reproach for surrendering his city, he fell under a just reproach for standing it out, and that from worse too, v. 22. The court-ladies who were left when Jehoiakim and Jehoiachin were carried away, will now at length fall into the hands of the enemy, and they shall say, The men of thy peace, whom thou didst consult with, and confide in, and who promised thee peace if thou wouldst be ruled by them; they have set thee up, and now have encouraged thee to be less by the women, when all his wives and children shall be made a prey to the conquerors, v. 23. Note, What we seek to avoid by sin, will be justly brought upon us by the righteousness of God. And those that decline the way of duty, for fear of reproach, will certainly meet with much greater reproach in the way of obedience. The fear of the wicked, it shall come upon him, Prov. x. 24.

6. The care which Zedekiah took to keep this conference private; (v. 24.) Let no man know of these words. He does not at all incline to take God's counsel, nor so much as promise to consider it, for so Jeremiah has been to the calls of God, and so wilful in the ways of sin, that though he had good counsel given him, he seems to be given up to walk in his own counsels. He has nothing to object against Jeremiah's advice, and yet he will not follow it. Many hear God's words, but will not do them. (1.) Jeremiah is charged to let no man know of what had past between the king and him. Zedekiah was concerned about his private affairs, not so much for Jeremiah's safety, (for he knew that his goodness could do him no hurt without his permission,) but for his own reputation. Note, Many have really a better affection to good men and good things than they are willing to own. God's prophets are manifest in their consciences, (2 Cor. v. 11,) but they care not for manifesting that to the world; they would rather do them a kindness than have it known that they do: such, it is to be feared, love the praise of men more than the praise of God.

(2.) He is instructed what to say to the princes, if they should examine him about it. He must tell them that he was petitioning the king not to remand him back to the house of Jonathan the scribe, (v. 25, 26,) and he did tell them so, (v. 27,) and, no doubt, in a manner well calculated to get a favourable opinion of him. It was his chance of engaging the king's favour; so, had this been no lie or equivocation, but a part of the truth, which it was lawful for him to put them off with when he was under no obligation at all to tell them the whole truth. Note, Though we must be harmless as doves, so as never to tell a wilful lie, yet we must be wise as serpents, so as not needlessly to expose ourselves to danger by telling all we know.

CHAP. XXXIX.

As the prophet Isaiah, after he had largely foretold the deliverance out of all our enemies, and the king of Assyria, gave a particular narrative of the story, that it might appear how exactly the event answered to the prediction, so the prophet Jeremiah, after he had largely foretold the delivering of Jerusalem into the hands of the king of Babylon, gives a particular account of that sad event for the same reason. That melancholy story we have in this chapter, which serves to disprove the false, flattering prophets, and to confirm the word of God's messengers. We are here told, 1. That Jerusalem, after eighteen months' siege, was taken by the Chaldean army, v. 1. 3. 2. That king Zedekiah, attempting to make his escape after the setting of the Babylonians, was made a captive to the king of Babylon, v. 4. 7. 11. That Jerusalem was burnt to the ground, and the people carried captive, except the poor, v. 8. 10. 14. That the Chaldeans were very kind to Jeremiah, and took particular care of him, v. 11. 14. 15. That Ebed-melech too, for his kindness, had a protection from God himself in this day of desolation, v. 15. 18.

1. In the ninth year of Zedekiah king of Judah, in the tenth month, came Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and all his army against Jerusalem, and they besieged it. 2. And in the eleventh year of Zedekiah, in the fourth month, the ninth day of the month, the city was broken up. 3. And all the princes of the king of Babylon came in, and sat in the middle gate, even Nergal-shar-ezer, Sanger-nebo, Sarsecthim, Rab-saris, Nergal-shar-ezer, Rab-mag, with all the residue of the princes of the king of Babylon. 4. And it came to pass that when Zedekiah the king of Judah saw them, and all the men of war, then they fled, and went forth out of the city by night, by the way of the king's garden, the gate betwixt the two walls; and he went out the way of the plain. 5. But the Chaldeans' army pursued after them, and overtook Zedekiah in the plains of Jericho: and when they had taken him, they brought him up to Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon to Riblah, in the land of Hamath, where he gave judgment upon him. 6. Then the king of Babylon slew the sons of Zedekiah in Riblah before his eyes: also the king of Babylon slew all the nobles of Judah. 7. Moreover, he put out Zedekiah's eyes, and bound him with chains, to carry him to Babylon. 8. And the Chaldeans burned the king's house, and the houses of the people, with fire, and brake down the walls of Jerusalem. 9. Then Nebuzaradan, the captain of the guard, carried away captive into Babylon the remnant of the people that remained in the city, and those that fell away, that fell to him, with the rest of the people that remained. 10. But Nebuzaradan, the captain of the guard, left of the poor of the people, which had nothing, in the land of Judah, and gave them vineyards and fields at the same time.

We were told, in the close of the foregoing chapter, that Jeremiah abode patiently in the court of the prison, until the day that Jerusalem was taken. He gave the princes no further disturbance by his prophecying, nor they him by their persecutions, for he had no more to say than what he had said, and, the siege being carried on briskly, God found them other work to do. See here what it came to.

1. The city is at length taken by storm; for how could it hold out when God himself fought against it? Nebuchadnezzar's army sat down before it in the ninth year of Zedekiah, in the tenth month, (v. 1.) in the depth of winter. Nebuchadnezzar himself soon after retired to take his pleasure, and left his generals to carry on the siege: they intermitted it awhile, but soon renewed it with redoubled force and vigour. At length, in the eleventh year, in the fourth month, about midsummer, they entered the city, the soldiers being so weakened by famine, and all their provisions being now spent, that they were not able to make any resistance, v. 2. Jerusalem was so strong a place, that nobody would have believed the enemy could ever have entered its gates, Lam. iv. 12. But sin had provoked God to withdraw his protection, and then, like Samson when his hair is cut, it is weak where it ought to be strong. 2. The princes of the king of Babylon take possession of the middle gate, v. 3. Some think that it was the same with that which is called the second gate, (Zeph. i. 10.) which is supposed to be in the middle wall that divided between one part of the city and the other; here they cautiously made a halt, and durst not go forward into so large a city, among men that perhaps would sell their lives as dear as they could, until they had given directions for the searching of all places, that they might not be surprised by any ambush. They sat in the middle gate, from thence to take a view of the city, and give orders. The princes are here named, rough and unclean names they are, to intimate what a sad change sin had made; there where Eliakim and Hilkiah, who bare the name of the God of Israel, used to sit, now sit Nergal-sharezer, and Sargar-nebo, &c. who bare the names of the heathen gods. Rib-sar'is and Rab-mag are supposed to be not the names of distinct persons, but the other and the great generals in the gate. And now we see, what Jeremiah prophesied long since, (ch. i. 15.) that the faces of the kingdoms of the north should set every one against the entering of the gates of Jerusalem; justly do the princes of the heathen set up themselves there, where the gods of the heathen had been so often set up.

3. Zedekiah having, in disguise perhaps, seen the princes of the king of Babylon take possession of one of the gates of the city, thought it high time to shift for his own safety, and, loaded with guilt and fear, he went out of the city, under no other protection but that of the night, (v. 4.) which soon failed him, for he was discovered, pursued, and overtaken; though he made the best of his way, he could make nothing of it, could not get forward, but in the plains of Jericho fell into the hands of the pursuers; (v. 5.) and thence he was brought prisoner to Riblah, where the king of Babylon passed sentence upon him as a rebel, not sentence of death, but, one may almost say, a worse thing. For, (1.) He slew his sons before his eyes, and they must all be little, some of them infants, for Zedekiah himself was now but thirty-two years of age. The deaths of these sweet babes must needs be so many deaths to himself, especially when he considered that his own obstinacy was the cause of all of them. As to what is told of this thing; (ch. xxxviii. 23.) They shall bring forth thy wives and children to the Chaldeans. (2.) He slew all the nobles of Judah, (v. 6.) probably not those princes of Jerusalem who had advised him to this desperate course, (it would be a satisfaction to him to see them cut off,) but the great men of the country, who were innocent of the matter. (3.) He ordered Zedekiah to have his eyes put out, (v. 7.) so condemning him to darkness, for life, which had shut his eyes against the clear light of God's word, and was of those princes who will not understand, but walk on in darkness, Ps. lxxxvii. 5. (4.) He bound him with two brazen chains of fetters, (so the margin reads it,) to carry him away to Babylon, there to spend the rest of his days in misery. All this sad story we had before, 2 Kings xxv. 4, &c.

4. Some time after, the city was burnt, temple and palace and all, and the wall of it broken down, v. 8. "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem! this comes of killing the prophets, and stoning them that were sent to thee. O Zedekiah, Zedekiah! this thou mightest have prevented, if thou wouldst but have taken God's counsel, and yielded in time." The place that was left were all enclosed again captive to Babylon, v. 9. Now we must bid a final farewell to the land of their nativity, that pleasant land, and to all their possessions and enjoyments in it; must be driven some hundreds of miles, like beasts, before their conquerors, that were now their cruel masters; must lie at their mercy in a strange land, and be servants to them who would be sure to rule them with rigour. The land is originally a Chaldean word, and is often used for Jerusalem, as the Chaldean paraphrase, as if the Chaldeans, when they were lords, tyramized more than any other: we have reason to think that the poor Jews had reason to say so. Some few were left behind, but they were the poor of the people, that had nothing to lose, and therefore never made any resistance. And they not only had their liberty, and were left to carry at borne, but the captain of the guard gave them vineyards and fields at the same time, such as they were never masters of before, ver. 10. Observe here, (1.) The wonderful chances of Providence; some are abused, others advanced, (1 Sam. ii. 5.) the hungry are filled with good things, and the rich sent empty away. The ruin of some proves the rise of others. Let therefore rejoice as though ye were not in our abundance, and weep as though we were not, in our distresses. (2.) The just retributions of Providence; the rich had been proud oppressors, and now they were justly punished for their injustice; the poor had been patient sufferers, and now they are graciously rewarded for their patience, and amends made them for all their losses; for, verily there is a recompense to every thing in earth, even in this world, much more in the other.

11. Now Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon gave charge concerning Jeremiah to Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard, saying, 12. Take him, and look well to him, and do him no harm; but do unto him even as he shall say unto thee. 13. So Nebuzar-adan, the captain of the guard, sent, and Nebushashan, Rab-saris, and Nergal-sharezer, Rab-mag, and all the king of Babylon's princes, 14. Even they sent, and took Jeremiah out of the court of the prison, and committed him unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan, that he should carry him home: so he dwelt among the people. 15. Now the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah, while he was shut up in the court of the prison, saying, 16. Go and speak to Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I will bring my words upon this city for evil, and not for good; and they shall be accomplished in that day before thee. 17. For I will deliver thee in that day, saith the Lord; and thou shalt not be given into the hand of the men of whom thou art afraid. 18. For I will surely deliver thee, and thou shalt not fall by the sword, but thy life shall be for a prey unto thee; because thou hast put thy trust in me, saith the Lord.

Here we must sing of mercy, as in the former part of the chapter we sang of judgment, and must sing unto God of both. We may observe here,

I. A gracious providence concerning Jeremiah. When Jerusalem was laid in ruins, and all men's hearts failed them for fear, then might he lift up his head with comfort, knowing that his redemption drew nigh, as Christ's followers, when the second destruction of Jerusalem was hastening on, Luke xxi. 28. Nebuchadnezzar had given particular orders that care should be taken of him, and that he should be in all respects well used, ver. 11, 12. Nebuzar-adan and the rest of the king of Babylon's princes observed these orders, and discharged him out of prison, and did every thing to make him easy; ver. 13, 14. Now let us look upon this,

1. As a very generous act of Nebuchadnezzar, who, though he was a haughty potentate, yet took cognizance of this poor prophet; doubtless he had received information concerning him from the de-servers, that he had foretold the king of Babylon's successes against Judah and other countries, till he had pressed his prince and people to submit to him, and that he had suffered very hard things for so doing; and in consideration of all this, (though perhaps he might have heard also that he had foretold the destruction of Babylon at length,) he gave him the extraordinary marks of his favour. Note, It is the character of God's people to grudge to God for the services and sufferings of the nearest. It was honourably done of the king, to give this charge, even before the city was taken, and of the captains to observe it, even in the heat of action, and it is recorded for imitation.

2. As a reproach to Zedekiah and the princes of Israel; they put him in at prison, and the king of Babylon and his princes put him into God's people and ministers have often found fairer and kinder usage among strangers and infidels, than among those that call themselves of the holy city. St. Paul found more favour and justice with king Agrippa than with Ananias the high-priest.

3. As the performance of God's promise to Jeremiah, in recompense for his services, (ch. xv. 11.) I will cause him to suffer for the iniquity of Babylon. Jeremiah had been faithful to his trust as a prophet, and now God approves himself faithful to him, and the promise he had made him. Now he is comforted, according to the time wherein he had been afflicted, and sees thousands fall on each hand, and himself safe. The false prophets fell by these judgments which they said should never come, (ch. xlv. 19.) he must needs be afraid of evil, Jeremiah thought never the worse of his deliverance for its coming by the hand of the king of Babylon, but saw the misery the more terrible to them. The true prophet escaped those judgments which he said would come, and that made his escape the more comfortable to him. The same that were the instruments of punishing the persecutors, were the instruments of relieving the persecuted; and Jeremiah thought never the worse of his deliverance for its coming by the hand of the king of Babylon, but saw the misery the more of the hand of God in it. A fuller account of this matter we shall meet with in the next chapter.

II. A gracious message to Ebed-melech, to assure him of a recompense for his kindness to Jeremiah. This message was sent him by Jeremiah himself, who, when he returned him thanks for his kindness to him, thus turned him over to God to be his servant. He had delivered a prophet in the name of a prophet, and therefore he had a prophet's reward. This message was delivered to him immediately after he had done that kindness to Jeremiah, but it is mentioned here after the taking of the city, to show that as God was kind to Jeremiah at that time, so he was to Ebed-melech for his sake; and it was a token of special favour to both, and they ought so to account of it that they were not involved in any of the common calamities. Jeremiah is bid to tell him,

1. That God would certainly bring upon Jerusalem the ruin that had been long and often threatened; and, for his further satisfaction, in having been kind to Jeremiah, he should see him abundantly proved a true prophet, ver. 16. 2. That God took notice of the fear he had of the judgments coming. Though he was but a man, both in the service of God, yet he was afraid of the raw of God. The enemies were men of whom he was afraid. Note, God knows how to adapt and accommodate his comforts to the fears and griefs of his people, for he knows their souls in adversity. 3. That he shall be delivered from having a share in the common calamity; I will deliver thee, I will surely deliver thee. He had been instrumental to deliver God's prophet out of the danger of and near God, and must be permitted to deliver him for he will be behind-hand with none for any service they do, directly or indirectly, for his name: 4. Thou hast saved Jeremiah's life, that was pre-
JEREMIAH, XL.

We have attended Jerusalem's funeral pile, and have taken our leave of the captives that were carried to Babylon, not expecting to hear any more of them in this book, perhaps we may in Ezekiel, and must in this and the four following chapters observe the story of those few Jews that were to remain in the land, after their brethren were carried away, and it is a very melancholy story; for, though at first there were some hopeful prospects of their well-doing, they soon appeared as obstinate in sin and unrepentant as all the rest of the judgments, threatened in Deut. xxxiii. being brought upon them, that which in the last verse of that dreadful chapter completes the threatenings, was accomplished, The Lord shall bring them into Egypt again. In this chapter we have, I. A more particular account of Jeremiah's discharge, and his settlement with Gedaliah, v. 1-6. II. The great resort of the Jews that remained scattered in the neighbouring countries to Gedaliah, who was made their governor under the king of Babylon; and the good posture they were in, for awhile under him, v. 7-12. III. A treacherous design formed against Gedaliah, by Ishmael, which we shall find executed in the next chapter, v. 13-16.

1. The word which came to Jeremiah from the Lord, after that Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had let him go from Ramah, when he had taken him, being bound in chains among all that were carried away captive of Jerusalem and Judah, which were carried away captive unto Babylon. 2. And the captain of the guard took Jeremiah, and said unto him, The Lord thy God hath pronounced this evil upon this place. 3. Now the Lord hath brought it, and done according as he hath said: because ye have sinned against the Lord, and have not obeyed his voice, therefore this thing is come upon you. 4. And now, behold, I loose thee this day from the chains which were upon thy hand. If it seem good unto thee to come with me into Babylon, come, and I will look well unto thee; but if it seem ill unto thee to come with me into Babylon, forbear: behold, all the land is before thee: whither it seemeth good and convenient for thee to go, thither go. 5. Now, while he was not yet gone back, he said, Go back also to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, whom the king of Babylon hath made governor over all the cities of Judah, and dwell with him among the people; or go wheresoever it seemeth convenient unto thee to go. So the captain of the guard gave him victuals and a reward, and let him go. 6. Then went Jeremiah unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, to Mizpah, and dwelt with him among the people that were left in the land.

The title of this part of the book, which begins the chapter, seems unsuited, (The word which came to Jeremiah;) for here is nothing of prophecy, in the sense of that title, but is found in ch. xxxiii. 7, where we have a message that God sent by Jeremiah to the captains and the people that remained, and the story betwixt, and that is only to introduce that prophecy, and show the occasion of it, that it may be the better understood; and Jeremiah, being himself concerned in the story, was the better able to give an account of it. In these verses, we have Jeremiah's adhering, by the advice of Nebuzar-adan, to Gedaliah. It should seem that Jeremiah was very honourably fetched out of the court of the prison by the king of Babylon's princes, (ch. xxxix. 14.) but afterward, being found among the people in the city, when orders were given to the inferior officers to bind all they found that were of any fashion, in order to their being carried captives to Babylon, he, through ignorance and mistake, was bound among the rest, and hurried away. Poor man! he seems to have been born to hardship and abuse; a man of sorrows indeed! But when the captives were brought managed to Ramah, not far off, where a council of war, or court martial, was held, for giving orders concerning them, Jeremiah was seen distinguished from the rest, and, by special order of the court, was discharged.

1. The captain of the guard solemnly owns him to be a true prophet; (v. 2, 3.) "The Lord thy God, whose messenger thou hast been, and in whose name thou hast spoken, hath by thee pronounced this evil upon this place; they had fair warning given them of it, but they would not take the warning, and now the Lord hath brought it, and as thy worthy mouth said it, so by my hand, he added." He seems thus to justify what he had done, and to glory in it, that he had been God's instrument to fulfill that which Jeremiah had been his messenger to foretell; and upon that account it was indeed the most glorious action he had ever done. He tells all the people that were now in chains before him, "It is because ye have sinned against the Lord, that this thing is come upon you. The princes of Israel would never have brought to acknowledge this, though it was as evident as if it had been written with a sunbeam; but this heathen prince plainly sees it, that a people that had been so favoured as they had been by the divine goodness, would never have been abandoned thus, had they not been very provoking. The people of Israel had been often told from the prophets, and by his own mouth, he said it so by his hand, for he had heard the word of the Lord." Note, Sooner or later, men shall be made sensible that their sins is the cause of all their miseries.

2. He gives him free leave to dispose of himself as he thought fit. He loosed him, or in his chains a little time; and (4.) invited him to come along with him to Babylon, not as a captive, but as a friend, as a companion; and I will set my eye upon thee, so the word is: "Not only I will look well to thee, but I will show thee respect, will countenance thee, and will see that thou be safe and well provided for."
If he was not disposed to go to Babylon, he might dwell where he pleased in his own country, for it was all now at the disposal of the conquerors. He may go to Anathoth if he please, and enjoy the field he had purchased there. A great change with this good man! He that but lately was tossed from one prison to another, may now walk at liberty from one possession to another.

3. He advises him to go to Gedaliah, and settle with him. This Gedaliah was made governor of the land under the king of Babylon, an honest Jew, who (it is probable) betimes went over with his friends to the Chaldeans, and approved himself so well, that he had this great trust put into his hands; v. 2. While Jeremiah was not yet gone back, but stood considering what he should do, Nebuzar-adan, perceiving him neither inclined to go to Babylon, nor determined whether to go, turned the scale for him, and bid him by all means go to Gedaliah. Suddenly thoughts sometimes prove wise ones. But when he gave this counsel, he did not design to oblige him by it, nor will he take it ill if he do not follow it. Go wheresoe'er it seems most convenient unto thee. It is friendly in such cases to give advice, but unwise to prescribe, and to be angry if our advice be not taken. Let Jeremiah steer what course he pleases, Nebuzar-adan will agree to it, and believe he does for the best. Nor does he only give him his liberty, and an approbation of the measures he shall take, but provides for his support; he gave him the remainder of the money, either in clothes of money, and so let him go. See how considerate the captain of the guard was in his kindness to Jeremiah. He set him at liberty, but it was in a country that was laid waste, and in which, as the posture of it now was, he might have perished, though it was his own country, if he had not thus kindly furnished him with necessaries. Jeremiah not only accepted his kindness, but took his advice, and went to Gedaliah, to Mizpah, and dwelt with him, v. 6. Whether we may herein commend his prudence, I know not; the event does not commend it, for it did not prove at all to his comfort. However, we may commend his pious affection to the land of Israel, that, unless he were forced out of it, as Ezekiel and Daniel and other good men were, he would not forsake it, but chose rather to dwell with the poor in the holy land, than with princes in an unholy one.

7. Now when all the captains of the forces which were in the fields, even they and their men, heard that the king of Babylon had made Gedaliah the son of Ahikam governor in the land, and had committed unto him men, and women, and children, and of the poor of the land, of them that were not carried away captive to Babylon; 8. Then they came to Gedaliah to Mizpah, even Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and Johanan and Jonathan the sons of Kareah, and Sedai the son of Tanhumeth, and the sons of Ephai the Netophathite, and Jezaniah the son of a Maachathite, they and their men.

9. And Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, swore unto them, and to their men, saying, Fear not to serve the Chaldeans: dwell in the land, and serve the king of Babylon, and it shall be well with you. 10. As for me, behold, I will dwell at Mizpah, to serve the Chaldeans which will come unto us: but ye, gather ye wine, and summer-fruits, and oil, and put them in your vessels, and dwell in your cities that ye have taken. 11. Likewise, when all the Jews that were in Moab, and among the Ammonites, and in Edom, and that were in all the countries, heard that the king of Babylon had left a remnant of Judah, and that he had set over them Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan: 12. Even all the Jews returned out of all places whither they were driven, and came to the land of Judah, to Gedaliah, unto Mizpah, and gathered wine and summer-fruits very much. 13. Moreover, Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were in the fields, came to Gedaliah to Mizpah, 14. And said unto him, Dost thou certainly know that Baalsi the king of the Chaldeans hath sent Ishmael the son of Nethaniah to slay thee? But Gedaliah the son of Ahikam believed them not. 15. Then Johanan the son of Kareah spake to Gedaliah in Mizpah secretly, saying, Let me go, I pray thee, and I will shay Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and no man shall know it: wherefore should he slay thee, that all the Jews which are gathered unto thee should be scattered, and the remnant in Judah perish? 16. But Gedaliah the son of Ahikam said unto Johanan the son of Kareah, Thou shalt not do this thing; for thou speakest falsely of Ishmael.

We have, in these verses,

I. A bright sky opening upon the remnant of the Jews that were left in their own land, and a comfortable prospect given them of some peace and quietness, yet many years of trouble and terror which they had been afflicted. Jeremiah the prophet had never in his prophecies spoken of any such good days reserved for the Jews immediately after the captivity; but Providence seemed to raise and encourage such an expectation, and it would be to that miserable people as life from the dead. Observe the particulars.

1. Gedaliah, one of themselves, is made governor in the land, by the king of Babylon, v. 7. To show that he designed to make and keep them easy, he did not give this commission to one of the princes of Babylon, but to one of their brethren, who, they might be sure, would seek their peace. He was the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, one of the princes. We read of his father, (ch. xxvi. 24.) that he took Jeremiah's part against the people. He seems to be a man of great wisdom and a mild temper, and under whose government the few that were left might be very happy. The king of Babylon had a good opinion of him, and reposed a confidence in him, for to him he committed all that were left behind.

There is great resort to him from all parts, and all those that were now the Jews of the dispersion came and put themselves under his government and protection. (1.) The great men that had escaped the Chaldeans by force, came and quietly submitted to Gedaliah for their own safety and common preservation. Divers are here named; (v. 8.) they came with their men, their servants, their soldiers, and so strengthened one another; and the king of Babylon had such a good opinion of Gedaliah his delegate, that he was not at all jealous of the increase of their numbers, but rather pleased with it. (2.) The poor men that had escaped by flight into the neighbouring countries of Moab, Ammon, and Edom, were induced by the love they bare to their own land, to return to it again, as soon as they heard that Gedaliah was in authority. 11, 12. The Chaldeans, to would be an unsafe, unpleasant country, if there were no government or governors there, and those that loved it dearly would not come back to it till they heard there were. It would be a great reviving to them that were dispersed, to come together again; that were dispersed into foreign countries, to come together in their own country; that were under strange kings, to be under a governor of their own nation. See here, how God remembered mercy, and yet admitted some of them upon a further trial of their obedience.

3. The model of this new government is drawn up and settled by an original contract, which Gedaliah confirmed with an oath, a solemn oath; (v. 9.) He swore to them, and to their men, it is probable, according to the warrant and instructions he had received from his masters in Babylon, and he determined not to give them these assurances. (1.) They must own the property of their lands to be in the Chaldeans; “Come,” says Gedaliah, “fear not to serve the Chaldeans. Fear not the sin of it.” Though the divine law had forbidden them to make leagues with the heathen, yet the divine sentence had obliged them to yield to the king of Babylon. “Fear not the reproach of it, and the disapprobation it will be to your nation; it is what God has brought you to, to have bound you to, and it is no disgrace to any to comply with him. Fear not the consequences of it, as if it would certainly make you and yours miserable; no, you will find the king of Babylon not so hard a landlord as you apprehended him to be; if you will but live peaceably, peaceably you shall live; disturb not the government, and it will not disturb you. Serve the king of Babylon, and it shall be well with you.” If they should make any difficulty of doing personal homage, or should be apprehensive of danger, when the Chaldeans should come among them, Gedaliah, probably by instruction from the king of Babylon, undertakes upon all occasions to act for them, and make their applications acceptable to the king; (v. 20.) “As for me, behold, I will dwell at Anathoth: I will dwell among them in the name of the whole body, if there be occasion, to receive orders, and to pay them their tribute when they come to us.” All that passes between them and the Chaldeans shall pass through his hand; and if the Chaldeans put such a confidence in him, surely his own countrymen may venture to do it. Gedaliah is willing thus to give them the assurance they want, without stinting them, and trusting them, but being apt to err (as many good men are) on the charitable side, it did not require an oath from them, that they would be faithful to him, else the following mischief might have been prevented. However, protection draws allegiance, though it be not sworn; and, by joining in with Gedaliah, they did, in effect, consent to the terms of government he offered, without taking the oath of allegiance to Babylon. But, (2.) Though they own the property of their lands to be in the Chaldeans, yet, upon that condition, they shall have the free enjoyment of them, and all the profits of them; (v. 10.) “Gather ye wine and summer-fruits, and take them for your own use; put them in your vessels, to be laid up for winter-store, as those do that live in a land of peace, and hope not the labour of your hand; yea, the labour of other people’s hands, for you reap what they sowed.” Or perhaps they were the spontaneous products of that fertile soil, for which none had laboured. And accordingly we find, (v. 11.) that they gathered wine and summer-fruits very much, such as were at present upon the ground, for their corn-harvest was over some time before Jerusalem was taken. While Gedaliah was in care for the public safety, he left them to enjoy the advantages of the public plenty, and, for ought appears, demanded no tribute from them; for he sought not his own private profit.

II. Here is a dark cloud gathering over this infant state, and threatening a dreadful storm. How soon is this hopeful prospect blasted! For when God begins in judgment he will make an end. It is here intimated to us,

1. That Bani the king of the Ammonites had a particular spite at Gedaliah, and was contriving to take him off; either out of malice to the nation of the Jews, whose welfare he hated the thought of, or a personal pique against Gedaliah, v. 14. Some make Bani to signify the queen-mother of the king of the Ammonites, or queen-dowager, as if she were the first mover of this bloody and treacherous design. One would have thought this little remnant might have been safe, when the great king of Babylon protected them; but it was not so, for he afraid or this petty prince or princess. Happy they that have the king of kings on their side, who can take the wise in their own craftiness; for the greatest earthly king cannot with all his power secure us against fraud and treachery.

2. That he employed Ishmael, the son of Netaniah, as the instrument of his malice, instigated him to murder Gedaliah; and that he might have a fair opportunity Go do it, he employed himself among his subjects, and promised him fealty. Nothing could be more barbarous than the design itself, nor more base than the method of compassing it. How wretchedly is human nature corrupted and degenerated, (even in those that pretend to the best blood,) when it is capable of admitting the thought of such abominable wickedness! Ishmael was of the seed royal, and would therefore be easily tempted to envy and hate one that set up for a governor in Judah, who was not, as he was, of David’s line, though he had ever so much of David’s spirit.

3. That Johanan, a brisk and active man, having got scent of this plot, informed Gedaliah of it, yet taking it for granted he could not but know of it before, the proofs of the matter being so very plain; and that he became furious, surely, at that time. He gave him private intelligence of it, (v. 15.) hoping he would then take the more notice of it. He prevailed his service to prevent it, by taking off Ishmael, whose very name was ominous to all the seed of Isaac; I will slay him. Wherefore should he slay thee? Herein he showed more courage and zeal than sense of justice; for, if it be lawful to kill for prevention, others can be safe, since malice always suspects the worst.

4. That Gedaliah, being a man of sincerity himself, would by no means give credit to the information given him of Ishmael’s treachery. He said, Thou speakest falsely of Ishmael. Herein he discovered more good humour than discretion, more of the innocency of the dove than the wisdom of the serpent. People may misunderstand and abuse one another, when they are jealous. Queen Elizabeth said, that she would believe no more evil of her people, than a mother would believe of her own children; yet many have been ruined by being over-confident of the fidelity of those about them.

CHAP. XLI.

It is a very tragical story that is related in this chapter, and shows that evil presages sinners. The black cloud that was gathering in the foregoing chapter, here bursts in a dreadful storm. Those few Jews that escaped their captivity were proud to think that they were still in their own land, when their brethren were gone they knew not whither; were fond of the wine and summer-fruits they had filled, and were very secure under Gedaliah's protectorship, when, on a sudden, even these remains prove ruins too. 1. Gedaliah is barbarously slain by Ismael, v. 3. II. All the Jews that were with him were slain likewise, (v. 3.) and a pit filled with their dead bodies, v. 9. III. Some devout men, to the number of twelve, that were going toward Jerusalem, were drawn in by Ismael, and murdered likewise, v. 7. Only ten of them escaped, v. 8. IV. Those that escaped the sword were taken prisoners by Ismael, and carried off toward the country of the Ammonites, v. 10. V. By the conduct and courage of some of them, the slaughter of the Jews is not revenged, yet the prisoners are recovered, and he now becomes their commander in chief, v. 11. 16.
VI. His project is to carry them into the land of Egypt,
(v. 17, 18.) which we shall hear more of in the next chapter.

1. NOW it came to pass in the seventh month, that Ismael the son of Nethaniah, the son of Elishama, of the seed royal, and the princess of the king, even ten men with him, came unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, to Mizpah; and there they did cast bread together in Mizpah. 2. Then arose Ismael the son of Nethaniah, and the ten men that were with him, and smote Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, with the sword, and slew him, whom the king of Babylon had made governor over the land. 3. Ismael also slew all the Jews that were with him, even with Gedaliah at Mizpah, and the Chaldeans that were found there, and the men of war. 4.
And it came to pass, the second day after he had slain Gedaliah, and no man knew it,
5. That there came certain from Shechem, from Shiloh, and from Samaria, even fourscore men, having their beards shaven, and their clothes rent, and having cut themselves, with offerings and incense in their hand, to bring them to the house of the Lord. 6. And Ismael the son of Nethaniah went forth from Mizpah to meet them, weeping all along as he went; and it came to pass, as he met them, he said unto them, Come to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam. 7. And it was so, when they came into the midst of the city, that Ismael the son of Nethaniah slew them, and cast them into the midst of the pit, he, and the men that were with him.
8. But ten men were found among them that said unto Ismael, Slay us not: for we have treasures in the field, of wheat, and of barley; and of oil, and of honey. So he forbare, and slew them not among their brethren. 9. Now the pit wherein Ismael had cast all the dead bodies of the men, whom he had slain because of Gedaliah, was it which Asa the king had made for fear of Baasha king of Israel; and Ismael the son of Nethaniah filled it with them that were slain. 10. Then Ismael carried away captive all the residue of the people that were in Mizpah, even the king's daughters, and all the people that remained in Mizpah, whom Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had committed to Gedaliah the son of Ahikan; and Ismael the son of Nethaniah carried them away captive, and departed to go over to the Ammonites.

It is hard to say which is more astonishing, God's permitting, or men's perpetrating, such villainies as here we have committed. Such base, barbarous, bloody work is here done by men, who by their birth and education would have been the best and mightiest men in the world, by the religion of just men, and this done upon those of their own nature, their own nation, their own religion, and now their brethren in affliction, when they were all brought under the power of the victorious Chal-deans, and smarting under the judgments of God, upon no provocation, nor with any prospect of adantage; all done, not only in cold blood, but with art and management. We have scarcely such an instance of perfidious cruelty in all the scripture;
so that with John, when he saw the woman drunk with the blood of the saints, we may well wonder with great admiration. But God permitted it for the completing of the ruin of an unhumbled people, and the filling up of the measure of their judgments, who had filled up the measure of their iniquities. Let it possess us with an indignation at the wickedness of men, and an awe of God's righteousness.

1. Ismael and his party treacherously killed Gedaliah himself in the first place. Though the king of Babylon had made him a great man, had given him a commission to be governor of the land which he had conquered; though God had made him a good man, and a great blessing to his country, and his agency for its welfare was as life from the dead; yet neither could secure him. Ismael was one of the seed royal, (v. 1.) and therefore jealous of Gedaliah's growing greatness, and enraged that he should merit and accept a commission under the king of Babylon. He had ten men with him, that were princes of the king too, guided by the same peevish resentment that he was; these had been with Gedaliah here, to put themselves under his protection, (ch. xi. 8.) and now came again to make him a visit; and they did eat bread together in Mizpah. He entertained them generously, and entertained no jealousy of them, notwithstanding the information given him by Johanan. They pretended friendship to him, and gave him no warning to stand on his guard; he was in sincerity friendly to them, and did all he could to oblige them, but they did eat bread with him lifted up the heel against him. They did not pick a quarrel with him, but watched an opportunity, when they had him alone, and assassinated him, v. 2.

2. They likewise put all to the sword that they found in arms there, both Jews and Chaldeans, all that were employed under Gedaliah, or were in any capacity to revenge his death, v. 3. As if enough of the blood of Israelites had not been shed by the Chaldeans, their own princes here mingled it with the blood of the Chaldeans. The vine-dressers and the husbandmen were busy in the fields, and knew nothing of this bloody massacre; so artfully was it carried on and concealed!

3. Some good, honest men, that were going all in tears to lament the desolations of Jerusalem, were drawn in by Ismael, and murdered with the rest.
Observe, (1.) From whence they came; (v. 3.)
from Shechem, Samaria, and Shiloh, places that had been famous, but were now reduced; they belonged to the ten tribes, but there were some in those countries that retained an affection for the worship of the God of Israel. (2.) Whither they were going; to the house of the Lord, the temple at Jerusalem, which, no doubt, they had heard of the destruction of, and were going to pay their respects to its ashes, to see its ruins, that their eye might affect their heart with sorrow for them. They favoured the dust thereof, Ps. cii. 14. They took offerings and incense in their hand, that if they should find any altar there, though it were but an altar of earth, and any priest ready to officiate, they might not be without something to offer; if not, yet they showed their good-will, as Abrahim, when he could not find an altar in Canaan, that he made for the Lord to be worshipped at, Genesis xii. 7. When the march was gone. The people of God used to go rejoicing to the house of the Lord, but these went in the habit of mourners, with their clothes rent, and their heads shaven; for the providence of God loudly called to weeping and mourning, because it was not with the faithful worshippers of God as in months past. (3.) How they were decoyed into a fatal snare by Ishmael's Malice. Hearing of their approach, he resolved to be the death of them too; so blood thirstily was he! He seemed as if he hated every one that had the name of an Israelite, or the face of an honest man; these pilgrims toward Jerusalem he had a spite to, for the sake of their errand. Ishmael went out to meet them with crocodile's tears, pretending to bewail the desolations of Jerusalem as much as they, and, to try how the stoop of God's people to the Lord's destruction, he courted them into the town, and found them to have a respect for him, which confirmed him in his resolution to murder them. He said, Come to Gedaliah, pretending he would have them come, and live with him, when really he intended that they should come, and die with him, v. 6. They had heard such a character of Gedaliah, that they were willing enough to be acquainted with him; but when he had them in the midst of the town, fell upon them, and slew them, (v. 7.) and, no doubt, took the offerings they had, and converted them to his own use; for he that would not stick at such a murder, would not stick at sacrilege. Notice is taken of his disposing of the dead bodies of these, and the rest that he had slain; he tumbled them all into a great pit, (v. 7.) the same pit that Asa king of Judah had dugged in the midst of the city, or adjoining to it, when he built or fortified Mizpah, (1 Kings xv. 22.) to be a frontier garrison against Baasha king of Israel, and for fear of him, v. 9. Note, Those that dig pits with a good intention know not what bad use they may be put to, one time or other. He slew so many, that he could not afford them each a grave, or would not do them so much honour, but threw them all promiscuously into one pit.

Among these last that were doomed to the slaughter, there were ten that obtained a pardon, by working, not on the compassion, but the covetousness, of those that had them at their mercy, v. 8. They said to Ishmael, when he was about to sack their blood, like an insatiable horse-leech, after that of their companions, Slay us not, for we have treasures in the field, will find death inexorable, and themselves wretchedly deceived. He carried off the people prisoners; the king's daughters, whom the Chaldeans cared not for troubling themselves with, when they had the king's sons; and the poor of the land, the vine-dressers and husbandmen, that were committed to Gedaliah's charge, were all led away prisoners toward the country of the Ammonites; (v. 10.) Ishmael probably intending to make a present of them, as the trophies of his barbarous victory, to the king of that country that set him on. This melancholy story is a warning to us, never to be secure in this world. Worse may be yet to come, when we think the worst is over; and that end of one trouble, which we fancy to be the end of all trouble, may prove to be the beginning of another, of a greater. These here thought, Surely the bitterness of death and of captivity is past; yet some died by the sword, and others went into captivity. When we think ourselves safe, and begin to be easy, destruction may come that way that we little expected it. There is many a ship wrecked in the harbour. We can never be sure of peace on this side heaven.

11. But when Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, heard of all the evil that Ishmael had done, 12. Then they took all the men, and went to fight with Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and found him by the great waters that are in Gibon. 13. Now it came to pass, that when all the people which were with Ishmael saw Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, then they were glad. 14. So all the people that Ishmael had carried away captive from Mizpah cast about, and returned, and went unto Johanan the son of Kareah. 15. But Ishmael the son of Nethaniah escaped from Johanan with eight men, and went to the Ammonites. 16. Then took Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, all the remnant of the people whom he had recovered from Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, from Mizpah, (after that he had slain Gedaliah the son of Ahikam,) even mighty men of war, and the women, and the children, and the eunuchs, whom he had brought again from Gibon: 17. And they departed, and dwelt in the habitation of Chimham, which is by Beth-lehem, to go to enter into Egypt. 18. Because of the Chaldeans: for they were afraid of them, because Ishmael the son of Nethaniah had slain Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, whom the king of Babylon made governor in the land.

It had been well if Johanan, when he gave information to Gedaliah of Ishmael's treacherous design, though he could not obtain leave to kill Ishmael, and to prevent it that way, yet had stayed with Gedaliah; for he, and his captains, and their forces, might have been a life-guard to Gedaliah, and terror to Ishmael, and so have prevented the mischief, without the effusion of blood: but it seems, they were out upon some expedition, perhaps no good one, and so were out of the way when they should have been upon the best service. Those that affect to ramble are many times out of their place when they are most needed. However, at length they heard of all the evil that Ishmael had done, (ver. 11,) and are resolved to try an after-game, with their forces, against those murderers.

1. We heartily wish Johanan could have taken revenge upon the murderers, but he prevailed only to rescue the captives. They that had shed so much blood, it was pity but their blood should have been shed; and it is strange that vengeance suffered them to live; yet it did. Johanan gathered what forces he could, and went to fight with Ishmael; (ver. 13,) to help the captives (for though he concealed it for a time, ver. 4,) yet murder will out,) and which way he was gone, he pursued him, and overtook him by the great pool of Gibeon, which we read of, 2 Sam. ii. 13. And upon his appearing with such a force, Ishmael's heart failed him, his guilty conscience flew in his face, and he durst not stand his ground against an enemy like this, who was so much his superior. The most cruel are often the most cowardly. The poor captives were glad when they saw Johanan, and the captains that were with him, looking upon them as their deliverers, (ver. 13,) and they immediately found a way to wheel about, and come over to them, (ver. 14,) Ishmael not offering to detain them when he saw Johanan. Note, Those that would be helped must help themselves. These captives stayed not till their conquerors were beaten, but took the first opportunity to make their escape, as soon as they saw their friends appear, and their enemies thereby disheartened. Ishmael quitted his prey, to save his life, and escaped with eight men, ver. 15. It seems, two of his ten men, that were his militia or assistants, spoken of, ver. 1, either deserted him, or were killed in the engagement; but he made the best of his way to the Ammonites, as a perfect renegade, that had quite abandoned all relation to the commonwealth of Israel, though he was of the seed royal, and we hear no more of him.

2. We heartily wish that Johanan, when he had rescued the captives, would have sat down quietly with them, and governed them peaceably, as Gedaliah did; but, instead of that, he is for leading them away; he did them as Ishmael had done, led them into the land of the Ammonites; so that though he got the command over them in a better way than Ishmael did, and honestly enough, yet he did not use it much better. Gedaliah, who was of a meek and quiet spirit, was a great blessing to them; but Johanan, who was of a fierce and restless spirit, was set over them for their hurt, and to complete their ruin, even after they were, as they thought, redeemed. Thus did God still walk contrary to them. (1.) The resolution of Johanan and the captains was very rash; nothing would serve them but they would go to enter into Egypt, (ver. 17,) and in order to that, they encamped for a time in the habitation of Chimham, by Bethlehem, David's city. Probably it was some land which David gave to Chimham, 1 Chron. xxvi. 26. Thereupon he returned to David's family, at the year of Jubilee, yet still bore the name of Chimham. Here Johanan made his head-quarters, steering his course towards Egypt, either from a personal affection to that country, or an ancient national confidence in the Egyptians for help in distress. Some of the mighty men of war, it seems, had escaped; these he took with him, and the women and children, whom he had recovered from Ishmael, who were thus emptied from vessel to vessel, because they were yet unchanged. (2.) The reason for this resolution was very frivolous. They pretended that they were afraid of the Chaldeans, that they would come and do I know not what with them, because Ishmael had killed Gedaliah, ver. 18. I cannot think they really had any apprehensions of danger upon this account; for though it is true that the Chaldeans had cause enough to resent the murder of their vicerey, yet they were not so unreasonable, or unjust, as to revenge upon those who appeared vigorously against the murderers. But they only made use of this as a sham to cover that corrupt inclination of their unbelieving ancestors, which was so strong in them, to return into Egypt. Those will justly lose their comfort in real fears, that excuse themselves in sin with pretended fears.

CHAP. XLII.

Johanan and the captains being strongly bent upon going into Egypt, either their affections or politics advising them to take that course, they had a great desire that God should direct them to do so too; like Balaam, who, when he was determined to go curse Israel, asked God leave. Here is, I. The fair bargain that was made between Jeremiah and them about consulting God in this matter, ver. 1. 6. II. The message at large which God sent them, in answer to their inquiry; in which, 1. They are commanded and encouraged to return to the land of Judah, and assured that if they did so, it should be well with them, ver. 7. 12. 2. They are forbidden to go to Egypt, and are plainly told that if they did, it would be their destruction, ver. 13. 15. 3. They are told that the simulation in their asking what God's will was in this matter, and disobedience when they were told what it was, and sentence is passed upon them for it, ver. 19. 22.

1. THEN all the captains of the forces, and Johanan the son of Kareah, and Jeznahm the son of Hoshiaiah, and all the people, from the least even to the greatest, came near, 2. And said unto Jeremiah the prophet, Let, we beseech thee, our supplication be accepted before thee, and pray for us unto the Lord thy God, even for all this remnant; (for we are left but a few of many, as thine eyes do behold us;) 3. That the Lord thy God may shew us the way wherein we may walk, and the thing that we may do. 4. Then Jeremiah the prophet said unto me, I have heard you; behold, I will pray unto the Lord your God according to your words, and it shall come to pass, that whatsoever thing the Lord shall answer you, I will declare it unto you; I will keep nothing back from you. 5. Then they said to Jeremiah, The Lord be a true and faithful witness between us, if we do not even according to all things for which the Lord thy God shall send thee to us. 6. Whether it be good, or whether it be evil, we will obey the voice of the Lord our God, to whom we send thee; that it may be well with us, when we obey the voice of the Lord our God.

We have reason to wonder how Jeremiah the prophet escaped the sword of Ishmael; it seems he did escape, and it was not the first time that the Lord hid him. It is strange also that in these violent turns he was not consulted before now, and his advice asked and taken. But it should seem as if they knew not that a prophet was among them; though this people were as brands plucked out of the fire, yet have they not returned to the Lord. This people has a revolving and a rebellious heart; and contempt of God and his providence, God and his prophets, is still the sin that most easily besets them. But now at length, to serve a turn, Jeremiah is sought out, and all the captains, Johanan himself not excepted, with all the people from the least to the greatest, make a vow to visit; they came near, (v. 1.) which intimates that hitherto they had kept at a distance from the prophet, and had been shy of him. Now here, 1. They desire him by prayer to ask direction from God what they should do in the present critical juncture, v. 2, 3. They express themselves wonderfully well. (1.) With great respect to the prophet. Though he was poor and low, and under their command, yet they apply themselves to him with humility and submissiveness, as petitioners for his assistance, which yet they intimate their own unworthiness of; Let, we beseech thee, our supplication be accepted before thee. They compliment him thus, in hopes to persuade him to say as they would have him say. (2.) With a great opinion of his interest in heaven; Pray for us, who know not how to pray for ourselves. Pray to the Lord thy God, for we are unworthy to call him ours, nor have we reason to expect any favour from him, (3.) With a great sense of the need of divine direction. They speak of themselves as objects of compassion; We are but a remnant, but a few of many; how easily will such a remnant be swallowed up, and yet it is pity that it should. Thine eyes see what distress we are in, what a plunge we are at; if thou cast not any thing, help us, (4.) With desire of divine direction; Let the Lord thy God take this ruin into his thoughts, and under his hand, and show us the way wherein we may walk, and may expect to have his presence with us, and the thing that we may do, the course we may take for our own safety. Note, In every difficult, doubtful case, our eye must be up to God for direction. They then might expect to be directed by a spirit of prophecy, which is now ceased; but we may still in faith pray to be guided by a spirit of wisdom in our hearts, and the hints of Providence. 2. Jeremiah faithfully promises them to pray for direction for them, and, whatever message God should send to them by him, he would deliver it to them just as he received it, without adding, altering, or diminishing, v. 4. Ministers may hence learn the great value of prayer, to desire their prayers; I will pray for you, according to your words. Though they had slighted him, yet, like Samuel, when he was slighted, he will not sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for them. 1 Sam. xii. 23. (2.) Conscientiously to advise those who desire their advice, as near as they can to the mind of God, not keeping back any thing that is friendly for them. He must put on the ploughing of an ear, but to declare to them the whole counsel of God, that they may approve themselves true to their trust. 3. They fairly promise that they will be governed by the will of God, as soon as they know what it is, (v. 5, 6.) and they had the impudence to appeal to God concerning their sincerity herein, though at the same time they dissemble; The Lord be a true and faithful Witness between us; do thou in the fear of God tell us truly what his mind is, and then we will in the fear of God comply with it; and for this, the Lord the Judge be judge between us. Note, Those that expect to have the benefit of good ministers' prayers, must conscientiously hearken to their preaching, and be governed by it, as far as it agrees with the mind of God. Nothing could be better said than this here, Whether it be good, or whether it be evil, we will obey the voice of the Lord our God, that it may be well with us. (1.) They now call God their God, for Jeremiah had encouraged them to call him so; (v. 4.) I will pray to the Lord your God. He is ours, and therefore we will obey his voice. Our relation to God strongly obliges us to obedience. (2.) They promise to obey his voice, because they sent the prophet to him to consult him. Note, We do not truly desire to know the mind of God if we do not fully resolve to comply with it when we do know it. (3.) It is an implicit, universal obedience that they here promise. They will do what God appoints them to do, whether it be good, or whether it be evil; Though it may seem evil to us, yet we will believe that if God commands it, it is certainly good, and we must not dispute it, but do it. Whatever God commands, whether it be easy or difficult, agreeable to our inclinations or contrary to them, whether it be cheap or costly, fashionable or unfashionable, whether we get or lose by it in our worldly interests, if it be our duty, we will do it. (4.) It is upon a very good consideration that they promise this, a reasonable and powerful one, that it may be well with us; which intimates a conviction that they could not expect it should be well with them upon any other terms. 7. And it came to pass, after ten days, that the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah. 3. Then called he Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces which were with him, and all the people, from the least even to the greatest, 9. And said unto them, Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, unto whom ye sent me to present your supplication before him; 10. If ye will still abide in this land, then will I build you, and not pull you down; and I will plant you, and not pluck you up: for I repent me of the evil that I have done unto you. 11. Be not afraid of the king of Babylon, of whom ye are afraid, be not afraid of him, saith the Lord: for I am with you to save you, and to deliver you from his hand. 12. And I will shew mercies unto you, that he may have mercy upon you, and cause you to return to your own land. 13. But if ye say, We will not dwell in this land, neither obey the voice of the Lord your God, 14. Saying, No; but we will go into the land of Egypt, where we shall see no war, nor hear the sound of a trumpet, nor have hunger of bread; and there will we dwell: 15. And now, therefore, hear the word of the Lord; ye remnant of Judah; Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, If ye wholly set your faces to enter into Egypt, and go to sojourn there; 16. Then it shall come to pass, that the sword, which ye feared, shall overtake you there in the land of Egypt, and the famine, whereof ye were afraid, shall follow close after you in Egypt; and there ye shall die. 17. So shall it be with all the men that set their faces to go into Egypt, to sojourn there; they shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pesticence: and none of them shall remain or escape from the evil that I will bring upon them. 18. For thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, As mine anger and my fury hath been poured forth upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem; so shall my fury be poured forth upon you, when ye shall enter into Egypt: and ye shall be an execration, and an astonishment, and a curse,

and a reproach; and ye shall see this place

no more. 19. The Lord hath said concerning you, O ye remnant of Judah, Go ye not into Egypt: know certainly that I have abominatid you this day. 20. For ye dissembled in your hearts, when ye sent me unto the Lord your God, saying, Pray for us unto the Lord our God; and accordingly unto all that the Lord our God shall say, so declare unto us, and we will do it.

21. And now I have this day declared it to you; but ye have not obeyed the voice of the Lord your God, nor any thing for the which he hath sent me unto you. 22. Now, therefore, know certainly that ye shall die

by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence, in the place whither ye desire to go, and to sojourn.

We have here the answer which Jeremiah was sent to deliver to those who employed him to ask counsel of God.

1. It did not come immediately, not till ten days after, v. 7. They were thus long held in suspense, perhaps to punish them for their hypocrisy, or to show that Jeremiah did not speak of himself, nor what he would; for he could not speak when he would, but must wait for instructions. However, it teaches us to continue waiting upon God for direction in our way. The vision is for an appointed time, and at the end it shall speak.

2. When it did come, he delivered it publicly, both to those to whom he had sent, and to all people, from the meanest to those in the highest station; he delivered it fully and faithfully as he received it, as he had promised that he would keep nothing back from them.

If Jeremiah had been to direct them by his own prudence, perhaps he could not have told what to advise them to, the case was so difficult; but what he has to advise, is what the Lord the God of Israel will do. 36. They have been going out in their own men, that they may stay in it, and a duty to stay in it.

Let those whose lot is in Canaan, never quit it while they can keep it. It had been enough to oblige them, if God had only said, "I charge you upon your allegiance, to abide still in the land;" but he rather persuades them to it as a Friend than commands it as a Prince.

(1.) He expresses a very tender concern for them in their present calamitous condition; It repented me of the evil that I have done unto you. Though they had shown small sign of their repenting of their sins, yet God, as one grieved for the misery of Israel, (Judg. x. 16.) begins to repent of the judgments he had brought upon them for their sins.

Not that he changed his mind, but he was very ready to change his way, and to return in mercy to them. God’s time to repent himself concerning his servants is when he sees that, as here, their strength is gone, and there is none shut up or left, Deut.

(2.) He answers the argument they had against abiding in this land; they feared the king of Babylon, (ch. xii. 18.) lest he should come, and avenge

the death of Gedaliah upon them, though they were no way accessible to it, nay, had witnessed against it. The surmise was foreign and unreasonable; but if there had been any ground for it, it engaged God to say to you, Ye shall be afraid of the king of Babylon, though he is a man of great might and little mercy, and a very arbitrary prince, whose will is a law, and therefore you are afraid he will, upon this pretence, though without colour of reason, take advantage against you; be not afraid of him, for that fear will bring a snare:

fear not him, for I am with you; and if God be for you, who can be against you?" Then God provided an obviatation to silence the even the causeless fears of his people, which discourage them in the way of their duty; there is enough in the promises to do it.

(3.) He assured them that if they will still abide in this land, they shall not only be safe from the king of Babylon, but be made happy by the King of kings: "I will build you and plant you; you shall take me again, and become the new founda-ty of another state; a phcenix-kingdom, rising out of the ashes of the last." It is added, (v. 12.) I will show mercies unto you. Note, In all our comforts

we may read God’s mercies. God will show them mercy in this, that not only the king of Babylon shall not destroy them, but he shall have mercy upon them, and help to settle them. Note, Whatever kindness men do us, we must attribute it to God’s kindness. He makes these whom he pities to be pitied even by those that carried them captives, Ps. cvi. 46. "The king of Babylon, having now the disposal of the country, shall cause you to return to your own land, shall settle you again in your own habitations, and put you in possession of the lands that formerly belonged to you. Note,

What God has begun we may know it will be which is really our privilege, and our obedience will be its own recompense. "Abide in this land, and it shall be your own land again, and you shall continue in it. Do not quit it, now that you stand so fair for the enjoyment of it again. Be not so unwise as to forsake your own mercies for lying vanities."

2. That as they tender the favour of God and their own happiness, they by no means think of going into Egypt; not thither, of all places, that land out of which God had delivered their fathers, and which he had so often warned them not to make alliance with, nor to put confidence in. Observe here,

(1.) The sin they are supposed to be guilty of;

and (to him that knew their hearts it was more than a supposition;) You begin to say, We will not have to do with the king of Babylon, (v. 13.)

and therefore we need not think that we can be safe in it, no, not though God himself undertake our protection; we will not continue in it, no, not in obedience to the voice of the Lord our God; he may say what he pleases, but we will do what we please; we will go into the land of Egypt, and there will we dwell, whether God give us leave, and go along with us, or no, v. 14.

Is supposed that their hearts were upon it; If we shall set your faces to enter into Egypt, are ob-stantly resolved that ye will go, and sojourn there, though God oppose you in it, both by his word and by his providence, then take what follows." Now the reason they go upon in this resolution, is, that in Egypt we shall see no war, nor have hunger of bread, as we have had for a long time in this land, v. 14. Note, It is folly to quit our place, especially to quit the holy land, because we meet with trouble in it; but greater folly to think by changing our place to escape the judgments of God, and that evil which pursues sinners in every way of disobedience, and which there is no escaping but by returning to our allegiance.

(2.) The sentence passed upon them for this sin, if they will persist in it. It is pronounced in God's name; (v. 15.) "Hear the word of the Lord, ye remnant of Judah, who think that because you are a remnant, you must be spared of course, (v. 2.) and indulged in your own humour. [1.] Did the sword and famine frighten them? Those very men and women shall pursue them into Egypt, shall overtake them, and overcome them, there; (v. 16, 17.) "You think, because war and famine have long raging in this land, that they are entailed upon it; whereas, if you trust in God, he can make even this land a land of peace to you; you think they are confined to it, and if you can get clear of this land, you shall get out of God's judg- ments, but God will send them after you wherever you go." Note, The evils we think to escape by sin, we certainly and inevitably run ourselves upon. The men that go to Egypt, in contradiction to God's will, to escape the sword and famine, shall die in Egypt by sword and famine. We may apply it to the common calamities of human life; those that are impatient of them, and think to avoid them by changing their place, will find it, if they are determined good and determined, that they do not at all mend themselves; the grievances common to men will meet them wherever they go; all our remorses in this world are but from one wilderness to another; still we are where we were. [2.] Did the desolations of Jerusalem frighten them? Were they willing to get as far as they could from them? They shall meet with the second part of them too in Egypt; (v. 18.) "He thy anger and fury have been poured out upon you in Jerusalem, so they shall be poured out upon you in Egypt. Note, Those that have by sin made God their Enemy, will find him a consuming Fire, wherever they go. And ye shall be an execution and an astonishment. The Hebrews were of old an abomination to the Egyptians; (Gen xliii. 29.) and now the Lord is here described. When God's professing people mingle themselves with infidels, and make their court to them, they lose their dignity, and make themselves a reproach.

3. That God knew their hypocrisy in their inquiries of him, and that when they asked what he would have them to do, they were resolved to take their own way; and therefore the sentence which was before pronounced conditionally is made absolute, but conditional it shall be in or out of the land, in the blessing and the curse, in the close he makes application of what he had said. And here, (1.) He solemnly protests that he had faithfully delivered his message, v. 19. The conclusion of the whole matter is, "Go not down into Egypt, you disobey the command of God if you do, and what I have said I will witness against you; for if you shall not be certain, that whether you will hear, or whether you will forbear, I have plainly admonished you, you cannot now plead ignorance of the mind of God." (2.) He charges them with base dissimulation in the application they made to him for divine direction; (v. 20.) "You dissembled in your hearts, you professor one thing and intended another, you promised that you never meant to perform." You have used deceit against your souls; so the margin reads it: for those that think to put a cheat upon God, will prove in the end to have put a damning cheat upon themselves. (3.) He is already aware that they are determined to go contrary to the com- mand of God; probably, they discovered it in their countenance and secret mutterings already, before he had finished his discourse. However, he spake from him who knew their hearts; "Ye have not obeyed the voice of the Lord your God, ye have not professed to do as he said, and if you are very near of the close of your farewell sermons, had told them, (D.uct. xxxi. 27, 29.) I know thy rebellion and thy stiff-neck— and that ye will corrupt yourselves. Admire the patience of God, that he is pleased to speak to those who, he knows, will not regard him, and deal with those who, he knows, will deal treacherously, Is. xlvi. 8. (4.) He therefore reads them their doom, satisfying what he had told before, (Know certainly that ye shall die by the sword,) v. 22. God's threatenings may be vilified, but cannot be nullified, by the unbelief of man. Famine and pestilence shall pursue these sinners; for there is no place privileged from divine arrests, nor can any modifying factors go out of God's jurisdiction. Ye shall die in the place whither ye desire to go. Note, We know not what is good for ourselves; and that often proves afflictive, and sometimes fatal, which we are most fond of, and have our hearts most set upon.

CHAP. XLIII.
Jeremiah had faithfully delivered his message from God, in the foregoing chapter, and the case was made so very plain by it, that one would have thought there needed no more words about it; but we find it quite otherwise. Here is, 1. The people's contempt of this message; they denied it to be the word of God, (v. 1., 3.) and then made no difficulty of going directly contrary to it. Into Egypt they went, and took Jeremiah himself along with them, v. 4. 2. The God's pursuit of them will have a message, foretelling the king of Babylon's pursuit of them into Egypt, v. 8-13.

1. And it came to pass, that when Jere- miah had made an end of speaking unto all the people all the words of the Lord their God, for which the Lord their God had sent him to them, even all these words, 2. Then spake Azariah the son of Hosheaiah, and Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the proud men, saying unto Jeremiah, Thou speakest falsely: the Lord our God hath not sent thee to say, Go not into Egypt to sojourn there: 3. But Baruch the son of Neriah setteth thee on against us, for to deliver us into the hand of the Chaldeans, that they might put us to death, and carry us away captives into Babylon. 4. So Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, and all the people, obeyed not the voice of the Lord, to dwell in the land of Judah; 5. But Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, took all the remnant of Judah, that were returned from all nations whither they had been driven, to dwell in the land of Judah; 6. Even men, and women, and children, and the king's daughters, and every person that Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had left with Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, and Jeremiah the prophet, and Baruch the son of Neriah. 7. So they came into the land of Egypt: for they obeyed not the voice of the Lord. Thus came they even to Tahpanhes.

What God said to the builders of Babel, may so truly said of this people that Jeremiah is now dealing with; New nothing will be restrained from the today, they have imagined from the the. They have a fancy for Egypt, and to Egypt they will go, whatever God himself saith to the contrary. Jeremiah made them hear all he had to say, though he saw them uneasy at it; it was what the Lord their God had sent him to speak to them, and they shall have it all. And now let us see what they have truly to say.

1. They deny it to be a message from God; Johanan, and all the proud men, said to Jeremiah, Thou sekest falsehood, v. 2. See here, (1.) What was the cause of their disobedience, it was pride; only by that comes contention both with God and man: they were proud men that gave the lie to the prophet. They could not bear the contradiction of their sentiments, and the control of the divine designs, not without some hatred to the divine will itself. Pharaoh said, Who is the Lord that I should obey him? Exod. v. 2. The proud, unhumbled heart of man is one of the most daring enemies God has on this side hell. (2.) What was the colour for their disobedience. They would not acknowledge it to be the word of God; The Lord hath not sent thee to comfort yourselves to scripture-roles, and so an obstinate inidelity is made the sorry subterfuge of a willful disobedience. If God had spoken to them by an angel, or as he did from Sion, they would have said that it was a delusion. Had they not consulted Jeremiah as a prophet? Had not he waited to receive instructions from God what to say to them? Had not what he said all the usual marks of prophecy upon it? Was not the prophet himself embarked in the same bottom with them? What interests could he have separate from theirs? Had he not always approved himself an Israelite indeed? And had not God proved him a prophet indeed? Had any of his words ever fallen to the ground? Why truly they had some good thoughts of Jeremiah, but they suggest, (v. 3.) Baruch setteth thee on against us. A likely thing, that Baruch should be in a plot to deliver them into the hands of the Chaldeans; and what would he get by that? If Jeremiah and he had been so well affected to the Chaldeans as they would represent them, they would have gone away at first with Nebuzar-adan, when he courted them, to Babylon, and not have staid to take their lot with this despised, ungrateful, rejected nation. But the tenacity of the Chaldeans was no fence against malice and slander. Or, if Baruch had been so ill disposed, could they think Jeremiah would be so influenced by him as to make God's name an authority to patronize so villainous a purpose? Note, Those that are resolved to contradict the great ends of the ministry, are industrious to bring a bad name upon it. Whether men will persist in sin, they represent those that would turn them from it as designing men for themselves, nay, as ill-designing men against their neighbours. It is well for persons who are thus misrepresented, that their witness is in heaven, and their record on high.

2. They determine to go to Egypt however. They resolve not to dwell in the land of Judah, as God had ordered them, (v. 4.) but to go themselves with one consent, and to take all that they had under their power along with them to Egypt. Those that came from all the nations whether they had been driven, to dwell in the land of Judah, out of a sincere affection to that land, they would not leave to their liberty, but forced them to go with them into Egypt, (v. 5.) men, women, and children, (v. 6.) along journey into a strange country, an idolatrous country, a country that had never been kind or faithful to Israel; yet thither they would go, though they deserted their own land and threw themselves out of God's protection. It is the folly of men, that they know not when they are well off, and often ruin themselves by endeavoring to mend themselves, and it is the pride of great men to force those they have under their power to follow them, though ever so much against their duty and interest. These proud men compelled even Jeremiah the prophet and Baruch his scribe to go along with them to Egypt; they carried them away as prisoners, partly to punish them, (and a greater punishment they could not inflict upon them than to force them against their conscience), and partly to corrupt theand to men's souls, even to good men's souls, Bow down, that we may go over,) partly to put some reputation upon themselves and their own way; though the prophets were under a force, they would make the world believe that they were voluntary in going along with them. Who could have blamed them for acting contrary to the word of the Lord, if the prophets themselves had acted so? They came to Tahpanhes, a famous city of Egypt, (so called from a queen of that name, 1 Kings xi. 19.) the same with Hanes; (Isa. xxx. 4.) it was now the metropolis, for Pharaoh's house was there, (v. 9.) no place could serve these proud men to settle in but the royal city, and near the court; so little mindful were they of Joseph's words, who would have had his brethren settle in Goshen. If they had had the spirit of Israelites, they would have chosen rather to dwell in the wilderness of Judah than in the most populous, populous cities of Egypt.

3. Then came the word of the Lord unto Jeremiah in Tahpanhes, saying, 9. Take great stones in thy hand, and hide them in the clay in the brick-kiln, which is at the entry of Pharaoh's house in Tahpanhes, in the sight of the men of Judah; 10. And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I will send and take Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon my servant, and will set his throne upon these stones that I have hid; and he shall spread his royal pavilion over them. 11. And when he cometh, he shall smite the land of Egypt, and deliver such as are for death, to death; and such as are for captivity, to captivity; and such as are for the sword, to the sword. 12. And I will kindle a fire in the houses of the gods of Egypt; and he shall burn them, and carry them away captives; and he shall array himself with the land of Egypt, as a shepherd putteth on his garment; and he shall go forth from thence in peace. 13. He shall break also the images of Bethshemesh, that is in the land of Egypt; and the houses of the gods of the Egyptians shall he burn with fire.

We have here, as also in the next chapter, Jeremiah prophesying in Egypt. Jeremiah was now in Tahpanhes, for there his lords and masters were; he was there among the Egyptians and the Chaldeans, and may have received his call there; but there, 1. He received the word of the Lord; it came to him. God can find his people, with the visits of his grace, wherever they are; and when his ministers are bound, yet the word of the Lord is not bound. The spirit of prophecy was not confined to the land of Israel. When Jeremiah went into Egypt, not out of choice, but by constraint, God withdrew not his word and his spirit, that he might there deliver his people. Wherever we are, we must endeavour to do good, for that is our business in this world.

Now we find two messages which Jeremiah was appointed and intrusted to deliver, when he was in Egypt. We may suppose that he rendered what services he could to his countrymen in Egypt, at least as far as they would be acceptable, in performing the ordinary duties of a prophet, praying for them, and instructing and comforting them; but only two messages of his, which he had received immediately from God, are recorded; one in this chapter, relating to Egypt itself, and foretelling its destruction; the other in the next chapter, relating to the Jews in Egypt.

God had told them before, that if they went into Egypt, the sword they feared should follow them; here he tells them further, that the sword of Nebuchadrezzar, which they were in a particular manner afraid of, should follow them.

1. This is foretold by a sign. Jeremiah must take great stones, such as are used for foundations, and lay them in the clay of the furnace, or brick-kiln, which is in the open way, or beside the way that leads to Pharaoh's house; (v. 9.) some remarkable place in view of the royal palace. Egypt was famous for brick-kilns, witness the slavery of the Israelites there, whom they forced to make bricks, (Exod. v. 7.) which perhaps was now remembered against them. The foundation of Egypt's desolation was laid in those brick-kilns, in that clay. This he must do, not in the sight of the Egyptians, (they knew not Jeremiah's character,) but with the sight of the men, that is to say, of Pharaoh and his court. He was sent, that it might appear he could not prevent their going into Egypt, he might bring them to repent of their going.

2. It is foretold in express words, as express as can be.

1. That the king, the present king of Babylon, Nebuchadrezzar, the very same that had been employed in the destruction of Jerusalem, should come in against the land of Egypt, should make himself master even of this royal city, that he should set his throne in that very place where these stones were laid, v. 10. This minute circumstance is particularly foretold, that, when it was accomplished, they might be put in mind of the prophecy, and confirmed in their belief of the extent and certainty of the divine presence, to whom all small and mean events are evident. God calls Nebuchadrezzar his servant, because herein he executed God's will, accomplished his purposes, and was instrumental to carry on his designs. Note, The world's princes are God's servants, and he makes what use he pleases of them, and even those that know him not, nor aim at his honour, are the tools of his providence makes use of.

2. That he should destroy many of the Egyptians, and have them all at his mercy; (v. 11.) He shall smite the land of Egypt; and therein it has been always a warlike nation, yet none shall be able to make head against him, but whom he will he shall slay, and by what sort of death he will, whether pestilence, (for that is here meant by death, as ch. xv. 2.) by shutting them up in places infected, or by the sword of war or justice, in cold blood or hot. And whom he will, he shall save alive, and carry them away captive, and shall have them in sight to do himself pleasure, and bring them where he list, and shall not destroy them all, but bring them away captive; for he would not slay for his own advantage, but to show his greatness and the riches of his kingdom, and to bring them where he list, and shall not destroy them all, but bring them away captive; and so did but ill repay those that entertained them. They who promised to protect Israel from the king of Babylon exposed themselves to him.

3. That he shall destroy the idols of Egypt, both the temples, and the images, of their gods; (v. 12.) He shall burn the houses of the gods of Egypt, but it shall be with a fire of God's kindling; he will bring God's wrath upon them, and then he burns some of them, and carries others captive, Isa. xxxvi. 1. Beth-shemesh, or the house of the sun, was so called from a temple there built to the sun, where at certain times there was a general meeting of the worshippers of the sun. The statues or standing images there he shall break in pieces, (v. 13.) and every brick-kiln and the foundations of them, intimates that he should lay all waste, when even the temple and the images should not escape the fury of the victorious army. The king of Babylon was himself a great idolater, and a patron of idolatry, he had his temples and images in honour of the sun, as well as the Egyptians, and yet he is employed to destroy the idols of Egypt. Thus God sometimes makes one wicked man, or wicked nation a scourge and plague to another.

4. That he shall make himself master of the land of Egypt, and none shall he able to plead its cause, or avenge its quarrel; (v. 12.) He shall array himself with the rich spoils of the land of Egypt, both beautify and fortify himself with them; he shall array himself with them as ornaments and as armour, and this, though it shall be a rich and heavy booby; being expert in war, and expeditions, he shall slip on with as much ease, and in as little time, in comparison, as a shepherd slips on his garment, when he goes to turn out his sheep in a morning. And, being loaded with the wealth of many other nations, the fruits of his conquests, he shall make no more of the spoils of the land of Egypt than of a shepherd's coat. And when he has taken what he pleases, (as he hadadthem must do, Isa. xlv. 6.) he shall go forth in peace, without any molestation given him, or any precipitation for fear of it, so effectually reduced shall the land of Egypt be. This destruction of Egypt by the king of Babylon is foretold, Ezek. xxxix. 19, and xxx. 10. Babylon lay by a great distance from Egypt, and yet from thence the destruction of Egypt comes; for God can make those judgments strike home which are far-reaching.

CHAP. XLIV.

In this chapter we have, 1. An awakening sermon which Jeremiah preached to the Jews in Egypt, to requite them for their idolatries, to make them witness against them and against the gods given them both by the word and the rod of God, and to threaten the judgments of God against them for it, v. 1 - 14. II. The impudent and insolent contempt which the people put upon this admonition, and their declared resolution to persist in their idolatries notwithstanding, in despite of God and Jeremiah, v. 15. - 19. III. The sentence passed upon them for their obstinacy, that they should all be cut off, and perish in Egypt, except a very small number; and, as a sign or earnest of it, the king of Egypt shall shortly fall into the hands of the king of Babylon, and be unable any longer to protect them, v. 20. - 30.

1. The word that came to Jeremiah concerning all the Jews which dwell in the land of Egypt, which dwell at Migdol, and of the remnant of Judah, which are gone into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, shall escape or remain, that they should return into the land of Judah, to the which they have a desire to return to dwell there; for none shall return but such as shall escape.

The Jews in Egypt are now dispersed into divers parts of the country, into Migdol and Noph, and other places, and Jeremiah is sent on an errand from God to them, which he delivered either when he had the most of them together, in Pathros, (v. 15.) or going about from place to place preaching to this purport. He delivered this message in the name of the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, and in it,

1. God puts them in mind of the desolations of Judah and Jerusalem, which, though the captives by the rivers of Babylon were daily mindful of them, (Ps. cxxvii. 1.) the fugitives in the cities of Egypt seem to have forgotten, and needed to be put in mind of, though these desolations, one would have thought, had not been so long out of sight as to be like out of mind. (v. 2.) It is a most deplorable condition Judah and Jerusalem are brought into; now will you consider whence those desolations came? From the wrath of God; it was his fury and his anger that kindled the fire which made Jerusalem and the cities of Judah waste and desolate; (v. 6.) whoever were the instruments of the destruction, they were but instruments: it was a destruction from the Almighty.

2. He puts them in mind of the sins that brought those desolations upon Judah and Jerusalem; it was for their wickedness, that was it that provoked God to anger, and especially their idolatrie, their serving other gods, (v. 3.) and giving that honour to counterfeit deities, the creatures of their own fancy, and the work of their own hands, which should have been given to the true God only; they forsook the God who was known among them, and whose name was great, for gods that they knew not, upstart deities, whose original was obscure, and not worth taking notice of; "Neither they, nor you, nor your fathers, could give any rational account why the God of Israel was exchanged for such impostors." They knew not that they were gods, nay, they could not but know that they were no gods. (v. 4.)

3. He puts them in mind of the frequent fair warning he had given them by his word not to serve other gods, the contempt of which warnings was a great aggravation of their idolatrie. (v. 5.) The prophets were sent with a great deal of care to call them, saying, Oh, do not this abominable thing that I hate. It becomes us to speak of sin with the utmost dread and detestation as an abominable thing: it is certainly so, for it is that which God hates, and we are sure that his judgment is according to truth. Call it grievous, call it odious, that we may by all means possible put ourselves and others out of love with it. It becomes us to give warning of the danger of sin, and the fatal consequences of it, with all seriousness and earnestness; Oh, do not it! If you love God do not, for it is provoking to him, if you love your own souls, do not, for it is destructive to them." Let conscience do this for us in an hour of temptation, when we are ready to yield. O take heed; do not this abominable thing which the Lord hates; for if God hates it, thou shouldest hate it. But did they regard what God said to them? No! They hearkened not, nor inclined their ear, (v. 5.) they still persisted in their idolatries; and you see what came of it, therefore God's anger was poured out upon them, as at this day. Now this was intended for warning to you, who have not only heard the judgments of God's mouth, as they did, but have likewise seen the judgments of his hand, by which you should be startled and awakened, for they were inflicted in terroremen—that others might hear and fear, and do no more as they did, lest they should fare as they feared.

4. He reproves them for, and upbraideth them with, their continued idolatries, now that they were come into Egypt; (v. 8.) You burn incense to other gods in the land of Egypt; therefore God forbade them to go into Egypt, because he knew it would be a snare to them. Those whom God sent into the land of the Chaldeans, though that was an idolatrous country, were under the power of their idolatries. The Babylonians and Chaldeans were driven from idolatry; but those who went against God’s mind into the land of the Egyptians, were there by the power of their own corruption, more wedded than ever to their idolatries; for when we thrust ourselves without cause or call into places of temptation, it is just with God to leave us to ourselves. In doing this, (1.) They did a great deal of injury to themselves and their families; “You commit this great evil against your souls,” (v. 7.) you wrong them, you deceive them with that which is false, you destroy them, for it will be fatal to them.” Notice, In sinning against God, we sin against our own souls, “It is the ready way to cut yourselves off from all comfort and hope, (v. 8.) to cut off your name and honour; so that you will, both by your sin and by your miseries, become a curse and a reproach among all nations, and be more abhorred as a Jew. It is the ready way to cut off from you all your relations, all that you should have joy of, and have your families built up in, man and woman, child and suckling, so that Judah shall be a land lost for want of heirs.” (2.) They filled up the measure of the iniquity of their fathers, and, as if that had been too little for them, added to it; (v. 9.) “Have you forgotten the wickedness of those who are gone before you, that you are not humbled for it as you ought to be, and afraid of the consequences of it?” Have you forgotten the punishments of your fathers? So some read it. “Do you not know how dear their idolatry cost them? And yet dare you continue in that vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers, though you received the curse with it? He reminds them of the sins and punishments of the kings of Judah, who, great as they were, escaped not the judgments of God for their idolatry; yet, and they should have taken warning by the wickedness of their wives, who had seduced them to idolatry. In the original it is, And of his wives, which, Dr. Lightfoot thinks, tacitly reflects upon Solomon’s wives, particularly his Egyptian wives, to whom the idolatry of the kings of Judah owed its original. “Have you forgotten this, and what came of it, that you dare venture upon the same wicked courses?” (See Neh. xiii. 18, 26.) “Nay, to come to your own times, Have you forgotten your own wickedness and the wickedness of your wives, when you lived in prosperity in Jerusalem, and what ruin it brought upon you? But, alas! to what purpose do I speak to them?” (says God, to the prophet, v. 17.) “The following are the blotted, unclean things, all the stumbling molestations that have been under. They have not feared nor walked in my law.” Notice, Those that walk not in the law of God, thereby show that they are destitute of the fear of God.

5. He threatens their utter ruin for their persisting in their idolatry, now that they were in Egypt. Judah had been threatened against them, as before, (ch. xlix. 22.) that they shall not make in Egypt as they did in the land of their iniquity, that their desolation shall not be called back; they set their faces to go into the land of Egypt, (v. 12.) were resolute in their purpose against God, and now God is resolute in his purpose against them; I will set my face to cut off all Judah, v. 11. They that think not only to afflict but to contront God Al-

mimgl, will find themselves outcast; for the face of the Lord is against them that do evil, Ps. xxxiv. 18. It is here threatened, concerning those idolatrous Jews in Egypt, (1.) That they shall all be consumed, without exception, no degree or order among them shall escape; They shall fall, from the least to the greatest, (v. 12.) high and low, rich and poor. (2.) That they shall be consumed by the very same judgments which God made use of for the punishment of Jerusalem, the sword, famine, and pestilence, v. 13. They shall not be wasted by natural deaths, as Israel in the wilderness, but by these sore judgments, which, by flying into Egypt, they thought to get out of the reach of. (3.) That none (except a very few that will narrowly escape) shall ever return to the land of Judah again, v. 14. They thought, being nearer, that they stood fairer for a return to their own land than those that were carried to Babylon; yet those shall return, and those shall not; for the way in which God has promised us any comfort is much surer than that in which we have projected it for ourselves. Observe, Those that are fretful and discontented will be uneasy, and fond of change, wherever they are. The Israelites, when they were in the land of Judah, desired to go into Egypt; (ch. xliii. 22.) but when they were in Egypt, they desired to return to the land of Judah again; they lifted up their soul to it, (so it is in the margin,) which denotes an earnest desire. But because they would not dwell there when God commanded it, they shall not dwell there when they desire it. If we walk contrary to God, he will walk contrary to us. How can those expect to be well off, who would not know when they were so, though God himself told them?

15. Then all the men which knew that their wives had burnt incense unto other gods, and all the women that stood by, a great multitude, even all the people that dwelt in the land of Egypt, in Pathros, answered Jeremiah, saying, 16. As for the word which thou hast spoken unto us in the name of the Lord, we will not hearken unto thee. 17. But we will certainly do whatsoever thing goeth forth of our own mouth, to burn incense unto the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings unto her, as we have done, we, and our fathers, our kings, and our princes, in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem: for they had us plenty of victuals, and were well, and saw no evil. 18. But since we left off to burn incense unto the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings unto her, we have wanted all things, and have been consumed by the sword and by the famine. 19. And when we burnt incense to the queen of heaven, and poured out drunk-offerings unto her, did we make her cakes to worship her, and pour out drink-offerings unto her without our men? We have here the people’s obstinate refusal to submit to the power of the word of God in the month of Jeremiah. We have scarcely such an instance of downright, daring contradiction to God himself as this, or such an avowed rebellion of the carnal mind. Observe, I. The persons who thus set God and his judgment at defiance; it was not some one that was thus
We were guiltless of all the hosts of heaven, or of the frame of heaven, the whole machine, ch. vii. 18. These daring sinners do not now go about to make excuses for them who harden themselves; but that Jeremiah spoke for himself, and not from God, (as before, ch. xiii. 2.) but they own that he spoke to them in the name of the Lord, and yet tell him flatteringly, in so many words, "We will not hearken unto thee; we will do that which is forbidden, and run the venture of that which is threatened." Note, Those that live in disobedience to God commonly grow worse and worse, and the heart is more and more hardened by the progress of sin. Here is the unreasonable language of the rebellious heart: We will certainly do whatsoever thing goes forth out of our own mouth, let God and his prophets say what they please to the contrary. What they said, many think, who yet have not arrived at such a degree of impudence as to speak it out. It is that which the young man would be at in the days of his youth; he would walk in the way of his heart, and the sight of his eyes, and would have and do every thing he has a mind to, Eccl. xi. 9.

2. They give some sort of reasons for their resolution; for the most absurdly and unreasonably wicked men will have something to say for themselves, till the day comes when every mouth shall be silenced. (1.) They plead many of those things which the advocates for Rome make the marks of a true church, and not only justify but magnify themselves with; and these here have as much right to them as they have. [1.] They plead antiquity; We are resolved to burn incense to the queen of heaven, for our fathers did so; it is a practice that pleads prescription more strongly against us than against our fathers? [2.] They plead authority; they that have power practised it themselves, and prescribed it to others; Our kings and our princes did it, whom God set over us, and who were of the seed of David. [3.] They plead unity; it was not here and there one that did it, but we, all with one consent, we that are a great multitude, (v. 15.) we did it. [4.] They plead universality; it was not done here and there, but in the cities of Judah. [5.] They plead visibility; it was not done in a corner, in dark and shady groves only, but in the streets, openly and publicly. [6.] They plead that it was the practice of the ancient church, the holy see; it was not now learned first in Egypt, but it had been done in Jerusalem. [7.] They plead prosperity; then had we plenty of bread, and of all good things, we were well, and saw no evil. All the former pleas, I fear, were too true in fact; God's witnesses against their idolatry were few and hid; Eliphaz thought that he was left alone; and this last might perhaps be true as to some peculiar persons, but as to their nation, they were still under rebukes for their rebellions, and there was no peace to them that went out or came in, 2 Chron. xv. 5. But supposing all to be true, yet this does not at all excuse them from idolatry; it is the law of God that we must be ruled and judged by, not the practice of men.

(2.) They suggest that the judgments they had of late been under, were brought upon them for leaving off to burn incense to the queen of heaven, v. 18. So perversely did they misconstrue Providence, though God, by his prophets, had so often explained it to them, and the thing itself spoke the direct contrary! Since we forsook our idolatry, we have wanted all things, and have been consumed with one another, and the swine have eaten up the fruits of their wickedness, and they still retained their idols in their heart, and an affection to their old sins; but they would have it thought that it was because they had forsaken the acts of sin. Thus the afflictions which should have been for their welfare, to part between them and their sins, being misinterpreted, did but confirm them in their sins. Thus, in the first ages of Christianity, when God of the nations had been inculcating their idolatrous practices, and persecuting others for opposing the Christians, and in some cases for opposing the Christians, and persecuting them, they put a contrary sense upon the calamities, as if they were sent to punish them for conniving at the Christians, and tolerating them, and cried, Christians ad leges—Throw the Christians to the lions. Yet, if it had been true, as they said here, that since they returned to the service of the true God, the God of Israel, they were saved, and that it was that answer they should revolt from him again? That was as much as to say that they served not him, but their own bellies. Those who knew God, and put their trust in him, will serve him, though he starve them, though they slay them, though they never see a good day with him in this world, being well assured that they shall not lose him by him in the end.

(3.) They plead that though the women were most forward and active in their idolatries, yet they did it with the consent and approbation of their husbands; the women were busy to make cakes for meat-offerings to the queen of heaven, and to prepare and pour out the drink-offerings, v. 19. We found, before, that it was their work, ch. vii. 15. "But also we do ourselves the same, and eat the bread of our hurtful hands." Here is the mark of the true church, and what we ought to pretend to be wiser and more holy than our fathers? But also we do ourselves the same, and eat the bread of our hurtful hands. [1.] They mean to pretend to be wiser than our fathers. [2.] They mean to pretend to be wiser than our fathers. [3.] They suggest that the heads of the women were not in the same case with the heads of the men, and that the women were engaged in these idolatrous practices more than the men. Note, It is sad when those who are in the nearest relation to each other, who should quicken each other to love, and set the law of heaven before the lusts of the flesh, harden each other in sin, and so ripen one another for hell. Some understand this as spoken by the husbands, (v. 15.) who plead that they did not do it without their men, without their elders and rulers, their great men, and men in authority; but because the making of the cakes, and the pouring out of the drink-offerings, are expressly spoken of as the women's work, (ch. vii. 18.) it... seems rather to be understood as their plea: but it was a frivolous plea. What would it avail them to be able to say that it was according to their husbands' mind, when they knew that it was contrary to their God's mind?

20. Then Jeremiah said unto all the people, to the men, and to the women, and to all the people which had given him that answer, saying, 21. The incense that ye burnt in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, ye, and your fathers, your kings, and your princes, and the people of the land, did not the Lord remember them, and came it not into his mind? 22. So that the Lord could no longer bear, because of the evil of thy doings, and because of the abominations which ye have committed; therefore is thy land a desolation, and an astonishment, and a curse, without an inhabitant, as at this day. 23. Because you have burnt incense, and because ye have sinned against the Lord, and have not obeyed the voice of the Lord, nor walked in his law, nor in his statutes, nor in his testimonies; therefore this evil is happened unto you, as at this day. 24. Moreover, Jeremiah said unto all the people, and to all the women, Hear the word of the Lord, all Judah that are in the land of Egypt; 25. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, Ye and your wives have both spoken with your mouths, and fulfilled with your hand, saying, We will surely perform our vows that we have vowed, to burn incense to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings unto her: ye will surely accomplish your vows, and surely perform your vows. 26. Therefore hear ye the word of the Lord, all Judah that dwell in the land of Egypt; Behold, I have sworn by my great name, saith the Lord, that my name shall no more be named in the mouth of any man of Judah, in all the land of Egypt, saying, The Lord God liveth. 27. Behold, I will watch over them for evil, and not for good; and all the men of Judah that are in the land of Egypt shall be consumed by the sword and by the famine, until there be an end of them. 28. Yet a small number that escape the sword shall return out of the land of Egypt into the land of Judah; and all the remnant of Judah, that are gone into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, shall know whose words shall stand, mine, or theirs. 29. And this shall be a sign unto you, saith the Lord, that I will punish you in this place, that ye may know that my words shall surely stand against you for evil: 30. Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will give Pharaoh-hophra king of Egypt into the hand of his enemies, and into the hand of them that seek his life, as I gave Zedekiah king of Judah into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon his enemy, and that sought his life.

Daring sinners may speak many a bold word, and many a big word, but, after all, God will have the last word; for he will be justified when he speaks, and all flesh, even the proudest, shall be silent before him. Prophets may be run down, but God cannot; for the prophet would not.

1. Jeremiah has something to say to them from himself, which he could say without a spirit of prophecy, and that was to rectify their mistake, (a willful mistake it was,) concerning the calamities they had been under, and the true intent and meaning of them. They said that these miseries came upon them because they had now left off burning incense to the queen of heaven; “No,” says he, “it was because you had formerly done it, not because you had now left it off.” When they gave him that answer, he immediately replied, (v. 20.) that the incense which they and their fathers had burnt to other gods did indeed go unpunished a great while, for God was long-suffering toward them, and during the day of his patience it was, perhaps, as they said, well with them, and they saw no evil; but at last it came back upon them, so proved itself to have no longer bear, (v. 22.) but began a controversy with them, whereupon some of them did a little reform, their sins left them, for so it might be said, rather than that they left their sins. But their old guilt being still upon the score, and their corrupt inclinations still the same, God remembered against them the idolatries of their fathers, their kings, and their princes, in the streets of Jerusalem; which they, instead of being ashamed of, gloried in, as a justification of them in their idolatries; they all came into his mind, (v. 21.) all the abominations which they had committed, (v. 22.) and all their disobedience to the voice of the Lord, (v. 23.) all were brought to account; and therefore, to punish them for these, in their land a desolation and a curse, unto this day; (v. 25.) therefore, not for their late reformation, but for their old idolatries, is all this evil happened to them, as at this day, v. 23. Note, The right understanding of the cause of our troubles, one would think, should go far toward the cure of our sins. Whatever evil comes upon us, it is because we have sinned against the Lord, and should therefore stand in awe, and sin not.

2. Jeremiah has something to say to them, to the women particularly, from the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; they have given their answer, now let them hear God's reply, v. 24. Judah, that dwells in the land of Egypt, has God speaking to them, even there, that is their privilege; let them observe what he says, that is their duty, v. 26. Now God, in his reply, tells them plainly,

1. That since they were fully determined to persist in their idolatry, God was fully determined to proceed in a controversy with them; if they would go on to provoke him, he would go on to punish them, and see which would get the better at last. God repeats what they had said; (v. 25.) “You and your wives are agreed in this obstinacy, you have spoken with your mouths, and fulfilled with your hands, you have said it, and you stand to it, have said it, and go on to do it, you have vowed our vows that we have vowed, to burn incense to the queen of heaven,” as if, though it were a sin, yet their having vowed to do it, were sufficient to justify them in the doing of it; whereas no man can by his vow make that lawful to himself, much less duty, which God has already made sin. “Well,” (says God,) “you will accomplish, you
CHAP. XLV.

The prophecy we have in this chapter concerns Baruch only, yet is intended for the support and encouragement of all the Lord's people that serve him faithfully, and keep close to him in difficult, trying times. It is placed here after the death of the apostle Paul, and the dispersion of the Jews, but was delivered long before, in the 4th year of Jehoiakim, as was the prophecy in the next chapter, and, probably, those that follow. Here there is a note, To those who have brought into trouble for writing and reading Jeremiah's roll, v. 1. 3. How his fears were checked with a reproof for his great expectations, and silenced with a promise of special preservation, v. 4, 5. Though Baruch was only Jeremiah's scribe, yet this notice is taken of his frights, and this provision made for his comfort; for God despises not any of his servants, but graciously concerns himself for the meanest, and weakest, for Baruch the scribe, as well as for Jeremiah the prophet.

1. The word that Jeremiah the prophet spake unto Baruch the son of NeHan, when he had written these words in a book at the mouth of Jeremiah, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, saying, 2. Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, unto thee, O Baruch; 3. Thou didst say, Wo is me now! for the Lord hath added grief to my sorrow; I fainted in my sighing, and I find no rest. 4. Thus shalt thou say unto him, The Lord saith thus; Behold, that which I have built will I break down, and that which I have planted I will pluck up, even this whole land. 5. And seest thou great things for thyself? seek them not; for, behold, I will bring evil upon all flesh, saith the Lord; but thy life will I give unto thee for a prey in all places whither thou goest.

How Baruch was employed in writing Jeremiah's prophecies, and reading them, we had an account, ch. xxxvi. and how he was threatened for it by the king, warrants being out for him, and he forced to abscond, and how narrowly he escaped under a divine protection, to which story this chapter should have been as suitable, but that having reference to a private person, it is here thrown into the latter end of the book, as St. Paul's epistle to Philemon is put after his other epistles. Observe,

1. The consternation that poor Baruch was in when he was sought for by the king's messengers, and obliged to hide his head, and the notice which God took of it. He cried out, Wos is me now! v. 3. He was a young man, and no stranger in the world, and he was well affected to the things of God, and was willing to serve God and his prophet; but when it came to suffering, he was desirous to be excused, as being an ingenuous man, and a scholar, he stood fair for preferment, and now to be driven into a corner, and in danger of a prison, or worse, was a great disappointment to him. When he read the roll publicly, he hoped to gain reputation by it, that it would have made him to be taken notice of and employed, but when he found that, instead of that, it exposed him to contemt, and brought him into disgrace, he cried out, "I am undone, I shall fall into the pursuers' hands, and be imprisoned, and put to death, or banished; the Lord has added grief to my sorrow, has loaded me with one trouble after another; afraid of the sword and the famine and the pestilence of my country's ruin, I have the sorrow of being treated as a criminal for so doing; and though another might make nothing of this, yet, for my part, I cannot hear it, it is a burden too heavy for me; I fainted in my sighing, or I faint with my sighing, it just kills me, and I find no rest, no satisfaction in my own mind. I cannot compose myself as I should and would to bear it, nor have I any prospect of relief or comfort." Baruch was a good man, but, we must say, this was his infirmity. Note, (1.) Young beginners in religion, like fresh-water sailors, are apt to be discouraged with the little difficulties which they commonly meet with at first in the service of God. They do but run with the footmen, and it weary them; they faint upon the very dawning of the day of adversity, and it is an evidence that their strength is small, (Prov. xxii. 10,) that their faith is weak, and that they are yet but babes, who cry for every hurt and every fright. (2.) Some of the best and dearest of God's saints and servants, when they have seen storms rising, have been in frights, and apt to make the worst of things, and to disquiet themselves with melancholy apprehensions; many an interesting story, the (C) Piety, God takes notice of the frets and discontent of his people, and is displeased with them. Baruch should have rejoiced that he was counted worthy to suffer in such a good cause, and with such good company, but, instead of that, he is vexed at it, and blames his lot, and, reflects upon his God, as if he had dealt hardly with him; what he said was spoken in a hot and passion, but God was offended; to him he was well, and he said dear for it, when his spirit was provoked, he spake unadvisedly with his lips, Thou didst say so and so, and it was not well said; God keeps account of what we say, even when we speak in haste.

2. The reproof that God gave him for talking at this rate. Jeremiah was troubled to see him in such an agitation, and knew not well what to say to him; he was both heart and tongue moved to convince him, but he declined it; it was willing to come to him, and yet knew not which way to go about it; but God tells him what he shall say to him, v. 4. Jeremiah could not be certain what was at the bottom of these complaints and fears, but God sees it; they came from his corruptions; that the hurt therefore might not be healed slightly, he searches the wound, and shows him that he had raised his expectations too high in this world, and had promised himself too much from it, and that made the distress and trouble he was in so very grievous to him, and so hard to be borne. Note, The frowns of the world would not disquiet us as they do, if we did not foolishly flatter ourselves with the hopes of its smiles, and court and covet them too much. It is our over-fondness for the good things of this life and time that makes us so impatient under its evil things. Now God shows him that it was his fault and folly, at this time of day especially, either to desire, or to look for, an abundance of the wealth and honour of this world. For, (1.) The ship was sinking; ruin was coming upon the Jewish nation, an utter and universal ruin, "That which I have built, to be a house for myself, I am breaking down, and that which I have planted, to be a pleasant-yard for myself, I am plucking up, even this whole land, the Jewish church and state; and dost thou now seek great things for thyself? Dest thou expect to be rich and honourable, and to make a figure now? No," (2.) It is absurd for thee to be now printing thine own cabin. Canst thou expect to be high, when all are brought low, to be full when all about thee are empty? To seek ourselves more than the public welfare, especially to seek great things to ourselves, when the public is in danger, is very uncommon with Israelites. We may apply it to this world, and bring it up, "Thou livest in God's house, this is thy key, is breaking down and pulling up, every thing is uncertain and perishing, we cannot expect any continuing city here. What folly is it then to seek great things for ourselves here, where every thing is little, and nothing certain!

3. The encouragement that God gave him to hope that though he should not be great, yet he should be safe. "I will bring evil upon all flesh, all nations of men, all orders and degrees of men, but thy life will I give to thee for a prey," (thy soul, so the word is,) "in all places whith thou goest. Thou must expect to be hurried from place to place, and, wherever thou goest, to be in danger, but thou shalt escape, though often very narrowly, shal live thy life, but it shall be as a prey, which isget with much difficulty and danger, thou shalt be saved by fire." Note, The preservation and continuance of life are very great mercies, and we are bound to account them such, as they are the prolonging of our opportunity to glorify God in this world, and to get ready for a better; and at some times, especially when the arrows of death fly thick about us, they are a signal favour, and what we ought to be thankful for, and, while we are in these things, to be content, though we be disappointed of the great things we expected. Is not the life more than meat?

CHAP. XLVI.

How judgment began at the house of God. We have found in the foregoing prophecy and history; but now we shall find that it did not end there; in this and the following chapters, the judgment is extended to the rest of the neighbouring nations, and those brought upon them too mostly by the king of Babylon, till at length Babylon itself comes to be reckoned with. The prophecy against Egypt is begun first, and takes up this whole chapter, in which we have, I. A prophecy of the descent of Pharaoh-necho's army by the Chaldean forces at Carchemish, which was accomplished soon after, in the 4th year of Jehoiakim, v. 1, 12. II. A prophecy of the conquest which Nebuchadrezzar should make upon the land of Egypt, and his success in it, which was accomplished some years after the destruction of Jerusalem, v. 13. 26. III. A prophecy of the reverse of the Israel of God in the midst of these calamities, v. 27, 28.

1. The word of the Lord which came to Jeremiah the prophet against the Gentiles; 2. Against Egypt, against the army of Pharaoh-necho king of Egypt, which was by the river Euphrates in Carchemish, which Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon smote in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah. 3. Order ye the buckler and shield, and draw near to battle. 4. Harness the horses; and get up, ye horsemen, and stand forth with your helmets; furnish the spears, and put on the brigandines. 5. Wherefore have I seen them dismayed and turned away back? and their mighty ones are beaten down, and are fled apace, and look not back: for fear was round about, saith the Lord. 6. Let not the swift flee away, nor the mighty man escape; they shall stumble, and fall toward the north by the river Euphrates. 7. Who is this that cometh up as a flood, whose wag
Egypt now rises up like a flood, scouring to keep within its own banks, and threatening to overflow all the neighbouring lands; it is a very formidable army that the Egyptians bring into the field upon this occasion; the prophet summons them, (v. 9.)

Come up, ye horses; rage, ye chariots; he challenges them to bring all their confederate troops together, the Ethiopians and the Libyans, that handle the shield; and the Lydians, that handle and bend the bow. 10. For this is the day of the Lord Gon of hosts, a day of vengeance, that he may avenge him of his adversaries: and the sword shall devour, and it shall be satiate and made drunk with their blood; for the Lord Gon of hosts hath a sacrifice in the north country by the river Euphrates. 11. Go up into Gilead and take balm, O virgin, the daughter of Egypt: in vain shalt thou use many medicines; for thou shalt not be cured. 12. The nations have heard of thy shame, and thy cry hath filled the land: for the mighty man hath stumbled against the mighty, and they are fallen both together.

The first verse is the title of that part of this book which relates to the neighbouring nations, and follows here. It is the word of the Lord which came to Jeremiah against the Gentiles; for God is King and Judge of nations, knows them, and will call them to an account, who know him not, nor take any notice of him. Both Isaiah and Ezekiel prophesied against these nations that Jeremiah here has a several saying to, and with reference to the same events. In the Old Testament we have the word of the Lord against the Gentiles, in the New Testament we have the word of the Lord for the Gentiles, that they who were afar off are made nigh. He begins with Egypt, because they were of old Israel's oppressors, and of late their deceived, when their own conscience and conscience proclaims the overthrow of the army of Pharaoh-necho, by Nebuchadnezzar, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, which was so complete a victory to the king of Babylon, that thereby he recovered from the river of Egypt to the river Euphrates, all that pertained to the king of Egypt, and so weakened him that he came not again any more out of his land, (as we find, 2 Kings, xxiv. 29.) and so made him pay dear for his expedition against the king of Assyria four years before, in which he slew Josiah, 2 Kings xxvii. 29. This is the event that is here foretold in lofty expressions of triumph over Egypt thus foiled; which Jeremiah would speak of with a particular pleasure, because the death of Josiah, which he had lamented, was now avenged on Pharaoh-necho. Now here,

1. The Egyptians are upbraided with the mighty preparations they made for this expedition, in which the prophet calls to them to do their utmost, for so they would; "Come then, order the buckler, let the weapons of war be got ready," v. 3. Egypt was famous for horses, let them be harnessed, and the cavalry well mounted; Get up, ye horsemen, and stand forth, &c. v. 4. See what preparations the children of men make, with abundance of care and trouble, and at a vast expense, to kill one another, as if they did not die fast enough of themselves! He compares their marching out upon this expedition to the rising of their river Nile; (v. 7, 8.) It concerns them that go forth to war, not only to order the buckler and harness the horses, but to repent of their sins, and pray to God for his presence with them, and that they may have it to keep themselves from every wicked thing.

2. They are upbraided with the great expectations they had from this expedition, which were quite contrary to what God intended in bringing them together. They knew their own thoughts, and God knew them, and sat in heaven, and laughed at them; but they knew not the thoughts of the Lord, for he gathers them as sheaves into the floor, Mic. iv. 11, 12. Egypt saith, (v. 8.) I will go up, I will cover the earth, and none shall hinder me; I will destroy the city, whatever city it is that stands in my way; like Pharaoh of old, I will pass over this land, I will overtake. The Egyptians say that they shall have a day of it, but God saith, that it shall be his day; This is the day of the Lord God of hosts, (v. 10.) the day in which he will be exalted in the overthrow of the Egyptians. They meant one thing, but God meant another; they designed it for the advancement of their dignity, and the enlargement of their dominion, but God designed it for the great abasement and weakening of their kingdom. It is a day of vengeance for Josiah's death; it is a day of sacrifice to divine justice, to which multitudes of the sinners of Egypt shall fall as victims. Note, When men think to magnify themselves by pushing on unrighteous enterprises, let them expect that God will glorify himself by blasting them, and cutting them off.

3. They are represented with a swift and glorious flight when they come to an engagement: (v. 5, 6.) Wherefore have I seen them, notwithstanding all these mighty and vast preparations, and all these expressions of bravery and resolution, when the Chaldean army faces them, dismayed, turned back, quite disheartened, and no spirit left in them. They make a shameful retreat, even their mighty ones, who, one would think, should have stood their ground, flee a flight, flee by consent, make the best of their way, flee in confusion, and with the utmost precipitation; they have neither time nor heart to look back, but fear is round about them, for they apprehend it so. And yet, (2.) They cannot make their escape; they have the shame of flying, and yet not the satisfaction of saving themselves by flight; they might as well have stood their ground, and died upon the spot; for even the swift shall not flee away. The lightness of their heels shall fail them when it comes to the trial, as well as the stoutness of their hearts; the mighty shall not escape, nay, they are beaten down, and broken to pieces. They shall strive in their flight, and fall backward the night, and their enemy's country; for such confusion were they in that they fell backward in their flight, and not forward, as they expected, that, instead of making homeward, as men usually do in that case, they made forward. Note, The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong. Valiant men are not always victorious.
4. They are upbraid with their utter inability ever to recover this blow, which should be fatal to their nation, vi. 11, 12. The damsel, the daughter of Egypt, that lived in great pomp and state, is sorely wounded by this defeat. Let her now seek for balm in Gilgal, and physicians there; let her use all the medicines her wise men can prescribe for the healing of this hurt, and the repairing of the loss sustained by this defeat; but all in vain, no cure shall be to them; they shall never be able to bring such a powerful army as this into the field again. "The nations that rang of thy glory and strength, have now heard of thy shame, how shamefully they were routed, and how thou art weakened by it." It needs not be spread by the triumphs of the conquerors, the shrieks and outcry of the conquered will proclaim it; thy cry hath filled the country about. For when they fled several ways, one mighty man stunned another, and dashed against another, such confusion were they in, that both together became a prey to the pursuers, an easy prey. A thousand such dreadful accidents there should be, which should fill the country with the cry of them that were overcome. Let not the mighty man therefore glory in his might, for the time may come when it will stand him in no stead.

13. The word that the Lord spake to Jeremiah the prophet, how Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon should come and smite the land of Egypt. 14. Declare ye in Egypt, and publish in Migdol, and publish in Noph, and in Tahpanhes: say ye, Stand fast, and prepare thee; for the sword shall devour round about thee. 15. Why are thy valiant men swept away? they stood not, because the Lord did drive them. 16. He made many to fall, yea, one fell upon another; and they said, Arise, and let us go again to our own people, and to the land of our nativity, from the oppressing sword. 17. They did cry there, Pharaoh king of Egypt is but a noise; he hath passed the time appointed. 18. As I live, saith the King, whose name is the Lord of hosts, Surely as Tabor is among the mountains, and as Carmel by the sea, so shall he come. 19. O thou daughter dwelling in Egypt, furnish thyself to go into captivity: for Noph shall be waste and desolate without an inhabitant. 20. Egypt is like a very fair heifer, but destruction cometh; it cometh out of the north. 21. Also her hired men are in the midst of her like fatted bullocks; for they also are turned back, and are fled away together: they did not stand, because the day of their calamity was come upon them, and the time of their visitation. 22. The voice thereof shall go like a serpent; for they shall march with an army, and come against her with axes, as hewers of wood. 23. They shall cut down her forest, saith the Lord, though it cannot be searched; because they are more than the grasshoppers, and are innumerable. 24. The daughter of Egypt shall be confounded; she shall be delivered into the hand of the people of the north. 25. The Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, saith, Behold, I will punish the multitude of No, and Pharaoh, and Egypt, with their gods, and their kings; even Pharaoh, and all them that trust in him: 26. And I will deliver them into the hand of those that seek their lives, and into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of his servants: and afterwards it shall be inhabited, as in the days of old, saith the Lord. 27. But fear not thou, O my servant Jacob, and be not dismayed, O Israel: for, behold, I will save thee from afar off, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and be in rest and at ease, and none shall make him afraid. 28. Fear thou not, O Jacob my servant, saith the Lord; for I am with thee: for I will make a full end of all the nations whither I have driven thee; but I will not make a full end of thee, but correct thee in measure: yet will I not leave thee wholly unpunished.

In these verses, we have,
1. Confusion and terror spoken to Egypt. The accomplishment of the prediction in the former part of the chapter disabled the Egyptians to make any attempts upon other nations; for what could they do when their army was routed? But still they remained strong at home, and none of their neighbours durst make any attempts upon them. Though the kings of Egypt came no more out of their land, (2 Kings xxiv. 7.) yet they kept safe and easy in their land; and what would they desire more, than peacefully to enjoy their own? One would think all men should be content to do this, and not covet to invade their neighbours. But the measure of Egypt's iniquity is full, and now they shall not long enjoy their own; they that encroached on others shall now be themselves encroached on. The scope of the prophecy here is to show how the kingdom of Egypt should be put to a trial; and the land of Egypt, and bring the war into their own bosoms, which they had formerly carried into his borders, v. 15. This was fulfilled by the same hand with the former, even Nebuchadrezzar's, but many years after, twenty at least, and, probably, the prediction of it was long after the former prediction, and perhaps much about the same time with that other prediction of the same event which we have, ch. xlv. 1. Here is the alarm of war sounded in Egypt, to their great amazement, (v. 14.) notice given to the country that the enemy is approaching, the sword is devouring round about in the neighbouring countries, and therefore it is time for the Egyptians to put themselves in a posture of defence, to prepare for war, that they may give the enemy a warm reception. This must be proclaimed in all parts of Egypt, particularly in Migdol, Noph, and Tahpanhes, because in these places especially the Jewish refugees, or fugitives rather, had planted themselves, in contempt of God's command; (ch. xlv. 1.) and let them hear what a sorry shelter Egypt is likely to be to them.
2. The retreat, hereupon, of the forces of other nations which the Egyptians had in their pay, is here foretold. Some considerable number of those troops, it is probable, were posted upon the frontiers ...guard them, where they were beaten off by the invaders, and put to flight. Then were the valiant men swept away, (v. 15.) as with a sweeping rain; (it is the word that is used, Prov. xxviii. 3.) they can none of them stand their ground, because the Lord drives them from their respective posts, and the Chaldeans drive them by enabling the Chaldeans to drive them. It is not possible that those should fix whom the wrath of God chases. He it was, (v. 16.) that made many to fall, yea, when their day is come to fall, the enemy makes not throw them down, they shall fall upon one another, every man shall be a stumbling-block to his fellow, to his lover; yea, he, if he pleases, makes his chosen people sanitation, every man's sword shall be against his fellow. He hired men, the troops Egypt has in her service, are indeed in the midst of her like fattened bullocks, lusty men, able-bodied, and high-spirited, who were likely for action, and to have made their part good against the enemy; but they are turned back, their hearts failed them, and, instead of fighting, they are fled away together. How could they withstand their fate, when the day of their calamity was come, the day in which God will visit them in wrath? Some think they are compared to fattened bullocks for their luxury; they had wantoned in pleasures, so that they were very unfit for hardships, and therefore turned back, and could not stand. In this consternation, (1.) They all made homeward to town, or rather, it is probable, their detestable owning. When he posted them there upon the borders of his country, it is probable that he told them, he would within such a time come himself with a gallant army of his own subjects to support them; but he failed them, and when the enemy advanced, they found they had not come to back them, so that they were perfectly abandoned to the fury of the invaders; or, (2.) They thought that they quite passed their post, and deserted the service to go.

Pharaoh king of Egypt is but a noise, (v. 17.) he can hector, and talk big of the mighty things he would do, but that is all; it brings nothing to pass, all his promises to those in alliance with him, or that are employed for him, vanish into smoke; he brings not the succours he engaged to bring, or not till it is too late; He has passed the time appointed, he did not keep his day, nor keep his day, and therefore they bid him farewell, they will never serve under him any more. Note: Those that make most noise in any business, are frequently but a noise. Great talkers are little doers.

3. The formidable power of the Chaldean army is here described as bearing down all before it. The King of kings, whose name is the Lord of hosts, and before whom the kings of the earth are made as the dust of the earth, and the powers of the heavens as the dust to the feet of the kings of the earth, (ch. xxxvii. 25, 26.) they are all now under the dominion and power of the king of Babylon, who overpowers all thebes, the utmost regions of the earth, (v. 18.) as Tabor overtops the mountains, and Caramel overlooks the sea, so shall the King of Babylon overpower all the force of Egypt; such a command shall he have, such a sway shall he bear! v. 18. He and his armies shall come against Egypt with axes, as hewers of wood, (v. 22.) and the Egyptians shall be no more able to resist them than the tree is to resist the man that comes with an axe to cut it down; so that Egypt shall be felled as a forest is by the hewers of wood, (which, if they be many of them, and those well provided with instruments for the purpose) word it shall be inhabited, shall be peopled again, whereas by this destruction it was almost despopled. Ezekiel foretells that this should be at the end of 40 years, Ezek. xxix. 13. See what changes the nations of the earth are subject to, how they are emptied and increased again; and let not nations that prosper be secure, nor these that for the present are in thraldom despair.

11. Comfort and peace are here spoken to the Israel of God, v. 27, 28. Some understand it of those whom the king of Egypt had carried into captivity with Jehoahaz, but we read not of any that were carried away captives with him: it may therefore rather refer to the captives of Babylon, whom God had mercy in store for, or, more generally to all the people of God, designed for their encouragement in the most difficult times, when the judgments of a day are abroad among the nations. We had these words of comfort before, ch. xxx. 10, 11. 1. Let the wicked of the earth tremble, they have cause for it; but fear not thou, O my servant Jacob, and be not disdained, O Israel; and again, Fear thou not, O Jacob. God would not have his people to be a timorous people. 2. The wicked of the earth shall be put away like dust, not to be looked after any more; but God's people, in order to their being saved, shall be hewn out and gathered, though they be no more, shall be redeemed, though they be held in captivity, and shall return. 3. The wicked is like the troubled sea when it cannot rest, they fire when none pursues; but Jacob, being at home in God, shall be at rest, and at ease, and none shall make him afraid; for what time he is afraid, he has a God to trust to. 4. The wicked is bound before God, but, wherever thou art, O Jacob, I am with thee, a very present Help. 5. A full end shall be made of the nations that oppressed God's Israel, as Egypt and Babylon; but mercy shall be kept in store for the Israel of God; they shall be corrected, but not cast off, the correction shall be in measure, in respect of degree and continuance. Nations have their periods, the Jewish nation itself is come to an end, as a nation; but the gospel-church, God's spiritual Israel, still continues, and will to the end of time; in that this promise is to have its full accomplishment, that though God correct it, he will never make a full end of it.

CHAP. XLVII.

This chapter reads the Philistines their doom, as the former read the Egyptians theirs; and by the same hand, that of Nebuchadrezzar. It is short, but terrible; and Tyre and Zidon, though they lay at some distance from them, come in sharers with them, in the destruction they are threatened. It is foretold that the forces of the northern crowned should come upon them, to their great terror, v. 1, 5. II. That the war should continue long, and their endeavours to put an end to it should be in vain, v. 6, 7.

1. The word of the Lord that came to Jeremiah the prophet against the Philistines, before that Pharaoh smote Gaza.

2. Thus saith the Lord, Behold, waters rise up out of the north, and shall be an overflowing flood, and shall overflow the land, and all that is therein; the city, and them that dwell therein; then the men shall cry, and all the inhabitants of the land shall howl. 3. At the noise of the stamping of the hoofs of his strong horses, at the rushing of his chariots, and at the rumbling of his wheels, the fathers shall not look back to their children for feebleness of hands; 4. Because of the day that cometh to spoil all the Philistines, and to cut off from Tyrus and Zidon every helper that remaneth; for the Lord will spoil the Philistines, the remnant of the country of Caphir. 5. Baldness is come upon Gaza; Ashkelon is cut off with the remnant of their valley: how long wilt thou cut thyself? 6. O thou sword of the Lord, how long will it be ere thou be quiet? Put up thyself into thy scabbard, rest, and be still. 7. How can it be quiet, seeing the Lord hath given it a charge against Ashkelon, and against the sea-shore? there hath he appointed it.

As the Egyptians had often proved false friends, so the Philistines had always been sworn enemies, to the Israel of God, and the more dangerous and vocations for their being such near neighbours to them. They were considerably humbled in David's time, but, it seems, they had got head again, and were a considerable people till Nebuchadrezzar cut them off with their neighbours, which is the event here foretold. The danger of this prophecy is observable, in the book before Pharaoh smote Gaza, when this blow was given to Gaza by the king of Egypt is not certain, whether in his expedition against Carchemish, or in his return thence, after he had slain Josiah, or when he afterward came with design to relieve Jerusalem; but this is mentioned here, to show that this word of the Lord came to Jeremiah against the Philistines, when they were in their full strength and lustre, themselves and their neighbours, to put them in a peril from any adversary or evil occurrent, when no disturbance of their repose was foreseen by any human probabilities; then Jeremiah foretold their ruin, which Pharaoh's smiting Gaza soon after would be but an earnest of, and, as it were, the beginnings of sorrow to that country. It is here foretold,

1. That a foreign enemy and a very formidable one shall be brought upon them: Waters rise out of the north, v. 2. Waters sometimes signify multitudes of people and nations, (Rev. xvii. 15.) sometimes great and threatening calamities, (Ps. lxxix. 1.) these here signify both. They rise out of the north, whence fair weather, and the wind that drives away rain, are said to come; but now a terrible storm comes out of that cold climate. The Chaldean army shall overflow the land like a huge. Probably, this happened before the destruction of Jerusalem, for it should seem that in Gedaliah's time, which was just after, the army of the Chaldeans was quite withdrawn out of those parts. The country of the Philistines was but of small extent, so that it would soon be overwhelmed by so vast an army.

2. That they shall all be in a consternation upon it: they shall have no heart to fight, but shall sit down and cry like children; all the inhabitants of the land shall howl, so that nothing but lamentation shall be heard in all places. The occasion of the fright is elegantly described, v. 3. Before it comes to killing and slaying, the very stamping of the horses and rattling of the chariots, when the enemy makes his approach upon them; it was before the, to that degree, that parents in their fright shall seem void of natural affection, for they shall not look back to their children, to provide for their safety, or so much as to see what becomes of them. Their hands shall be so feeble, that they shall despair of carrying them off with them, and therefore they shall not care for seeing them, but leave them to take their lot; or they shall be in such a consternation, that they shall quite forget even these pieces of themselves. Let none be over-fond of their children, nor dea upon them, since such distress may come, that they may either wish they had none, or forget that they have, and have no heart to look upon them.

The 3d and 4th of the Philistines shall be spoilt and laid waste, and the other countries adjoining to them and in alliance with them. It is a day to spoil the Philistines, for the Lord will spoil them, v. 4. Note, Those whom God will spoil must needs be spoiled; yea, if God be against them, who can be for them? Tyre and Zidon were strong and wealthy cities, and they used to help the Philistines in a strait; but here, shall they not be involved in the common ruin, and God will cut off from them every helper that remains. Note, Those that trust to help from creatures, will find it cut off when they most need it, and will thereby be put into the utmost confusion. Who the remnant of the country of Caphtor were, is uncertain, but we find that the Caphtorim were near akin to the Philistines, (Gen. x. 14.) and, probably, when their own country was destroyed, such as remained came and settled with their kinsmen the Philistines, and were now spoiled with them. Some particular places are here named, Gaza and Askelon; (v. 5.) baldness is come upon them, the invaders have stripped them of all their ornaments, or, they have made themselves bald in token of extreme grief, and they natural effusion of their tears, or are aware of the pill in or valley about them. The products of their fruitful valleys shall be spoiled, and made a prey of, by the conquerors.

4. That these calamities should continue long. The prophet, in the foresight of this, with his usual tenderness, asks them, first, (v. 5.) How long will ye cut yourselves? as men in extreme sorrow and anguish do. Oh how tedious will the calamity be, not only cutting, but long cutting; but he turns from the effect to the cause: They cut themselves, for the sword of the Lord cuts them. And therefore, (1.) He bespeaks that to be still; (v. 6.) O thou sword of the Lord, how long will ye be ere thou be quiet? He looks it would put upon itself into the scabbard, we will deny no more flesh, drink no more blood. The prophet expresses the prophet's earnest desire to see an end of the war, looking with compassion, as it were, upon them, even upon the Philistines themselves, when their country was made desolate by the sword.

Note, War is the sword of the Lord, with it he punishes the crimes of his enemies, and pleads the cause of his own people. When war is once begun, it often lasts long; the sword, once drawn, does not quickly find the way into the scabbard again; may, some, when they draw the sword, will throw away the scabbard, for they delight in war. So deplorable are the desolations of war, that the blessings of peace cannot but be very desirable. O that swords might be beaten into ploughshares! (2.) Yet he gives a satisfactory account of the continuance of the war, and stops the mouth of his own complaint; (v. 7.) How can it be quiet, seeing the Lord hath given the sword to cut off against such and such places, particularly specified in his commission? There hath he appointed it. Note, [1.] The sword of war has its charge from the Lord of hosts; every bullet has its charge; you call them blind bullets, but they are directed by an all-seeing God: the war itself has its charge; he saith to it, Go, and it goes: Come, and it comes. [2.] This, and it does it; for he is Commandant in chief. [3.] When the sword is drawn, we cannot expect it should be sheathed till it has fulfilled its charge. As the word of God, so his rod and his sword shall accomplish that for which he sends them.

CHAP. XLVIII.

Moab is next set to the bar before Jeremiah the prophet, whom God had constituted judge over nations and kingdoms, from his mouth to receive its doom. Isaiah's predictions concerning Moab had had their accomplishment, (we had the predictions, chs. xvi. xvi., and the like, Amos ii. 1.) and they were fulfilled when the Assyrians, under Salmanassar, invaded and distressed Moab. But this is a prophecy of the desolations of Moab by the Chaldean. They were accomplished under Nebuchadnezzar, about five years after the prophecy. Here is, 1. The destruction foretold, that it should be great and general, should extend itself to all parts of the country, (v. 1. — 8.) and again, v. 21. 22. 23. 34. That spoils should come into their midst; and foreign Cum join to flee, (v. 9.) should carry many into captivity; (v. 12. 46.) that enemy should come shortly, (v. 16.) come swiftly, and surprise them; (v. 40. 41.) that he should make thorough work, (v. 46.) and by that entry destroy waste, though it was very strong; (v. 14. 15.) that there should be no escape, (v. 42. 43.) that this should force them to quit their fields, (v. 13. 35.) and put an end to all their joy; (v. 38. 39.) that their neighbours shall lament them, (v. 17. 19.) and the prophet himself does, v. 31. 36. kcc. 11. The causes of this destruction assigned; it was sin that brought this ruin upon them, their pride, and security, and carnal confidence, (v. 7. 13. 14. 28.) and their contempt of, and enmity to, God and his people, v. 26. 27. 30. 11. A promise of the restoration of Moab, v. 47.

1. AGAINST Moab thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Wo unto Nebo! for it is spoiled; Kirithaim is confounded and taken; Misgab is confounded and dismayed. 2. There shall be no more praise of Moab: in Heshbon they have devised evil against it; come, and let us cut it off from being a nation: also thou shalt be cut down, O Madmen; the sword shall pursue thee. 3. A voice of crying shall be from Horonaim, spoiling and great destruction. 4. Moab is destroyed; her little ones have caused a cry to be heard. 5. For in the going up of Judah continual weeping shall go up; for in the going down of Horonaim the enemies have heard a cry of destruction. 6. Flee, save your lives, and be like the heath in the wilderness. 7. For because thou hast trusted in thy works, and in thy treasures, thou shalt also be taken; and Chemosh shall go forth into captivity, with his priests and his princes together. 8. And the spoiler shall come upon every city, and no city shall escape; the valley also shall perish, and the plain shall be destroyed, as the Lord hath spoken. 9. Give wings unto Moab, that it may flee and get away: for the cities thereof shall be desolate, without any to dwell therein. 10. Cursed be he that doeth the work of the Lord deceitfully, and cursed be he that keepeth back his sword from blood. 11. Moab hath been at ease from his youth, and he hath settled upon his lees, and hath not been emptied from vessel to vessel, neither hath he gone into captivity: therefore his taste remained in him, and his scent is not changed. 12. Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the
JEREMIAH, XLVIII.

Lord, that I will send unto him wanderers, that shall cause him to wander, and shall empty his vessels, and break their bottles. 13. And Moab shall be ashamed of Chemosh, as the house of Israel was ashamed of Beth-el their confidence.

We may observe, in these verses,

1. The Author of Moab’s destruction; it is the Lord of hosts, that has armies, all armies, at his command, and the God of Israel, (v. 1.) who will herein plead the cause of his Israel against a people that have always been vexatious to them, and will punish them now for the injuries done to Israel of old, and that they will do with them; (Deut. ii. 9.) therefore the destruction of Moab is called the work of the Lord, (v. 10.) for it is he that pleads for Israel; and his work will exactly agree with his word, v. 8.

2. The instruments of it; Spoilers shall come, (v. 8.) shall come with a sword, a sword that shall pursue them, v. 2. I will send unto him wanderers, such as came from afar, as if they were vagrants, or had missed their way, but they shall cause him to wander; they seem as wanderers themselves, but they shall make the Moabites to be really wanderers, some to flee, and others to be carried into captivity. These destroyers stir up themselves to do execution; they have devised evil against Heshbon, one of the principal cities of Moab, and they aim at no less than the ruin of the kingdom, and let us cut it off from being a nation; (v. 2.) nothing less will serve the turn of the invaders, they come not to plunder it, but to ruin it. The prophet, in God’s name, engages them to make thorough work of it; (v. 10.) Cursed be he that doeth the work of the Lord deceitfully, this bloody work, this destroying work; though it goes against the grain with men of compassion, yet it is the work of the Lord, and must not be done by the halves. The Chaldeans have it in charge, by a secret instinct, (says Mr. Gataker,) to destroy the Moabites, and therefore they must not spare, must not, out of foolish pity, keep back their sword from blood, they would thereby bring a sword, and a curse with it, upon themselves, as Saul did by sparing the Amalekites; and Ahab by letting Benhadad go; Thu’is shall go for his life, and shall flee, (1 Kings xxii. 31.) that general curse given to all that are employed in any service for God. Cursed be he that doeth the work of the Lord deceitfully or negligently, that pretends to do it, but does it not to purpose, makes it show of serving God’s glory, but is really serving his own ends, and carries on the work of the Lord no further than will suit his own purposes; or that is slothful in business for God, and takes neither care nor pains to do it as it should be done, Mal. i. 14. Let not such deceive themselves, for God will not thus be mocked.

3. The woful instances and effects of this destruction. The cities shall be laid in ruins, they shall be spoiled, (v. 1.) and cut down, (v. 2.) they shall be desolate, (v. 9.) without any to dwell therein; the plains shall be destroyed, v. 8. or no people to dwell in them, or no safety and ease to those that would dwell in them. Every city shall be spoiled, and no city shall escape. The strongest city shall not be able to secure itself against the enemies’ power, nor shall the finest city be able to recommend itself to the enemies’ pity and favour. The country also shall be wasted, the valley shall forsake, and the plain be destroyed; v. 11. or no people to dwell in them, and the flocks, which used to cover the plains, and make the valley rejoice, shall all be destroyed, eaten up, trodden down, or carried off. The most sacred persons shall not escape, the priests and princes shall go together into captivity. Nay, Chemosh, the god they worship, who, they hope, will protect them, shall share with them in the ruin, his temples shall be laid in ashes, and his image carried away with the rest of the spoil. Now the consequence of this destruction, there shall be no houses to dwell in, and the ruins, the valley are a place which they imagine will be given up to Ireland, and confusion; Kirjathaim is confounded, and Moab is so. They shall be ashamed of the mighty boasts they have sometimes made of their cities. There shall be no more vaunting in Moab concerning Heshbon; (so it might be read, v. 2.) they shall have no more boast of the strength of that city, when the evil which is designed against it is brought upon it. The Chaldeans shall be more afraid of their gods; (v. 13.) they shall be ashamed of Chemosh, v. 10. for the prayers they made to, and all the confidence they put in, that dunghill deity: as Israel was ashamed of Beth-el, of the golden calf they had at Beth-el, which they confided in as their protector, but were deceived in, for it was not able to save them from the Assyrians; nor shall Chemosh be able to save the Moabites from the Chaldeans.

Note, These verses, v. 2. 3. 4. teach us, not to be convinced and made ashamed of the folly of their idolatry by the word of God, shall be convinced and made ashamed of it by the judgments of God, when they shall find by woful experience the utter inability of the gods they have served to do them any service. (2.) There will be great sorrow; there is a voice of crying heard, (v. 3.) and the cry is nothing but spilling of blood, and great destruction; and lastly, Moab is destroyed, v. 4. The great ones having quitted the cities to shift for their own safety, even the little ones have caused a cry to be heard, the meaner sort of people, or the little children, the innocent, harmless ones, whose cries at such a time are the most piteous. Go up to the hills, go down to the valley, and you meet with continual weeping, weeping, with weeping all are in tears, you meet none with dry eyes. Even the enemies have heard the cry, from whom it had been policy to conceal it, for they will be animated and encouraged by it; but it is so great, that it cannot be hid. (3.) There will be great hurry; they will cry to one another, Away, away, flee, save your lives, (v. 6.) shift for your own safety with all imaginable speed, though you escape as bare and naked as the beast, or grig, or dry fish, Ahab, in the prophet’s dream, thought he had only one garment; there is no reason to suppose any thing you have, for it may cost you your life to attempt it, Matth. xxiv. 16—18. Take shelter, though it be in a barren wilderness, that you may have your lives for a prey. The danger will come suddenly and swiftly; and therefore give wings unto Moab, (v. 9.) that would be the greatest kindness you could do them, that is it that they will call for, that we had wings like a dove; for unless they have wings, and can fly, there will be no escaping. 4. The sins for which God will now reckon with Moab, and which justify God in these severe proceedings against them. (1.) It is because they have been secure, and have trusted in their wealth and strength, in their works, and in their treasures, v. 7. They had taken a great deal of that which will be their ruin, they had large works about them, and to fill their exchequer and private coffers; so that they thought themselves in as good a posture for war as any people could be, and that none durst invade them, and therefore set danger at defiance; they trusted in the abundance of their riches, and strengthened themselves in their wickedness, Ps. lii. 7. Now, for this reason, that they may have a sensible conviction of the greatness and folly of their carnal confidences, God will send an enemy that shall muster their works, and raise their treasures. Note, We forfeit the comfort of that creature, which we repose that confidence in that should be repose in God only. The reed will break that is leant upon.

(2.) It is because they have not made a right improvement of the days of their peace and prosperity, v. 11. [1.] They had been long undisturbed; Moab hath been at ease from his youth. It was an ancient kingdom before Israel was, and had enjoyed great tranquility, though a small country, and surrounded with potent neighbours. God's Israel were afflicted from their youth, (Ps. cxix. 1, 2.) but Moab hath been at ease from his youth. He has not been emptied from vessel to vessel, has not known any troublesome, weakening changes, but is as wine kept on the lees, and not racked or drawn off, by which it retains its strength and body. He has been unmarred, nor any way made uneasy; he has not gone into captivity, as Israel have often done, and yet Moab is a wicked, idolatrous nation, and one of the confederates against God's hidden ones, Ps. lxxxiii. 6. Note, There are many that persist in unpunited iniquity, and yet enjoy uninterrupted prosperity. [2.] They had been as long corrupt and unformed; He has settled on his lees, he has been secure and sound in his prosperity, has rested in it, and fetched all the strength and life of the soul from it, as the wine from the lees; his taste remained in him, and his scent is not changed; he is still the same, as bad as ever he was. Note, While bad people are as happy as they used to be in the world, it is no marvel if they are as bad as they used to be. They have no changes of their peace and prosperity, therefore they fear not God, their hearts and lives are unchanged, Ps. iv. 19.

14. How say ye, We are mighty and strong men for the war? 15. Moab is spoiled, and gone up out of her cities, and his chosen young men are gone down to the slaughter, saith the King, whose name is The Lord of hosts. 16. The calamity of Moab is near to come, and his affliction, hasteth fast. 17. All ye that are about him, bemoan him; and all ye that know his name, say, How is the strong staff broken, and the beautiful rod! 18. Thou daughter that dost inhabit Dibon, come down from thy glory, and sit in thisth; for the spoiler of Moab shall come upon thee, and he shall destroy thy strong holds. 19. O inhabitant of Aroër, stand by the way, and espie; ask him that fleeth, and her that escapeth, and say, What is done! 20. Moab is confounded; for it is broken down; howl and cry; tell ye it in Arnon, that Moab is spoiled. 21. And judgment is come upon the plain country; upon Holon, and upon Jahazah, and upon Me-phaath, 22. And upon Dibon, and upon Nebo, and upon Beth-diblathaim, 23. And upon Kirjathaim, and upon Beth-gamul, and upon Beth-meon, 24. And upon Kerioth, and upon Bozrah, and upon all the cities of the land of Moab, far or near. 25. The horn of Moab is cut off, and his arm is broken, saith the Lord. 26. Make ye him drunken; for he magnified himself against the Lord: Moab also shall wallow in his vomit, and he also shall be in derision. 27. For was not Israel a derision unto thee? was he found among thieves? for since thou spakest of him, thou skippedst for joy. 28. O ye that dwell in Moab, leave the cities, and dwell in the rock, and be like the dove that maketh her nest in the sides of the hole's mouth. 29. We have heard the pride of Moab, (he is exceeding proud,) his loftiness, and his arrogancy, and his pride, and the haughtiness of his heart. 30. I know his wrath, saith the Lord; but it shall not be so; his lies shall not so effect it. 31. Therefore will I howl for Moab, and I will cry out for all Moab; my heart shall mourn for the men of Kir-heres. 32. O vine of Sibmah, I will weep for thee with the weeping of Jazer; thy plants are gone over the sea, they reach even to the sea of Jazer the spoiler is fallen upon thy summer-fruits, and upon thy vintage. 33. And joy and gladness is taken from the plentiful field, and from the land of Moab; and I have caused wine to fail from the wine-presses: none shall tread with shouting; their shouting shall be no shouting. 34. From the cry of Heshbon even unto Elealeh, and even unto Jahaz, have they uttered their voice, from Zoar even unto Horonaim, as a heifer of three years old; for the waters also of Ninnim shall be desolate. 35. Moreover, I will cause to cease in Moab, saith the Lord, him that offereth in the high places, and him that burneth incense to his gods. 36. Therefore my heart shall sound for Moab like pipes, and my heart shall sound like pipes for the men of Kir-heres: because the riches that he hath gotten is perished. 37. For every head shall be bald, and every beard clipped: upon all the hands shall be cuttings, and upon the loins sackcloth. 38. There shall be lamentation generally upon all the house-tops of Moab, and in the streets thereof: for I have broken Moab like a vessel wherein is no pleasure, saith the Lord. 39. They shall howl, saying, How is it broken down! how hath Moab turned the back with shame! so shall Moab be a derision and a dismaying to all them about him. 40. For thus saith the Lord, Behold, he shall fly as an eagle, and shall spread his wings over Moab. 41. Kerioth is taken, and the strong holds are surprised, and the mighty men's hearts in Moab at that day shall be as the heart of a woman in her pangs. 42. And Moab shall be destroyed from being a people, because he hath magnified himself against the Lord. 43. Fear, and the pit, and the snare, shall
Jeremiah, XLVIII.

His chosen young men are gone down to the slaughter, v. 15. They went down to the battle, promising themselves that they should return victorious; but God told them that they went down to the slaughter; so sure are they to fall against whom God fights! In a word, Moab shall be destroyed from being a people, v. 22. Those that are enemies to God shall even be the instruments of his vengeance; we will see the end of it, v. 23.

III. It is a lamentable destruction, it will be just matter of mourning, and will turn joy into heaviness.

1. The prophet that foretells it does himself lament it, and mourns at the very foresight of it, from a principle of compassion to his fellow-creatures, and concern for human nature. The prophet will himself hear the voice of his bowels, and is sensible that it is for him; (v. 31.) he will weep for the vine of Sibmah, (v. 32.) his heart shall sound like fishes for Moab, v. 36. Though the destruction of Moab would prove him a true prophet, yet he could not think of it without trouble. The ruin of sinners is no pleasure to God, and therefore should be a pair to us; even those that give warning of it should be a terror to our hearts. Many passages in this chapter, are much the same with what Isaiah had used in his prophecies against Moab; (Isa. xv.) for though there was a long distance of time between that prophecy and this, yet they were both dictated by one and the same Spirit; and it becomes God's prophets to speak the language of these that went before them. It is no plagiarism sometimes to make use of old expressions, provided it be with new affectations and applications.

2. The Moabites themselves shall lament; it will be the greatest mortification and grief imaginable to them. Those that sat in glory, in the midst of wealth and mirth, and all manner of pleasure, shall sit in thirst, in a dry and thirsty land, where no water, no comfort is, v. 18. It is time for them to sit in thirst, and hurse themselves to hardship, when the spoiler is come, who will strip them of all, and empty them. The Moabites in the remote corners of the country, that are furthest from the danger, will be inquisitive how the matter goes, what news from the army, will ask every one that escapes, What is done? v. 19. And when they are told that all is gone, that the invader is the conqueror, they will howl and cry, in bitterness and anguish of spirit, (v. 20.) they will howl and cry over the desolation of their country, they will leave the cities that used to be full of mirth, and dwell in the rock, where they may have their fill of melancholy: they shall no more he singing birds, but mourning birds, like the dove, (v. 28.) the doves of the valleys, Ezek. vii. 16. Let those that give themselves up to mirth know that God can soon change their note. Their sorrow shall be so very extreme, that they shall make themselves bald, and cut themselves, (v. 37.) which were expressions of a desperate grief, such as tempted men to be even their own destroyers. Job, indeed, rent his mantle, and shaved his head, but he did not cut himself. When the flood of passion rises ever so high, wisdom and grace must set bounds to it, set banks to it, to restrain it from such barbarities. (Ps. li. 8.) These shall be a general lamentation upon all the house-tops of Moab, where they worshipped their idols, to whom they shall in vain bewain themselves, and in all the streets, where they conversed with one another, for they shall be free in communicating their griefs and tears, and in propagating them; for they see all lost; I have broken Moab like a vessel that is broken. They shall not have one of them to regard for honour, we will see them no more. They shall be regarded, and cannot be pieced again. That which Moab used to rejoice in, was, their pleasant fruits, and the abundance of their rich wines. The delights of sense were all the matter of their joy. Take away these, destroy their gardens and vineyards, and you make all their ninth to cease, Hos. ii. 11, 12. There is great weeping when their plants are transplanted, are gone over the sea, (v. 32.) are carried into other countries, to be planted there. The spoiler is fallen upon Egypt to her hurt, and upon Egypt, and that it is that makes the ery of Heshbon to reach even to Elealeh, v. 34. Take joy and gladness from the plentiful field, and you take it from the land of Moab, v. 33. If the wine fall from the wine-presses, that used to be trodden with acclamations of joy, all their gladness is cut off. Take away that shouting, and there shall be no shouting. Note, They who make the delights of God's people the chief of the good things of this world, and think these are things they may be easily deprived of in a little time, subject themselves to the tyranny of the greatest grief; whereas they who rejoice in God may do that even when the fig-tree doth not blossom, and there is no fruit in the vine. These Moabites lost not only their wine, but their water too, even the waters of Nisrin shall be dried up, (v. 34.) and therefore their grief grew external, and the grief of the Moabites were heard in all places like the howling of a heifer of three years old. The expressions here are borrowed from Is. xvi. 5, 6.

3. All their neighbours are called to mourn with them, and to condole with them on their ruin; (v. 17.) All ye that are about him, bemoan him. Let lix in the land of Moab be brought up with or without formal spices by the adjoining countries. Nay, let those at a distance, who do but know his name, and have heard of his reputation, take notice of his fall, and say, How is the strong staff broken, whose strength was the terror of its enemies, and the beautiful rod, whose beauty was the pride of its friends! Let the nations take notice of this, and receive instruction. Let none be lifted up with or without form or substance, in their strength or beauty, for neither will be a security against the judgments of God.

IV. It is a shameful destruction, and such as shall expose them to contempt; Moab is made drunk, (v. 26.) and he that is made drunk, is made vile, he shall wallow in his vomit, and become an odious spectacle, and shall justly be in derision. Let the Moabites be taken up with or without form or substance, with their voices ended, and made themselves ridiculous by the wildness not only of their passions but of their counsels. And again, (v. 39.) Moab shall be a derision and a damming to all about him; they shall laugh at the fall of the pomp and power he was so proud of. Note, They that are haughty are preparing reproach and ignominy for themselves.

V. It is the destruction of that which is dear to them; not only of their summer-fruits, and their vintage, but of their wealth; (v. 36.) The riches that he has gotten are perished; though he thought he had laid them up very safe, and promised himself a long enjoyment of them, yet they are gone. Note, The money that is hoarded in the chest, is as liable to perishing as the summer-fruits that lie exposed in the open fields. Riches are shedding things and, like dust as they are, slip through our fingers then when we are in most care to hold them fast, and grip them hard. Yet this is not the worst; even those whose religion was false and foolish were fond of it above anything, and, such as it was, would not part with it; and therefore, though it was really a promise, yet to them it was a threatening, (v. 53.) that God would cause to cease him that offers in the high places, for the high places shall be destroyed, and the fields of offerings shall be laid waste, and the priests themselves, who burnt incense to their gods, shall be slain, or carried into captivity, v. 7.

Note, It is only the true religion, and the worship and service of the true God, that will stand us in stead in a day of trouble.

VI. It is a just and righteous destruction, and that which they have deserved, and brought upon themselves, by sin.

The Moabites which they had been most notoriously guilty of, and for which God now reckoned with them, was pride. It is mentioned six times, v. 29. We have all heard of the pride of Moab; his neighbours took notice of it, it has testified to his face, as Israel's did, he is exceeding proud, and grows worse and worse. Observe his looseness, his arrogance, his pride, his haughtiness; the multiplying of words which are the same purport, intimates in how many instances his haughtiness appeared. He had never been like it was both to God and man. It was charged upon them, Isa. xvi. 6. but here it is expressed more largely than there. Since then, they had been under humbling providences, and yet were unhumbled; nay, they grew more arrogant and haughty, which plainly marked them for that utter destruction of which pride is the forerunner. Two instances are here given on the pride of Moab; (1.) He had conducted himself insolently toward God. He must be brought down with shame, (v. 26.) for he has magnified himself against the Lord; and again, (v. 42.) he shall be destroyed from being a people, for this very reason; the Moabites preferred Chemosh before Jehovah, and thought themselves for their own good. (2.) He had consecrated himself entirely toward Israel, particularly in their late troubles; therefore Moab shall fall into the same troubles, into the same hands, and be a derision, for Israel was a derision to him, v. 26, 27. The generality of the Moabites, when they heard of the calamities and desolation of their neighbours the Jews, instead of lamenting them, rejoiced in them as if they had been thieves taken in the act of robbery; as often as they spoke of them, they skipped for joy. Many, in such a case, entertained in their minds a secret pleasure at the fall of those they had a dislike to, who yet have so much discretion as to conceal it, it is so invidious a thing; but the Moabites industriously proclaimed their joy, and avowed that it was the very thing they had to Israel, triumphing over every Israelite that was lamenting them. It was a reproach of them; their darkness was as inhuman as it was impious, and an impudent affront both to man, whose nature they were of, and to God, whose name they were called by. Note, These that deride others in distress will justly and certainly, sooner or later, come into distress themselves, and be had in derision.

The others that are glad at calamities, especially the calamities of God's church, shall not long go un punished.

2. Beside this, they had been guilty of malice against God's people, and treachery in their dealings with them, v. 50. They made a jest of the desolations of Judah and Jerusalem, and pretended, when they laughed at them, that it was but in sport, and to make themselves merry; but, says God, "I know his wrath, I know it comes from the old enmity he has to the seed of Abraham, and the worshippers of the true God. I know he thinks these calamities of the Jewish nation will end in their utter extirpation. He now tells the Chaldeans what bad people the Jews are, and irritates them against them; but it shall not be so as he expects; his lies shall not so excel it. The nation, whose fall they triumph in, shall recover itself." Some read it, I know his rage. Is it not so? (Is he not very furious against the people of God?) And his lies I know also. Do they not do so? Do they not belie them? Note, All the fury and all the falsehood of the church's enemies are perfectly known to God, whatever the pretenses are with which they think to puzzle him, ver. 28.

VII. It is a complicated destruction, and by one instance after another will at length be completed; for those that make their escape from one judgment, shall perish by another; Fear, and the fit, and the snare, shall be upon them, v. 43. There shall be fear to drive them into the pit, and a snare to hold them fast in it, when they are in it; so that they shall neither escape from the destruction, nor escape out of it. What was said of sinners in general, (Isa. xxvii. 18.) that who flee from the fear shall fall into the pit, and they who come up out of the pit, shall be taken in the snare, is here particularly foretold concerning the sinners of Moab, (v. 44.) for it is the year of their visitation, when God comes to reckon with them, and will be known by the judgments which he executes, for he is the King, whose name is the Lord of hosts; (v. 15.) he is not only the King, who has authority to give judgment, but he is the Lord of hosts, who is able to do what he has determined. The figurative expressions used, v. 44. are explained in one instance; (v. 43.) Those that fled out of the villages for fear of the enemy's forces, put themselves under the protection of the city, stored up their provisions, supposed they stood safe, as now armies sometimes retire under the canopy of a fortified city, and it is their protection; but here they shall be disappointed, for when they flee out of the pit they fall into the snare; Heshbon, which they thought would have sheltered them, devours them, as Moses had foretold long since; (Numb. xxxi. 28.) "A fire is gone out of Heshbon, and a flame from the city of Sihon," and devours those that come from all the corners of Moab, and fastens upon the crown of the head of the tumultuous noisy ones, or of the revellers, or children of noise; not meant of the rude, clamorous multitude, but of the great men, who bluster, and hector, and make a noise; the judgments of God shall light on them. Shall we hear the conclusion of this whole matter? We have it; (v. 46.) We be to thee, O Moab! then art undone, the people that worship Chemosh perish, and are gone; farewell Moab. The sons and daughters, the hopes of the next generation, are gone into captivity after the Jews, whose calamities they rejoiced in.

VIII. Yet it is not a perpetual destruction. The chapter concludes with a short promise of their return out of captivity in the latter days. God, in this chapter, brings forth the Ammonites, and foretells their captivity, v. 47. Thus tenderly does God deal with Moabites, much more with his own people! Even with Moabites he will not contend for ever, nor be always wroth. When Israel returned Moab did; and perhaps the prophecy was intended chiefly for the encouragement of God's people, to hope for that salvation which even Moabites shall share in. Yet the Lord's words concerning the Ammonites, which he gives himself to refer it to the days of the Messiah; then the captivity of the Gentiles, under the yoke of sin and Satan, shall be brought back by divine grace, which shall make them free, free indeed. This prophecy concerning Moab is long, but here it ends, it ends comfortably, Thus far is the judgment of Moab.

CHAP. XLIX.

The cup of trembling still goes round, and the nations must all drink of it, according to the instructions given to Jeremiah, ch. xxv. 15. This chapter puts it into the hands. The Ammonites, or Edomites, v. 7. II. Of the Syrians, v. 23. 27. IV. Of the Kedarites, and the kingdoms of Hazor, v. 29. 33. V. Of the Elamites, v. 34. 39. When Israel was scarcely saved, where shall all these appear? 1. CONCERNING the Ammonites, thus saith the Lord, Hath Israel no sons? hath he no heir? why then doth their king inherit God, and his people dwell in his cities? 2. Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will cause an alarm of war to be heard in Rabbah of the Ammonites; and it shall be a desolate heap, and her daughters shall be burnt with fire: then shall Israel be heir unto them that were his heirs, saith the Lord. 3. Howl, O Heshbon: for Ai is spoiled: cry, ye daughters of Rabbah, gird ye with sackcloth; lament, and run to and fro by the hedges: for their king shall go into captivity, and his priests and his princes together. 4. Wherefore gloriest thou in the valleys, thy flowing valley, O backsliding daughter? that trusted in her treasures, saying, Who shall come unto me? 5. Behold, I will bring a fear upon thee, saith the Lord God of hosts, from all those that be about thee; and ye shall be driven out every man right forth; and none shall gather up him that wandereth. 6. And afterward I will bring again the captivity of the children of Ammon, saith the Lord.

The Ammonites were next, both in kindred and neighbourhood, to the Moabites, and therefore are next set to the bar. Their country joined to that of the two tribes and a half, on the other side Jordan, and was but a bad neighbour; however, being a neighbour, they shall have a share in these circular predictions. 1. An action is here brought, in God's name, against the Ammonites, for an illegal encroachment upon the rightful possessions of the tribe of Gad, that lay next them, v. 1. A writ of inquiry is brought to discover what title they had to these territories, which, upon the carrying away of the Gileadites by the king of Assyria, (2 Kings xxv. 30. 1 Chron. xxvi. 12.) were left almost despised, at least unguarded, and an easy prey to the next invader. What? Is it not said of Gad, (Deut. xxxii. 40.) that in the land of Moab, Gad shined like a morning star, (Isa. vi. 13.) and every nation is become as a prey to them, (Gen. xxxvi. 31.) for want of an heir? Hath Israel no sons? Hath he no heir? Are there no Gadites left, to whom the right of inheritance belongs? Or, if there were not, are there no Israelites, none left of Judah, that are nearer akin to them than you are? Why then doth his king, as if he were entitled to the forfeited estates, or Moab, their idol, as if he had the right to enjoy them? What? Does it eschew defection and that of his people dwell in the cities which fell by lot to that tribe of God's people. Nay, they were sons and heirs of their own body, en vente de sa mere—in their mother's womb, and the Ammonites, to prevent their claim, most barbarously murdered them; (Amos i. 13.) They ruffled up the women with child, of Gilgal, that they might enlarge their border; that, having seized it, none might rise up hereafter to recover it from them. Thus they magnified themselves against their border, and boasted it was their own, Zeph. ii. 8. Note, Though among men might often prevails against right, yet that might shall be controlled by the Almighty, who sits in the throne, judging aright; and these will find themselves mistaken, who think every thing their own which they can lay their hands on, or which none yet appears to lay claim to. As there is justice owing to owners, so also to their heirs, when they are dead, when it is a great sin to defraud, though they either know not their right, or know not how to come at it. This shall be reckoned for particularly, when injuries of this kind are done to God's people.

2. Judgment is here given against them for this violence.

(1.) Terr is shall come upon them. God will come also, says Jere. (2.) He shall be bared, even in Rabba, their capital city, and a very strong one, v. 2. The Lord God of hosts, who has all armies at his command, will bring a far upon them from all that be about them, v. 5. Note, God has many ways to terrify those who have been a terror to his people.

(2.) Their cities shall be laid in ruins. Rabba, the mother-city, shall be desolate, and her daughters, the other cities that have a dependence upon her, and receive law from her as daughters, shall be burnt with fire; so that the inhabitants shall be forced to quit them, and they shall cry, and gird themselves with sackcloth, as having lost all they have, and not knowing whither to betake themselves.

(3.) Their country, which they were so proud of, shall be wasted, (v. 4.) Wherefore gloried thou in the valleys, and trustest in thy treasures, O backsliding daughter? They are charged with backsliding or turning away from God and his worship, for they were the posterity of righteous Lot. It is true, they had never been so in covenant with God as Israel was; yet all idolaters may be called backsliders, for the worship of the true God was prior to that of false gods. They were unwise and refractory; some read it: and when they have forsaken their God, they gloried in their valleys, particularly one that was called the flowing valley, because it flowed with all good things. These they had violently taken away from Israel, and gloried in it when they had done so. They gloried in the strength of their valleys, so surrounded with mountains, that they were inaccessible; gloried in the products of them, gloried in the treasures they got together out of them, saying, Who shall come unto me? While they bathed themselves in the pleasures of their country, they flattered themselves with a conceit that they should never be disturbed in the enjoyment of them; To-morrow shall be as this day; therefore they set God and his judgments aside, they were proud, voluptuous, and secure; but wherefore dost thou do so? Note, Those who backslide and turn away from God have little reason either to take complacency, or to put confidence, in any worldly enjoyments whatsoever, Hos. ix. 1.

(4.) Their people, from the least to the greatest, shall be forced out of the country; some shall flee to seek for shelter, others shall be carried into captivity, so that their land shall be quite evacuated; Their king and his princes, nay, and Milcom, their god, and his priests, shall go into captivity, (v. 3.) and every man shall be driven out right forth, shall take the next way, and make the best of it in his flight, (v. 5.) forgetting the valleys, the flowing valleys, which now fall them. And, to complete their ruin, enemies shall be carried into the captives, none shall open their doors to them, as Jael to Sisera, to entertain them; and those that flee shall be so much in care to secure themselves, that they shall not take notice of others, no, not of those that are nearest to them, that wander, and are at a less way which to go, as ch. xlvii. 3.

(5.) Then the country of the Ammonites shall fall in upon the remaining Israelites; (v. 2.) Then shall Israel be heir to them that were his heirs, shall possess himself of their land, who had possessed themselves of his, by way of reprisal,

Note, The equity of Divine Providence is to be acknowledged, when the losses of the injured are recompensed out of the unjust gains of the injurious. Though the enemies of God's Israel may make a prey of them for awhile, the tables will shortly be turned.

3. Yet there is a prospect given them of mercy hereafter, (v. 6.) as before to Moab. The day will come, when the captivity with him that was captive shall be brought again for so it is in human affairs, the wheel goes round.

7. Concerning Edom, thus saith the Lord of hosts, Is wisdom no more in Teman? is counsel perished from the prudent? is their wisdom vanished? 8. Flee ye, turn back, dwell deep, O inhabitants of Dedan; for I will bring the calamity of Esau upon him, the time that I will visit him. 9. If grape-gatherers come to thee, would they not leave some gleanings-grapes? if thieves by night, they will destroy till they have enough. 10. But I have made Esau bare, I have uncovered his secret places, and he shall not be able to hide himself: his seed is spoiled, and his brethren, and his neighbours, and he is not. 11. Leave thy fatherless children, I will preserve them alive; and let thy widows trust in me. 12. For thus saith the Lord, Behold, they whose judgment was not to drink of the cup have assuredly drunken; and art thou he that shall altogether go unpunished? thou shalt not go unpunished, but thou shalt surely drink of it. 13. For I have sworn by myself, saith the Lord, that Bozrah shall become a desolation, a reproach, a waste, and a curse; and all the cities thereof shall be perpetual wastes. 14. I have heard a rumour from the Lord, and an ambassador is sent unto the heathen, saying, Gather ye together, and come against her, and rise up to the battle. 15. For, lo, I will make thee small among the heathen, and despised among men. 16. Thy terribleness hath deceived thee, and the pride of thy heart, O thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rock, that holdest the height of the hill: though thou shouldest make thy nest as high as the eagle, I will bring thee down from thence, saith the Lord. 17. Also Edom shall be a desolation; every one that goeth by it shall be astonished, and shall hiss at all the plagues thereof. 18. As in the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah, and the neighbour cities thereof, saith the Lord, no man shall abide there, neither shall a son of man dwell in it. 19. Behold, he shall come up like a lion from the swelling of Jordan against the habitation of the strong: but I will suddenly make him run away from her; and who is a chosen man, that I may appoint over her?
for who is like me? and who will appoint me the time? who is that shepherd that will stand before me? 20. Therefore hear the counsel of the Lord, that he hath taken against Edom; and his purposes, that he hath purposed against the inhabitants of Teman: Surely the least of the flock shall draw them out; surely he shall make their habitations desolate with them. 21. The earth is moved at the noise of their fall; at the cry, the noise thereof was heard in the Red Sea. 22. Behold, he shall come up and fly as the eagle, and spread his wings over Bozrah: and at that day shall the heart of the mighty men of Edom be as the heart of a woman in her pangs.

The Edomites come next to receive their doom from God, by the mouth of Jeremiah; they also were old enemies to the Israel of God; but their day will come to be reckoned with, and it is now at hand, and is foretold, not only by warning to them, but by judgment of God, whose afflictions were very much aggravated by their triumphs over them, and joy in their calamity, Ps. cxxxvii. 7.

Many of the expressions used in this prophecy concerning Edom, are borrowed from the prophecy of Obadiah, which is concerning Edom; for all the prophets being inspired by one and the same Spirit, there must needs be a wonderful harmony and agreement in their predictions.

Now here it is foretold, 1. That the country of Edom should be all wasted, and made desolate: that the calamity of Esau should be brought upon him, the calamity he has deserved, and God has long designed him, for his old sins, v. 8. The time is at hand when God will visit him, and call him to an account, and then they shall flee from the sword, turn back from the battle, and dwell deep in some close caverns, where they shall hide themselves. All they have shall be carried off by the conqueror: whereas graze-gatherers will leave some gleanings, and even thieves know when they have enough, and will destroy no further, they that destroy them shall never be satiated, (v. 9, 10,) they shall make Esau quite bare, shall strip the Edomites of all they have, shall find out ways and means to come to their past haunts, and shall discover even the secret places, where they thought to secure their wealth, and rile them, so that they shall none of them save their wealth, no, nor save themselves or their children, that might be concealed in a little room; He shall not be able to hide himself, and his seed too is spoiled. His brethren the Moabites, and his neighbours the Philistines, when they see him in such distress, shall step into this feast, in the least shelter with, are spoiled as well as he, and disabled to do him any service. And he is not, or, there is not he, there is none to him, none left him, that may say what follows, (v. 11,) Leave thy fatherless children, I will preserve them alive. When they are flying, or dying, there shall be none left, no relation, no friend, no, not so much as any parish-officer, to whom the poor casual children may cling to, when they leave behind, Edom is not, he is cut off and gone; nor is there any to say, Leave me thine orphans. If the master of a family be cut off, or forced away, it is some comfort if he have a friend to leave his family with, whom he can confide in; but they shall have none such, for they shall all be involved in the same calamity. The Chaldee makes these to be the words of God to his people, distinguis-hing them from the Edomites in this calamity; and they read it, "But you, O house of Israel, you shall not leave your orphans, I will secure them, and let your widows rest on my word. Whatever becomes of the widows and fatherless of the Edomites, I will take care of yours." Note, It is an unspeakable comfort to the children of God, when they are dying, that they may leave their surviving relations with God, may, in faith, commit them to him, and encourage them to trust in him; and though their friends are thus left, yet God will preserve them in the world for them, yet they may hope that he will preserve them alive, always provided that they trust in him. Let the Edomites, for their part, count upon no other than to be made a desolation, and a reproach, for the decree is gone forth, God hath sworn it by himself, (v. 13,) that their cities shall be wasted, nay, they shall be perpetual wastes, they shall be made mean and despised; they shall be made a mighty figure, but God will make them small among the heathen; and they that despise God's people shall themselves be despised among men; (v. 15. Obad. 2.) nay, they shall be made monstrous, and even a predigy: (v. 17.) Edom shall be such a desolation, that every one who goes by shall be astonished; nay, worse yet, they shall be made a terror, Edom shall be made like Sodom and Gomorrha, and shall be consumed under the ruins of it, no man shall abide there, (v. 18,) such a frightful place shall it be made!

2. That the instruments of this destruction should be very resolute and formidable. They have their commission from God, he summons them into this service; (v. 14.) I have heard a rumour, or report, from the Lord, heard it by the prophecy of Obadiah, he heard it by a whisper to himself, that an ambassa-dor, or herald, or messenger, is sent to the Gentiles, who are to lay Edom waste, saying, Gather ye together, muster all the forces ye can, and come against her; for (v. 20) this is the counsel that he hath taken against Edom; the matter is settled, the decree is gone forth, and there is no resisting it; God has determined that Edom shall be laid waste, and then he that is to be employed in it shall come swiftly and strongly. Nebuchadrezzar is he, of whom it is here foretold, (1.) That he shall come up like a lion, with fierceness and fury, like a lion enraged by the swelling of Jordan overflowing his banks, which forces him out of his covert by the water-side, into the higher grounds, v. 19. He shall come roaring, come to devour all that come in his way. He shall come against the habitation of the strong, and spoil and rob him, and I will cause him to come suddenly into the land, (so the next words might well be read,) so as to find them unprovided with necessities for a defense; for I will look out a chosen man to affliction over her, to do this execution, a man fit for the purpose, one chosen out of the people; for when God has work to do, he will find out the fittest instruments to be employed in it. "He shall come against Edom, the habitation of the strong;" and spirits them for the work? And, who will, afflict me the time? Who will challenge me, and fix a time and place to meet me? Who will join issue with me in battle? And when I send a lion into the flock, Who is that shepherd, that can, or dare, stand before me, or against me, to oppose that lion, and live to rescue any of the flock? Note, How can God's people have comfort in the destruction of their enemies? They will not find those that are able to engage in it; and all the world cannot find those that are able to engage against it. Nay, if God will have Edom destroyed, and their people dislodged, there needs not a lion, a fierce lion, to do it; even the least of the flock shall drive them out; (v. 20.) the meanest servant in Nebuchadrezzar's retinue, the weakest of all that follow his camp, shall drive them out for the slaughter, shall force them to flee, or to surrender, and make their habitutions devolute with them. God can bring to pass the greatest works by instruments least likely. When the Chaldean army comes against the Edomites, their hands shall be wet with the blood of the proudest soldier in it shall have a pluck at them. (2.) Nebuchadrezzar shall come, not only like a lion, the king of beasts, but like an eagle, the king of birds, v. 22. He shall fly as the eagle upon his prey, so swiftly, so strongly; shall clap his wings upon Bozrah, to secure it for himself, (as before, ch. xlviii. 40.) and immediately the hearts of the mighty men shall fail them; they shall see he is an enemy that it is in vain to struggle with.

3. That the Edomites' confidences should all fail them in the day of their distress. (1.) They trusted to their wisdom, but that shall stand them in no stead; this is the first thing fastened upon in this prophecy against Edom, v. 7. That nation used to be famous for wisdom, and their statesmen were thought to excel in politics; and yet now they shall take such wrong measures in all their counsels, and be so baffled in all their designs, that people shall ask, with wonder, What is the matter with the Edomites? Is wisdom no more in Teman? Are the wise men of the east country (1 Kings iv. 30.) become fools? Are those at their wits' end, that were thought to have the monopoly of prudence? Is counsel become the understood thing? It is so, when God is designing the ruin of a people; for whom he will destroy he infatuates. See Job xii. 20. Is their wisdom vanished? Is it tired? So some; Is it worn out? So others; Is it become useless? So others. Yes, it will do them no service when God comes forth to contend with them. (2.) They trusted to their strength, but neither shall that avail them, v. 18. They had been a terror to all their neighbours, every body feared them, and buckled to them, and this made them proud and conceited of themselves, and their own strength, and very secure; because no neighbouring nation durst meddle with them, they thought no nation in the world durst. Their country was much of it mountainous, having many passes which they thought themselves able to make good against any invader; but this terribleness of theirs deceived them, and so did their imaginary inaccessible; they did not prove so strong as they were formidable, nor so safe as they were secure. High as they are, God will bring them down; for as there is no wisdom, so there is no might, against the Lord. See these expressions, Obad. 3, 4, 8.

4. Their destruction should be inevitable, and very remarkable. (1.) God hath determined it; (v. 12.) he hath said it; nay, (v. 13.) he hath sworn it, that the Edomites shall not go unpunished, but they shall drink the cup of trembling, which is put into the hands of all their neighbours; even they, whose, judgment, or doom, was not to drink of the cup, who had not so well deserved it as they had, or at least, who were not so much exposed as they, were. The cup was first given to Israel as they had been; or, Israel itself, that was God's peculiar people, and among whom there were many, very many, who kept his ordinances, upon which account they might have expected an exemption, and yet they had been made to drink of the bitter cup; and shall the Edomites think to pass it? No; they shall surely drink of it. Note, What God's people enjoy, the very mercies of God, make the more guilty to promise themselves impunity; and when judgment begins at God's house, it will reach the strangers. (2.) All the world shall take notice of it; (v. 21.) The earth is moved, and all the nations put into a concern, at the noise of their fall; the news of it shall make them tremble. The noise of the outcry is heard at the Red sea, which flowed upon the coasts of Edom. So loud shall be the shouts of the conquerors, and the shrieks of the conquered, and such a mighty noise shall the news of this destruction of Idumea make in the nation, that it shall be heard among the ships that lie in the Red sea to the utmost of it, (1 Kings viii. 26.) and then they shall carry the news of it to the remotest shore. Note, The fall of those who have affected to make a noise with their pomp and power, will make so much the greater noise.

23. Concerning Damascus. Hamath is confounded, and Arpad; for they have heard evil tidings; they are faint-hearted; there is sorrow on the sea; it cannot be quiet. 24. Damascus is waxed feeble, and turneth herself to flee, and fear hath seized on her; anguish and sorrows have taken her, as a woman in travail. 25. How is the city of praise not left, the city of my joy! 26. Therefore her young men shall fall in her streets, and all the men of war shall be cut off in that day, saith the Lord of hosts. 27. And I will kindle a fire in the wall of Damascus, and it shall consume the palaces of Ben-hadad.

The kingdom of Syria lay north of Cannaan, as that of Edom lay south, and thither we must now remove, and take a view of the approaching fate of that kingdom, which had been often vexatious to the Israel of God. Damascus was the metropolis of that kingdom, and the ruin of the whole is supposed in the ruin of that; yet Hamath and Arpad, two other considerable cities, are named, (v. 23.) and the palaces of Ben-hadad, which he built, are particularly marked for ruin; (v. 27.) see also Amos i. 4. Some think Ben-hadad (the sea of Hadad, either their idol, or one of their ancient kings, whence the rest descended,) was a common name of the kings of Syria, as Pharoh of the kings of Egypt. Now observe concerning the judgments of Damascus,

1. It begins with a terrible fright and faint-heartedness. They hear evil tidings, that the king of Babylon, with all his force, is coming against them, and they are confounded, they know not what measures to take for their own safety, their souls are melted, they are faint-hearted, they have no spirit left them, they are like the troubled sea, that cannot be quiet, (Isa. lvi. 20.) or like men in a storm; at sea; (Ps. cvii. 26.) or, the sorrow that begins in the city shall go to the sea-coast, v. 23. See how easily God can dispirit those nations that have been most celebrated for valour! Damascus now waxeth feeble; (v. 24.) a city that thought she could have looked the most formidable enemy in the face, now turns herself to flee; for her sons and tem. She was so proud, so overweening, so conceited of her strength, that she had no thought of contending with her fate, than for a woman in labour to contend with her pains, which she cannot escape, but must yield to. It was a city of praise, (v. 25.) not praise to God, but to herself; a city much commended and admired by all strangers that visited it. It was a city of joy, where there was an affluence and abundance of all the delicious fruits of the earth, and a great plenty of the enjoyment of them. We read it, (though there is no necessity for it,) the city of my joy, which the prophet himself had sometimes visited with pleasure. Or, it may be the speech of the king himself, lamenting the ruin of the city of his joy. But now it is all overwhelmed with fear and grief. Note, Those deceive themselves who place their happiness in carnal joys; for God in his providence can soon cast a damp upon them, and put an end to them.
can soon make a city of praise to be a reproach, and a city of joy to be a terror to itself.

2. It ends with a terrible fall and fire. (1.) The inhabitants are slain; (v. 26.) The young men, who should fight the enemy, and defend the city, shall fall by the sword in her streets; and all the men of war, mighty and strong who are the pride and joy of the country, shall be cut off. (2.) The city is laid in ashes; (v. 27.) The fire is kindled by the besiegers in the wall, but it shall devour all before it, the palaces of Ben-hadad particularly, where so much mischief had formerly been hatched against God's Israel, for which it is now thus visited.

23. Concerning Kedar, and concerning the kingdoms of Hazor, which Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon shall smite, thus saith the Lord; Arise ye, go up to Kedar, and spoil the men of the east. 29. Their tents and their flocks shall they take away: they shall take to themselves their curtaine, and all their vessels, and their camels; and they shall cry unto them, Fear is on every side. 30. Flee, get you far off, dwell deep, O ye inhabitants of Hazor, saith the Lord; for Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon hath taken counsel against you, and hath conceived a purpose against you. 31. Arise, get you up unto the wealthy nation, that dwelleth without care, saith the Lord, which have neither gates nor bars, which dwell alone. 32. And their camels shall be a booty, and the multitude of their cattle a spoil; and I will scatter into all winds them that are in the utmost corners; and I will bring their calamity from all sides thereof, saith the Lord. 33. And Hazor shall be a dwelling for dragons, and a desolation for ever: there shall no man abide there, nor any son of man dwell in it.

These verses foretell the desolation that Nebuchadrezzar and his forces should make among the people of Kedar, (who descended from Kedar the son of Ishmael, and inhabited a part of Arabia the Stony,) and of the kingdoms, the petty principalities of Hazor, that joined to them, who, perhaps, were originally Canaanites, of the kingdom of Hazor, in the north of Canaan, which had Jabin for its king, but, being driven thence, settled in the deserts of Arabia, and associated themselves with the Kedarines. Concerning this people, we may here observe,

1. What was their present state and posture. They dwelt in tents, and had no walls, but curtains, (v. 29.) no fortified cities; they had no good gain, (v. 31.) they were shepherds, and had no treasures, but stock upon land, no money, but flocks and camels. They had no soldiers among them, for they were in no fear of invaders; no merchants, for they dwelt alone, v. 31. Those of other nations neither came among them, nor traded with them; but they lived within themselves, content with the produce and pleasures of their own country. This was their manner of living, very different from that of the nations that were round about them. And, (1.) They were very rich; though they had no trade, no treasures, yet they are here said to be a wealthy nation, (v. 31.) because they had a sufficiency to answer all the occasions of human life, and they were content with it. Note, These are truly rich who have enough to supply their necessities, and know when they have enough. We need not go to the treasures of kings and provinces, or to the cash of merchants, to look for wealthy people, they be found in the poorest countries, for God has provided them with enough for all the exigencies of life.

2. The design of the king of Babylon against them, and against the inhabitants of their country, was to take counsel against you, and has conceived a purpose against you, v. 30. That proud man resolves it shall never be said, that he, who had conquered so many strong cities, will leave those unconquered that dwell in tents. It was strange that that eagle would stoop to catch these flies; that so great a prince should play at such small game; but all is fish that comes to the ambitious, covetous man's net. Note, It will not be easy for any of us to bear the flogging wrong, to be able to say that they have done no wrong; not to have given offence will not be a defence against such men as Nebuchadrezzar. Yet, how unrighteous soever he was in doing it, God was righteous in directing it. These people had lived insensibly among their neighbours, as many do, who yet, like them, are guilty before God; and it was not to punish them for this; but to teach them, that God said, (v. 28.) Arise, go up to Kedar, and spoil the men of the east. They will do it to gratify their own covetousness and ambition, but God orders it for the correcting of an unthankful people, and for warning to a careless world, to expect trouble when they seem to be most safe. God says to the Chaldeans, (v. 31.) "Arise, get up to the wealthy nation that dwelleth without; ye, gather them in alarm, that none may imagine their mountain stands so strong, that it cannot be removed." 3. The great amazement that this put them into, and the great desolation hereby made among them; They shall cry unto them, those on the borders shall send the alarm into all parts of the country, which shall be put into the utmost confusion by it; they shall cry, the alarm is on every side, we are surrounded by the enemy, the very terror of which shall drive them all to their feet, and they shall none of them have any heart to make resistance. The enemy shall proclaim fear upon them, or against them, on every side; they need not strike a stroke, they shall shout them out of their tents, v. 29. Upon the first alarm, they shall flee, get far off; and dwell deep, (v. 30.) as the Edomites, v. 8. And it will be found that this fear on every side is not groundless, for their calamity shall be brought from all sides thereof, v. 32. No marvel there are fears on every side, when there are foes on every side. The issue will be, (1.) What they have will be a prey to the Chaldeans; they shall take to themselves their curtains and vessels; though they are but plain and coarse, and they have better of their own, yet they shall take them for spite, and spoil for spoiling sake. They shall carry away their tents and their flocks, v. 29. Their camels shall be a booty to those that came for nothing else, v. 32. (2.) It is not said that any of them shall be slain, for they attempt not to make any resistance, and their tents and flocks are accepted as a ransom for their lives; but they shall be dislodged and dispersed through all the country, shall dwell in the utmost corners, out of the way, and therefore they think out of the reach, of danger, (by this character those people were distinguished, ch. ix. 26.—xxv. 23.) yet they shall from hence be scattered into all winds, into all part of the world. Note, Privacy and obscurity are not always a protection and security. Many that affect to be strangers to the world, may yet by unthought-of providences be forced into it; and those that live most retired, may have the same lot with those that thrust themselves forth, and lie most exposed. 32. Their country shall lie uninhabited for, lying remote, and out of all high roads, and having neither cities nor lands inviting to strangers, none shall care to succeed them, so that Hazor shall be a desolation for ever, v. 33. If busy men be displaced, many strive to get into their places, because they lived great; but here are easy, quiet men displaced, and no man cares to abide where they did, because they lived mean.

34. The word of the Lord that came to Jeremiah the prophet against Elam, in the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah king of Judah, saying, 35. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Behold, I will break the bow of Elam, the chief of their might. 36. And upon Elam will I bring the four winds from the four quarters of heaven, and will scatter them toward all those winds; and there shall be no nation whither the outcasts of Elam shall not come. 37. For I will cause Elam to be dismayed before their enemies, and before that they seek their life; and I will bring evil upon them, even my fierce anger, saith the Lord; and I will send the sword after them, till I have consumed them: 38. And I will set my throne in Elam, and will destroy from thence the king and the princes, saith the Lord. 39. But it shall come to pass in the latter days, that I will bring again the captivity of Elam, saith the Lord.

This prophecy is dated in the beginning of Zedekiah's reign; it is probable that the other prophecies against the Gentiles, going before, were at the same time. The Elamites who thus descend from Elam the son of Shem (Gen. x. 22.) yet some think it was only that part of Persia which lay nearest to the Jews, which was called Elamites, and joined to Media-Elam, which, say they, had acted against God's Israel, bare the guiter in an expedition against them, (Isa. xxiii. 6.) and therefore must be reckoned with among the rest. It is here foretold, in general, that God will lay evil upon them, even his fierce anger, and that this evil enough, it has all evil in it, v. 37. In particular,

1. Their forces shall be disabled, and rendered incapable of doing them any service. The Elamites were famous archers, but, Behold, I will break the bow of Elam, (v. 35.) will ruin their artillery, and their strength will be utterly destroyed, he orders it so, that that which we must trust to first fails us; and that which was the chief of our might proves the least of our help.

2. Their people shall be dispersed. There shall come enemies against them from all parts of the world, and they shall all carry some of them away captive into their respective countries; while others shall flee, some to the west, and some to the east, to shift for themselves, so that there shall be no nation whither the outcasts of Elam shall not come, v. 36. The four winds shall be brought upon them; the storm shall come sometimes from one point, and sometimes from another, to toss and hurry them several ways; and we know not from what point the wind of trouble may blow; but if God compass us with his favour, we are safe, and may be easy, which way soever the storm comes. Fear shall drive them into other countries; they shall be dismayed before their enemies; but, as if that were not enough, I will send the sword after them, v. 37. Note, God can make his judgments follow those that think by flight to escape them, and to get out of the reach of them, Evil pursues sinners.

3. Their princes shall be destroyed, and the government quite changed; (v. 38.) I will set my throne in Elam. The throne of Nebuchadrezzar shall be set there, or the throne of Cyrus, who began his conquests with Elamites. Or, it may be the chief of the host of Babylon, who is God's anointed; he will make them know that he reigns, that he judges in the earth, and that kings and princes are accountable to him, and that high as they are he is above them. The king of Elam was famous of old, Gen. xiv. 1. Chedorlaomer was king of Elam, and a mighty man he was in his day; the nations about him served him; his successes, we may suppose, made a great figure; but the king of Elam is no more to God than the other another. When God takes his throne in Elam, he will destroy from thence the king and the princes that are, and set up whom he pleases.

4. Yet the destruction of Elam shall not be perpetual; (v. 39.) In the latter days I will bring again the captivity of Elam. When Cyrus had destroyed Babylon, he brought the enmities of the Persians, the Elamites, no doubt, returned in triumph out of all the countries whither they were scattered, and settled again in their own country, but this promise was to have its full and principal accomplishment in the days of the Messiah, when we find Elamites particularly among those, who, when the Holy Ghost was given, heard spoken in their own language in the church of the Holy Ghost, (Acts ii. 9.) and that is the most desirable return of the captivity. If the Son makes you free, then you shall be free indeed.

In this chapter, and that which follows, we have the judgment of Babylon, which is put last of Jeremiah's prophecies against the Gentiles, because it was last fulfilled; and when the cup of God's fury went round, (ch. xxxv. 17.) the king of Sheshach, Babylon, drank last. Babylon was employed as the rod in God's hand for the chastising of the Gentile nations; other nations this rod shall be, that rod shall be thrown into the fire. The destruction of Babylon by Cyrus was foretold, long before it came to its height, by Isaiah, and now again, when it is come to its height, by Jeremiah. For while he saw that kingdom flourishing like a green bay-tree yet at the same time he foresaw it withered and cut down. And as Isaiah's prophecies of the destruction of Babylon, and the deliverance of Israel out of it, seem designed to typify the evangelical triumphs of all believers over the powers of darkness, and the great salvation wrought out by our Lord Jesus Christ; so Jeremiah's prophecies of the same subject are designed to typify the apocalyptic triumphs of the gospel-church in the latter days over the New Testament Babylon, many passages in the Revelation being borrowed from hence. The kingdom of Babylon, being much larger and stronger than any other of the kingdoms here prophesied against, its fall was the more considerable in itself; and it having been more oppressive to the people of God than any of the others, the prophet is very large upon this subject, for the comfort of the captives, and what he foresees they shall be comforted before, (ch. xxxv. 12. and xxxvii. 7.) is here more particularly described, and with a great deal of prophetic heat as well. The terrible judgments God had in store for Babylon, for those who were in store for his people that were captives there, are intermingled and counterchanged in the prophecy of this chapter; for Babylon was destroyed to make way for the turning again of the captivity of God's people. Here is 1. The ruin of Babylon, (v. 1. to 3.) and again, (v. 9. to 16.) and again, (v. 21. to 39.) and again, v. 35. to 46. 1. The redemption of God's people, (v. 4., 8.) and again, (v. 17., 20.) and again, (v. 35., 34.) And these being set the one against the other, it is easy to say which one would choose to take one's lot with the persecuting Babylonians, who, though now in pomp, are reserved for so good a day, or the persecuted Israelites, who, though now in tribulation, are reserved for so great a glory.

1. THE word that the Lord spake against Babylon, and against the land of the Chaldeans, by Jeremiah the prophet. 2. Declare ye among the nations, and publish, and set up a standard; publish, and conceal not: say, Babylon is taken, Bel is confounded, Merodach is broken in pieces; her idols are confounded, her images are broken in pieces. 3. For out of the north there cometh a nation against her, which shall make her land desolate, and none shall dwell therein: they shall remove, they shall depart, both man and beast.

4. In those days, and in that time, saith the Lord, the children of Israel shall come, they and the children of Judah together, going and weeping; they shall go, and seek the Lord their God. 5. They shall ask the way to Zion, with their faces thitherward, saying, Come, and let us join ourselves to the Lord in a perpetual covenant that shall not be forgotten. 6. My people hath been lost sheep; their shepherds have caused them to go astray, they have turned them away on the mountains; they have gone from mountain to hill, they have forgotten their resting-place. 7. All that found them have devoured them; and their adversaries said, We offend not, because they have sinned against the Lord, the habitation of justice; even the Lord, the hope of their fathers. 8. Remove out of the midst of Babylon, and go forth out of the land of the Chaldeans, and be as the he-goats before the flocks.

Here is, 1. A word spoken against Babylon, by him whose works all agree with his word, and none of whose words fall to the ground. The king of Babylon had been very kind to Jeremiah, and yet he must foretell the ruin of that kingdom; for God's prophets must not be governed by favour or affection. Whoever are our friends, if, notwithstanding, they are God's enemies, we dare not speak peace to them.

2. The destruction of Babylon is here spoken of as a thing done, (v. 26.) Let it be published to the nation as a piece of news, true news, and great news, and news they are all concerned in; let them hang out the flag, as is usual on days of triumph, to give notice of it; let all the world take notice of it, Babylon is taken; let God have the honour of it, let his people have the comfort of it, and therefore do not confound it. Take care that it be known, that the Lord may be exalted by those judgments which he executes. Ps. xvi. 16.

3. It is spoken of as a thing done thoroughly. For, (1.) The very idols of Babylon, which the people would protect with all possible care, and from which they expected protection, shall be destroyed. Bel and Merodach were their two principal deities, they shall be confounded, and the images of them broken to pieces. (2.) The country shall be levelled into a plain, (v. 22.) from Media, which lay north of Babylon, and from Arabia, through which Cyrus made his descent upon Babylon; from thence the nation shall come, that shall make her land desolate. Their land was north of the countries that they destroyed, who were therefore threatened with evil from the north; (Omne malum ab acquisione—Every evil comes from the north) but God will find out nations yet further to the north to lay waste upon them. The pomp and power of old Rome were brought down by northern nations, the Goths and Vandals.

II. Here is a word spoken for the people of God, and for their comfort, both the children of Israel and of Judah; for many there were of the ten tribes, that associated with those of the two tribes in their return out of Babylon. Now here, 1. It is promised that they shall return to their God first, and then to their own land; and the promise of their conversion and reformation is that which makes way for all the other promises, v. 4.

5. (1.) They shall lament after the Lord; (as the whole house of Israel did in Samuel's time, 1 Sam. vii. 2.) they shall go weeping. These tears flow not from the sorrow of the world, as those when they went into captivity, but from godly sorrow; and they are to show the people how tenderly affected under his hand. (2.) They shall inquire after the Lord; they shall not sink under their sorrows, but exalt themselves to find out comfort where it is to be had; They shall go weeping to seek the Lord their God; Those seek the Lord must seek him sorrows; as Christ's parents sought him, Luke ii. 48. And those that sorrow must seek the Lord, and then their sorrow shall soon be turned into joy. For the Lord will be found of them that seek him. They shall seek the Lord as their God, and shall now have no more to do with idols. When they shall hear that the idols of Babylon are confounded and broken, it will be seasonable for them to inquire after their own God, and to return to Him who lives for ever. Therefore men are deceived in false gods, that they may depend on the true God only. (3.) They shall think of returning to their own country again; they shall think of it not only as a mercy, but as a duty, because there only is the holy hill of Zion, on which once stood the house of the Lord their God, v. 5. They shall ask the way to Zion, with their faces thitherward. Zion was the city of their solemnities, they often thought of it in the depth of their captivity; (Ps. cxlvii.) but now that the ruin of Babylon gave occasion of a release from the Mosaic yoke, this business else of getting back to Zion. Their hearts were upon it before, and now they set their faces thitherward; they long to be there, they set out for Zion, and resolve not to take up short. The journey is long, they know not the road, but they shall ask the way, for they will press forward till they come to Zion; and as they are determined not to turn back, so they are in no manner afraid of the way. This represents the return of poor souls to God; heaven is the Zion they aim at as their end, on this they have set their hearts, toward this they have set their faces, and therefore they ask the way thither. They do not ask the way to heaven, and set their faces toward the world; nor set their faces toward heaven, and go on at a venture without asking the way. But in all true converts there are both a sincere desire to attain the end, and a constant care to keep in the way; and a blessed sight it is, to see people thus asking the way to heaven with their faces shiftings and returning, knowing they have the right path to walk with God closer for the future. Come, and let us join ourselves to the Lord in a perpetual covenant. They had broken covenant with God, had in effect separated themselves from him, but now they resolve to join themselves to him again, by engaging themselves fresh to be his. Thus, when backsliders return, they must do their first work; for the covenant they first made with him, it must be a perpetual covenant, that must never be broken; and, in order to that, must never be forgotten; for a due remembrance of it will be the means of a due observance of it.

2. Their present case is lamented as very sad, and as having been long so; “My people” (for he owns them as his, now that they are returning to him) “have been lost sheep, (v. 6.) they have gone from mountain to hill, have been hurried from place to place, and could find no pasture, they have forgotten their resting-place in their own country, and cannot find their way to it.” And that which aggravated their misery, was, (1.) That they were led astray by their own shepherds, their own princes and priests; they turned them from their duty, and did asked God to turn them out of the way won. It is doth it happen, when their leaders cause them to err; when those that should direct and reform them seduce and debauch them; and when those that should secure and advance their interests are the betrayers of them. (2.) That in their wanderings they lay exposed to the beasts of prey, who thought they were enticed to them, as wolves and strays that have no owner; (v. 7.) It is with them as they wander, all that found them have devoured them, and made a prey of them; and when they did them the greatest injuries, they laughed at them, telling them it was what their own prophets had many a time told them they deserved: that was far from justifying those who did them wrong, yet they mistreated them with this excuse, We offend not, because they have sinned against the Lord; but they could not have sinned without being sinned against them. And see what notion they had of the Lord they had sinned against, not as the only true and living God, but only as the Habitation of justice, and the Hope of their fathers; they had put a contempt upon the temple, and upon the tradition of their ancestors, and therefore deserved to suffer these hard things. And yet it was indeed an aggravation of their sin, and justified God, though it did not justly their adversaries in what was done to them, that they had forsaken the Habitation of justice, and him that was the Hope of their fathers.

3. They are called upon to hasten away, as soon as ever the door of liberty was opened to them; (v. 8.) “Remove, not only out of the borders, but out of the midst of Babylon; though you be ever so well settled there, think not to settle there, but hasten to Zion, and be as the he-goats before the flock, strive which shall be foremost, which shall lead in so good a work;” a he-goat is come in going, (Prov. xxx. 31.) because he goes first. It is a graceful thing to be forward in a good work, and to set others a good example.

9. For, lo, I will raise, and cause to come up against Babylon, an assembly of great nations from the north country: and they shall set themselves in array against her, from thence she shall be taken; their arrows shall be as of a mighty expert man; none shall return in vain. 10. And Chaldea shall be a spoil: all that spoil her shall be satisfied, saith the Lord. 11. Because ye were glad, because ye rejoiced, O ye destroyers of my heritage; because ye are grown fat as the heifer at grass, and bellow as bulls; 12. Your mother shall be sore confounded; she that bare you shall be ashamed: behold, the hindmost of the nations shall be a wilderness, a dry land, and a desert. 13. Because of the wrath of the Lord, it shall not be inhabited, but it shall be wholly desolate: every one that goeth by Babylon shall be astonished, and hiss at all her plagues. 14. Put yourselves in array against Babylon round about; all ye that bend the bow shoot at her, spare no arrows; for she hath sinned against the Lord. 15. Shout against her round about; she hath given her hand: her foundations are fallen, her walls are thrown down; for it is the vengeance of the Lord: take vengeance upon her; as she hath done, do unto her. 16. Cut off the sower from Babylon, and him that lendeth the sickle in the time of harvest: for fear of the oppressing sword they shall turn every one to his people, and they shall flee every one to his own land. 17. Israel is a scattered sheep, the lions have driven him away: first the king of Assyria hath devoured him, and last this Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon hath broken his bones. 18. Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I will punish the king of Babylon and his land, as I have punished the king of Assyria. 19. And I will bring Israel again to his habitation, and he shall feed on Carmel and Bashan, and his soul shall be satisfied upon mount Ephraim and Gilead. 20. In those days, and in that time, saith the Lord, the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none; and the sins of Judah, and they shall not be found: for I will pardon them whom I reserve.

God is here, by his prophet, as afterward in his providence, proceeding in his controversy with Babylon. Observe,

1. The commission and charge given to the instruments that were to be employed in destroying Babylon. The army that is to do it, is called an assembly of great nations, (v. 9.) the Medes and Persians, and all their allies and auxiliaries; it is called an assembly, because regularly formed by the divine will and counsel to do this execution. God will raise them up to do it, will incline them to, and fit them for, this service, and then he will cause them to come up, for all their nations are under his conduct and direction: he shall give the word of command, shall order them to put themselves in array against Babylon, and then they shall put themselves in array, (v. 14.) and then they shall put themselves in array, (v. 9.) for what God appoints to be done shall be done, and from hence she shall be quickly taken; from their first sitting down before it, they shall be still gaining ground against it till it be taken. God shall bid them shoot at her, and spare no arrows, (ver. 14.) and then their arrows shall be as of a mighty expert man, that has both skill and strength, a good eye, and a good hand; (ver. 9.) nine shall return in vain. When God gives commission, he will give them not only to shoot, but to bid them shoot at her, (ver. 14.) but to shoot against her. (ver. 15.) with a triumphant shout, as those that are already sure of victory. Those whom God directs to shoot, may do it with shouting, for they are sure not to miss the mark.

2. The desolation and destruction itself that shall be brought upon Babylon. This is set forth here in a great variety of expressions: (1.) The wealth of Babylon shall be dispersed and he inhaimed; shall be wholly desolate, (ver. 13.) to that degree, that every one who goeth by shall triumph in her fall, and, instead of condoling with them, shall hiss at all her plagues, v. 13. (2.) Their ancestors shall be ashamed of their cowardice, in fleeing from the first onset; (ver. 12.) or, Your mother, Babylon itself, the mother-city, shall be confounded, when she sees herself deserted by those that should have been her guards. From the first ages of Christians may justly be expected, that every one who goeth by shall triumph in her fall, and, instead of condoling with them, shall hiss at all her plagues. (3.) Their great city, the head of it, shall be quite ruined, her foundations are fallen, and therefore her walls are thrown down; for how can the walls stand, when divine vengeance is at the door, and shakes the very foundations? It is the vengeance of the Lord, which nothing can contend with either in law or battle. (6.) There shall not be left in it enough even to pitch a tent; not enough even to build a city, to dwell in, for vine-dressers and husbandmen, as there was in Israel; (ver. 16.) The sower shall be cut off from Babylon, and he that handles the sickle; the country shall be so emptied of people, that there shall be none to till the ground, and gather in the fruits of it. Harvest shall come, and there shall be no reapers; weediness shall come, and there shall be no sower; God will do his part, but there shall be no men to do theirs. (7.) All their auxiliary forces, which have hired into their service, shall desert them, as mercenary men often do upon the approach of danger; (ver. 16.) for fear of the oppressing sword they shall turn every one to his people. This was threatened before, concerning Egypt, ch. xlv. 16.

Now the impending, provoking cause of this destruction. It comes from God's displeasure; it is because of the wrath of the Lord, that Babylon shall be wholly desolate; (ver. 13.) and his wrath is righteous, for, (ver. 14.) she hath sinned against the Lord, therefore spare no arrows. Note, It is sin that makes men a mark for the arrows of God's judgments. An abundance of idolatry and immorality makes men a mark for the arrows of God's judgments, but the injuries they had done to the people of God, from a principle of enmity to them as his people. They have been the destroyers of God's heritage; (ver. 11.) herein indeed God made use of them for the necessary correction of his people; and yet it is laid to their charge as a horrid crime, because they designed nothing but their utter destruction.

1. What they did against Jerusalem, they did with pleasure; (ver. 11.) Ye were glad, ye rejoice. God does not afflict his people willingly, and therefore no triumphs were made over them, but afflicts them willingly. When Titus Vespasian destroyed Jerusalem, he wept over it, but these Chaldeans triumphed over it. (2.) The spoils of Jerusalem they made use of, to feed their own luxury; Ye are grown fat as the heifer at grass, and belove as bullocks; your having conquered Jerusalem has made you very wanton and proud, in order to your luxury. The king shall therefore be at home to you, therefore you must be a spoil. That they have thus swallowed down riches, must vomit them up again. Therefore they have given their hand; (ver. 13.) they have surrendered themselves to the conqueror, have tamely yielded, so that now you may take vengeance on her, now you may make reprisals, and do unto her as she hath done. (3.) They pined at nothing less than the utter ruin of God's Israel; Israel is a scattered sheep, as before, (ver. 6.) that is not only barked at and worried by dogs, but even lions, the most potent adversaries, have roared upon him, and driven him away, v. 17. One King of Assyria carried ten tribes quite away, and devoured them; another invaded Judah, and plundered and impoverished it, tore the fleece and flesh off the body of its poor sheep, and now at last this Nebuchadnezzar, that is the terror and plague of all his neighbours, has taken advantage of the low condition to which he is reduced, and he has fallen upon him, and broken his bones, has quite ruined him, and therefore the king of Babylon must be punished as the king of Assyria was, v. 18. Note, Those who pursue and prosecute the sins of their predecessors, must expect to be pursued and prosecuted by their plagues; if they do as they did, let them fare as they fared.

4. The mercy promised to the Israel of God, which shall not only accompany, but accrue from, the destruction of Babylon. (1.) God will return their captivity, they shall be released out of their bondage, and brought again to their own habitation, as sheep that were scattered, to their own fold, (ver. 19.) to their own hills. If we remember how they were flung out of Canaan, it is their habitation still, the discontinuance of their possession was not the destruction of their right, but now they shall recover the enjoyment of it again. (2.) He will restore their prosperity; they shall not only live, but live comfortably, in their own land again; they shall feed upon Carmel and Bashan, the richest and most fruitful parts of the country. Those sheep shall be gathered from the deserts to which they were dispersed, and put again into good pasture, which their soul shall be satisfied with; though they shall come hungry to it, having been so long stinted, and straitened, and kept short, yet they shall find enough to satiate them, and shall have hearts to be satisfied with it. They inquired the way to Zion, (ver. 5.) where great numbers of them, when they were first called to their destruction, was it that they Chiefly aimed at in their return; but God will not only bring them thither, but bring them also to Carmel and Bashan, where they shall abundantly feed themselves. Note, They that return to God and their duty, shall find true satisfaction of soul in so doing; and they that seek first the kingdom of God and the righteousness thereof, that aim at their own aggrandizement and advancement, shall have other things added to them, even all the comforts of Efraim and Gilgal, the fruitful hills. (3.) God will pardon their iniquity; this is the root of all the rest; (v. 20.) In those days the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none. Not only the punishments of their iniquity shall be taken off, but the offence which it gave to God shall be forgotten, and he will be reconciled to them. Their sin shall be before him as if it had never been, it shall be blotted out as a cloud, crossed out as a debt, shall be cast behind his back; may, it shall be cast into the depth of the sea, shall be no longer scaled up among God's treasures, nor in any danger of appearing again, or rising up against them. This denotes how fully God forgives sin; he remembers it no more. Note, Deliverances out of trouble are the comforts derived, when they are the fruits of the forgetfulness of sin, Isa. xxxviii. 17. Judah and Israel were so fully forgiven when they were brought back out of Babylon, that they are said to have received of the Lord's hand double for all their sins, Isa. xl. 2. This may include also a thorough reformation of their hearts and lives, as well as a full remission of their sins. If any seek for idols or any idolatrous customs among them, after their return, there shall be none, they shall not find them; their dress shall be purely purged away, and by that it shall appear that their guilt is so for I will pardon them whom I reserve; I will be propitious to them; (so the word is;) and that must be through him who is the Great Propitiation. Note, Those whose sins God pardons, he reserves for something very great; for whom he justifies, them he glorifies.

21. Go up against the land of Merathaim, even against it, and against the inhabitants of Pekod: waste and utterly destroy after them, saith the Lord, and do according to all that I have commanded thee. 22. A sound of battle is in the land, and of great destruction. 23. How is the hammer of the whole earth cut asunder and broken! how is Babylon become a desolation among the nations! 24. I have laid a snare for thee, and thou art also taken, O Babylon, and thou wast not aware: thou art found, and also caught, because thou hast striven against the Lord. 25. The Lord hath opened his armoury, and hath brought forth the weapons of his indignation: for this is the work of the Lord God of hosts in the land of the Chaldeans. 26. Come against her from the utmost border, open her storehouses; cast her up as heaps, and destroy her utterly: let nothing of her be left. 27. Slay all her bullocks; let them go down to the slaughter; wo unto them! for their day is come, the time of their visitation. 28. The voice of them that flee and escape out of the land of Babylon, to declare in Zion the vengeance of the Lord our God, the vengeance of his temple. 29. Call together the archers against Babylon: all ye that bend the bow, camp against it round about: let none thereof escape: recompense her according to her work; according to all that she hath done unto her: for she hath been proud against the Lord, against the Holy One of Israel. 30. Therefore shall her young men fall in the streets, and all her men of war shall be cut off in that day, saith the Lord. 31. Behold, I am against thee, O thou most proud, saith the Lord God of hosts: for thy day is come, the time that I will visit thee. 32. And the most proud shall stumble and fall, and none shall raise him up: and I will kindle a fire in his cities, and it shall devour all round about him.

Here, 1. The forces are mustered and commissioned to destroy Babylon, and are nothing ready for a descent upon the distant kingdom. 2. Let us go up against that land by Merathaim, the country of the Mardii, that lay part in Assyria, and part in Armenia; and go among the inhabitants of Pekod, another country, (mentioned Ezek. xxiii. 23.) which Cyrus took in his way to Babylon. The forces of Cyrus are called to go up against Babylon, (v. 21.) to come against her from the utmost border. Let all come together, for there will be both work and pay enough for them all, v. 26. Distance of place must not be their hindrance from engaging in this work; the archers particularly must be called together against Babylon, v. 29. Thus the Lord hath opened his armoury, (v. 25.) his treasury, (so the word is,) and hath brought forth the weapons of his indignation; as great princes fetch cut of the magazine and stores all necessary provisions for their armies, when they undertake any great expedition. Media and Persia are now God's armory, thence he fetches the weapons of his wrath, Cyrus, and his great officers and armies, whom he will make use of for the destruction of Babylon. Note, Great men are but instruments which the great God makes use of to serve his own purposes. He has his various instruments, has them at command, has armours ready to be opened according as the occasion is. This is the work of the Lord God of hosts. Note, When God has work to do, he will make it appear that he is God of hosts, and will not want instruments to do it with.

2. Instructions are given them what to do. In general, Do according to all that I have commanded thee, (v. 21.) It was said of Cyrus, (Isa. xlix. 28.) He shall pour out his soul in the multitude of his affection, in his expedition against Babylon. They must waste and utterly destroy after them; when they have destroyed once, they must go over them again; or destroy their posterity that should come after them. They must often her storehouses, (v. 26.) plie her treasures, and turn her artillery against herself; they must cast her up as heaps; let all the wealth and pomp of Babylon be shovelled up in a heap of ruins and rubbish. Tread her down as heaps, (so the margin reads it,) and destroy her utterly. See how little account the great God makes of those things which men so much value, and value themselves upon! Their princes and great men, who are fat and bulky, shall fall by the sword, not as men of war in the field of battle, which we call a bed of honour, but as beasts by the butcher's hand; (v. 27.) Slay all her bullocks, all her mighty men, let them go down sottishly and insensibly, as an ox to the slaughter. Wo unto them! their case is the more sad for the little sense they have of it; their day is come to fall, the time when they must be reckoned with, and they are not aware of it.

3. Assurances are given them of success. Let them do what God commands, and they shall accomplish what he threatens. A great destruction shall be made, v. 22. Babylon shall become a desolation; (v. 23.) her young men, and all her men of war, shall be cut off in that day, that should have been her defence; (v. 30.) God is against her,

Vol. iv.-3 Z
JEREMIAH, L.

(v. 31.) He has laid a snare for her; (v. 24.) he hath formed this enterprise against her, that she should be as a bird taken in a snare; she shall, no doubt, prevail, for he fights under God; God will kindle a fire in the cities of Babylon; (v. 32.) and who can stand before him when he is angry, or quench the fire that he has kindled?

4. Reasons are given for these severe dealings with Babylon. They that are employed in this war, may, if they please, know the grounds of it, and be satisfied in the justice of it, which it is fit all should be; (v. 23.) therefore, with this. (3.) Babylon has been very troublesome, vexatious, and injurious, to all its neighbours; it has been the hammer of the whole earth, (v. 23.) beating, beating down, and beating to pieces, all the nations far and near. It has done so long enough; it is time now that it be cut asunder and broken. Note, He that is the God of nations will, sooner or later, assert the injured right of nations against those that unjustly and violently invade them. The God of the whole earth will break the hammer of the whole earth. (2.) Babylon has bid defiance to God himself; Thou hast striven against the Lord, (v. 24.) hast joined issue with him, (so the word signifies,) as in law or battle, hast openly opposed him, set up rivals with him, raised rebellion against him; therefore thou art now found, and caught, as in a snare. Note, Those strive against the Lord who will soon find themselves over-matched. (3.) Babylon ruined Jerusalem, the holy city, and the holy house there, and must now be called to an account for that. This is the manifesto published in Zion, in the day of Babylon’s visitation; it is the vengeance of the Lord our God, the vengeance of his people, v. 28. The burning of the temple, and the carrying away of its vessels, were articles in the charge against Babylon, on which greater stress was laid than upon its being the hammer of the whole earth; for Zion was the joy and glory of the whole earth. Note, Whatever wrong is done to God’s church, (his temple in the world,) it will certainly be reckoned for; and no vengeance will be sorer and heavier than the vengeance of the temple. (4.) Babylon had been very haughty and insolent, and therefore must have a fall; so is it the glory of God to look upon those that are proud, and to abase them, Jer. xl. 12.) I am against thee, O thou most proud, v. 31. Thou pride; (so the word is;) and again, v. 32. as proud as pride itself. Note, The pride of men’s hearts sets God against them, and ripens them apace for ruin; for God resists the proud, and will bring them down. The most proud shall stumble and fall; they shall fall not so much by others, thrusting them down, as by their own stumbling; for they hold their heads so high, that they never look under their feet, to choose their way, and avoid stumbling-blocks, but walk at all adventures. Babylon’s pride must unavoidably be her ruin; for she has been proud against the Lord, against the Holy One of Israel, (v. 29.) has insulted him in insulting over his people; she has made him Enemie, and therefore, when she is fallen, none shall raise her up, v. 32. Who can help those up whom God will throw down?

33. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, The children of Israel and the children of Judah were oppressed together; and all that took them captives held them fast; they refused to let them go. 34. Their Redeemer is strong; The Lord of hosts is his name; he shall thoroughly plead their cause, that he may give rest to the land, and disquiet the inhabitants of Babylon. 35. A sword is upon the Chaldeans, saith the Lord, and upon the inhabitants of Babylon, and upon her princes, and upon her wise men. 36. A sword is upon the liars; and they shall dote; a sword is upon her mighty men; and they shall be dismayed. 37. A sword is upon their horses, and upon their chariots, and upon all the mingled people that are in the midst of her; and they shall become as women; a sword is upon her treasures; and they shall be robbed. 38. A drought is upon her waters; and they shall be dried up: for it is the land of graven images, and they are mad upon their idols. 39. Therefore the wild beasts of the desert, with the wild beasts of the islands, shall dwell there, and the owls shall dwell therein: and it shall be no more inhabited for ever; neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation. 40. As God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah, and the neighbour cities thereof, saith the Lord; so shall no man abide there, neither shall any son of man dwell therein. 41. Behold, a people shall come from the north, and a great nation, and many kings shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth. 42. They shall hold the bow and the lance; they are cruel, and will not shew mercy; their voice shall roar like the sea, and they shall ride upon horses, every one put in array, like a man to the battle, against thee, O daughter of Babylon. 43. The king of Babylon hath heard the report of them, and his hands waxed feeble; anguish took hold of him, and pangs as of a woman in travall. 44. Behold, he shall come up like a lion from the swelling of Jordan unto the habitation of the strong; but I will make them suddenly run away from her; and who is a chosen man, that I may appoint over her? for who is like me? and who will appoint me the time? and who is that shepherd that will stand before me? 45. Therefore hear ye the counsel of the Lord that he hath taken against Babylon, and his purposes that he hath purposed against the land of the Chaldeans; Surely the least of the flock shall draw them out; surely he shall make their habitation desolate with them. 46. At the noise of the taking of Babylon the earth is moved, and the cry is heard among the nations.

We have, in these verses,

1. Israel’s sufferings, and their deliverance out of those sufferings. God takes notice of the bondage of his people in Babylon, as he did of their bondage in Egypt; he hath surely seen it, and has heard their cry. Israel and Judah were oppressed together, v. 33. Those that remained of the captives of the ten tribes, upon the uniting of the kingdoms of Assyria and Chaldea, seemed to have come and mingled themselves with those of the two tribes, and to have mingled tears with them, so that they were oppressed together. They were humble suppliants for their liberty, and that also; they could not attempt any thing towards it, for all that took them captives held them fast, and were too hard for them. But this is their comfort in distress, that, though they are weak, their Redeemer is strong; (2.) Their sinfulness signifies (v. 2.) that has a right to them, and will claim his right, and make good his claim; he is stronger than their enemies that hold them fast: he can overpower all the force that is against them, and put strength into his own people though they are very weak. The Lord of hosts is his name, and he will answer to his name, and make it to appear that he is what his people call him, and will be that to them, for which they depend upon him. Note, It is the unspeakable comfort of the people of God, that, though they have hosts against them, they have the Lord of hosts for them; and he shall thoroughly plead their cause; pleading he shall plead it, plead it with jealousy, plead it effectually, plead it, and carry it, that he may give rest to the land, to his people's land, rest from all their enemies round about. This is their case, 1. Their sinfulness, 2. Their weakness, 3. Their enemies. Therefore, (v. 3.) God will be their strength, will give them strength to stand and to conquer their enemies; and he will make them free, and they shall be free indeed; he will give them rest, that rest which remains for the people of God.

II. Babylon's sin, and their punishment for that sin.

1. The sin they are here charged with, is idolatry and persecution. (1.) They oppressed the people of God, they held them fast, and would not let them go; they opened not the house of his prisoners, Isa. xiv. 17. This was God's quarrel with them, as of old with Pharaoh; it cost him dear, and yet they would not take warning. The inhabitants of Babylon must be disquieted, (v. 24.) because they have disquieted God's people, whose honour and comfort he is jealous for, and therefore will recompense tribulation to those that trouble them, as well as rest to them that are troubled. 2 Thess. 1. 6, 7. (2.) They wronged God himself, and robbed him, giving that glory to others, which is due to him alone. (v. 25.) It be the Statue of a man of war, all parts of the country abounded with idols, and they were mad upon them, were in love with them, and doted on them, cared not what cost and pains they were at in the worship of them, were unwearied in paying their respects to them, and in all this they were wretchedly infatuated, and acted like men out of their wits; they were carried on in their idolatry without reason or discretion, like men in a perfect fury. The word here used for idols, properly signifies terrors, Enim, the name given to giants that were formidable, because they made the images of their gods to look frightful, to strike a terror upon fools and children. Their idols were scarecrows, yet they doted on them. Babylon was the mother of harlots, (Rev. xviii. 5.) the source of their idolatry without reason or discretion, like men to make a god of any creature; and those who are proud against the Lord, the true God, are justly given up to strong delusions, to be made upon idols that cannot profit. But this madness is wickedness, for which sinners will be certainly and severely reckoned with.

2. The judgments of God upon them for these sins, they are such as will quite lay them waste, and ruin them. (1.) All that should be their defence and support shall be cut off by the sword. The Chaldeans had long been God's sword, wherewith he had done execution upon the sinful nations round about; but now, they being as bad as any of them, or worse, a sword is brought upon them, even upon the inhabitants of Babylon, (v. 35.) a sword of war, and, as it is in God's hand, sent and directed by him, it is a sword of justice. It shall be, [1.] Upon their princes; for, if they should be by it, and their dignity, wealth, and power, shall be lost, their security, their philosophers, their statesmen and privy-councillors; their learning and policy shall neither secure themselves, nor stand the public in any stead. [3.] Upon their sons; for they cheated with their prognostications of peace and prosperity; and the sword upon them shall make them dote, so that they shall seek after foolish things that the sword has lost all their wits. Note, God has a sword that can reach the soul and affect the mind, and bring men under spiritual plagues. [4.] Upon their mighty men; a sword shall be upon their spirits; if they are not slain, yet they shall be dismayed, and shall be no longer mighty men; for what steel will Their horses and chariots, the invaders shall make themselves masters of all their warlike stores, shall seize their horses and chariots for themselves, and destroy them. The hosts of other nations, that were in their service, shall be quite disheartened, the mingled people shall become as weak and timorous as women. [6.] Upon their exchequer; the sword shall be upon her treasures, which are the sinews of war, and they shall be robbed, and made use of by the enemy against them. See what universal destruction the sword makes when it comes with commission!

(2.) The country shall be made desolate; (v. 38.) The waters shall be dried up; the water that secures the city. Cyrus drew the river Euphrates into so many channels as made it passable for his army, so that they got with ease to the walls of Babylon, which were thought, having such a river before them, to be inaccessible. The water likewise, that made the country fruitful, shall be dried up, so that it shall be turned into barrenness, and shall be no more inhabited by the children of men, but by the wild beasts of the desert, v. 39. This was foretold concerning Babylon, Isa. xiii. 19—22. The same was foretold concerning Edom, ch. xlix. 18. As the Chaldeans had laid Edom waste, so they shall themselves be laid waste.

(3.) The king and kingdom shall be put into the utmost confusion and consternation by the enemies' invading of them, v. 41—45. All the expressions here used, bespeaking the formidable power of the invaders, where with they should array themselves, and the fright which both court and country should be put into thereby, we met with before, (ch. vi. 22—24.) concerning the Chaldeans invading the land of Judah. This battle, which is there said to be against thee, O daughter of Zion, is here said to be against thee, O daughter of Babylon, to intimate that they should be paid in their own measure, and what they could do to other, they should do to others. And those who have dealt cruelly, and have showed no mercy, may expect to be cruelly dealt with, and to find no mercy. Only there is one difference between these passages; there it is said, We have heard the fame thereof, and our hands wax feeble; here it is said, The king of Babylon has heard the report, and his heart waxed feeble; which intimates that that proud and daring prince shall, in the day of his distress, be as weak and dispirited as the meanest Israelites were in the day of their distress.

(4.) That they shall be as much hurt as frightened, for the invader shall come up like a lion to tear and destroy, (v. 44.) and shall make them and their habitation desolate; (v. 45.) and the desolation shall be so astonishing, that all the nations about shall be terrified by it, v. 46. These three verses we had before, (ch. xlix. 19.—21.) in the prophecy of the destruction of Edom, which was accomplished by the Chaldeans, and they are here repeated, mutatis mutandis—with a few necessary alterations, in the prophecy of the destruction of Babylon, which was to be accomplished upon the Chaldeans, to show that though the distributions of Providence may appear unequal for a time, its retributions will be equal at last; when thou shalt make an end to spoil, thou shalt be spoiled, Isa. xxxiii. 1.—Rev. xiii. 10.

CHAP. LI.

The prophet, in this chapter, goes on with the prediction of Babylon's fall, to which other prophets also bare witness. He is very large and lively in describing the foresight God had given him: for the destruction of the two capitals, whose deliverance depended upon it, and was to be the result of it. Here is, I. The record of Babylon's doom, with the particulars of it, intermixed with the grounds of God's controversy with her, malicious attempts against her, and great encouragements given from thence to the Israel of God, that suffered such hard things by her, v. 1—58. II. The representation and ratification of this, by the throwing of a copy of this prophecy into the river Euphrates, v. 59—64.

1. Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will raise up against Babylon, and against them that dwell in the midst of them that rise up against me, a destroying wind; 2. And will send unto Babylon fanners, that shall fan her, and shall empty her land: for in the day of trouble they shall be against her round about. 3. Against him that bendeth let the archer bend his bow, and against him that lifteth himself up in his chariotine: and spare ye not your young men; destroy ye utterly all her host. 4. Thus the slain shall fall in the land of the Chaldeans, and they that are thrust through in her streets. 5. For Israel hath not been forsaken, nor Judah of his God, of the Lord of hosts; though their land was filled with sin against the Holy One of Israel. 6. Flee out of the midst of Babylon, and deliver every man his soul; be not cut off in her iniquity: for this is the time of the Lord's vengeance; he will render unto her a recompense. 7. Babylon hath been a golden cup in the Lord's hand, that made all the earth drunken: the nations have drunk of her wine; therefore the nations are mad. 8. Babylon is suddenly fallen and destroyed: howl for her; take balm for her pain, if so be she may be healed. 9. We would have healed Babylon, but she is not healed: for sake her, and let us go every one into his own country; for her judgment reacheth unto heaven, and is lifted up even to the skies. 10. The Lord hath brought forth his righteousness: come, and let us declare in Zion the work of the Lord our God. 11. Make bright the arrows, gather the shields: the Lord hath raised up the spirit of the kings of the Medes: for his device is against Babylon, to destroy it; because it is the vengeance of the Lord, the vengeance of his temple. 12. Set up the standard upon the walls of Babylon, make the watch strong; set up the watchmen, prepare the ambushes: for the Lord hath both devised and done that which he spake against the inhabitants of Babylon. 13. O thou that dwellest upon many waters, abundant in treasures, thine end is come, and the measure of thy covetousness. 14. The Lord of hosts hath sworn by himself, saying, Surely I will fill thee with men as with caterpillars; and they shall lift up a shout against thee. 15. He hath made the earth by his power, he hath established the world by his wisdom, and hath stretched out the heaven by his understanding. 16. When he uttereth his voice there is a multitude of waters in the heavens; and he causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth: he maketh lightnings with rain, and bringeth forth the wind out of his treasures. 17. Every man is brutish by his knowledge; every founder is confounded by the graven image: for his molten image is falsehood, and there is no breath in them. 18. They are vanity, the work of errors: in the time of their visitation they shall perish. 19. The Portion of Jacob is not like them; for he is the Former of all things, and Israel is the rod of his inheritance; The Lord of hosts is his name. 20. Thou art my battle-axe and weapons of war: for with thee will I break in pieces the nations; and with thee will I destroy kingdoms; 21. And with thee will I break in pieces the horse and his rider; and with thee will I break in pieces the chariot and his rider; 22. With thee also will I break in pieces men and woman; and with thee will I break in pieces old and young; and with thee will I break in pieces the young man and the maid; 23. I will also break in pieces with thee the shepherd and his flock; and with thee will I break in pieces the husbandman and his yoke of oxen; and with thee will I break in pieces captains and rulers. 24. And I will render unto Babylon, and to all the inhabitants of Chaldea, all their evil that they have done in Zion in your sight, saith the Lord. 25. Behold, I am against thee, O destroying mountain, saith the Lord, which destroyest all the earth; and I will stretch out my hand upon thee, and roll thee down from the rocks, and will make thee a burnt mountain. 26. And they shall not take of thee a stone for a corner, nor a stone for foundations; but thou shalt be desolate for ever, saith the L ORD. 27. Set ye up a standard in the land, blow the trumpet among the nations, prepare the nations against her, call together against her the kingdoms of Ararat, Minni, and Ashchenaz; appoint a captain against her; cause her horses to come up as the rough caterpillars. 28. Prepare against her the nations, with the kings of the Medes, the captains thereof, and all the rulers thereof, and all the land of his dominion. 29. And the land shall tremble and sorrow: for every purpose of the L ORD shall be performed against Babylon, to make the land of Babylon a desolation without an inhabitant. 30. The mighty men of Babylon have forborne to fight, they have remained in their holds: their might hath failed; they became as women: they have burnt their dwelling-places; her bars are broken. 31. One post shall run to meet another, and one messenger to meet another, to show the king of Babylon that his city is taken at one end, 32. And that the passages are stopped, and the reeds they have burnt with fire, and the men of war are affrighted. 33. For thus saith the L ORD of hosts, the God of Israel, The daughter of Babylon is like a threshing-floor, it is time to thresh her: yet a little while, and the time of her harvest shall come. 34. Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon hath devoured me, he hath crushed me, he hath made me an empty vessel, he hath swallowed me up like a dragon, he hath filled his belly with my delicacies, he hath cast me out. 35. The violence done to me and to my flesh be upon Babylon, shall the inhabitant of Zion say; and, My blood upon the inhabitants of Chaldea, shall Jerusalem say. 36. Therefore thus saith the L ORD, Behold, I will plead thy cause, and take vengeance for thee; and I will dry up her sea, and make her springs dry. 37. And Babylon shall become heaps, a dwelling-place for dragons, an astonishment, and a hissing without an inhabitant. 38. They shall roar together like lions: they shall yell as lions' whelps. 39. In their heat I will make their feasts, and I will make them drunken, that they may rejoice, and sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the L ORD. 40. I will bring them down like lambs to the slaughter, like rams with goats. 41. How is Sheshach taken! and how is the praise of the whole earth surprised! how is Babylon become an astonishment among the nations! 42. The sea is come up upon Babylon: she is covered with the multitude of the waves thereof. 43. Her cities are a desolation, a dry land, and a wilderness, a land wherein no man dwelleth, neither doth any son of man pass thereby. 44. And I will punish Bel in Babylon; and I will bring forth out of his mouth that which he hath swallowed up: and the nations shall not flow together any more unto him; yea, the wall of Babylon shall fall. 45. My people, go ye out of the midst of her, and deliver ye every man his soul from the fierce anger of the L ORD. 46. And lest your heart faint, and ye fear for the rumour that shall be heard in the land: a rumour shall both come one year, and after that in another year shall come a rumour, and violence in the land, ruler against ruler. 47. Therefore, behold, the days come, that I will do judgment upon the graven images of Babylon: and her whole land shall be confounded, and all her slain shall fall in the midst of her. 48. Then the heaven and the earth, and all that is therein, shall sing for Babylon: for the spoilers shall come unto her from the north, saith the L ORD. 49. As Babylon hath caused the slain of Israel to fall, so at Babylon shall fall the slain of all the earth. 50. Ye that have escaped the sword, go away, stand not still: remember the L ORD afar off, and let Jerusalem come into your mind. 51. We are confounded, because we have heard reproach: shame hath covered our faces; for strangers are come into the sanctuaries of the L ORD's house. 52. Wherefore, behold, the days come, saith the L ORD, that I will do judgment upon her graven images; and through all her land the wounded shall groan. 53. Though Babylon should mount up to heaven, and though she should fortify the height of her strength, yet from me shall spoilers come unto her, saith the L ORD. 54. A sound of a cry cometh from Babylon, and great destruction from the land of the Chaldeans: 55. Because the L ORD hath spoiled Babylon, and destroyed out of her the great voice; when her waves do roar like great waters, a noise of their voice is uttered. 56. Because the spoiler is come upon her, even upon Babylon, and her mighty men are taken; every one of their bows is broken: for the L ORD God of recompenses shall surely requite. 57. And I will make drunk her princes, and her wise men, her captains, and her rulers, and her mighty men: and they shall sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the King, whose name is The L ORD of hosts. 58. Thus saith the L ORD of hosts, The broad walls of Babylon shall be utterly broken, and her high gates shall be burnt with fire; and the people shall labour in vain, and the folk in the fire, and they shall be weary.

The particulars of this copious prophecy are dispersed and interwoven, and the same things left and returned to so often, that it could not well be divided into parts, but we must endeavour to collect them under their proper heads.

Let us then observe here,

1. An acknowledgment of the great pomp and power that Babylon had been in, and the use that God in his providence had made of it; (v. 7.) Babylon hath been a golden cup, a rich and glorious empire, a golden city, (Isa. xiv. 4.) a head of gold, (Dan. ii. 38.) filled with all good things, as a cup with wine; nay, she had been a golden cup in the Lord's hand, he had in a particular manner filled and favoured her with blessings, he had made the earth drunk with this cup of drunkenness, and she had with her pleasures, and debauched by others intoxicated with her terrors, and destroyed by her. In both senses, the New Testament Babylon is said to have made the kings of the earth drunk, Rev. xvii. 4.—xviii. 2. Babylon had also been God's battle-axe; it was so at this time, when Jeremiah prophesied, and was likely to be yet more so, v. 29. The forces of Babylon were God's weapons of war, tools in his hand, with which he brake into pieces, and knocked down, nations and kingdoms, horses and chariots, which are so much the strength of kingdoms; (v. 21.) men and women, young and old, with which kingdoms are replenished; (v. 22.) the shepherd and his flock, the husbandman and his oxen, with which kingdoms are maintained and supplied, v. 23. Such havoc as this the Chaldeans had made, when God employed them as instruments of his wrath, it is incredible, and it makes Babylon herself must fall. Note, Those that have carried all before them a great while, will yet at length meet with their match, and their day also will come to fall, the rod will itself be thrown into the fire at last; nor can any think it will exempt them from God's judgments, that they have been instrumental in executing his judgments on others. Wonders of complaint made of Babylon, and a change drawn up against her by the Israel of God. (1.) They are complained of for their incorrigible wickedness; (v. 9.) We would have healed Babylon, but she is not healed. The people of God that were captives among them, endeavoured, according to the instructions given them, (Jer. x. 11.) to convince them of the folly of their idolatry, but they could not do it; still the Babylonians doted as much as ever upon their graven images, and the Israelites resolve to quit them, and go to their own country. Yet some understand this as spoken by the forces they had hired for their assistance, declaring that they had done their best to save her from ruin, but that it was all to no purpose, and therefore they had as good go home to their respective countries; for her judgment reaches unto heaven, (it does not refer to her person, but to her policy and power.) Whether the Israelites resolve to quit them, and go to their own country.

Yet some understand this as spoken by the forces they had hired for their assistance, declaring that they had done their best to save her from ruin, but that it was all to no purpose, and therefore they had as good go home to their respective countries; for her judgment reaches unto heaven; and they are now together with them, shall fall (it does not refer to her person, but to her policy and power.) Whether the Israelites resolve to quit them, and go to their own country.

(2.) They are complained of for their inveterate malice against Israel; other nations had been hardly used by the Chaldeans, but Israel only complains to God of it, and with confidence appeals to him, (v. 34, 35.) The king of Babylon has devoured me, and crushed me, and never thought he could do enough to ruin me; he has engrafted me and rooted me, and made me a dragon or white whelps upon the little fish by shoals; he has filled his belly, filled his treasures, with my delights, with all my pleasant things, and has cast me out, cast me away as a vessel in which there is no pleasure; and now let them be accountable for all this. Zionist and Jerusalem shall say, Let the violence done to me and my children, that are my own flesh, and pieces of myself, and all the blood of my people, which they have shed like water, be upon them; let the guilt of it lie upon them, and let it be required at their hand." Note, Ruin is not far off from those that lie under the guilt of wrong done to God's people.

3. Judgment given upon this appeal by the righteous Judge of heaven and earth, on behalf of Israel against Babylon. He sits in the throne judging right, is ready to receive complaints, and answers, (v. 33.) "I have heard the outcry of the people; I will in due time plead it effectually, and take vengeance for thee; and every drop of Jerusalem's blood shall be accounted for with interest." Israel and Judah seem to have been neglected and forgotten, but God has an eye to them, v. 5. It is true, their land was filled with sin against the Holy One of Israel, they were a provoking people, and their sin was the great offence to God, as a holy God, and as their God, their Holy One; and therefore he justly delivered them up into the hands of their enemies, and might justly have abandoned them, and left them to perish in their hands; but God deals better with them than they deserve, and, notwithstanding their iniquities and his severities, Israel is not forsaken, is not cast off, though he be cast out, but is owned and looked after by his God. by the Lord; who has his hand upon him, and will act as him as the Lord of hosts, a God of power. Note, Though God's people may have broken his laws, and fallen under his rebukes, yet it does not therefore follow that they are thrown out of covenant; but God's care of them and love to them will flourish again, Ps. lxxxix. 30, 33. The Chaldeans thought they should never be called to an account for what they had done against God's Israel; but there is a time, when all evil shall be fixed, and when it shall come, it will come; he will render unto Babylon a recompense, for the avenging of Israel is the vengeance of the Lord, who espouses their cause; it is the vengeance of his temple, (v. 11.) as before, ch. i. 28. The Lord of recompenses, the God to whom vengeance belongs, will surely require, (v. 56.) will pay them with a double, with a triple, with a fourfold recompense. Note, When it should come sooner than the time fixed, but then it will come; he will render unto Babylon a recompense, for the avenging of Israel is the vengeance of the Lord, who espouses their cause; it is the vengeance of his temple, (v. 11.) as before, ch. i. 28. The Lord of recompenses, the God to whom vengeance belongs, will surely require, (v. 56.) will pay them with a double, with a triple, with a fourfold recompense.

4. A declaration of the greatness and sovereignty of that God who espouses Zion's cause, and undertakes to reckon with this proud and potent enemy; (v. 14.) It is the Lord of hosts that has said it, that has sworn it, has sworn it by himself, for he could swear by no greater, that he will fill Babylon with vast and incredible numbers of the enemy's forces, will fill it with men as with caterpillars, that shall overpower it with multitudes, and need only to lift up a shout against it, for that shall be so terrible as to dispirit all to resistance. The destruction of this nation cannot be compared to this numerous army. But who, and where, is he that can break so powerful a kingdom as Babylon? The prophet gives an account of him from the description he had formerly given of him, and of his sovereignty and victory over all pretenders, (Jer. x. 12—16.) which was there intended for the conviction of the Babylonian idolaters, and the confirmation of God's Israel in the faith and worshipping of the God of Israel; and it is here repeated, to show that God will convince those by his judgments, who would not be convinced by his word, that he is God over all. Let not any doubt but that he who has determined to destroy Babylon, is able to make his words good, for, (1.) He is the God that made the world, (v. 15.) and therefore nothing is too hard for him to do; it is in his name that our help stands, and on him our hope is built. (2.) He has the command of all the creatures that he has made; (v. 16.) his providence is a continued creation; he has wind and rain at his disposal; if he speak the word, there is a multitude of waters in the heavens; and it is a wonder how they hang there, fed by vapours out of the earth; and it is a wonder how they ascend thence. Lightnings and rain seem connected with each other, and only produced together; and the wind, which seems arbitrary in its motions, and we know not whence it comes, is yet, we are sure, brought out of his treasures. (3.) The idols that oppose the accomplishment of his word, are a mere sham, and their worshippers brutish people, v. 17, 18. The idols are falsehood, they are vanity, they are the work of empty belief, and the box can be probed and inquired into, they perish, their reputation sinks, and they appear to be nothing; and those that make them are like unto them. But between the God of Israel and these gods of the heathen there is no comparison; (v. 19.) The portion of Jacob is not like them; the God who speaks this, and will do it, is the former of all things, and the end of all things; and the box can be proved to be without power; and there is a near relation between him and his people, for he is their Portion, and they are his; they put a confidence in him as their Portion, and he is pleased to take a complacency in them, and a particular care of them, as the lot of his inheritance; and therefore he will do what is best for them. The repetition of these things here, which were said before, intimates both the certainty and the importance of them, and obliges us to take special notice of them; God hath spoken once; yea, twice have we heard this, that power belongs to God; power to destroy the most formidable enemies of his church, and if God thus speak once, yea, twice, we are inexcusable if we do not perceive it, and attend to it. 5. A description of the instruments that are to be employed against Babylon. Darius and Cyrus, who come against Babylon by a divine instinct; for God's device is against Babylon to destroy it; they do it, but God devised it, he designed it; they are but accomplishing his purpose, and acting as he directed. Note, God's counsel shall stand, and according to it all hearts shall move. Those whom God employs against Babylon are compared to the destroying wind, (v. 1.) to a destroying wind, which either by its coldness blasts the fruits of the earth, or by its fierceness blows down all before it; this wind is brought out of God's treasures, (v. 16.) and it is here said to be raised up against them that dwell in the midst of the Chaldeans, those of other nations that inhabit among them, and are incorporated with them. The Chaldeans rise up against God by falling down before idols, and against them God will raise up destroyers, for he will be too hard for them that contest with him. These events are compared of the Chaldeans, (v. 3.) and not of their young men, but utterly destroy them, for the Lord has both devised and done what he spoke against Babylon, v. 12. This may animate the instruments he employs, by assuring them of success; the methods they take are such as God has devised, and therefore they shall surely prosper; what he has spoken shall be done, for he himself will do it; and therefore let all necessary preparations be made; this they are called to, v. 27, 28. Let a standard be set up, under which to enlist soldiers for this expedition: let a trumpet be blown to call men together to it, and animate them in it; let the nations, out of which Cyrus's army is to be raised, prepare their recruits; let the kingdoms of Arrarat and Mimi, and Ashkenaz, of Armenia, both the higher and the lower, and all the land of Bithynia, and their quota of men for this service; let general officers be appointed, and the cavalry advance; let the horses come up in great numbers, as the caterpillars, and come, like them, leaping and pawing in the valley; let them lay the country waste, as caterpillars do, (Job i. 4.) especially rough caterpillars; let the kings and captains prepare nations against Babylon, for the service is great, and there is occasion for many hands to be employed in it. 7. The weakness of the Chaldeans, and their inability to make head against this threatening, destroying force. When God employed them against other nations, they had spirit and strength in act offensively, and went on with admirable resolution, conquering and to conquer; but now that it comes to their turn to be conquered, all their might and courage are gone, their hearts fail them, and none of all their men of might and mettle have found their hands to act so much as defensively. They are called upon here to prepare for action, but it is ironically, and in an upbraiding way; (v. 11.) Make bright the arrows, which are grown rusty through disuse; gather the shields, which in a long course of peace and security have been scattered, and thereby out of the way; (v. 12.) Set up the standard upon the walls of Babylon, upon the towers on those walls, to summon all that owed suit and service to that mother-city, now to come in to her assistance. Let them make the watch as strong as they can, and appoint the sentinels to their respective posts, and prepare ambushes for the reception of the foe. To this the Chaldeans are said to be very secure and remiss, and would need to be thus quickened; (and they were so to that degree, that they were in the midst of their revels when the city was taken;) but that all their preparations should be to no purpose; who will make them to it, but they shall have no heart to come at the call, v. 29. The whole land shall tremble and be dismayed; (v. 13.;) all the neighboring nations shall see them, for they shall see both the irresistible arm, and the irrepressible counsel and decree, of God against them; they shall see that God is making Babylon a desolation, and therein is performing what he has purposed; and then the mighty men of Babylon have forborne to fight, v. 30. God having taken away their strength.
and spirit, so that they have remained in their holds, not daring so much as to peep forth, the might both of their hearts and of their hands fails, they become as timorous as women, so that the enemy has, without any resistance, burnt her dwelling-places, and broken her bars. It is to the same purport with ver. 50.—58. When the spoiler comes upon Babylon, her mighty men, who should make head against him, are immediately taken, their weapons fall from them; and if the broken bow is broken, and stands them in no stead; their policies fail them, they call councils of war, but their princes and captains, who sit in council to concert measures for the common safety, are made drunk, they are as men intoxicated through stupidity or despair, they can form no right notions of things, they stagger, and are unsteady in their counsels and resolves, and dash one against another worse than wolves and shepherds among themselves; at length they sleep a perpetual sleep, and never awake from their wine, the wine of God's wrath, for it is to them an opiate that lays them into a fatal lethargy. The walls of their city fall to pieces, ver. 58. When the enemy had found ways to ford Euphrates, which was thought impassable, yet surely, think they, the walls are impregnable, they are the great works of art and power which man made it, the walls of broad Babylon; the compass of the city, within the walls, was 385 furlongs, some say 480, that is, about sixty miles; the walls were 200 cubits high, and 50 cubits broad, so that two chariots might easily pass by one another upon them. Some say that there was a threefold wall about the inner city, and the like upon the outer; and that the stones of the wall, being laid four cubits pitch, instead of mortar, (Gen. xi. 3.) were scarcely separable; and yet these shall be utterly broken, and the high gates and towers shall be burnt, and the people that are employed in the defence of the city shall labour in vain, in the fire, they shall quite tire themselves, but shall do no good.

8. The destruction that shall be made of Babylon by these invaders: (1.) It is a certain destruction, the doom is past, and it cannot be reversed; a divine power is engaged against it, which cannot be resisted; (ver. 8.) Babylon is fallen and destroyed, is as sure to fall, to fall into destruction, as if it were fallen and destroyed already; though, when Jeremiah prophesied this, and many a year after, it was in the height of its power and greatness. God declares, God appears against Babylon; (ver. 25.) Babylon and the heathen whom God is against; he will stretch out his hand upon it, a hand which no creature can bear the weight of, or withstand the force of. It is his purpose which shall be performed, that Babylon must be a desolation, ver. 29. (2.) It is a righteous destruction; Babylon has made herself meet for it, and therefore cannot fail to meet with it. For, (ver. 25.) Babylon is as bulky as a mountain, and destroying all the earth, as the stones that are tumbled from high mountains spill the grounds about them; but now it shall itself be rolled down from its rocks, which were as the foundations on which it stood; it shall be levelled, its pomp and power broken. It is now a burning mountain, like Ætna and the other volcanoes; Babylon has eaten up destroyer mountains, every one; but it shall be a burnt mountain, it shall at length have consumed itself, and shall remain a heap of ashes—so will this world be, and shall be at the end of time. Again, (ver. 33.) Babylon is like a threshing-floor, in which the people of God have been long threshed, as sheaves in the floor; but now the time is come that she shall herself be threshed, and her sheaves in her; her princes and great men, and all her inhabitants, shall be beaten in their own land, as in the threshing-floor. The threshing-floor is prepared, Babylon is by sin made meet to be a seat of war, and her people, like corn in harvest, are ripe for destruction, Rev. xiv. 15. Mic. iv. 12. (3.) It is an unavoidable destruction. Babylon seems to be well fenced and fortified against it; she dwells upon many waters; (ver. 13.) the situation of her country is such, that it seems inaccessible, it is so surrounded, and the march of an enemy into it so embarrassed, by rivers. In allusion to this, the King of Babylon is said to be in the midst of his waters, to rule over many nations, as the other Babylon did, Rev. xvii. 15. Babylon is abundant in treasures; and yet thine end is come, and another thy waters nor thy wealth shall secure thee. This end that comes shall be the measure of thy covetousness, it shall be the stint of thy gettings, it shall set bounds to thine ambition and avarice, which destruction of Babylon, said to its proud waves, Hitherto shall ye come, and no further. Note, If men will not set a measure to their covetousness by wisdom and grace, God will set a measure to it by his judgments. Babylon, thinking herself very safe and very great, was very proud; but she will be deceived, ver. 53. Though Babylon should mount her head, and lift up her eyes; (Babylon means that, because what is high is apt to totter) she should take care to fortify the height of her strength, yet all will not do, God will send spoilers against her, that shall break through her strength, and bring down her height. (4.) It is a gradual destruction, which, if they had pleased, they might have foreseen, and had warning of; for, (ver. 46.) A rumour will come one year, that Cyrus is making vast preparations for war, and after that, in another year, shall come a rumour, that his design is upon Babylon, and he is steering his course that way; so that when he was a great way off, they might have sent, and desired conditions of peace; but they were too proud, too secure, to do that, and their hearts were hardened to their destruction. (5.) Yet, when it comes, it is a surprising destruction; Babylon is suddenly fallen; (ver. 6.) the destruction comes upon them when they did not think of it, and is perfected in a little time, as that of the New Testament Babylon in one hour, Rev. xvi. 17. The king of Babylon, who should have been observing the approaches of the enemy, was himself at such a distance from the place where the attack was made, that it was a great while ere he had notice that the city was taken; but when they set fire to the place, sent one messenger, one courier, after another, with advice of it, ver. 31. The foot-pasts shall meet at the court from several quarters with this intelligence to the king of Babylon, that his city is taken at one end, and there is nothing to obstruct the progress of the conquerors, but they will be at the other end quickly. They are to tell him that the enemy has seized the passes, (ver. 32.) the forts on blockades up the river; and that having got over the river, they set fire to the reeds on the river-side to alarm and terrify the city, so that all the men of war are affrighted, and have thrown down their arms, and surrendered at discretion. The messengers come, like Job's, one upon the heels of another, with these tidings, which are immediately confirmed with a great shout, (ver. 32.) the king brake his neck, shouting the king himself, Dan. v. 30. That profane feast which they were celebrating at the very time when their city was taken, which was both an evidence of their strange security, and a great advantage to the enemy, seems here to be referred to; (ver. 38, 39.) They shall roar together like lions, as men in their revels do, when the wine is got into their heads; they call it singing, but in scripture language, and in the language of sober men, it is called yelling like lions' whelps. It is probable that they were drinking confusion to Cyrus and his army with loud huzzas; Well, says God, in their heat, when they are inflamed. (Isa. v. 11.) and their heads are hot with their drink. I will make a fountain, and the fountain shall give them their portion; they have passed their cup round, now the cup of the Lord's right hand shall be turned unto them, (Hab. ii. 15, 16.) a cup of fury, which shall make them drunk, that they may rejoice, or rather that they may revel it, and sleep a perpetual sleep let them be as merry as they can with that bitter cup, but it shall lay them to sleep, never to wake more; (v. 17.) for on that night, or the midst of the jollity, was Belshazzar slain. (6.) It is to be a universal destruction, God will make thorough work of it; for, as he will perform what he has purposed, so he will perfect what he has begun. The slain shall fall in great abundance throughout the land of the Chaldeans, multitudes shall be thrust through in her streets, v. 4. They are brought down like lambs to the slaughter, (v. 4G.) in such great numbers, so easily; and the enemies make no more of killing them than the butcher does of killing lambs. The strength of the enemy, and their invading of them, are here compared to an irruption and inundation of waters, (v. 42.) The sea is come up upon Babylon, which, when it has once broken through its bounds, there is no fence against, so that she is covered with the mingled waters; the sea waves shall run over the army; her cities then become a desolation, an uninhabited, uncultivated desert, v. 43. (7.) It is a destruction that shall reach the gods of Babylon, the idols and images, and fall with a particular weight upon them. In token that the whole land shall be confounded, and all her slain shall fall, and that throughout all the country the wounded shall groan, I will punish Bel, that great Destroyer, the image to which such abundance of sacrifices are offered, and such rich spoils dedicated, and to whose temple there is such a vast resort; he shall disgorge what he has so greedily regaled himself with; God will bring forth out of his temple all the wealth laid up there, Job xx. 15. His altars shall be forsaken, none shall regard him any more, and so that idol which was thought to be a wall to Babylon, shall fall, and fall them. (8.) It shall be a final destruction; you may take balm for your pain, but in vain; she that would not be healed by the word of God, shall not be healed by his providence, v. 8. 9. Babylon shall become heaps, (v. 37.) and to complete its infamy, no use shall be made even of the ruins of Babylon, so execrable shall they be, and so contemptible shall they be in the sight of the enemy. The world will not take of thee a stone for a corner, nor a stone for foundations. People shall not care for having anything to do with Babylon, or whatever belonged to it. Or it denotes that there shall be nothing left in Babylon, on which to ground any hopes or attempts of raising it into a kingdom again; for, as it follows here, it shall be desolate, (v. 43.) unless the Lord shall have compassion on his people. 10. 15. The ruins of the city are to be seen, yet the ground enclosed by them was a forest of wild beasts. 9. Here is a call to God's people to go out of Babylon. It is their wisdom, when ruin is approaching, to quit the city, and retire into the country; (v. 6.) "Fly out of the midst of Babylon, and get into some remote corner, that you may save your lives, and may not be cut off in her iniquity." When God's judgments are abroad, it is good to get as far as we can from those against whom they are leveled, as Israel from the tents of Korah. This agrees with the case in the captivity of the ten tribes. It is a reference to the destruction of Jerusalem; Let them which be in Judea, flee to the mountains, Matt. xxi. 16. It is their wisdom to get out of the midst of Babylon, lest they be involved, if not in her ruins, yet in her fears; (v. 45, 46.) Let your heart faint, and ye fear for the rumour that shall be heard in the land. Though God has told them that Cyrus would be their deliverer, and Babylon's destruction their deliverance, yet they had been told also, that in the peace thereof they should have peace, and therefore the alarms given to Babylon would put them into a fright, and perhaps they might not have faith and consideration enough to suppress these fears; for which reason they are here advised to get out of the hearing of the alarms. Note, Those who have not grace enough to keep their temper in temptation, should have wisdom enough to keep out of the way of temptation. But this is not all; it is not only their wisdom to quit the city when the ruin is approaching, but it is their duty to quit the country too, when the ruin is accomplished, and they are set at liberty by the pulling down of the prison over their heads. This they are told, v. 50, 51. "Ye Israelites, who have escaped the sword of the Chaldeans, you are now free to quit Babylon, and destroyers, now that the year of release is come, go away, stand not still, hasten to your own country again, however you may be comfortable settled in Babylon, for this is not your rest, but Canaan is." (1.) He puts them in mind of the inducements they had to return, "Remember the Lord afar off, his presence with you now, though you are here afar off from your native soil, and your families formerly in the temple, though you are now afar off from the ruins of it." Note, Wherever we are, in the greatest depths, at the greatest distances, we may and must remember the Lord our God; and in the time of the greatest fears and hopes it is seasonable to remember the Lord. (1.) And let Jerusalem come into your mind; though it be now in ruins, yet favour its dust, (Ps. ciii. 14.) though few of you saw Jerusalem destroyed, and believe the reports concerning it, from those that saw it when they remembered Zion; and think of Jerusalem until you come up to a resolution to make the best of your way thither. Note, When the city of our solemnities is out of sight, yet it must not be out of mind; and it will be of great use to us, in our journey through this world, to let the heavenly Jerusalem come often into our mind. (2.) He takes notice of the discouragement which the returning captives labour under; (v. 51.) being reminded of Jerusalem, they cry out, "We are confounded, we cannot bear the thought of it, shame covers our faces at the mention of it, for we have heard of the reproach of the sanctuary, that it is profaned and ruined by strangers; how shall we do there, we are in a way of destruction." Which he answers, (v. 52.) that God of Israel will give a triumph over the gods of Babylon, and so that reproach will be for ever rolled away. Note, The believing prospect of Jerusalem's recovery will keep us from being ashamed of Jerusalem's ruins. 10. Here is the diversified feeling excited by Babylon's fall, and it is the same that we have with respect to the destruction of Babylon in this chapter: (1.) Some shall lament the destruction of Babylon. There is the sound of a cry, a great outcry coming from Babylon, (v. 54.) lamenting this great destruction, the voice of mourning, because the Lord has destroyed the voice of the multitude, that great voice of mirth, which used to be heard in Babylon, v. 55. We are told what they shall say in their lamentations; (v. 41.) How is Sheba taken, and how are we mistaken concerning her! How is that city surprised, and become an astonishment among the nations, that was the prase, and glory, and admiration, of the whole earth! See how that may fall into a general contempt, which has been universally cried up! (2.) Yet some shall rejoice in Babylon's fall, not as it is the misery of their fellow-creatures, but as it is the manifestation of the righteous judgment of God, and as it opens the way for the release of God's captives: upon these accounts the heavens and the earth, and all that is in both, shall sing for Babylon; (v. 48.) the church in heaven and the church on earth shall give to God the glory of his righteousness, and take notice of it with thankfulness to his praise. Babylon's ruin is Zion's praise.

39. The word which Jeremiah the prophet commanded Seraiah the son of Neriah, the son of Maaseiah, when he went with Zedekiah the king of Judah into Babylon, in the fourth year of his reign. And this Seraiah was a quiet prince. 60. So Jeremiah wrote in a book all the evil that should come upon Babylon, even all these words that are written against Babylon. 61. And Jeremiah said to Seraiah, When thou comest to Babylon, and shalt see, and shalt read all these words, 62. Then shalt thou say, O Lord, thou hast spoken against this place, to cut it off, that none shall remain in it, neither man nor beast, but that it shall be desolate for ever. 63. And it shall be, when thou hast made an end of reading this book, that thou shalt bind a stone to it, and cast it into the midst of Epnphrates: 64. And thou shalt say, Thus shall Babylon sink, and shall not rise from the evil that I will bring upon her, and they shall be weary. Thus far are the words of Jeremiah.

We have been long attending the judgment of Babylon, in this and the foregoing chapter; now here we have the conclusion of that whole matter.

1. A copy is taken of this prophecy, it should seem, by Jeremiah himself, for Baruch his scribe is not mentioned here; (v. 60.) Jeremiah wrote in a book all these words that are here written against Babylon. He received this notice, that he might give it to all whom it might concern. It is of great advantage both to the propagating, and to the perpetuating, of the word of God, to have it written, and to have copies taken of the law, prophets, and epistles.

2. It is sent to Babylon, to the captives there, by the hand of Seraiah, who went there attendant on, or perhaps for King Nebuchadnezzar, the fourth year of his reign, v. 59. He went with Zedekiah, or, as the margin reads it, on the behalf of Zedekiah, into Babylon. The character given of him is observable. That this Seraiah was a quiet prince, a prince of rest; he was in honour and power, but not, as most of the princes then were, hot and heady, making parties, and heads factions, and driving things furiously: he was of a calm temper, studied the things that made for peace, endeavoured to preserve a good understanding between the king his master and the king of Babylon, and to keep his master from rebelling: he was no persecutor of God's prophets, but a moderate man. Zedekiah was happy in the choice of such a man to be his envoy to the king of Babylon, and Jeremiah might safely intrust such a man with his errand too. Note, It is the real honour of great men to be quiet men, and it is the wisdom of princes to put such into places of trust.

3. Seraiah is desired to read it to his countrymen that were already gone into captivity: "When thou shalt come to Babylon, and shalt see what a magnificent place it is, how large a city, how strong, how rich, and how well fortified, and shalt therefore be tempted to think, Surely it will stand for ever;" (as the disciples imagined, when they saw the magnificence of the temple, concluded that nothing would throw them down but the end of the world, Matt. xxiv. 13.) "then thou shalt read all these words to thyself, and thy particular friends, for their encouragement in their captivity: let them with an eye of faith see to the end of these threatening powers, and comfort themselves and one another herewith." He is directed to make a solemn protestation of the divine authority and unquestionable certainty of that which he had read; (v. 62.) Then thou shalt look up to God, and say, O Lord, thou hast spoken against this place, to cut it off. This is like the angel's protestation concerning the destruction of the New Testament Babylon; These are the true sayings of God. These words are true and faithful, Rev. xix. 9. — xx. 5. Though Seraiah sees Babylon flourishing, and never will fall, yet he is bid to foresee Babylon falling; and by virtue of it, must curse its habitation, though it be taking root; (Job v. 3.) "O Lord, thou hast spoken against this place, and I believe what thou hast spoken, that, as thou knowest every thing, so thou canst do every thing. Then hast passed sentence upon Babylon, and it shall be executed. Thou hast spoken against this place, to cut it off, and by virtue of it, the Lord will not endure its pomp, nor fear its power." We are bid to study this world, as how glittering its shows are, and how flattering its proposals, let us read in the book of the Lord that its fashion passes away, and it shall shortly be cut off, and be desolate for ever, and we shall learn to look upon it with a holy contempt. Observe here, When we have been reading the word of God, it becomes us to direct to him whose word it is; God's word is our rule and standard, by which to judge, and conduct our lives in the world, in truth, equity, and goodness, of what we have read.

5. He must then tie a stone to the book, and throw it into the midst of the river Euphrates, as a confirming sign of the things contained in it, saying, "Thus shalt Babylon sink, and not rise; for they shall be weary, they shall perfectly succumb, as men tired with a burden, under the load of the evil that I will bring upon them, which they shall never shake off, or get from under, v. 63, 64. In the sign, it was the stone that sunk the book, which otherwise would have swam, but in the thing signified, it was rather the book that sunk the stone; it was the divine sentence passed upon Babylon in this prophecy, that sunk that city, which seemed as firm as a stone. The fall of the New Testament Babylon was represented by something like this, but much more terrible. (Zech. xiv. 21.) A mighty angel cast a great millstone into the sea, saying, Thus shall Babylon fall. Those that sink under the weight of God's wrath and curse, sink irrecoverably. The last words of the chapter seal up the vision and prophecy of this book; Thus far are the words of Jeremiah. Not that this prophecy against Babylon was the last of his prophecies, for it was dated in the fourth year of Zedekiah; we will join before he finished his testimony; but this is recorded last of his prophecies, because it was to be last accomplished of all his prophecies against the Gentiles, ch. xlvii.

1. And the chapter which remains is purely historical, and, as some think, was added by some other hand.
Zedekiah was one and twenty years old when he began to reign; and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem: and his mother's name was Hamutal, the daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah. And he did that which was evil in the eyes of the Lord, according to all that Jehoiakim had done.

3. For through the anger of the Lord it came to pass in Jerusalem and Judah, till he had cast them out from his presence, that Zedekiah rebelled against the king of Babylon.

4. And it came to pass, in the ninth year of his reign, in the tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, that Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon came, and he and all his army, against Jerusalem, and pitched against it, and built forts against it round about. 5. So the city was besieged unto the eleventh year of king Zedekiah. 6. And in the fourth month, in the ninth day of the month, the famine sore was in the city, so that there was no bread for the people of the land. 7. Then the city was broken up, and all the men of war fled, and went forth out of the city by night, by the way of the gate between the two walls, which was by the king's garden; (now the Chaldeans were by the city round about:) and they went by the way of the plain. 8. But the army of the Chaldeans pursuèd after the king, and overtook Zedekiah in the plains of Jericho; and all his army was scattered from him.

9. Then they took the king, and carried him up unto the king of Babylon to Riblah, in the land of Hamath; where he gave judgment upon him. 10. And the king of Babylon slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes: he slew also all the princes of Judah in Riblah. 11. Then he put out the eyes of Zedekiah; and the king of Babylon bound him in chains, and carried him to Babylon, and put him in prison till the day of his death.

This narrative begins no higher than the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah, though there were two captivities before, one in the fourth year of Je-hoiakim, the other in the first of Jeconiah: but, probably, it was drawn up by some of those that were carried away with Zedekiah, as a reproach to themselves for imagining that they should not go into captivity after their brethren, with which hopes they had long flattered themselves. We have here,

1. God's just displeasure against Judah and Jerusalem for their sin, v. 5. His anger was against them to that degree, that he determined to cast them out from his presence, his favourable, gracious presence; as a father, when he is extremely angry with an unfruitful son, bids him get out of his presence. He expelled them from that good land that had such tokens of his presence in providential bounty, and that holy city and temple that had such tokens of his presence in covenant-grace and love.

Note, Those that are banished from God's ordinances have reason to complain that they are in some degree cast out of his presence; yet none are more cast out from his grace and favour than those that by sin have thrown themselves out of it. This fruit of sin we should therefore deprecate above any thing, as David, (Ps. lii. 11.) Cast me not away from thy presence.

2. Zedekiah's bad conduct and management, to which God left him, in displeasure against the people, and for which God punished him, in displeasure against Zedekiah. Zedekiah was cast out of years of discretion when he came to the throne; he was 21 years old; (v. 1.) he was none of the worst of the kings, (we never read of his idolatries,) yet his character is, that he did evil in the eyes of the Lord, for he did not do the good he should have done. But that evil deed of his, which did in a special manner hasten his destruction, was, his rebelling against the king of Babylon, which was his downfall and his ruin. And he was then brought ruim upon his people, not only meritoriously, but efficiently. God was greatly displeased with him for his pernicious dealing with the king of Babylon; (as we find, Ezek. xviii. 15, &c.) and because he was angry at Judah and Jerusalem, he put him into the hand of his own counsels, to do that foolish thing which proved fatal to him and his kingdom.

3. The possession which the Chaldeans at length gained of Jerusalem, after eighteen months' siege. They sat down before it, and blocked it up, in the ninth year of Zedekiah's reign, in the tenth month, (v. 4.) and made themselves masters of it in the eleventh year in the fourth month, v. 6. In remembrance of these two steps towards their ruin, while they were in captivity, they kept a fest in the fourth month and a fast in the tenth; (Zech. viii. 19.) that in the fifth month was in remembrance of the burning of the temple, and that in the seventh of the murder of Gedaliah. We may easily imagine, or rather cannot imagine, what a sad time it was with Jerusalem, during this year and half that it was besieged, when all provisions were cut off from coming to them, and they were ever and anon alarmed by the attacks of the enemy, and, being obstinately prevailed to hold out to the last extremity, nothing remained but certain fearful looking for of judgment. That which disabled them to hold out, and yet could not prevail with them to capitulate, was, the famine in the city; (v. 6.) there was no bread for the people of the land, so that the soldiers could not make good their posts, but were rendered wholly unserviceable; and then no wonder that the city was broken up, v. 7. Walls, in such a case, will not hold out long without men, any more than men without walls; nor will both together stand people in any stead without God and his protection.

4. The inglorious retreat of the king and his mighty men. They got out of the city by night, (v. 7.) and made the best of their way, I know not whither, nor perhaps they themselves; but the king was overtaken by the pursuers in the plains of Jericho, and his guards dispersed, and all his army scattered from him, v. 8. His flight was not caused, for where there is guilt there will be fear in time of danger. But his flight was fruitless, for there is no escaping of the judgments of God; they will come upon the sinner, and will overtake him, let him flee where he will; (Deut. xxxviii. 15.) and these judgments particularly that are here executed, were there threatened, v. 52, 53, &c.

5. The sad doom past upon Zedekiah by the king of Babylon, and immediately put in execution. He treated him as a rebel, gave judgment upon him, v. 9. One cannot think of it without the utmost vexation and regret, that a king, a king of Judah, a king of the house of David, should be arraigned as a criminal at the bar of this heathen king. But he humbled not himself before Jeremiah the prophet; therefore God thus humbled him. Pursuant to the sentence passed upon him by the high priest and the chief of the priests, his sons were slain before his eyes, and all the princesses of Judah; (v. 10.) then his eyes were put out, and he was bound in chains, carried in triumph to Babylon; perhaps they made sport with him as they did with Samson when his eyes were put out; however, he was condemned to perpetual imprisonment, wearing out the remainder of his life (I cannot say his days, for he saw day no more) in darkness and misery: he was kept in prison till the day of his death, but had some honour done him at his funeral, ch. xxxiv. 5. Jeremiah had often told him what it would come to, but he would not take warning when he might have prevented it.

12. Now in the fifth month, in the tenth day of the month, (which was the nineteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon,) came Nebuzar-adan captain of the guard, which served the king of Babylon, into Jerusalem, 13. And burnt the house of the Lord, and the king's house; and all the houses of Jerusalem, and all the houses of the great men, burnt he with fire. 14. And all the army of the Chaldeans, that were with the captain of the guard, brake down all the walls of Jerusalem round about. 15. Then Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard carried away captive certain of the poor of the people, and the residue of the people that remained in the city, and those that fell away, that fell to the king of Babylon, and the rest of the multitude. 16. But Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard left certain of the poor of the land, for vine-dressers and for husbandmen. 17. Also the pillars of brass that were in the house of the Lord, and the bases, and the brazen sea that was in the house of the Lord, the Chaldeans brake, and carried all the brass of them to Babylon.

18. The caldrons also, and the shovels, and the snuffers, and the bowls, and the spoons, and all the vessels of brass, where-with they ministered, took they away. 19. And the basins, and the fire-pans, and the bowls, and the caldrons, and the candlesticks, and the spoons, and the cups; that which was of gold in gold, and that which was of silver in silver, took the captain of the guard away. 20. The two pillars, one sea, and twelve brazen bulls that were under the bases, which king Solomon had made in the house of the Lord: the brass of all these vessels was without weight. 21. And concerning the pillars, the height of one pillar was eighteen cubits, and a fillet of twelve cubits did compass it; and the thickness thereof was four fingers: it was hollow. 22. And a chapter of brass was upon it; and the height of one chapter was five cubits, with net-work and pomegranates upon the chapters round about, all of brass: the second pillar also and the pomegranates were like unto these. 23. And there were ninety and six pomegranates on a side; and all the pomegranates upon the net-work were a hundred round about.

We have here an account of the woful havoc that was made by the Chaldean army, a month after the city was taken, under the command of Nebuzar-adan, who was captain of the guard, or general of the army, in this action. In the margin he is called the chief of the slaughter-men, or executioners; for soldiers are but slaughter-men, and God employs them as executioners of his sentence against a sinful people. Nebuzar-adan was chief of those soldiers, but in the execution he did, we have reason to fear he had no eye to God, but he followed the king of Babylon, and his commands, now that he came into Jerusalem, into the very bowels of it, as captain of the slaughter-men there. And, 1. He laid the temple in ashes, having first plundered it of every thing that was valuable; he burnt the house of the Lord, that holy and beautiful house, where their fathers praised him, Isa. lxiv. 11. 2. He burnt the royal palace, probably that which Solomon built, after he had built the temple, which was, ever since, the king's house. 3. He burnt all the houses of Jerusalem, that is, all the houses of the great men, or those particularly, if any escaped, it was only some sorry cottages for the poor of the land. 4. He broke down all the walls of Jerusalem, to be revenged upon them for standing in the way of his army so long. Thus, of a defended city, it was made a ruin. Isa. xxxv. 2. 5. He carried away many into captivity, (v. 15.) he took away certain of the poor of the people, of the people in the city, for the poor of the land, the poor of the country, he left for vine-dressers and husbandmen. He also carried away the residue of the people that remained in the city, that had escaped the sword and famine; and the deserts, such as he thought fit, or rather such as God thought fit; for he had already determined for the pestilence, some for the sword, some for famine, and some for captivity, ch. xv. 2.

But nothing is more particularly and largely related here than the carrying away of the appurte-557 said, Of now the 28. The And put Jeremiah's that Sam. pillars from land. was gone, the brass soon went after, because the people repented not, according to Jeremiah's prediction, ch. xxxvii. 19, &c. When the walls of the city were demolished, the pillars of the temple were pulled down too, and both in token that God, who was the Strength and Stay both of their civil and their ecclesiastical government, was departed from them. No walls can protect nor pillars sustain those, from whom God withdraws. These pillars of the temple were not for support, (for there was nothing built upon them,) but for ornament and significance. They were called Jachin, He will establish; and Boaz, In him is strength; so that the breaking of these signified that God would no longer establish his house, nor be the Strength of it. These pillars are here very particularly described, (v. 21—23. from 1 Kings vii. 13.) that the extraordinary beauty and stakeness of them may affect us the more with the demolishing of them. All the vessels that belonged to the brazen altar were carried away, and theking, and all the vessels of the house of God, out of the temple, and out of the court, and out of the city, five out of the court, and sixty out of the country. The account here agrees with that, except in one article; there, it is said that there were five, here, there were seven, of those that were near the king; which Dr. Lightfoot reconciles thus, that he took away seven of those that were near the king, but two of them were Jeremiah himself and Elbad-melech, as four to death, which we have before read, so that there were only five of them put to death, and so the number was reduced to seventy-two; some of all ranks, for they had all corrupted their way; and it is probable that such were made examples of, as had been most forward to excite and promote the rebellion against the king of Babylon. Seraiah the chief priest is put first, whose sacred character could not exempt him from this stroke; how should it, when he himself had profaned it by sin? Seraiah the prince was a quiet prince, (ch. lxi. 59.) but perhaps Seraiah the priest was not so, but quiet and turbulent, by which he had made himself obnoxious to the king of Babylon. The leaders of this people had caused them to err, and now they are in a particular manner made manifest, and turned out of their estimation.

2. Of the captivity of the rest. Come, and see how Judah was carried away captive out of his own land, (v. 27.) and how it spued out the Canaanites that went before them, which God had told them it would certainly do, if they trod in their steps, and copied out their abominations, Lev. xviii. 28. Now here is an account, (v. 28—40.) Of twocaptivities which we had an account of before, one in the seventh year of Nebuchadnezzar, the same with that which is said to be in his eighth year, (2 Kings xxiv. 12.) another in his eighteenth year, the same with that which is said (v. 12.) to be in his nineteenth year. But the sums here are very small, in comparison with what we find expressed concerning the former, (2 Kings xiv. 14, 16.) when there was 18,000 carried captive, whereas here they are said to be 3025; small too in comparison with what we may reasonably suppose concerning the latter; for when all the residue of the people were carried away, (v. 13.) one would think there should be more than 832 souls; therefore Dr. Lightfoot conjectures that these accounts being joined to the story of the putting to death of the great men at Riblah, all that are here said to be carried away but ten thousand, are less than the tenth part of the former. (1.) Of a third captivity, not mentioned before, which was in the twenty-third year of Nebuchadnezzar, four years after the destruction of Jerusalem; (v. 30.) then Nebuzar-adan came, and carried away 745 Jews; it is probable that this was done in revenge of the murder of Gedaliah, which was another rebellion against the king of Babylon, and that those who were murderers were taken and abettors of Ishmael in that murder, and were not only carried away, but put to death, for it; yet this is uncertain. If this be the sum total of the captives, (All the persons were 4600, v. 30.) we may see how strangely they were reduced from what they had been, and may wonder as much how much they came to be so numerous again, as afterward we find them; for it should have been, as at first, a number, that in Babylon, the Lord made them fruitful in the land of their affliction, and the more they were oppressed the more they multiplied. And the truth is, this people were often miracles both of judgment and mercy.

31. And it came to pass, in the seven and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin, king of Judah, in the twelfth month, in the

nuences of the temple. All that were of great value were carried away before, the vessels of silver and gold, yet some of that sort remained, which were now carried away, v. 19. But most of the temple-precy that was now seized, was of brass; which, being of less value, was carried off last. When the gold was gone, the brass soon went after, because the people repented not, according to Jeremiah's prediction, ch. xxxvii. 19, &c. When the walls of the city were demolished, the pillars of the temple were pulled down too, and both in token that God, who was the Strength and Stay both of their civil and their ecclesiastical government, was departed from them. No walls can protect nor pillars sustain those, from whom God withdraws. These pillars of the temple were not for support, (for there was nothing built upon them,) but for ornament and significance. They were called Jachin, He will establish; and Boaz, In him is strength; so that the breaking of these signified that God would no longer establish his house, nor be the Strength of it. These pillars are here very particularly described, (v. 21—23. from 1 Kings vii. 13.) that the extraordinary beauty and stakeness of them may affect us the more with the demolishing of them. All the vessels that belonged to the brazen altar were carried away, and the king, and all the vessels of the house of God, out of the temple, and out of the court, and out of the city, five out of the court, and sixty out of the country. The account here agrees with that, except in one article; there, it is said that there were five, here, there were seven, of those that were near the king; which Dr. Lightfoot reconciles thus, that he took away seven of those that were near the king, but two of them were Jeremiah himself and Elbad-melech, as four to death, which we have before read, so that there were only five of them put to death, and so the number was reduced to seventy-two; some of all ranks, for they had all corrupted their way; and it is probable that such were made examples of, as had been most forward to excite and promote the rebellion against the king of Babylon. Seraiah the chief priest is put first, whose sacred character could not exempt him from this stroke; how should it, when he himself had profaned it by sin? Seraiah the prince was a quiet prince, (ch. lxi. 59.) but perhaps Seraiah the priest was not so, but quiet and turbulent, by which he had made himself obnoxious to the king of Babylon. The leaders of this people had caused them to err, and now they are in a particular manner made manifest, and turned out of their estimation.

2. Of the captivity of the rest. Come, and see how Judah was carried away captive out of his own land, (v. 27.) and how it spued out the Canaanites that went before them, which God had told them it would certainly do, if they trod in their steps, and copied out their abominations, Lev. xviii. 28. Of two captivities which we had an account of before, one in the seventh year of Nebuchadnezzar, the same with that which is said to be in his eighth year, (2 Kings xxiv. 12.) another in his eighteenth year, the same with that which is said (v. 12.) to be in his nineteenth year. But the sums here are very small, in comparison with what we find expressed concerning the former, (2 Kings xiv. 14, 16.) when there was 18,000 carried captive, whereas here they are said to be 3025; small too in comparison with what we may reasonably suppose concerning the latter; for when all the residue of the people were carried away, (v. 13.) one would think there should be more than 832 souls; therefore Dr. Lightfoot conjectures that these accounts being joined to the story of the putting to death of the great men at Riblah, all that are here said to be carried away but ten thousand, are less than the tenth part of the former. (1.) Of a third captivity, not mentioned before, which was in the twenty-third year of Nebuchadnezzar, four years after the destruction of Jerusalem; (v. 30.) then Nebuzar-adan came, and carried away 745 Jews; it is probable that this was done in revenge of the murder of Gedaliah, which was another rebellion against the king of Babylon, and that those who were murderers were taken and abettors of Ishmael in that murder, and were not only carried away, but put to death, for it; yet this is uncertain. And the truth is, this people were often miracles both of judgment and mercy.

31. And it came to pass, in the seven and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin, king of Judah, in the twelfth month, in the five and twentieth day of the month, that evil-merodach king of Babylon, in the first year of his reign, lifted up the head of Jehoiachin king of Judah, and brought him forth out of prison, 32. And spake kindly unto him, and set his throne above the throne of the kings that were with him in Babylon, 33. And changed his prison-garments; and he did continually eat bread before him all the days of his life. 34. And for his diet, there was a continual diet given him of the king of Babylon, every day a portion, until the day of his death, all the days of his life.

This passage of story concerning the reviving which king Jehoiachin had in his bondage, we had likewise before, 2 Kings xxv. 27.—30. Only there it is said to be done on the twenty-seventh day of the twelfth month, here on the twenty-fifth; but in a thing of this nature, two days make a very slight difference in the account. It is probable that the orders were given for his release on the twenty-fifth day, but that he was not presented to the king till the twenty-seventh. We may observe in this story,

1. That new lords make new laws. Nebuchadnezzar had long kept this unhappy prince in prison; and his son, though well-affecting to the prisoner, could not procure him any favour, not one smile, from his father; any more than Jonathan could for David from his father; but when the old peevish man was dead, his son countenanced Jehoiachin, and made him a favourite. It is common for children to undo what their fathers have done; it were well if it were always as much for the better as this here.

2. That the world we live in is a changing world. Jehoiachin, in his beginning, fell from a throne into a prison, but here he is advanced again to a throne of state, (v. 32.) though not to a throne of power. As, before, the robes were changed into prison-garments, so, now, they were converted into robes again. Such chequer-work is this world; prosperity and adversity are set the one over against the other, that we may learn to rejoice as though we rejoiced not, and weep as though we wept not.

3. That though the night of affliction be very long, yet we must not despair but that the day may dawn at last. Jehoiachin was thirty-seven years a prisoner; in confinement, in contempt, ever since he was eighteen years old, in which time we may suppose him so inured to captivity, that he had forgotten the sweets of liberty; or rather, that after so long an imprisonment it would be doubly welcome to him. Let those whose afflictions have been lengthened out, encourage themselves with this instance; the vision will at the end speak comfortably, and therefore wait for it. Dum spiro spero—While there is life, there is hope. Non si male nunc, et ulim sic erit—Though now we suffer, we shall not always suffer.

4. That God can make his people to find favour in the eyes of those that are their oppressors, and unaccountably turn their hearts to pity them, according to that word, (Ps. civ. 46.) He made them to be fitted of all those that carried them captives. He can bring those that have spoken roughly to speak kindly, and those to feed his people that have fed upon them. Those therefore that are under oppression will find that it is not in vain to hope, and quietly to wait for the salvation of the Lord. Therefore our times are in God’s hand, because the hearts of all we deal with are so.

And now, upon the whole matter, comparing the prophecy and the history of this book together, we may learn, in general, (1.) That it is no new thing for churches and persons highly dignified to degenerate, and become very corrupt. (2.) That iniquity tends to the ruin of those that harbour it; and if it be not repented of and forsaken, will certainly end in their ruin. (3.) That external professions and privileges will not only not amount to an excuse for sin, and an exemption from ruin, but will be a very great aggravation of both. (4.) That no word of God shall fall to the ground, but the event will fully answer the prediction; and the unbelief of man shall not make God’s threatenings, any more than his promises, of no effect. The justice and truth of God are here written in bloody characters, for the conviction or the confusion of all those that make a jest of his threatenings. Let them not be deceived, God is not mocked.
AN

WITH

OF THE

LAMENTATIONS OF JEREMIAH.

Since what Solomon says, though contrary to the common opinion of the world, is certainly true, that Sorrow is better than laughter, and, It is better to go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting, we should come to the reading and consideration of the melancholy chapters of this book, not only willingly, but with an expectation to edify ourselves by them; which that we may do, we must compose ourselves to a holy sadness, and resolve to weep with the weeping prophet. Let us consider,

I. The title of this book; in the Hebrew it has none, but is called, (as the books of Moses are,) from the first word, Ecah—How; but the Jewish commentators call it, as the Greeks do, and we from them, Kinoth—Lamentations. As we have sacred odes or songs of joy, so have we sacred elegies or songs of lamentation; such variety of methods has Infinite Wisdom taken to work upon us, and move our affections, and so soften our hearts, and make them susceptible of the impressions of divine truths, as the wax of the seal. We have not only fitted unto you, but have mourned likewise, Matth. xi. 17.

II. The penman of this book; it was Jeremiah the prophet, who is here Jeremiah the poet, and verses signifies both; therefore this book is fitly joined to the book of his prophecy, and is as an appendix to it.
We had there at large the predictions of the desolations of Judah and Jerusalem, and then the history of them, to show how punctually the predictions were accomplished, for the confirming of our faith:
now here we have the expressions of his sorrow upon occasion of them, to show that he was very sincere in the protestations he had often made, that he did not desire the woful day, but that, on the contrary, the prospect of it filled him with bitterness. When he saw these calamities at a distance, he wished his head waters, and his eyes fountains of tears; and when they came, he made it to appear that he did not disseminate in that wish, and that he was far from being disaffected to his country, which was the crime his enemies charged him with. Though his country had been very unkind to him, and though the ruin of it was both a proof that he was a true prophet, and a punishment of them for prosecuting him as a false prophet, which would have tempted him to rejoice in it, yet he sadly lamented it, and herein showed a better temper than that which Jonah was of, with respect to Nineveh.

III. The occasion of these Lamentations was the destruction of Judah and Jerusalem by the Chaldean army, and the dissolution of the Jewish state both civil and ecclesiastical thereby. Some of the Rabhi-ins will have these to be the Lamentations which Jeremiah penned upon occasion of the death of Josiah, which are mentioned, 2 Chron. xxxvev. 25. But though it is true that that opened the door to all the following calamities, yet these Lamentations seem to be penned in the sight, not in the foresight of those calamities; when they were already come, not when they were at a distance; and there is nothing of Josiah in them, and his praise, as was, no question, in the Lamentations for him. No, it is Jeru-salem's funeral that this is an elegy upon. Others of them will have these Lamentations to be contained in the roll which Baruch wrote from Jeremiah's mouth, and which Jehoiakim burnt, and they suggest, that at first there were in it only the 1st, 2d, and 4th chapters, but that the 3d and 5th were the many like words that were afterward added; but this is a groundless fancy; that roll is expressly said to be a repetition and summary of the prophet's sermons, Jer. xxxvii. 2.

IV. The composition of it: it is not only poetical, but alphabetical, all except the 5th chapter, as some of David's psalms are; each verse begins with a several letter in the order of the Hebrew alphabet, the 1st aleph, the 2nd bet, &c. but the third chapter is a triple alphabet, the three first beginning with aleph, the next with bet, &c. which was a help to memory, (it being designed that those mournful duties should be got by heart,) and was an elegance in writing then valued, and therefore not now to be despised. They observe, that in the 2d, 3d, and 4th chapters, the letter he is put before qain, which in all the Hebrew alphabets follows it; for a reason of which Dr. Lightfoot offers this conjecture, That the letter qain, which is the numeral letter for LXX., was thus, by being displaced, made remarkable, to put them in mind of the seventy years, at the end of which God would turn again their captivity.

V. The use of it: of great use, no doubt, it was to the pious Jews in their sufferings, furnishing them with spiritual language to express their natural grief by; helping to preserve the lively remembrance of Zion among them, and their children that never saw it, when they were in Babylon; directing their tears into the right channel; for they are here taught to mourn for sin, and mourn to God; and withal encouraging their hopes, that God would yet return, and have mercy upon them; and it is of use to us, to affect us with godly sorrow for the calamities of the church of God, as becomes those that are living members of it, and are resolved to take our lot with it.
We have here the first alphabet of this lamentation, twenty-two stanzas, in which the miseries of Jerusalem are bitterly bewailed, and her present deplorable condition aggraved by comparing it with her former prosperous state; and, all along, sin is acknowledged and complained of as the procuring cause of all these miseries; and God is appealed to for justice against their enemies, and applied to for compassion toward them. The chapter is all of a piece, and the several remonstrances are interwoven; but here is, I. A complaint made to God of their calamities, and his compassionate concern expressed, v. 1-7. II. The same complaint made to their friends, and their compassionate consideration desired, v. 8-11. III. An appeal to God and his righteousness concerning it, (v. 18-22.) in which he is justified in their affliction, and is humbly solicited to justify himself in their deliverance.

1. How doth the city sit solitary that was full of people! how is she become as a widow! she that was great among the nations, and princes among the provinces, how is she become tributary! 2. She weepeth sore in the night, and her tears are on her cheeks; among all her lovers she hath none to comfort her: all her friends have dealt treacherously with her: they are become her enemies. 3. Judah is gone into captivity, because of affliction, and because of great servitude; she dwelleth among the heathen, she findeth no rest: all her persecutors overtook her between the straits. 4. The ways of Zion do mourn, because none come to the solemn feasts: all her gates are desolate; her priests sigh, her virgins are affliccted, and she is in bitterness. 5. Her adversaries are the chief, her enemies prosper; for the Lord hath afflicted her for the multitude of her transgressions: her children are gone into captivity before the enemy. 6. And from the daughter of Zion all her beauty is departed: her princes are become like harts that find no pasture; and they are gone without strength before the pursuer. 7. Jerusalem remembered in the days of her affliction, and of her miseries, all her pleasant things that she had in the days of old, when her people fell into the hand of the enemy, and none did help her: the adversaries saw her, and did mock at her sabbaths. 8. Jerusalem hath grievously sinned; therefore she is removed: all that honoured her despised her, because they have seen her nakedness: yea, she sigheth, and turneth backward. 9. Her filthiness is in her skirts; she remembereth not her last end; therefore she came down wonderfully: she had no comforter. O Lord, behold my affliction, for the enemy hath magnified himself. 10. The adversary hath spread out his hand upon all her pleasant things: for she hath seen that the heathen entered into her sanctuary, whom thou didst command that they should not enter into thy congregation. 11. All her people sigh, they seek bread; they have given their pleasant things for meat to relieve the soul: see, O Lord, and consider; for I am become vile.

Those that have any disposition to weep with them that weep, one would think, should scarcely be able to refrain from tears at the reading these verses, so very pathetic are the lamentations here.

I. The miseries of Jerusalem are here complained of as very pressing, and by many circumstances very much aggravated. Let us take a view of these miseries.

1. As to their civil state.

(1.) A city that was populous, is now depopulated, v. 1. It is spoken of by way of wonder, Who would have thought that ever it should come to this! Or by way of inquiry, What is it that has brought it to this? Or by way of lamentation: Alas, alas, (as Rev. xviii. 10, 16, 19.) how doth the city sit solitary, that was full of people! She was full of her own people that replenished her, and full of the people of other nations that resorted to her, with whom she had both profitable commerce and pleasant converse; but now her own people are carried into captivity, and strangers make no court to her; she sits solitary. The chief places of the city are not now, as they used to be, places of concourse, where Wisdom cries (Prov. i. 20, 21.) and justly are they left unfrequented, because Wisdom's cry is withdrawn from her. Note, Those that are ever so much increased, God can soon diminish. How is she become as a widow! Her king that was, or should have been, as a husband to her, is cut off, and gone; her God is departed from her, and has given her a bill of divorce; she is emptied of her children, is solitary and sorrowful as a widow. Let no family, no state, not Jerusalem, no, nor Babylon herself, be secure; and, say, I sit as a queen, and shall never sit as a widow, Isa. xlviii. 8. Rev. xviii. 7. (2.) A city that had dominion, is now in subjection. She had been great among the nations, greatly loved by some, and greatly feared by others, and greatly observed and obeyed by both; some made her present, and others paid her taxes; so that she was really princess among the provinces, and every sheaf bowed to her, even the princes of the people planted in her favour; but now the tables are turned, she has not only lost her friends, and sits solitary, but has lost her freedom too, and sits tributary; she paid tribute to Egypt first, and then to Babylon. Note, Sin brings a people not only into solitude but into slavery. (3.) A city that used to be full of mirth, is now become melancholy, and upon all accounts full of grief. Jerusalem had been a joyous city, whither the tribes went up on purpose to rejoice before the Lord; she was the joy of the whole earth, but now she weeps sore, her laughter is turned into mourning, her solemn feasts are all gone; she weeps in the night, as true mourners do who weep in secret, in silence and solitude; in the night, when others compose themselves to rest, her thoughts are most intent upon her troubles, and grief then plays the tyrant. What the prophet's hand was for her, when she regarded it not, now her head is as waters, and her eyes fountains of tears, so that she weeps day and night, (Jer. ix. 1.) her tears are continually on her cheeks. Though nothing dries away sooner than a tear, yet fresh griefs extort fresh tears, so that her cheeks are never free from them. Note, There is nothing more commonly seen under the heavens, than the tears of the eyes of the beholders of women, whom the clouds return after the rain, (Eccl. iv. 1.) (4.) Those that were separated from the heathen, now dwell among the heathen; those that were a peculiar people, are now a mingled people; (v. 3.) Judah is gone into captivity, out of her own land
The land of her enemies, and there she abides, and is likely to abide, among those that are aliens to God and the covenants of promise, with whom she findeth no rest, no satisfaction of mind, nor any settlement of abode, but is continually hurried from place to place at the will of the victorious, impetuous tyrants. And again, (v. 5.) Her children wept for days; so long as the old woman were to have been the seed of the next generation, are carried off, so that the land that is now desolate, is likely to be still desolate and lost for want of heirs. Those that dwell among their own people, and that a free people, and in their own land, would be more thankful for the mercies they thereby enjoy, if they would but consider the miseries of those that are foreigners to their country.

(3.) Those that used in their wars to conquer, are now conquered and triumphed over; All her persecutors overtook her between the straits. (v. 3.) They gained all possible advantages against her, so that her people unavoidably fell into the hand of the enemy, for there was no way to escape, (v. 7.) they were hemmed in on every side, and which way soever they attempted to flee, they found themselves embarrassed; and when they made the best of their way, they could make nothing of it, but were over taken and overcome; so that every where her adversaries are the chief, and her enemies strongest; (v. 5.) which way soever their sword turns, they get the better. Such straits do men bring themselves into by sin! If we allow that which is our greatest adversary and enemy to have dominion over us, and to be chief in us, justly will all other enemies be suffered to have dominion over us.

(6.) Those that had been not only a distinguished but a dignified people, on whom God had put honour, and to whom all their neighbours had paid respect, are now brought into contempt; (v. 8.) All that honoured her before, despise her; those that counted an alliance with her, now value it not; those that abominated her when she was in pomp and prosperity, slight her now that she is in distress, because they have seen her nakedness. By the prevalence of the enemies against her they perceive her weakness, and that she is not so strong a people as they thought she had been; and by the prevalence of God's judgments against her they perceive her wickedness, which now comes to light, and is everywhere to be seen, (v. 9.) it appears how they have done themselves by their sins; the enemies magnify themselves against them, (v. 9.) they triumphant over them, and insult over them, and in their eyes they are become vile; the tail of the nations, though once they were the head. Note, Sin is the reproach of every people.

(7.) Those that lived in a fruitful land were very rich, and many of them did perish, for want of necessary food; (v. 11.) All her people sigh in despondency and despair, they are ready to faint away, their spirits fail, and therefore they sigh, for they seek bread, and seek it in vain. They were brought at last to that extremity, that there was no bread for the people of the land; (Jer. iii. 6.) and in their captivity they had much ado to get bread, (ch. vi. 5.) They have given their pleasant things, their jewels and pictures, and all the furniture of their closets and cabinets, which they used to please themselves with looking upon, they have sold these, to buy bread for themselves and their families, have parted with them for meat to relieve the soul, or, as the margin is, to make the soul come again, when they were ready to faint away. They desired no other comfort, then to have bread. (Ps. lxxxix. 27.) To be given for life, and for bread which is the staff of life. Let those that abound in pleasant things, not be proud of them, or fond of them, for the time may come when they may be glad to let them go for necessary things. And let those that have competent food to relieve their soul, be content with it, and thankful for it, though they have not pleasant things.

2. We have here an account of their miseries in their ecclesiastical state, the ruin of their sacred interest, which was much more to be lamented than that of their temporal. They have been persecuted with the following miseries.

(1.) Their religious feasts were no more observed, no more frequented; (v. 4.) The ways of Zion do mourn, they look melancholy, overgrown with grass and weeds. It used to be a pleasant diversion to see people continually passing and repassing in the high way that led to the temple, but now you may stand there long enough, and see nobody stir; for, for a long time, the people have been deposed from them by the destruction of that which was the city of our solemnities, Isa. xxxiii. 20. The solemn Feasts had been neglected and profaned, (Isa. i. 11, 12) and therefore justly is an end now put to them. But when thus the ways of Zion are made to mourn, all the sons of Zion cannot but mourn with them. It is very grievous to good men to see religious assemblies broken up and scattered, and those restrained from them, that would gladly attend them. And as the ways of Zion mourned, so the gates of Zion, in which the faithful worshippers used to meet, are desolate, there is none to meet in them.

Time was when the Lord loved the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob, but now he has forsaken them, and is provoked to withdraw from them, and therefore it is not for men to have with them as it did with the temple when Christ quitted it. Behold, your house is left unto you desolate, Matt. xxiii. 38.

(2.) Their religious persons were quite disabled to perform their wondrous services, were quite dispirited; Her priests sigh for the desolations of the temple, their songs are turned into sighs; they sigh, for they have nothing to do, and therefore there is nothing to be had; they sigh, as the people, (v. 11,) for want of bread, because the offerings of the Lord, which were their livelihood, failed. It is time to sigh when the priests, the Lord's ministers, sigh. Their virgins also, that used, with their music and dancing, to grace the solemnities of their feasts, are afflicted and in heaviness. Notice is taken of their service in the day of Zion's prosperity, (Ps. lxxviii. 1.) Among them were the damsels playing with timbrels, and therefore notice is taken of the failing of it now. Her virgins are afflicted, and therefore she is in bitterness; all the inhabitants of Zion are so, whose character it is, that they are sorrowful for the solemn assembly, and that to them the reproach of it is a burthen, Zeph. iii. 18.

(3.) Their religious places were profaned; (v. 11.) The house entered into her sanctuary, into the temple itself, into which no Israelite was permitted to enter, though ever so reverently and devoutly, but the priests only. The stranger that comes nigh, even to worship there, shall be put to death. Thither the heathen now crowd rudely in, not to worship, but to plunder. God had commanded that the heathen should not so much as enter into the assembly, or be associated with the people of the Jews; (Deut. xxiii. 3.) yet now they enter into the sanctuary without control. Note, Nothing is more grievous to those who have a true concern for the glory of God, nor is more lamented, than the violation of God's laws, and the contempt they see put upon sacred things. What the enemy did wickedly in the sanctuary, was complained of, 1 Par. xxxiv. 23.

(4.) Their religious utensils, and all the rich things with which the temple was adorned and beautified, and which were made use of in the worship of God, were made a prey to the enemies;
LAMENTATIONS, I.

(v. 10.) The adversary has spread out his hand upon all her pleasant things, has grasped them all, seized them all, for himself. What these pleasant things are, we may learn from Isa. xiv. 11. where, to the complaint of the burning of the temple, it is added, All our pleasant things are laid waste; the ark and the altar, and all the other tokens of God’s presence with them, these were their pleasant things above any other things, and these were now broken to pieces, and carried away. Thus from the daughter of Zion all her beauty is departed, v. 6. The beauty of holiness was the beauty of the daughter of Zion; when the temple, that holy and beautiful house, was destroyed, her beauty was gone; that was the breaking of the staff of beauty, the taking away of the pledges and seals of the covenant, Zech. xi. 10.

(5.) Their religious days were made a jest of; (v. 7.) The adversaries saw her, and did mock at her sabbaths. They laughed at them for their observing of one day in seven, as a day of rest from worldly business. Juvenal, a heathen poet, ridicules the Jews in his time for losing a seventh part of their time;

"Quaestors quaesitque for her Exercitationes viginti octo agamin
They keep their sabbaths to their cost,
For thus one day in seven is lost;"

whereas sabbaths, if they be sanctified as they ought to be, will turn to a better account than all the days of the week besides. And whereas the Jews professed that they did it in obedience to their God, and to his honour, their adversaries asked them, What do you get by it now? What profit have you in keeping the ordinances of your God, who now descents in your distress? Note, It is a very great trouble to all that love God, to hear his ordinances mocked at, and particularly his sabbaths. Zion calls them her sabbaths, for the sabbath was made for men; they are his institutions, but they are her privileges; and the contempt put upon sabbaths all the sons of Zion take to themselves, and lay to heart accordingly; nor will they look upon sabbaths, or any other divine ordinances, as less honourable, nor value them less for their being mocked at.

(6.) That which greatly aggravated all these grievances, was, that her present state was just the reverse of what it had been once; (v. 7.) Now, in the days of affliction and misery, when every thing was black and distressing, she remembers all her troubles, and it was as if she had in the days of old, and now knows how to value them better than formerly, when she had the full enjoyment of them. God often makes us know the worth of mercies by the want of them: and adversity is most hardly borne by those that are fallen into it from the height of prosperity. This cut David to the heart, when he was banished from God’s ordinances, that he could remember them with the multitude to the honour of God, Ps. xxxi. 4.

II. The sins of Jerusalem are here complained of as the procuring, provoking cause of all these calamities. Whoever are the instruments, God is the Author, of all these troubles; it is the Lord that has afflicted her, (v. 3.) and he has done it as a righteous Judge, for she has sinned.

1. Her sins are not only numberless. Are her troubles many? Her sins are many more. It is for the multitude of her transgressions that the Lord has afflicted her. See Jer. xxxix. 14. When the transgressions of a people are multiplied, we cannot say, as Job does, in his own case, that wounds are multiplied without cause, Job xix. 17.

2. They are for nature exceeding heinous; (v. 8.) Jerusalem has grievously sinned; has sinned sin, so the word is; sinned willfully, deliberately; has sinned that sin, which of all others is the abominable thing that the Lord hates, the sin of idolatry. The sins of Jerusalem, that makes such a profession, and enjoys such privileges, are of all others the most grievous sins. She has sinned grievously, (v. 8.) and therefore (v. 9.) she came down wonderfully. Note, Grievous sins bring wondrous ruin; there are some workers of iniquity, to whom there is a strange punishment, Job xxxi. 5.

3. There are such sins as may plainly be read in the punishment. (1. They have been very oppressive, and therefore justly oppressed; (v. 5.) Judah is gone into captivity, and it is because of affliction and great servitude, because the rich among them afflicted the poor, and made them serve with rigour, and particularly, as the Chaldee paraphrases it, because they had oppressed their Hebrew servants, which is charged upon them, Jer. iv. 21. Oppression was one of their crying sins, (Jer. vi. 7. 6.) and it is a sin that cries loud. (2.) They have made themselves vile, and therefore are justly violated. They all despise her, (v. 8.) for her filthiness is in her skirts; it appears upon her garments, that she has rolled them in the mire of sin. None can stain our glory, if we did not stain ourselves. (3.) They have been very secure, and therefore justly surprized. Thus we have it, (v. 9.) She remembers not her last end; sh. did not take the warning that was given her, to consider her latter end, to consider what would be the end of such wicked courses as she took, and therefore she came down wonderfully, in an astonishing manner, that she might be made to feel what she would not fear; therefore God shall make their plagues wonderful.

IV. Jerusalem’s friends are here complained of as false and faint-hearted, and very unkind; They have all dealt treacherously with her, (v. 2.) so that, in effect, they are become her enemies. Her deceivers have created as much vexation as her destroyers. The staff that breaks under us, may do us as great a mischief as the staff that beats us, Ezek. xxix. 6. 7. Her princes, that should have protected her, have not courage enough to make head against the enemy for their own preservation; they are like karts, that, upon the first alarm, betake themselves to flight, and make no resistance; nay, they are like karts that are famished for want of pasture, and therefore are gone without strength before the pursuer, and, having no strength for flight, are soon run down, and made a prey of. Her neighbours are unneighborly, for, 1. There is none come to help her, (v. 7.) they would not help her; and, 2. She has no comforter, none to sympathize with her, or suggest any thing to alleviate her griefs; (v. 7. 9.) like Job’s friends, they saw it was to no purpose, her grief was so great; and miserable comforters were they all in such a case.

12. Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? behold, and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow, which is done unto me, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger. 13. From above hath he sent fire into my bones, and it prevails against them: he hath spread a net for my feet; he hath turned me back; he hath made me desolate and faint the whole day.

14. The yoke of my transgressions is bound by his hand; they are wreathed, and come up upon my neck; he hath made my strength to fail; the Lord hath delivered me into their hands, from whom I am not able to rise up. 15. The Lord hath trodden under foot all my mighty men in the midst of me; he hath called an assembly against me to crush my young men: the Lord hath trodden the virgin, the daughter of Judah, as in a wine-press. 16. For these things I weep: mine eye, mine eye runneth down with water, because the comforter that should relieve my soul is far from me; my children are desolate, because the enemy prevailed. 17. Zion spreadeth forth her hands, and there is none to comfort her: the Lord hath commanded concerning Jacob, that his adversaries should be round about him: Jerusalem is as a menstruous woman among them. 18. The Lord is righteous; for I have rebelled against his commandment: hear, I pray you, all people, and behold my sorrow; my virgins and my young men are gone into captivity. 19. I called for my lovers, but they deceived me; my priests and mine elders gave up the ghost in the city, while they sought their meat, to relieve their souls. 20. Behold, O Lord, for I am in distress: my bowels are troubled: my heart is turned within me; for I have grievously rebelled: abroad the sword hereafter, at home there is as death. 21. They have heard that I sigh; there is none to comfort me: all mine enemies have heard of my trouble; they are glad that thou hast done it: thou wilt bring the day that thou hast called, and they shall be like unto me. 22. Let all their wickedness come before thee; and do unto them as thou hast done unto me for all my transgressions: for my sighs are many, and my heart is faint.

The complaints here are, for substance, the same with those in the foregoing part of the chapter; but, in these verses, the prophet, in the name of the lamenting church, does more particularly acknowledge the hand of God in these calamities, and the rigour of his displeasure.

1. The church in distress here magnifies her affliction; and yet no more than there was cause for; her groaning was not heavier than her strokes. She appeals to all spectators; See if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow, v. 12. This might, perhaps, be truly said of Jerusalem's griefs; but we are apt to apply it too sensibly to ourselves when we are in trouble, and more than there is cause for. Because we feel most from our own barthom, and cannot be persuaded to reconceive ourselves to it, we are ready to cry out. Surely, never was sorrow like unto our sorrow; whereas, if our troubles were to be thrown into a common stock with those of others, and then an equal dividend made, share and share alike rather than stand to that, we should each of us say, "Pray, give me my own again." 2. She here looks beyond the instruments to the Author of their troubles, and owns them all to be directed, disposed, and disposed of by him. "The Lord that has afflicted me, and he has afflicted me because he is angry with me; the greatness of his displeasure may be measured by the greatness of my distress; it is in the day of his fierce anger," v. 12. Afflictions cannot but be very much our griefs, when we see them arising from God's wrath; for the church does here. (1.) She is as one in a forest, and the hunter, and disposed of, by him. "I sent fire into my bones," (v. 13.) preternatural heat, which prevails against them, so that they are burnt like a hearth, (Ps. cii. 3.) painted and wasted, and dried away. (2.) She is as one in a net, which the more he struggles to get out of, the more he is entangled in, and this net is of God's spreading: "The enemies could not have succeeded in their stratagems, had not God spread a net for my feet," (v. 13.) (3.) She is as one in a wilderness, whose way is embarrassed, solitary, and tiresome; "He has turned me back, that I cannot go on, has made me desolate, that I have nothing to support me with, but am faint all the day." (4.) She is as one in a yoke, not yoked for service, but for penance, tied neck and heels together; (v. 14.) The yoke of my transgressions is bound by him. Observe. We never are entangled in any yoke but one that is framed out of our own transgressions. The sinner is holden with the cords of his own sins, Prov. v. 22. The yoke of Christ's commands is an easy yoke, (Matth. xi. 30.) but that of our own transgressions is a heavy one, God is said to bind this yoke, when he charges guilt upon us, and brings us into those inward and outward troubles which our sins have deserved; when conscience, his duty, his might, and his yoke, standing in his way, then the yoke is bound and wreathed by the hand of his justice, and nothing but the hand of his pardoning mercy will unbind it. (5.) She is as one in the dirt, and he it is that has trodden under foot all her mighty men, that has disabled them to stand, and overthrown them by one judgment after another, and so left them to be trampled upon by their foes and conquerors. Nay, she says, this is as in a wine-press, not only trodden down, but trodden to pieces, crushed as grapes in the wine-press of God's wrath, and her blood pressed out as wine, and it is God that his the virgin, the daughter of Judah. (6.) She is in the hand of her enemies, and it is the Lord that has delivered her into their hands; (v. 14.) He has made my strength to fall, so that I am not able to make head against them; nor, not only not able to rise up against them, but, not able to rise up from them, and then he has delivered me into their hands; noi, (v. 15.) he has called an assembly against me, to crush my young men, and such an assembly as it is in vain to think of opposing; and again, (v. 17.) The Lord has commanded concerning Jacob, that his adversaries should be round about him. He has made his adversaries his enemies, and even his enemies his instruments for Jacob, (Ps. xlv. 4.) now commands an invasion against Jacob, because Jacob had disobeyed the commands of his law.

3. She justly demands a share in the pity and compassion of those that were the spectators of her misery; (v. 12.) "Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? Can you look upon me without concern? Wilt thou be he that will harden his heart, as marbles, that you cannot be moved upon me? I am compassionate thought, or look, or tear? Are not you also in the body? Is it nothing to you that your neighbour's house is on fire?" There are these to whom Zion's sorrows and ruins are nothing; they are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph. How pathetically does she beg their compassion! (v. 18.) LAMENTATIONS, I.

"Hear, I pray you, all people, and behold my sorrow: hear my complaints, and see what cause I have for them." This is a request like that of Job, (ch. xxxii. 28.) wishing for their sympathy, for their tears with ours, for this is an evidence that, though we are in affliction, we are not in contempt, which is commonly as much dreaded in an affliction as any thing.

4. She justifies her own grief, though it was very extreme in these passages; (v. 16.) "For these things I weep, I weep in the night;" (v. 2.) "nor do I see mine eye, mine eye runs down with water." Note, This world is a vale of tears to the people of God.

Zion's sons are often Zion's mourners. Zion spreadeth forth her hands, (v. 17.) which is here an expression rather of despair than of desire; she flings out her hands as giving up all for gone. Let us see how she accounts for this passionate grief. (1.) Her God is withdrawn from her; and Micah, that had but gods of gold, when they were stolen from him, cried out, What have I more? And what is this that ye say unto me? What aileth thee? The church here grieves excessively, For, says she, the comforter that should relieve my soul, is far from me. God is the Comforter; he used to be so to her, he only can administer effectual comforts, it is his word that speaks them, it is his Spirit who speaks them to us. His are strong consolations, able to relieve the soul, to bring it back when it is gone, and we cannot of ourselves fetch it again; but now he is departed in displeasure, he is far from me, and beholds me afier off. Note, It is no marvel that the souls of the saints faint away, when God, who is the only Comforter that can relieve them, keeps at a distance. (2.) Her children are removed from her, and she in her prosperity; it is said of the Chaldeans, that they had no compassion upon young men or maidens, not on the fair sex, not on the blooming age, 2 Chron. xxxvii. 16. (3.) Her friends failed her; some would not, and others could not, give her any relief. She spread forth her hands, as begging relief, but there is none to comfort her, (v. 17.) none that can do it, none that cares to do it; she called for her lovers, and to engage them to help her, called them her lovers, but they deceived her, (v. 19.) they proved like the brooks in summer to the thirsty traveller, Job vi. 15. Note, Those creatures that we set our hearts upon and raise our expectations from, we are commonly deceived and disappointed in. Her idols were her lovers, Egypt and Assyria were her confidants; but they deceived her; under their professed care and companionship, they were shy of her and strange to her in her adversity. Happy they that have made God their Friend, and keep themselves in his love, for he will not deceive them! (4.) Those whose office it was to guide her, were disabled to do her any service. The priests and the elders, that should have appeared at the head of affairs, die for hunger, (v. 18.) they were sweating, ready to expire, while they sought their meat; they went a begging for bread to keep them alive. The famine is sore indeed in the land, when there is no bread to the wise, when priests and elders are starved. The priests and elders should have been her comforters; but how should they comfort others when they themselves were comfortless? "They have heard that I sigh, which should have summoned them to mine assistance; but there is none to comfort me. Lover and friend hast thou put far from me." (5.) Her enemies were too hard for her, and then insulted over her; they have besieged her. Abroad the sword bereaves, and slays all that comes in its way, and at home all provisions are cut off by the besiegers, so that there is as death, famine, which is as bad as the pestilence, or worse—the sword without, and terror within, Deut. xxxii. 25.

And as the enemies, that were the instruments of the calamity, were very barbarous, so were they that were the sufferers by, the Elders and Aaron. 16. And as those that bore ill-will to Israel: They have heard of my trouble, and are glad that they hast done it, (v. 21.) they rejoice in the trouble itself, they rejoice that it is God's doing, it pleases them to find that God and his Israel are fallen out, and they act accordingly with a great deal of strangeness towards them: Jerusalem is as a menstruous woman among them, that they are afraid of touching, and are shy of, v. 17. Upon all these accounts, it cannot be wondered at, nor can she be blamed, that her sighs are many, in grieving for what is, and that her heart is faint, (v. 22.) in fear of what is yet further likely to be.

5. She justifies God in all that is brought upon her, acknowledging that her sins had deserved these severe chastenings. The stroke that lies so heavy, and binds so hard, is the yoke of her transgressions, v. 14. The fetters are held in awe of our own making, and it is with our own red that we are beaten. When the church had spoken here, as if she thought the Lord severe, she does well to correct herself, at least to explain herself, by acknowledging, (v. 18.) The Lord is righteous. He does us no wrong in dealing thus with us, nor can we charge him with what he has done. In case angry sovereign men are, we are sure that the Lord is righteous, and manifests his justice, though they contradict all the laws of theirs. Note, Whatever our troubles are which God is pleased to inflict upon us, we must own that therein he is righteous; we understand neither him nor ourselves if we do not own it, 2 Chron. xiii. 6. She owns the equity of God's dealing, and expresses his justice in her heart in this very word, if. 18. She is of the Chaldeans, that they had no compassion upon young men or maidens, not on the fair sex, not on the blooming age, 2 Chron. xxxvii. 16. It is said of the Chaldeans, that they had no compassion upon young men or maidens, not on the fair sex, not on the blooming age, 2 Chron. xxxvii. 16. (3.) Her friends failed her; some would not, and others could not, give her any relief. She spread forth her hands, as begging relief, but there is none to comfort her, (v. 17.) none that can do it, none that cares to do it; she called for her lovers, and to engage them to help her, called them her lovers, but they deceived her, (v. 19.) they proved like the brooks in summer to the thirsty traveller, Job vi. 15. Note, Those creatures that we set our hearts upon and raise our expectations from, we are commonly deceived and disappointed in. Her idols were her lovers, Egypt and Assyria were her confidants; but they deceived her; under their professed care and companionship, they were shy of her and strange to her in her adversity. Happy they that have made God their Friend, and keep themselves in his love, for he will not deceive them! (4.) Those whose office it was to guide her, were disabled to do her any service. The priests and the elders, that should have appeared at the head of affairs, die for hunger, (v. 18.) they were sweating, ready to expire, while they sought their meat; they went a begging for bread to keep them alive. The famine is sore indeed in the land, when there is no bread to the wise, when priests and elders are starved. The priests and elders should have been her comforters; but how should they comfort others when they themselves were comfortless? "They remembered, let it come to be reckoned for; take vengeance on them, for all the wrong they have done to me; (Ps. cx. 14, 15.) hasten the time when thou wilt do them for their transgression as thou hast done to me for mine.” This prayer amounts to a protestation against all thoughts of coalition with them, and to a prediction of their ruin, subscribing to that which God had in his word spoken of it. Note, Our prayers may and must agree with God’s word; and what day God has there called, we are to call for, and no other. And though we are bound in charity to forgive our enemies, and to pray for them, yet we may in faith pray for the accomplishment of that which God has spoken against his and his church’s enemies, that will not repent to give him glory.

CHAP. II.

The second alphabetical elegy is set to the same mournful tune with the former, and the substance of it is much the same; it begins with Ecab, as that did, “How sad is our case! Alas! for us.” I. Here is the anger of Zion’s God taken notice of, as the cause of her calamities, v. I., 9. II. Here is the sorrow of Zion’s children taken notice of, as the effect of her calamities, v. 10. 19. III. The complaint is made to God, and the matter referred to his compassionate consideration, v. 20. 22. The hand that wounded must make whole.

1. HOW hath the Lord covered the daughter of Zion with a cloud in his anger, and cast down from heaven unto the earth the beauty of Israel, and remembered not his footstool in the day of his anger! 2. The Lord hath swallowed up all the habitations of Jacob, and hath not pitied: he hath thrown down in his wrath the strong holds of the daughter of Judah; he hath brought them down to the ground: he hath polluted the kingdom and the princes thereof. 3. He hath cut off in his fierce anger all the horn of Israel: he hath drawn back his right hand from before the enemy, and he burned against Jacob like a flaming fire, which devoureth round about. 4. He hath bent his bow like an enemy: he stood with his right hand as an adversary, and slew all that were pleasant to the eye in the tabernacle of the daughter of Zion: he poured out his fury like fire. 5. The Lord was as an enemy; he hath swallowed up Israel, he hath swallowed up all her palaces; he hath destroyed his strong holds, and hath increased in the daughter of Judah mourning and lamentation. 6. And he hath violently taken away his tabernacle, as if it were of a garden; he hath destroyed his places of the assembly: the Lord hath caused the solemn feasts and sabbaths to be forgotten in Zion, and hath despised, in the indignation of his anger, the king and the priest. 7. The Lord hath cast off his altar, he hath abhorred his sanctuary, he hath given up into the hand of the enemy the walls of her palaces; they have made a noise in the house of the Lord, as in the day of a solemn feast. 8. The Lord hath purposed to destroy the wall of the daugh ter of Zion; he hath stretched out a line, he hath not withdrawn his hand from destroying: therefore he made the rampart and the wall to lament; they languished together. 9. Her gates are sunk into the ground; he hath destroyed and broken her bars; her king and her princes are among the Gentiles: the law is no more; her prophets also find no vision from the Lord.

It is a very sad representation which is here made of the state of God’s church, of Jacob and Israel, of Zion and Jerusalem; but the emphasis in these verses seems to be laid all along upon the hand of God in the calamities which they were mourning upon. The grief is not so much that such and such things are done, as that God has done them, that he appears angry with them; it is he that chastens them, and chastens them in wrath and in his hot displeasure; he is become their Enemy, and fights against them; and this, this is the wormwood and the gall in the affliction and the misery.

I. Time was, when God’s delight was in his church, and he appeared to her, and for her, as a Friend; but now, a displeased he is against her, he is angry with her, and appears and acts against her as an Enemy. This is frequently repeated here, and sadly lamented. What he has done he has done in his anger; this makes the present day a melancholy day indeed with us, that it is the day of his anger, (v. 1.) and again, (v. 2.) it is in his wrath, and (v. 3.) in his fierce anger, that he has thrown down and laid it off, and (v. 6.) in the indignation of his anger. Note. To those who know how to value God’s favour, nothing appears more dreadful than his anger; corrections in love are easily borne, but rebukes in wrath wound deep. It is God’s wrath that burns against Jacob like a flaming fire, (v. 3.) and it is a consuming fire, it devours round about, devours all her honours, all her comforts. This is the fury that is poured out like fire, (v. 4.) like the fire and brimstone which were rained upon Sodom and Gomorrah: but it was their sin that kindled this fire. God is such a tender Father to his children, that we may be sure he is never angry with them but when they provoke him, and give him cause to be angry; nor is he ever angry more than there is cause for. God’s covenant with them was, that if they would not hold the office of a vessel of wrath, they should be destroyed to their enemies, (Exod. xxviii. 22.) and he had been so long as they kept close to him; but now he is an Enemy to them; at least he is an Enemy, v. 5. He has bent his bow like an Enemy, v. 4. He stood with his right hand stretched out against them, and a sword drawn in it as an Adversary. God is not really an Enemy to his people, no, not when he is angry with them, and corrects them in anger. We may be sorely displeased against our dearest friends and relations, whom yet we are far from having an enmity to. But sometimes he is as an Enemy to them, when all his providences concerning them seem in outward appearance to have a tendency to their ruin; when every thing makes against them, and nothing for them. But, blessed be God, Christ our Peace appears in the midst of their enmity, and in him we may agree with our Adversary, which it is our wisdom to do, since it is in vain to contend with him, and he offers us advantageous conditions of peace.

II. Time was when God’s church appeared very bright and illustrious, and considerable among the nations; but now the Lord has covered the daughter of Zion with a cloud, (v. 1.) a dark cloud, which is very terrible to herself, and through which she cannot see his face; a thick cloud, (so the word signi-lies), a black cloud, which eclipses all her glory, and conceals her excellency; not such a cloud as that under which God conducted them through the wilderness, or that in which God took possession of the temple, and filled it with his glory: no, that side of the cloud is now turned toward them, which was turned toward the Egyptians in the Red sea. The beauty of Israel is now cast down from heaven to the earth: their princes, (2 Sam. i. 19.) their rich glory, their beauty, their pride, which recommended them to the affection and esteem of their neighbours, and rendered them amiable, which had lifted them up to heaven, was now withered and gone; because God had covered it with a cloud. He has cut off all the horn of Israel, (v. 3.) all her beauty and majesty, (Ps. cxxii. 17.) all her plenty and fulness, and all her power and authority. They had, in their pride, lifted up their horn against God, and therefore justly will God cut off their horn; he disabled them to resist and oppose his enemies, he turned back their right hand, so that they were not able to follow the blow which they gave, nor to ward off the blow which was given them. What can their right hand do against the enemy, when God draws it back, and withers it, as he did Jericho's? Thus was the beauty of Israel cast down, when a people famished, and not able to stand their ground, or make good their post.

III. Time was, when Jerusalem and the cities of Judah were strong and well fortified, were trusted to by the inhabitants, and let alone by the enemy as impregnable; but now the Lord has in anger swallowed them up, they are quite gone, the forts and barriers are taken away, and the invaders meet with no opposition; the stately structures, which were their strength and beauty, are pulled down and laid waste. 1. The Lord has in anger swallowed up all the habitations of Jacob, (v. 2.) both the cities and the country-houses; they are burnt, or otherwise destroyed, so totally ruined, that they seem to have been swallowed up, and no remains left of them. He has swallowed up, and has not left; one would have thought it pity that such sumptuous houses, so well built, so well furnished, should be quite destroyed; and that some pity should have been had for the poor inhabitants, that were thus dislodged and driven to wander; but God's wonted compassions seemed to fail; He has swallowed up Israel, as a lion swallows up his prey, v. 5. 2. He has swallowed up not only her common habitations, but her palaces, all her palaces, all her palaces, all her palaces, (v. 5.) those were most stately, and strong, and rich, and well guarded. God's judgments, when they come with commission, level palaces with cottages, and as easily swallow them up. If palaces be polluted with sin, as theirs were, let them expect to be visited with a curse, which shall consume them, with the timber thereof, and the stones thereof, Zech. ii. 15. He has swallowed their palaces, their palaces, their palaces, they are long-palaces, but their strongholds, their castles, citadels, and places of defence; these he has thrown down in his wrath, and brought them to the ground; for shall they stand in the way of his judgments, and give a check to the progress of them? No, let them drop like leaves in autumn, let them be razed to the foundations, and made to touch the ground, v. 2. And again, (v. 5.) how could they have against God? And thus has he increased in the daughter of Judah mourning and lamentation, for they could not but be in a dreadful consternation when they saw all their defence departed from them. This is again insisted on, v. 7—9. In order to the swallowing up of her palaces, he has given up into the hand of the enemy the walls of her palaces, which were their security, and when they are broken down the palaces themselves are soon broken into. The walls of palaces cannot protect them, unless God himself be a Wall of fire round about them. This God did in his anger, and yet he has done it deliberately; it is the result of a previous purpose, and is done by a wise and steady providence; for the Lord has purposed to destroy the wall of the daughter of Zion, he brought the Chaldean army in, on purpose to do this excutient work for him. Where his church, be they are all according to his counsels; he performs the thing that is appointed for us, even that which makes most against us. But when it is done, he has stretched out a line, a measuring-line, to do it exactly and by measure: hitherto the destruction shall go, and no further; no more shall be cut off than what is marked to be so. Or, it is meant by the line of constraint, the bounds which he marked out; for he will go on with his work, he has not withdrawn his hand from destroying, that right hand which he stretched out against his people as an adversary; (v. 4.) as far as the purpose went the performance shall go, and his hand shall accomplish his counsel to the utmost, and not be withdrawn. Therefore he made the ramparts and the wall which the people had rejoiced in, and upon which, perhaps, they had trusted, which proved themselves delusory; the walls and the ramparts, or bulwarks upon them, fall together, and were left to condole with one another on their fall. Her gates are gone in an instant, so that one would think they were sunk into the ground with their own weight, and he has destroyed and broken her bars, these bars of Jerusalem's gates which formerly he had strengthened, Ps. cxxvii. 5. The ramparts and the wall, cxxxvi. But there is no need when God has withdrawn his protection.

IV. Time was, when their government flourished, their princes made a figure, and their kingdom was great among the nations, and the balance of power was on their side; but now it is quite otherwise; He has polluted the kingdom and the princes thereof, v. 2. They had first polluted themselves with their idolatries, and then God dealt with them as with polluted things, he threw them to the dunghill, the fittest place for them. He has given up their glory, which was looked upon as sacred, (that is a character we give to majesty,) to be trampled upon and profaned; and no marvel that the king and the priest, whose characters were always deemed venerable and inviolable, are despised by every body, when God has, in indignation of his name, cast them down, v. 6. He has abandoned them; he looks upon them as no longer worthy of the honours conveyed to them by the covenants of royalty and priesthood, but as having forfeited both; and then Zedekiah the king was used deservedly, and Seraah the chief priest put to death as a malefactor. The crown is fallen from their heads, for her king and her princes are among the Gentiles, prisoners among them, insulted over by them, (v. 9.) and treated not only as common persons, but as the basest, without any regard had to their character. Note, It is just with God to debase those by his judgments, who have by sin debased themselves.

V. Time was, when the ordinances of God were administered among them in their power and purity, and they had those tokens of God's presence among them, but now they are gone, so that part of the beauty of Israel was gone, which was indeed their greatest beauty.

1. The ark was God's footstool, under the mercy-seat, between the cherubims; this was of all others the most sacred symbol of God's presence; (it is called his footstool, 1 Chron. xxviii. 2. Ps. xcv. 5.—cxxxii. 7.) there the Shechinah rested, and with an eye to this, Israel was often protected and saved; but now he remembered not his footstool, the ark itself was suffered, as it should seem, to fall into the hands of the Chaldeans. God, being angry, threw that away, for it shall be no longer his footstool, the earth shall be so, as it had been before the ark was, Isa. lxvi. 1. Of what little value are the tokens of his presence, when his presence is gone! Nor was this the first time that God gave his ark into captivity. In days of God and his kingdom can stand without that footstool.

2. They that ministered in holy things had been pleasant to the eye in the tabernacle of the daughter of Zion, (v. 4.) they had been purer than snow, whiter than milk, (ch. iv. 7.) none more pleasant in the eyes of all good people than those that did the service of the tabernacle; but now these are slain, and their blood mingled with their sacrifices; thus is the glory of Solomon's house defiled, and of the ark of God. When those that were pleasant to the eye in Zion's tabernacle are slain, God must be acknowledged in it, he has done it, and the burning which the Lord has kindled must be bewailed by the whole house of Israel, as in the case of Nadab and Abihu, Lev. x. 6.

3. The temple was God's tabernacle, (as the tabernacle, while that was in being, is called his temple, Ps. xxvi. 4.) and this he has violently taken away, (v. 6.) he has plucked up the stakes of it, and cut the cords, it shall be no more a tabernacle, much less his; he has taken it away, as the keeper of a garden takes away his hovel or shade, when he has done with it, and has no more occasion for it: he takes it down as easily, as speedily, and with as little regret and reluctance, as if it were but a cottage, a tent, a table and an aubergine, (Isa. i. 8.) but a booth which the keeper makes, Job xxvii. 18. When men profane God's tabernacle, it is just with him to take it from them. God had justly refused to smell in their solemn assemblies; (Amos v. 21.) they had provoked him to withdraw from them, and then no marvel that he has destroyed his places of the assembly; what should they do with the places when the services were become an abomination? He has now abhorred his sanctuary; (v. 7.) it has been defiled with sin, that only thing which he hates, and for the sake of that he abhors even his sanctuary, which he had delighted in, and called his rest for ever, Ps. xxviii. 14. Thus he had done to Shiloh. Now the enemies have made as great a noise of revelling and blasphemy in the house of God, as ever had been made with the temple-songs and music in the day of a solemn feast, Ps. lxxxiv. 4. Some, by the places of the assembly, (v. 6.) understand not only the temple, but the synagogues, and the schools of the prophets, which the enemy had burnt up, Ps. lxxxiv.

4. The solemn feasts and the sabbaths had been carefully remembered, and the people constantly put in mind of them; but now the Lord has caused those to be forgotten, not only in the country, among those that lived at a distance, but even in Zion itself; for there were none left to remember them, nor were the places left where they used to be observed. Now that Zion was in ruins, no difference was made between sabbath-times and other times; every day was a day of mourning, so that all the solemn feasts were forgotten. Note, It is just with God to deprive those of the benefit and comfort of sabbaths and solemn feasts, who have not duly valued them, nor conscientiously observed them, but have profaned them, which was one of the sins that the Jews were often charged with. They that have seen the Son of man, and slighted him, may desire to see one of those days, and not have them, Luke xxi. 22.

5. The altar that had sanctified their gifts is now cast off, for God will no more accept their gifts nor beHonoured by their sacrifices, v. 7. The altar was the table of the Lord, but God will no longer keep house among them, he will neither feast them, nor feast with them.

6. They had been blest with prophets, and teachers of the law; but now the law is no more, (v. 9.) it is no more read by the people, no more expounded by the scribes, the tables of the law are gone with the ark, the book of the law is taken from them, and the people are forbidden to have it. What should they do with Bibles, who had made no better improvement of them when they had them? Her prophets also find no vision from the Lord; God answers them no more by prophets and dreams, which was the melancholy case of Saul, 1 Sam. xxviii. 13. They had persecuted God's prophets, and despised the visions they had from the Lord, and therefore it is just with God to say that they shall have no more prophets, no more visions. Let them go to the prophets that had flattered and deceived them with visions of their own hearts, for they shall have none from God to comfort them, or tell them how long. They that misuse God's prophets justly lose them.

10. The elders of the daughter of Zion sit upon the ground, and keep silence: they have cast up dust upon their heads; they have girded themselves with sackcloth: the virgins of Jerusalem hang down their heads to the ground. 11. Mine eyes do fail with tears, my bowels are troubled, my liver is poured upon the earth, for the destruction of the daughter of my people; because the children and the sucking swoon in the streets of the city. 12. They say to their mothers, Where is corn and wine! when they swooned as the wounded in the streets of the city, when their soul was poured out into their mothers' bosom. 13. What thing shall I take to witness for thee? what thing shall I liken to thee, O daughter of Jerusalem? what shall I equal to thee, that I may comfort thee, O virgin daughter of Zion! for thy breach is great like the sea; who can heal thee? 14. Thy prophets have seen vain and foolish things for thee; and they have not discovered thine iniquity, to turn away thy captivity; but have seen for thee false burdens, and causes of banishment. 15. All that pass by clap their hands at thee; they hiss and wag their head at the daughter of Jerusalem, saying, Is this the city that men call The perfection of beauty, The joy of the whole earth? 16. All thine enemies have opened their mouth against thee: they hiss and gnash the teeth: they say, We have swallowed her up: certainly this is the day that we looked for; we have found, we have seen it. 17. The Lord hath done that which he had devised; he hath fulfilled his word that he had commanded in the days of old: he hath thrown down, and hath not pitied: and he hath caused thine enemy to rejoice over thee; he hath set up the horn of thine adversaries. 18. Their heart cried unto the Lord, O wall of the daughter of LAMENTATIONS, II.

Zion, let tears run down like a river day and night; give thyself no rest; let not the apple of thine eye cease. 19. Arise, cry out in the night: in the beginning of the watches pour out thy heart like water before the face of the Lord; lift up thy hands toward him for the life of thy young children, that faint for hunger in the top of every street. 20. Behold, O Lord, and consider to whom thou hast dealt this. Shall the women eat their fruit, and children of a span long? shall the priest and the prophet be slain in the sanctuary of the Lord? 21. The young and the old lie on the ground in the streets: my virgins and my young men fallen by the sword; thou hast slain them in the day of thine anger; thou hast killed, and not pitied. 22. Thou hast called, as in a solemn day, my terrors round about; so that in the day of the Lord's anger none escaped nor remained: those that I have swaddled and brought up hath mine enemy consumed.

Justly are these called Lamentations, and they are very pathetic ones; the expressions of grief in perfection, mourning and wo, and nothing else, like the contents of Ezekiel's roll, Ezek. ii. 10.

I. Copies of lamentations are here presented, and they are painted to the life. 1. The judges and magistrates, who used to appear in robes of state, have laid them aside, or rather are stripped of them, and put on the habit of mourners. Young men of the elders now sit no longer in the judgment-seats, the thrones of the house of David, but they sit upon the ground, having no seat to repose themselves in, or in token of great grief, as Job's friends sat with him upon the ground, Job ii. 13. They open not their mouth in the gate, as usual, to give their opinion, but they keep silence, overwhelmed with grief, and not knowing how to speak. Their eyes are smitten with sorrow, their heads, and girded themselves with sackcloth, as deep mourners used to do; they had lost their power and wealth, and that made them take on thus; Pioratur lachrymis amissa pecunia veris—Genuine are the tears which we shed over lost property. 2. The young ladies, who used to dress themselves so richly, and walk with stretch ed-fourth necks, (Isa. iii. 16.) now are humbled; the virgin of Jerusalem hang down their heads to the ground: they are made to know sorrow, who seemed to bid defiance to it, and were always disposed to be merry. 3. The prophet himself is a pattern to the mourners; (v. 11.) his eyes do fail with tears, he has wept till he can weep no more, has almost wept his eyes out, wept himself blind. Nor are the inward impressions of grief short of the outward expression, and their mother, and their mother, and their mother are troubled, as they were, when he saw these calamities coming, (Jer. iv. 19, 20.) which, one would think, might have excused him now; but even he, to whom they were no surprise, felt them an insupportable grief, to that degree that his liver is poured out on the earth; he felt himself a perfect collecting; all his enthrals are melted and dissolved, as Ps. xxii. 14. Jeremiah himself had better treatment than his neighbours, better than he had before from his own countrymen, nay, their destruction was his deliverance, their captivity his enlargement; the same that made them prisoners, made him a favourite, and yet his private interests are swallowed up in a concern for the public, and he bewails the destruction of the daughter of his people, as sensibly as if he himself had been the greatest sufferer in that common calamity. Note, The judgments of God upon the land and all that are to be lamented by his people, we, for our parts, may escape pretty well.

II. Calls to lamentation are here given; The heart of the people cried unto the Lord, v. 18. Some fear it was a cry, not of true repentance, but of bitter complaint; their heart was as full of grief as it could hold, and they gave vent to it in doleful shrieks and entreaties, in which they made use of God's name; and thus we will make haste to call on him, in so great a day of calamity, we will do it in sincerity cry unto God for mercy in their distress, and the prophet bids them go on to do so; O wall of the daughter of Zion, either ye that stand upon the wall, ye watchmen on the wall, (Isa. lxiii. 6.) when ye see the enemies encamped about the walls, and making their approaches towards them, or because of the wall, (that is the subject of the lamentation,) because of the breaking down of the wall, which was not done till about a month after the city was taken, because of this further calamity, let the daughter of Zion lament still. This was a thing which Nehemiah lamented long after, Neh. i. 3. 4. Let tears run down like a river day and night, weep without intermission, give thyself no rest from weeping, let not the apple of thine eye cease. This intimates, 1. That the calamities would be of some continuance, that the calamities should con sequently recur, and fresh occasion would be given them every day and every night to bewail themselves. 2. That they would be apt, by degrees, to grow insensible and stupid under the hand of God, and would need to be still called upon to afflict their souls yet more and more, till their proud and hard hearts were thoroughly humbled and softened.

III. Causes for lamentation are here assigned, and the calamities which attended the city of Jerusalem are very particularly and pathetically described.

1. Multitudes perish by famine; a very sore judgment, and piteous is the case of those that fall under it. God had corrected them by scarcity of provisions through want of rain some time before, (Jer. xiv. 1.) and they were not brought to repentance by that lower degree of this judgment, and therefore the Lord gives them over, both by the sword and by the famine, to satisfy them in extremity; for, (1.) The children died for hunger in their mothers' arms; The children and sucklings, whose innocent and helpless state entitles them to relief as soon as any, swoon in the streets, (v. 11.) as the wounded, (v. 12.) there being no food to be had for them; they that are starved die as surely as they that are stabbed; they lie a great while crying to their poor mothers for corn to feed them, and come to refresh them, for they are such as had been bred up to the use of wine, and wanted it now; but there is none for them, so that at length their soul is poured out into their mothers' bosom, and there they breathe their last. This is mentioned again, (v. 19.) They faint for hunger in the top of every street. Yet this is not the worst, (2.) There were some little children that were slain by hunger, (v. 16.) even those that were too young to walk. 20. Such was the scarcity of provision, that the women ate the fruit of their own bodies, even their children, when they were but of a span long, according to the threatening, Deut. xxviii. 53. The like was done in the siege of Samaria, 2 Kings vi. 29. Such extremities, nay, such barbarities, were they brought to by the famine. Let us, in our abundance, thank God that we are delivered, and take care of grief would prevail among us, but for our children.

2. Multitudes fall by the sword, which devours one as well as another, especially when it is in the hand of such cruel enemies as the Chaldeans were. (1.) They spared no character, no, not the most distinguished; even the priest and the prophet, who of all men, one would think, might expect protection from heaven, and vengeance on earth, are slain, not alone on the field of battle, where they are out of their place, as Hoplins and Phinehas, but in the sanctuary of the Lord, the place of their business, and which they hoped would have been a refuge to them. (2.) They spared no age, no, not those who, by reason of their tender or their decrepit age, were exempted from taking up the sword; for even they perished by the sword, the young man, and the old, who had had their discharge, lie on the ground, slain in the streets, till some kind hand is found that will bury them. (3.) They spared no sex; My virgins and my young men are fallen by the sword. In the most barbarous military executions that ever we read of, the virgins were spared, and made part of the spoil; (Num. xxxi. 18. Judges v. 30.) but, in this case, though Jerusalem was made a perfect desolation from sea to sea, she was spared neither old nor young, man nor woman. (4.) This was the Lord's doing, he suffered the sword of the Chaldeans to devour thus without distinction; Thou hast slain them in the day of thine anger, for it is God that kills and makes alive, and saves as he pleases. But that which follows is very harsh, Thou hast killed, and not fittest; for his soul is not grieved for the rigour of the sword, which he and his sons and his daughters to such an extent as such as he had mustered and summoned; (v. 22.) Thou hast called in, as in a solemn day, my terrors round about, the Chaldeans, who are such a terror to me; enemies crowded into Jerusalem now as thick as ever worshippers used to do on a solemn festival; so that they were quite overpowered with numbers, and none escaped nor re- mained; Jerusalem was made a perfect desolation from sea to sea. Mothers are cut to the heart to see these whom they have taken such care of, and pains with, and whom they have been so tender of, thus inhumanly used, suddenly cut off, though not soon reared; Those that I have swaddled and brought up, has mine enemy consumed, as if they were brought forth for the murderer, like lambs for the butcher, Hos. ix. 13. Zeph, who was a mother to them all, lamented to see those who were brought up in her courts, and under the tuition of her oracles, thus made a prey. 3. Their false prophets cheated them, v. 14. This was a thing which Jeremiah had lamented long before, and had observed with a great concern; (Jer. xix. 13.) Ah, Lord God, the prophets say unto them, Ye shall have peace, and shall live in the land; in which among his lamentations; Thy prophets have seen vain and foolish things for thee, they pretended to discover for thee, and then to discover to thee, the mind and will of God, to see the visions of the Almighty, and then to speak his words; but they were all vain and foolish things, their visions were all their own fancies, and if they thought they had any, it was only the product of a crazed head, or such as were immediately as appeared by what they delivered, which was all idle and impertinent; nay, it is most likely that they themselves knew that the visions they pretended, were counterfeit, and all a sham, and made use of only to colour that which they designedly imposed upon the people with, that they might make an interest in them for themselves; they are thy prophets, not God's, prepared, but not set, but fitter for the purifier after his heart, but the people set them up, told them what they should say, so that they were prophets after their hearts. (1.) Prophets should tell people of their faults, should show them their sins, that they may bring them to repentance, and so prevent their ruin; but these prophets knew that would lose them the people's affections and contributions, and knew they could not remove their hearers without reproaching themselves at the same time, and therefore they have not discovered thee iniquity, they saw it not themselves, or, if they did, saw so little evil in it, or danger from it, that they would not tell them of it, though that might have been a means, by taking away their iniquity, to turn away their captivity. (2.) Prophets should warn people of the judgments of God coming upon them, but these saw for them false harbingers; the messages they pretended to deliver to them from God, they knew not, unless it was, that by sending them up in carnal security, they caused that banishment which, by plain dealing, they might have prevented. 4. Their neighbours laughed at them; (v. 15.) All that pass by thee clap their hands at thee. Jerusalem had made a great figure, got a great name, and borne a great sway, among the nations; it was more than all the sons of Egypt, Jeremiah xxii. 12.; but, in that city was thus reduced, they all (as men are apt to do in such a case) triumphed in its fall, they hissed, and wagged the head, pleasing themselves to see how much it was fallen from its former preten- sions; Is this the city (said they) that men called the perfection of beauty? Ps. l. 2. How is it now the perfection of deformity? Where is all its beauty? Le. xvi. 21. Where is the joy of the whole earth? (Ps. lxxvii. 2.) which rejoiced in the gifts of God's beauty and grace more than any other place, and which all the earth rejoiced in? Where is all its joy now, and all its glory? It is a great sin thus to make a jest of others miseries, and adds very much affliction to the afflicted. 5. Their enemies triumphed over them, v. 16. Those that wished ill to Jerusalem and her peace, now vented their spite and malice, which before they concealed; they now open their mouths, they in Motion to make themselves masters of Jerusalem: We have swallowed her up, it is our doing, and it is our gain, it is all our own now; Jerusalem shall never be either courted or feared as she has been; certainly this is the day that we have long looked for, we have found it, we have seen it, Aha, so would we have it. Note, The enemies of the church are apt to take its shocks for its ruins, and to triumph in them accordingly; but they will find themselves de- ceived; for the gates of hell shall not prevail against the church. The Lord, in all this, appeared against them, (v. 17.) The Lord has done that which he had devised. The destroyers of Jerusalem could have no power against her, unless it were given them from above; they are but the sword in God's hand, it is he that has thrown down, and has not fitted; "In this controversy of his with us, we have not had the usual instances of his compassion towards us. The Lord has caused thine enemy to rejoice over thee; (see Job xxx. 11.) he has set up the horn of thine adversary, has given them power and matter for pride; this is indeed the highest aggravation of the trouble, that God is become their Enemy, and yet it is the strongest argument for patience under it; we are bound to submit to what God does, for, (1.) It is the performance of his purpose; The Lord has done his purpose, and caused thine enemy to rejoice over thee with counsel and deliberation, not rashly, or upon a sudden re- solve; it is the evil that he has framed, (Jer. xviii. 11.) and we may be sure it is framed so as exactly to answer the intention; what God devises against his people is designed for them, and so it will be found in the issue. (2.) It is the accomplishment of his predictions; it is the fulfilling of the scripture; the man now put in execution his word that he had commanded in the days of old. When he gave them his law by Moses, he told them what judgments he LAMENTATIONS.

CHAP. III.

The scope of this chapter is the same with that of the two foregoing chapters, but the composition is somewhat different; that was in long verse, this in short; another kind of metre; that was in single alphabets, this in a triple one. Here is, I. A sad complaint of God's displeasures, and the fruits of his hand, v. 1-29. II. Words of comfort to God's people when they are in trouble and distress, v. 21-36. III. Duty prescribed in this afflicted state, v. 37-41. IV. The complaint renewed, v. 42-54. V. Encouragement to the people, and to himself, in waiting for his salvation; with an appeal to his justice against the persecutors of the church, v. 55-66. Some make all this to be spoken by the prophet himself, when he was imprisoned and persecuted; but it seems rather to be spoken in the person of the church now in captivity, and in a manner desolate; and in the deviations of which the prophet did in a particular manner himself. But the complaints here are more general than those in the foregoing chapter, being accommodated to the case as well of particular persons as of the public; and intended for the use of the closest rather than of the solemn assembly. Some think Jeremiah makes these complaints, not only as an intercessor for Israel, but as a type of Christ, who was thought by some to be Jeremiah the weeping prophet, because he was much in tears; (Matt. xvi. 14,) and to him many of the passages here may be applied.

1. A man that hath seen affliction, by the rod of his wrath. 2. He hath led me, and brought me into darkness, but not into light. 3. Surely against me is he turned; he turneth his hand against me all the day. 4. My flesh and my skin hath he made old; he hath broken my bones. 5. He hath builded against me, and compassed me with gall and travails. 6. He hath set me in dark places, as they that be dead of old. 7. He hath hedged me about, that I cannot get out; he hath made my chain heavy. 8. Also when I cry and shout, he shutteth out my prayer. 9. He hath enclosed my ways with hewn stones; he hath made my paths crooked. 10. He was unto me as a bear lying in wait, and as a lion in secret places. 11. He hath turned aside my ways, and pulled me in pieces; he hath made me desolate. 12. He hath bent his bow, and set me as a mark for the arrow. 13. He hath caused the arrows of his quiver to enter into my reins. 14. I was a desolation to all my people, and their song all the day. 15. He hath filled me with bitterness, he hath made me drunken with wormwood. 16. He hath also broken my teeth with gravel-stones, he hath covered me with ashes. 17. And thou hast removed my soul far off from peace; I forgot prosperity. 18. And I said, My strength and my hope is perished from the Lord; 19. Remembering mine affliction and my misery, the wormwood and the gall. 20. My soul hath them still in remembrance, and is humbled in me.

The title of the 102d Psalm might very fitly be prefixed to this chapter: The prayer of the afflicted, when he is overwhelmed, and pours out his complaint before the Lord; for it is very feehingly and
LAMENTATIONS, III. 571

1. The prophet complains that God is angry; this gives both birth and bitterness to the affliction; (v. 1.) I am the man, the remarkable man, that has seen affliction, and has felt it sensibly, by the rod of his wrath. Note, God is sometimes angry with his own people; yet it is to be complained of, as a signal proof of his sovereign goodness, that is, (1.) because it is by his rod, a chastening which, though grievous for the present, will in the issue be advantageous. By this rod we must expect to see affliction, and if we be made to see more than ordinary affliction by that rod, we must not quarrel; for we are sure that the anger is just, and the affliction mild, and mixed with mercy.

2. That he is now led altogether in the dark; darkness is put for great trouble and perplexity, the want both of comfort and of direction; this was the case of the complainant; (v. 2.) He has led me by his providence, and an unaccountable chain of events, into darkness, and not into light; the darkness I feared, and not into the light I hoped for. And, (v. 6.) He has set me in dark places, dark as the grave, like those that be dead of old, that they may not see what they were. Note, The Israel of God, though children of light, sometimes walk in darkness.

3. That God appears against him as an Enemy, as a professed Enemy. God had been for him, but now Surely against me is he turned, (v. 3.) as far as I can discern, for his hand is turned against me all the day, I am chastened every morning; Ps. lix. 14. And when God's hand is turned against us, we are tempted to think that his heart is turned against us too; God had said once, (Hos. v. 14.) I will be as a lion to the house of Judah, and now he has made his word good; (v. 10.) He was unto me as a bear lying in wait, surprising me with his judgments, and as a lion in secret places, so that which way soever I went, I was in continual fear of being set upon, and could never think myself safe. Do men shoot at those that are enemies to? He has bent his bow, the bow that was ordained against the church's persecutors, that is bent against her sons, v. 12. He has set me as a mark for his arrow, which he aims at, and will be sure to hit, and then the arrows of his quiver enter into my reins, give me a mortal wound, an arrow wound; and God has many arrows in his quiver, and they fly swift, and pierce deep.

4. That he is as one sorely afflicted both in body and mind. The Jewish state may now be fitly compared to a man wrinkled with age, for which there is no remedy; (v. 4.) My flesh and my skin has he made old, they are wasted and withered, and I look like one that is ready to drop into the grave; and now, he has broken my bones, and so disabled me to help myself, v. 15. He has filled me with bitterness, a bitter sense of these calamities. God has access to the spirit, and can so imbitter that, as thereby to imbitter all the enjoyments; as when the stomach is foul, whatever is eaten, sour in it. He has made me drunk with wormwood, so intoxicated me with the sense of my afflictions, that I know not what I am, he has broken my bones, and so disabled me to help myself; or, as some read it, he has fed me with ashes; I have eaten ashes like bread,” Ps. ch. 9.

5. That he is not able to discern any way of escape or deliverance; (v. 2.) He has builded against me a besieged city; where there was a way open, it is now quite made up; he has compassed me on every side with gall and travail; v. vex, and fret, and tire myself, to find a way of escape, but can find none. v. 7. He hath hedged me about, that I cannot get out.” When Jerusalem was besieged, it was said to be compassed in on every side, Luke xix. 43. “I am chained, and as some notorious factures are double-tormented, and loaded with irons, so he has made my chain heavy. He has also (v. 9.) enclosed my ways with broken stone, not only hedged my way with walls, but he has formed a way in the midst of a stone wall, which cannot be broken through, so that my paths are made crooked; I traverse to and fro, to the right hand, to the left, to try to get forward, but am still turned back.” It is just with God to make those who walk in the crooked paths of sin, crossing God's laws, walk in the crooked paths of affliction, crossing their designs, and breaking their measures; and, in the midst of their way, he has blasted all my counsels, ruined my projects, so that I am necessitated to yield to my own ruin; he has fulfilled me in pieces, he has torn, and is gone away, (Hos. v. 14.) and has made me desolate, has deprived me of all society, and all comfort in my own soul.

6. That God turns a deaf ear to his prayers; (v. 8.) When I cry and shout, because I am not heard, I cry, and shout in my distress, yet he shutts out my prayer, and will not suffer it to have access to him. God's ear is wont to be open to the prayers of his people, and his door of mercy to them that knock at it; but now both are shut, even to one that cries and shouts. Thus sometimes God seems to be angry even against the prayers of his people, (Ps. lxix. 4.) and their case is deplorable indeed, when God is angry, not only with the evil, but also with the good; they play upon, as Nero on his harp, when Rome was on fire.

7. That his neighbours made a laughing matter of his troubles; (v. 13.) I was a derision to all my people; to all the wicked among them, that made themselves, and one another merry with the public judgments, and particularly the prophet Jeremiah's griefs. I am their song, their mirth; every hand instrument of mirth, their taunt, (Job xvii. 6.) that they play upon, as Nero on his harp, when Rome was on fire.

8. That he was ready to despair of relief and deliverance; When hest not only taken peace from me, but has removed my soul far off from peace, (v. 17.) so that it is not only not within reach, but not within view: I forget prosperity; it is so long since I had seen it, and so hard by many arrows in his quiver, and they fly swift, and pierce deep. That I have lost the idea of it; I have been so inundated to sorrow and servitude, that I know not what joy and liberty mean. I have even given up all for gone, concluding, My strength and my hope are perished from the Lord, (v. 18.) I can no longer stay myself upon God as my Support, for I do not find that he gives me encouragement to do so; nor can I look for his appearing in my behalf, so as to put an end to my troubles, for the case seems remediless, and even my God inexorable. Without doubt, it was his infirmity to say thus, (Ps. cxxxvi. 10.) for with God there is everlasting strength, and he is his people's never-failing Hope, whatever they may think.

9. That grief returned, upon every remembrance of his treachery, and his reflections were as melancholy as his prospects, v. 19, 20. Did he endeavour, as Job did, to forget his complaint? (Job ix. 27.) Alas; it was to no purpose, he remembers upon all occasions, the affliction and the misery, the wormwood and the gall; thus emphatically does he speak of his affliction, for thus did he think of it, thus heavy did it lie when he reviewed it! It was an affliction to him; he would not be as an instrument and my transgression; (so some read it,) my trouble, and my sin that brought it upon me; that was the wormwood and the gall in the affliction and the
LAMENTATIONS, III.

Lamentations, his hope. 10. When they remembered Zion; even then, if they could have been made to understand, how much they needed to have been there. Observe here, (1.) The streams of mercy acknowledged; we are not consumed. Note, The church of God is like Moses's bush burning, yet not consumed; whatever hardships it has met with, or may meet with, it shall have a being in the world to the end of time. It is persecuted of men, but not forsaken of God, and therefore, though it is cast down, yet it is not destroyed. It is not cut off; refined in the furnace as silver, but not consumed as dross. (2.) These streams followed up to the fountain; it is of the Lord's mercies. Here are mercies in the plural number, denoting the abundance and variety of those mercies; God is an inexhaustible fountain of mercy, the Father of mercies. Note, We all owe it to the sparing mercy of God, that we are not consumed; others have been consumed round about us, and we ourselves have been in the consuming, and yet we are not consumed; we are out of the grave, we are out of hell. Had we been dealt with according to our sins, we had been consumed long ago; but we have been dealt with according to God's mercies, and we are bound to acknowledge it to his praise.

1. That even in the depth of their affliction they should have evidence as to the certainty of divine pity, and the truth of the divine promise. The Lord had several times complained that God had not pitied (ch. ii. 17, 21.) but here they corrected themselves, and own, (1.) That God's compassions fail not; they do not really fail, no, not then when in anger he seems to have shut up his tender mercies. These rivers of mercy run fully and constantly, but never run dry; no, they are new every morning, and our morning's portion is as new and fresh as if God had been dealing with them all the night, and with compassion toward us; he visits us with them every morning, (Job vii. 18.) every morning does he bring his judgment to light, Zeph. iii. 5. When our comforts fail, yet God's compassions do not. (2.) That great is his faithfulness. Though the covenant seemed to be broken, they own that it still continues in full force; and though Jerusalem be in ruins, the truth of the Lord endures for ever. Note, Whatever hard things we suffer, we must never entertain any hard thoughts of God, but must still be ready to own that he is both kind and faithful.

2. That God is, and ever will be, the all-sufficient happiness of his people, and they have chosen him, and depend upon him to be such; (v. 24.) The Lord is my portion, saith my soul; that is, (1.) When I have lost all I have in the world, liberty and livelihood, and almost life itself, yet I have not lost my interest in God. Portions on earth are perishing things, but God is a portion for ever. (2.) While I have an interest in God, therein I have enough; I have that which is sufficient to balance all my troubles, and make up all my losses. Whatever we are robbed of, our portion is safe. (3.) That is that which I depend upon, and rest satisfied with, and therefore we need not lay myself upon him, and encourage myself in him, when all other supports and encouragements fail me. Note, It is our duty to make God the portion of our souls, and then to make use of him as our portion, and to take the comfort of it in the midst of our lamentations.

4. That those who deal with God will find it in vain in vain to trust in him; for, (1.) He is good to those who do so, v. 25. He is good to all, his tender mercies are over all his works, all his creatures taste of his goodness; but he is in a particular manner good to them that wait for him, to the soul that seeks him. Note, While trouble is prolonged, and deliverance is deferred, we must patiently wait for God, and his gracious returns to us, while we wait for him by faith, we must seek him by prayer; our souls must seek him, else we do not seek so as to find; our seeking will help to keep up our waiting; and to those who thus wait and seek, God will be gracious, he will show them his marvellous-loving-kindness. (2.) They that so do will find it good for them; (v. 27.) It is good for a man that he bear the yoke in his youth. Many of the young men were carried into captivity; to make them easy in it, he tells them that it was good for them to bear the yoke of that captivity, and they would find it so, if they would but accommodate themselves to their condition, and labour to answer God's ends in laying that heavy yoke upon them. It is very applicable to the yoke of God's commands; it is good for young people to take that yoke on in the youth of life, when it is too soon to be religious; it will make our duty the more acceptable to God, and easy to ourselves, if we engage in it when we are young. But here it seems to be meant of the yoke of affliction; many have found it good to bear this in youth, it has made them humble and serious, and has weaned them from the world, who otherwise would have been profane and ungodly; but, though they may seem to be hard, it will suit the spiritual advantage. The sum is, If tribulation work patience, that patience will work experience, and that experience a hope that makes not ashamed.

6. That God will graciously return to his people with seasonable comforts, according to the time that they have offended him; but before they can receive these, they must be penitent, and patient under their afflictions, and do not expect too much, as the reason of this, for he gave his back to the smiters, Isa. i. 6. He who can bear contempt and reproach, and not render railing for railing, and bitterness for bitterness; who, when he is filled full with reproach, keeps it to himself, and does not report it, and empty it again, upon those who filled him with it, but pours it out before the Lord, (as these did, Ps. cxxiii. 4. whose souls were exceedingly filled with the contempt of the proud,) he shall find that it is good to bear the yoke, and that it shall turn to his spiritual advantage. The sum is, If tribulation work patience, that patience will work experience, and that experience a hope that makes not ashamed.

7. That, when God does cause grief, it is for wise and holy ends, and he takes not delight in our calamities, v. 33. He does indeed afflict, and grieve the children of men, all their grievances and afflictions are from him, but he does not do it willingly, not from the heart; so the word is. (1.) He causes griefs to befall us, but when we give him cause to do it, he does not dispense his favours as he does his favours, ex nero motu—from his mere good pleasure; if he show us kindness, it is because so it seems good unto him; but if he write bitter things against us, it is because we both deserve it, and need it. (2.) He does not afflict with pleasure; he delights not in th death of sinners, or theiquit of saints, but punishes with a kind of reluctance; he comes out of his place to punish, for his place is the mercy-seat; he delights not in the misery of any of his creatures, but, as it respects his own people, he is so far from it,

that in all their afflictions he is afflicted, and his soul is grieved for the misery of Israel. (3.) He reigns his kindness towards people more than when he afflicts them: if he does not willingly grive the children of men, much less his own children: however it be, yet God is good to them, (Ps. lxxiii. 1.)
and they may by faith see love in his heart even then when they see trows in his face, and a rod in his hand.

8. That, though he uses more of men as his hand, or rather instruments in his hand, for corcorrecting of his people, yet he is far from being pleased with the injustice of their proceedings, and the wrong they do them, v. 34.—36. Though God serves his own purposes by the violence of wicked and unreasonable men, yet it does not therefore follow that he countenances that violence, as his oppressed people are sometimes tempted to think; (Hab. i. 13.) Wherefore lookest thou upon them that deal treacherously? (v. 34.) But God has found a way to change the people of God are injured and oppressed by their enemies, and the prophet here assures us that God does not approve of either of them. (1.) If men injure them by force of arms, God does not appro\v of it for that. He does not himself crush under his feet the prisoners of the earth, but he regards the cry of the prisoners; nor does he approve of men's doing it; may, he is much displeased with it. It is barbarous to example on them that are down; (v. 35.) That God sees them. It is before the face of the Most High, (v. 35.) it is in his sight, under his eye, and is very displeasing to him; they cannot but know it is so, and therefore it is in defiance of him that they do it. He is the Most High, whose authority over them they continue by abusing their authority over their subjects; not considering that he that is higher than the highest, regardeth, Eccl. v. 8. [2.] That God has found a way to do this. The- thing is but than is expressed; the perverting of justice, and the subverting of the just, are a great affright to God; and though he may make use of them for the correction of his people, yet he will, sooner or later, severely reckon with those that do thus. Note, However God may for a time suffer evil-doers to prosper, and serve his own purposes by them, yet he does not therefore approve of their evil doiings.
For the people of God must do iniquity, or countenance those that do it.

37. Who is he that saith, and it cometh to pass, when the Lord commandeth it not? 33. Out of the mouth of the Most High proceeedeth not evil and good? 39. Wherefore doth a living man complain? the punishment of his sins! 40. Let us search and try our ways, and turn again to the Lord. 41. Let us lift up our heart with our hands unto God in the heavens.

That we may be entitled to the comforts administered to the afflicted in the foregoing verses, and may taste the sweetness of them, we have here the duties of an afflicted state prescribed to us, in the performance of which we may expect those comforts.

We must see and acknowledge the hand of God
in all the calamities that befal us at any time, whether personal or public, v. 37, 38. This is here laid down as a great truth, which will help to rectify our views of our sufferings, and to steady ify them to us. (1.) That, while God's actions are, it is God that overrules them; Who is he that saith, and it cometh to pass, that designs a thing, and brings his designs to effect, if the Lord command it not? Men can do nothing but according to the counsel of God, nor have any power or success but what is given them from above. A man's heart de-vides his ways; he projects and purposes; he says
I will, and it will be done; and, (v. 13.) but the Lord directeth his steps far otherwise than he designed them, and what he contrived and expected does not come to pass, unless it be what God's hand and his counsel had determined before to be done, Prov. xvi. 9. Jer. x. 23. The Chaldeans said that they would destroy Jerusalem, and it came to pass, not because they said it, but because God commanded it, Jer. xxxii. 14. Note, Men are but tools which the great God breaks of, and manages as he pleases, in the government of this lower world; and they cannot accomplish any of their designs without him. (2.) That, whatever men's let it is, it is God that orders it; Out of the mouth of the Most High do not evil and good proceed? Yes, certainly they do; and it is more emphatically expressed in the original. Do not this evil, and this good, proceed from the mouth of the Most High? Is it not what he has ordained and appointed for us? Yes, certainly it is; and for the re-coupling of us to our own afflictions, whatever they\be, this general truth must thus be particularly applied. This comfort I receive from the hand of God, and shall not receive that evil also? so Job argues, ch. ii. 10. Are we healthful or sickly, rich poor? Do we under disapprov'd or are we cress-ed in them? It is all what God orders; every man's judgment proceeds from him. The Lord gave, and the Lord has taken away; he forms the light, and creates the darkness, as he did at first.
Note, All the events of Divine Providence are the products of a divine counsel; whatever is done God has the directing of it, and the works of his hands agree with the words of his mouth; he speaks, and it is done; and thus, so effectually are all his purposes fulfilled.

2. We must not quarrel with God for any afflic-tion that he lays upon us at any time; (v. 30.)
Wherefore do a living man complain? the prophet here seems to check himself for the complaint he had made in the former part of the chapter, wherein he seemed to reflect upon God as unkind and severe; "Do I well to anger? Why do I fret thus?"
Those who are troubled from time have children with God, must, in the reflection, chide themselves for it.
From the doctrine of God's sovereign and universal providence, which he had asserted in the verses before, he draws this inference, Wherefore do a living man complain? What God does we must not open our mouths against, Ps. xxxix. 9. They that blame his lot, reproach him, and challenge it to him, are subjected to the will of God in all their suf-ferrings. Note, Though we may pour out our complaints before God, we must never exhibit any complaints against God. What! Shall a living man complain, a man for the punishment of his sins? The reasons here urged are very cogent. (1.) We are men; let us herein show ourselves men. Shall a man complain?
And again, a man! We are men, and not brutes, reasonable creatures, who should act with reas-

who should look upward, and look forward, and both ways may fetch considerations enough, to silence our complaints. We are men, and not children that cry for every thing that hurts them; we are men, and not gods, subjects, not lords; we are not our own masters, not our own carvers, we are bound, and must obey; must submit; we are men, and not angels, and therefore cannot expect to be free: nor (for we are not angels) are we not inhabitants of that world where there is nothing but sorrow; we are men, and not devils, are not in that deplorable, helpless, hopeless state that they are in, but have something to comfort ourselves with, which they have not. (2.) We are living men; through the good hand of God upon us we are alive yet, though dying daily; and shall a living man complain? No, he has more reason to complain of the burdens and calamities of life. Our lives are frail and forfeited, and yet we are alive; now the living, the living, they should praise, and not complain; (Isa. xxxviii. 19.) while there is life there is hope, and therefore, instead of complaining that things are bad, we should encourage ourselves with the hope that they will be better. (3.) We are suffering under the inflicting of just punishment of our sins; nay, it is far less than our iniquities have deserved; we have little reason to complain of our trouble, for it is our own doing, we may thank ourselves, our own wickedness corrects us; (Prov. xix. 3.) we have no reason to quarrel with God, for he is righteous in it, he is the Governor of the world, and it is necessary that he should maintain the honour of his government by chastising the disobedient. Are we suffering for our sins? Then let us not complain, for we have other work to do; instead of repining, we must be repenting; and as an evidence that God is reconciled to us, we must be endeavours to reconcile ourselves to his holy will. Are we punished for our sins? Is it our wisdom then to submit, and to kiss the rod; for if we still walk contrary to God, he will punish us yet seven times more, for when he judges he will overcome; but if we accommodate ourselves to him, though we be chastened of the Lord, we shall not be condemned with the world.

3. We must set ourselves to answer God's intention in afflicting us, which is, to bring sin to our remembrance, and to bring us home to himself, v. 40. These are the two things which our afflictions should put upon us. They should impress us with meditation upon ourselves, and a reflection upon our lives past; Let us search and try our ways, search what they have been, and then try whether they have been right and good or not; search as for a malefactor in disguise, that flies, and hides himself, and then try whether guilty or not guilty. Let conscience be employed both to search and to try, and let it have leave to part with a deal of good, and to discern what was corrupted, and what was sound, and to reflect on our circumstances, and to consider our ways, (Hag. 1. 3.) that what is any way may be repeated of, and amended for the future, and so we may answer the intention of the affliction. We are apt, in times of public calamity, to reflect upon other people's ways, and lay blame upon them, whereas our business is to search and try our own ways; we have work enough to do at home; we must beschew each of us, say, 'What have I done? What have I contributed to the public flames?' That we may each of us mend one, and then we should all be mended. (2.) A sincere conversion to God; "Let us turn again to the Lord, to him who is turned against us, and whom we have turned from; to him let us turn by repentance and reformation, as to our Owner and Ruler: we have been with him, and it has never been well with us since we forsook him, let us therefore now turn again to him." This must accompany the former, and be the fruit of it; therefore we must seek and try our ways, that we may turn from the evil of them, and to this end the method David took; (Ps. cxix. 59.) I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto the testimonies.

4. We must offer up ourselves to God, and our best affections and services, in the flames of devotion; v. 41. When we are in affliction, (1.) We must look up to God, as a God in the heavens, infinitely above us, and who has an infinite and eternal benefit upon us, and are therefore not to be quarrelled with, but to submit to. (2.) We must pray to him, with a believing expectation to receive mercy from him; for that is implied in our lifting up our hands to him, (a gesture commonly used in prayer,) and sometimes put forth, as, (Ps. xxvii. 8.) Let the lifting up of my hands be acceptable in thy sight. It signifies our requesting mercy from him, and our readiness to receive that mercy. (3.) Our hearts must go along with our prayers; we must lift up our hearts with our hands, as we must pour out our souls with our words. It is the heart that God looks at in that, and every other service; for what will a sacrifice without a heart avail? If inward impressions be not in some measure answerable to outward expressions, we do but mock God, and deceive ourselves. Praising is lifting up the soul to God, (Ps. xxxv. 1.) as to our Father in heaven; and the soul that hopes to be with God in heaven for ever, will thus, by frequent acts of devotion, be still learning the way thereto, and pressing forward in that way.

42. We have transgressed, and have rebelled: thou hast not pardon'd. 43. Thou hast covered with anger, and persecuted us: thou hast slain, thou hast not pitied. 44. Thou hast covered thyself with a cloud, that our prayer should not pass through. 45. Thou hast made us as the scoffing and refuse in the midst of the people. 46. All our enemies have opened their mouths against us. 47. Fear and a snare is come upon us, desolation and destruction. 48. Mine eye runneth down with rivers of water for the destruction of the daughter of my people. 49. Mine eye trickleth down, and ceaseth not, without any intermission. 50. Till the Lord look down, and behold from heaven. 51. Mine eye affecteth my heart, because of all the daughters of my city. 52. Mine enemies chased me sore, like a bird, without cause. 53. They have cut off my life in the dungeon, and cast a stone upon me. 54. Waters flowed over my head; then I said, I am cut off.

It is easier to chide ourselves for complaining than to chide ourselves out of it: the prophet had owned that a living man should not complain, as if he checked himself for his complaints in the former part of the chapter; and yet here the clouds return after the rain, and the wounds bleed afresh; for great pains must be taken with a troubled spirit, to bring it into temper.

I. They confess the righteousness of God in afflicting them; (v. 42.) We have transgressed and have rebelled. Note, It becomes us, when we are in trouble, to justify God, by owning our sins, and laying the load upon ourselves for them. Call sin a transgression, call it a rebellion, and you do not misclassify it. This is the result of their searching and their wondering, they inquired into them, the worse they found them.

II. Yet they complain of the afflictions they are under, not without some reflections upon God, which we are not to imitate, but, under the sharpest trials, must always think and speak highly and kindly of him.

1. They complain of his frowns, and the tokens of his displeasure against them. Their sins were repented of, and yet, (v. 42.) Thou hast not pardoned. They had not the assurance and comfort of the pardon; the judgments brought upon them for their sins were not removed, and therefore they thought they could not say the sin was pardoned, which was a mistake, but a common mistake with the people of God when their souls are cast down, and disquieted within them. Their case was really pitiable, and they were in danger of overloading God with their miseries, v. 43. Their enemies persecuted and slew them, but that was not the worst of it, they were but the instruments in God's hands; Thou hast persecuted us, and thou hast slain us, though we expected thou shouldst have protected and delivered us.

They complain that there was a wall of partition between them and God, and, (1.) This hindered God's favours from coming down upon them: The reflection of beams of God's kindness to them, used to be the beauty of Israel; but now thou hast covered us with anger, so that our glory is concealed and gone; now God is angry with us, and we do not appear that illustrious people that we have formerly been thought to be. Or, Thou hast covered us up as men that are buried or covered up and forgotten. (2.) It hindered their prayers from coming up unto God; (v. 44.) Thou hast covered thyself with a cloud; not like that bright cloud in which he took possession of the temple, which enabled the worshippers to draw near to him, but like that in which he came down upon mount Sinai, which obliged the people to stand at a distance. This cloud is so thick, that our prayers seem as if they were lost in it, they cannot pass through, we cannot obtain an audience. The reflection of beams of God's kindness to them, used to be the beauty of Israel; but now God is angry with us, and we do not appear that illustrious people that we have formerly been thought to be. Or, Thou hast covered us up as men that are buried or covered up and forgotten.

2. They complain of the contempt of their neighbours, and the reproach and ignominy they were under; (v. 43.) Thou hast made us as the scoffing, or scarring of the first floor, which are thrown to the dunghill. This St. Paul refers to, in his address to the Jews, when he said, (v. 13.) We are made as the filth of the world, and are the scoffing and scaring of all things. We are the refuse, or dross, in the midst of the people, trodden upon by every body, and looked upon as the vilest of the nations, and good for nothing but to be cast out as salt which has lost its savour. Our enemies have opened their mouths against us, (v. 48.) Have gaped upon us, and mocked, and said, Where are their mouth? or have taken liberty to say what they please of us. These complaints we had before, ch. ii. 15. 16. Note, It is common for base and ill-natured men to run upon, and run down, those that are fallen into the depths of distress from the height of honour. But this they brought upon themselves by sin; if they had not made themselves vile, their enemies could not have made them so; but there-the sufferings of saints; our Lord Jesus was so; for when he came near, he beheld this same city, and wept over it, which the daughters of Jerusalem did not. (2.) She is overwhelmed with fears; not only grieveth for what is, but fears worse, and gives up all for gone; (v. 54.) "Then I said, I am cut off, ruined, and see no hope of recovery; I am as one dead.

Note, Those that are cast down, are commonly taken to think themselves cast off, Ps. xxxvii. 22. Jon. iii. 4.

5. In the midst of these sad complaints here is one word of comfort, by which it appears that their case was not altogether so bad as they made it, v. 50. We continue thus weeping till the Lord look down and behold from heaven. This intimates, (1.) That they were satisfied that God's gracious regard to them in their miseries would be an effectual redress of all their grievances; "If God, who now covers himself with a cloud, as if he took no notice of our troubles, (Job xxxii. 13.) would but shine forth, all would be well; if he look upon us, we shall be saved," Ps. lxxx. 19. Dan. ix. 17. Bad as the case is, one favourable look from heaven will set all to rights.

(2.) That they had hopes that he would at length look upon them, and grace them to see through their circumstances, (v. 3.) though they had cause to grudge that he will; "Though he contend long, he will not contend for ever, though we deserve that he should," (3.) That while they continued weeping they continued waiting; neither did nor would expect relief and succor from any hand but his; nothing shall comfort them but his gracious returns, nor shall any thing wipe tears from their eyes till he look down. Their eyes which now run down with water, shall still wait upon the Lord their God until that he have mercy upon them, Ps. xii. 2.

55. I called upon thy name, O Lord, out of the low dungeon. 56. Thou hast heard my voice; hide not thine ear at my breathing, at my cry. 57. Thou drewest near in the day that I called upon thee: thou saidst, Fear not. 58. O Lord, thou hast pleaded the causes of my soul; thou hast redeemed my life. 59. O Lord, thou hast seen my wrong; judge thou my cause. 60. Thou hast seen all their vengeance, and all their imaginations against me. 61. Thou hast heard their reproach, O Lord, and all their imaginations against me; 62. The lips of those that rose up against me, and their device against me all the day. 63. Behold their sitting down, and their rising up; I am their music. 64. Render unto them a recompense, O Lord, according to the work of their hands. 65. Give them sorrow of heart, thy curse unto them. 66. Persecute and destroy them in anger from under the heavens of the Lord.

We may observe throughout this chapter a struggle in the prophet's breast between sense and faith, fear and hope; he complaints and then comforts himself, yet drops his comforts, and returns again to his complaints, as Ps. xlii. But as there, so here, faith gets the last word, and comes off a conqueror; for in these verses he concludes with some comfort. And here are two things with which he encourages himself and experience, with which he encourages himself in reference to the public troubles. He that has seasonably succoured particular saints, will not fail the church in general. Or, it may include the remnant of good people that were among the Jews, who had found it was not in vain to wait upon God. In three things the prophet and his pious friends had found God good to them. 1. His dealings were the most effectual in their distress, through fear that the cloud of wrath was such as their prayers could not pass through, (v. 44.) yet, upon second thoughts, at least upon further trial, they find it otherwise, and that God had not said unto them, Seek ye me in vain. When they were in the low dungeon, as free among the dead, they called upon God's name; (v. 53.) their weeping did not hinder praying. Note, Though we are cast into ever so low a dungeon, we may thence find a way to access God in the highest heavens; Out of the depths have I cried unto thee, (Ps. cxxxv. 1.) as Jonah out of the whale's belly. And could God hear them out of the low dungeon, and would he? Yes, he did; Thou hast heard my voice; and some read the following words as carrying on the same thankful acknowledgment; (v. 59.) "Then didst thou cover thy face, hear my cry; and the original will bear that reading. We read it as a petition for further audience; Hide not thine ear. God's having heard ear voice when we cried to him, even out of the low dungeon, is an encouragement for us to hope that he will not at any time hide his ear. Observe how he calls prayer his breathing; for in prayer we breathe toward God. We breathe at him; though and thought I was breathing my last, thou tookst cognizance of my distressed case." 2. He had silenced their fears, and quieted their spirits; (v. 57.) "Thou didst near in the day that I called upon thee; thou didst graciously assure me of thy presence with me, and give me to see thee nigh unto me, whereas I had thought thee to be at a distance from me." Note, When we draw nigh to God in a way of duty, we may by the Holy Spirit, in our prayer, put away the distance of our way of mercy; but this was not all; Thou saidst, Fear not. This was the language of God's prophets preaching to them not to fear, (Isa. xii. 13.) of his providence preventing those things which they were afraid of, and of his grace quieting their minds, and making them easy, by the witness of his Spirit with their spirits, that they were his people, call, though in distress, and therefore ought not to fear. 3. He had already begun to appear for them; (v. 58.) "O Lord, thou hast pleaded the causes of my soul," (that is, as it follows,) "thou hast redeemed my life, hast rescued that out of the hands of those who would have taken it away, hast saved that when it was ready to be swallowed up, hast given me that for a prey." And this is an encouragement to perseverance to the believing, that he would yet further appear for them; "Thou hast delivered my soul from death, and therefore wilt deliver my feet from falling; thou hast pleaded the causes of my life, and therefore wilt plead my other causes." II. He comforts himself with an appeal to God's justice, and (in order to the sentence of that) to his omniscience. He appeals to God's knowledge of the matter of fact, how very spiteful and malicious his enemies were; (v. 59.) "O Lord, thou hast seen my wrong, that I have done no wrong at all, but suffer a great deal." He that knows all things, knew, (1.) The malice they had against him; "Thou hast seen all their vengeance; how they desire to do me a mischief, as it were by way of reproal for some great injury I had done them." Note, We should consider, to our terror and caution, that God knows all the revengeful thoughts we have in our minds against others, and therefore we should not allow of such thoughts, or harbour them; and that he knows all the revengeful thoughts others have causiously in their minds against us, and therefore we should not be afraid of them, but leave it to him to protect us from them. (2.) The designs and projects they had had to do him a mischief; "Thou hast seen all their imaginations against me," (v. 66.) and again, (v. 61.) They had taken their imaginations against me, both the desire and the device they have to ruin me; whether it show itself in word or deed, it is known to thee; may, though the products of it are not to be seen or heard, yet their device against me all the day is perceived and understood by him to whom all things are naked and open.

Note, The most secret contrivances of the church's enemies are perfectly known to the church, they have no secrets from God.

(3.) The contempt and calumnies whereby they led him, all that they spake slightly of him, and all that they spake reproachfully; "Thou hast heard their reproach," (v. 61.) all the bad characters they give me, laying to my charge things that I know not; all the methods they use to make me odious and contemptible, even the lips of those that rose up against me, (v. 62.) the odious, malicious, exaggerated, they use, when they speak of me; and that at their sitting down and rising up, when they lie down at night, and get up in the morning, when they sit down to their meat, and with their company, and when they rise from both, still I am their music, they make themselves and one another merry with my miseries, as the Philistines made sport with Samson. Jerusalem was the subject of their sport; perhaps they had some tune or play, some opera or interlude, that was called the destruction of Jerusalem, which though in the nature of a tragedy, was very entertaining to those who wished ill to the holy city. Note, God will one day call sinners to an account for all the hard speeches which they have spoken against him and his people, Jude 15.

He appeals to God's judgment upon this fact, "Lord, thou hast seen my wrong; there is no need of any evidence to prove it, or any prosecutor to enforce and aggravate it, thou seest it in its true colours; and now I leave it with thee, judge thou my cause," v. 59. Let them be dealt with," (1.) "As they deserve; (v. 64.) Render to them a recompense according to the work of their hands. Let them be dealt with as they have dealt with us; let thy hand be against them as their hand has been against us. They have created us a great deal of vexation; now, Lord, give them sorrow of heart; (v. 65.) perplexity of heart;" (so some read it:) "let them be surrounded with threatening mischiefs on all sides, and not be able to see their way out; give them despondency of heart;" (so others read it:) "let them be driven to despair, and give themselves up for lost. Give the hand of the oppressor to itself, and sink the heart that thinks itself stoutest. (2.) "Let them be dealt with according to the threatenings; Thy curse unto them; let thy curse come upon them, all the evils that are pronounced in thy word against the enemies of thy people, v. 65. They have loaded us with curses; as they loved cursing, so let it come upon them, thy curse which will make them truly miserable. Theirs is causeless, and therefore fruitless, it shall not come; but thine is just, and shall take effect; those whom thou curseth are cursed indeed. Let the curse be executed, v. 66. Persecute and destroy them in anger, as they persecute and destroy us in their anger. Destroy them from under the heavens of the Lord, let them have no benefit of the light and influence of the heavens. Destroy them in such a manner, that all who see it may say, It is a destruction from the Almighty, who sits in the heavens and laughs at them, (Ps. ii. 4.) and may own that the heavens do rule," Dan. iv. 26. What is said of the idols is here said of their worshippers, (who in this also shall be like unto them,) They shall perish from under these heavens, Jer. x. 11. They shall be not only excluded from the happiness of the invisible heavens, but cut off from the comfort even of these external advantages, which are the blessings of the Lord, (Ps. xxv. 16.) and which they therefore are unworthy to be taken under the protection of, who rebel against him.

CHAP. IV.

This chapter is another single alphabet of Lamentations for the destruction of Jerusalem, like those in the two first chapters. 1. The prophet here laments the injuries and indignities done to those to whom respect used to be showed, v. 1, 2. II. He laments the direful effects of the famine to which they were reduced by the siege, v. 3, 10. III. He laments the taking and sucking of Jerusalem, and its amazing desolations, v. 11, 12. IV. He acknowledges that the sins of their leaders were the cause of all these calamities, v. 13, 16. V. He gives us up all as doomed to utter ruin, for their enemies were every way too hard for them, v. 17, 20. VI. He foretells the destruction of the Edomites who triumphed in Jerusalem's fall, v. 21, 23. he foretells the return of the captivity of Zion at last, v. 22.

1. HOW is the gold become dim! how is the most fine gold changed! the stones of the sanctuary are poured out in the top of every street. 2. The precious sons of Zion, comparable to fine gold, how are they esteemed as earthen pitchers, the work of the hands of the potter? 3. Even the sea-monsters draw out the breast, they give suck to their young ones; the daughter of my people is become cruel, like the ostriches in the wilderness. 4. The tongue of the sucking child cleaveth to the roof of his mouth for thirst; the young children ask bread, and no man breaketh it unto them. 5. They that did feed delicately are desolate in the streets; they that were brought up in scarlet embrace dunghills. 6. For the punishment of the iniquity of the daughter of my people is greater than the punishment of the sin of Sodom, that was overthrown as in a moment, and no hands stayed on her. 7. Her Nazarites were purer than snow, they were whiter than milk, they were more ruddy in body than rubies, their polishing was of sapphire: 8. Their visage is blacker than a coal; they are not known in the streets; their skin cleaveth to their bones it is withered, it is become like a stick. 9. They that be slain with the sword are better than they that be slain with hunger; for these pine away, stricken through for want of the fruits of the field. 10. The hands of the pitiful women have sodden their own chil children, they were their meat in the destruction of the daughter of my people. 11. The Lord hath accomplished his fury; he hath poured out his fierce anger, and hath kindled a fire in Zion, and it hath devoured the foundations thereof. 12. The kings of the earth, and all the inhabitants of the world, would not have believed that the adversary and the enemy should have entered into the gates of Jerusalem.

The elegy in this chapter begins with a lamentation of the very sad and doleful change which the judgments of God had made in Jerusalem. The city that had been as gold, as the most fine gold, so rich and splendid, the perfection of beauty, and the joy of the whole earth, is become dunghill, and is changed, has lost its lustre, lost its value, is not what it was, it is become dress. Alas, what an alteration is here!

1. The temple is laid waste, which was the glory of Jerusalem and its protection; it is given up into the hands of the enemy. As some understand the gold spoken of, (v. 1.) to be the gold of the temple, the thing that is hid, the face of the fire, and were poured out, and thrown about in the top of every street, they lay mangled without distinction among the common ruins. When the God of the sanctuary was by sin provoked to withdraw, no wonder that the stones of the sanctuary were thus profaned.

2. The princes and priests who were in a special manner the sons of Zion, were trampled upon and abused, v. 2. Both the house of God and the house of David were in Zion; the sons of both those houses were upon this account precious, that they were heirs to the privileges of those two covenants of priesthood and royalty; they were comparable to fine gold; Israel was more rich in them than in treasures of gold and silver; but now they are esteemed as earthen pitchers; they are broken as earthen pitchers in a man's hand, and there is no favour. They are grown poor, and brought into captivity, and thereby are rendered mean and despised, and every one treads upon them, and insults over them. Note, The contempt put upon God's people ought to be matter of lamentation to us.

3. Little children were starved for want of bread and water, v. 3, 4. The mourning-mothers, having no meat for themselves, had no milk for the babies at their breast, so that though in disposition they were really compassionate, yet in fact they seemed to be cruel, like the ostriches in the wilderness, that leave their eggs in the dust; (Job xxxix. 14, 15.) having no food for their children, they were forced to neglect them, and do what they could to forget them, because it was a pain to them to think of them when they had nothing for them; in this they were worse than the seals, or sea-monsters, or whales, (as some render it,) for they drew out the breast, and gave suck to their young, which the daughter of my people will not do. Children cannot shift for themselves as grown people can; and therefore it was the more painful to see the tongue of the sucking-child cleave to the roof of his mouth for thirst, because there was not a drop of water to moisten it; and to hear the young children, that could but just speak, ask bread of their parents, who had none to give them, no, nor any friend that could supply them. As doleful as our thoughts are of this case, so thankful should our thoughts be of the great plenty we enjoy, and the food convenient we have for ourselves and for our children, and for those of our own house.

4. Persons of good rank were reduced to extreme poverty, v. 5. They who were well-born and well-bred, and did not draw their subsistence from the earth, were reduced to a state of the greatest misery. They fed and clothing, who had fed delicately, had every thing that was curious and nice, (they call it eating well, whereas those only eat well, who eat to the glory of God,) and lived sumptuously every day; they had not only been advanced to the scarlet, but from their beginning were brought up in scarlet, and were never acquainted with anything mean or shabby. Note, The wisdom of those who have abundance, not only by their own means, but by the means of others, must not make them so used to their own luxury, as to think themselves too nicely for their hardships, when they come, will be doubly hard. Deut. xxviii. 56. 5. Persons who were eminent for dignity, may, perhaps, for sanctity, shared with others in the common calamity, v. 7, 8. Her Nazarites are extremely changed. Some understand it only of her honourable ones, the young gentlemen, who were very clean, and neat, and well-dressed, washed and perfumed; but I see not why we may not understand it of those devout people among them, who separated themselves to the Lord by the Nazarites' vow, Num. vi. 2. That there were such among them in the most degenerate times, appears, Amos ii. 11. I raised up of your young men for Nazarites. These Nazarites, though they were not to cut their hair; yet, by reason of their temperate diet, their frequent washings, and the care with which they had in devoting themselves to God, and conversing with him, which made their faces to shine as Moses', were fairer than snow, and whiter than milk; drinking no wine nor strong drink, they had a more healthful complexion and cheerful countenance than those who regulated themselves only with the blood of the grape. In Daniel and his fellows with juice and water. Others understand that God's great exertion and veneration which all good people had for them; though perhaps to the eye they had no form or comeliness, yet, being separated to the Lord, they were valued as if they had been more ruddy than rubies, and their polishing had been as sapphire. But now their victory is marred, (as is said of Christ, Matt. xvi. 14.) it is blacker than a coal, they lost miserably, partly to their own great grief and perplexity; they are not known in the streets, who respected them now take no notice of them, and they who had been intimately acquainted with them now scarcely knew them, their countenance was so altered by the miseries that attended the long siege. Their skin teareth to their bones, their flesh being quite consumed and wasted away; it is withered, it is become like a stick, a dry and hard as a piece of wood. Note, It is a thing to be much lamented, that even those who are separated to God, are yet, when desolating judgments are abroad, and are then involved with others in the common calamity.

6. Jerusalem comes down slowly, and dies a lingering death, for the famine contributes more to her destruction than any other judgment whatsoever. Upon this account, the destruction of Jerusalem was greater than that of Sodom, (v. 6.) for that was overthrown in a moment; and before she could despatch it, she could not endure any long siege, as Jerusalem has done, she fell immediately into the hands of the Lord, who strikes home at a blow, and did not fall into the hands of man, who, being weak, is long in doing execution, Judg. viii. 21. Jerusalem is kept in many months upon the rack, in pain and misery, and dies by inches, dies so as to feel herself die. And when the iniquity of Jerusalem is more aggravated than that of Sodom, no wonder that the punishment of it is so. Sodom never had the means of grace that Jerusalem had, the oracles of God, and his prophets, and therefore the condemnation of Jerusalem will be more intolerable than that of Sodom, Matt. xix. 23, 24.

The extremity of the famine is here set forth by two passages of it: (1.) The tedious deaths that it was the cause of; (v. 9.) many were slain with hunger, their stores being spent, and the public stores so scantily spent, that they could not have any relief out of them; they were stricken through, for want of the fruits of the field; they who were starved were as sure to die as if they had been stricken and stricken through: only their case was much more miserable; they who are stricken with the sword, are soon rid out of their pain, in a moment they go down to the grave; (Job xxi. 13.) they have not the terror of seeing death make its advances toward them, and scarcely feel it when the blow is given; it is but one sharp struggle, and the work is done. And if we be ready for another world, we need not be afraid of a short passage to it, the quicker the better. But they who die by famine pine away, hunger press upon their spirits, and wastes them gradually, may it frets their spirits, and fills them with vexation, and is as great a torture to the mind as to the body. There are bands in their death, Ps. lxviii. 11. (2.) The barbarous murders that it was the occasion of; (v. 10.) The hands of the pitiful women have first slain, and then sodden, their own children. This was lamented before; (ch. ii. 20.) and it was a thing to be greatly lamented, that any should be so wicked as to do it, and that they should be brought to such extremities as to be tempted to it. But this horrid effect of long sieges had been threatened in general, (Lev. xxvi. 29. Deut. xxviii. 53.) and particularly against Jerusalem in the siege of the Chaldeans, Jer. xix. 9. Ezek. v. 10. The case was sad enough that they had not wherewithal to make mocking sport of them, (v. 4.) but much worse that they could find in their hearts to feed upon their children, and make meat of them. I know not whether to make it an instance of the power of necessity, or of the power of iniquity; but as the Gentile idolaters were justly given up to vile affections, (Rom. i. 26.) so these Jewish idolaters, and the women particularly, who had made sale to the queen of heaven, and to their children to do so too, were stript of natural affection, and that to their own children. Being thus left to dishonour their own nature, was a righteous judgment upon them for the dishonour they had done to God.

7. Jerusalem comes down utterly and wonderfully. (1.) The destruction of Jerusalem is a complete destruction; (v. 11.) The Lord has accomplished his fury, he has made thorough work of it, he has executed all that he purposed in wrath against Jerusalem, and has wrought no punishment of the sentence. He has poured out the full vials of his fierce anger, poured them out to the bottom, even the dregs of them. He has kindled a fire in Zion, which has not only consumed the houses, and levelled them with the ground, but, beyond what other fires do, has devoured the foundations thereof, as if they were the second built upon. (2.) It is an amazing destruction, v. 12. They have sent them to the kings of the earth, who are acquainted with, and inquisitive about, the state of their neighbours; nay, it was so to all the inhabitants of the world, who knew Jerusalem, or had ever heard or read of it; they could not have believed that the adversary and enemy should ever have entered into the gates of Jerusalem; for, [1.] They knew that Jerusalem was strongly fortified, not only by walls and bulwarks, but by the numbers and strength of its inhabitants; the strong hold of Zion was thought to be impregnable. [2.] They knew that it was the city of the great King, where the Lord of the whole earth had in a more peculiar manner his residence; it was the holy city, and therefore they thought that it was so much under the divine protection, that it would be in vain for any of its enemies to make an attack upon it. [3.] They knew that many an attempt made upon it had been baffled, witness that of Sennacherib. They were therefore amazed when they heard of the Chaldeans making themselves masters of it, and concluded that it was certainly by an immediate hand of God that Jerusalem was given up to them; it was by a commission from him that the enemy broke through, and entered the gates of Jerusalem.

13. For the sins of her prophets, and the iniquities of her priests, that have shed the blood of the just in the midst of her. They have wandered as blind men in the streets, they have polluted themselves with blood, so that men could not touch their garments. They cried unto them, Depart ye; it is unclean; depart, depart, touch not: when they fled away and wandered, they said among the heathen, They shall no more sojourn there. The anger of the Lord hath divided them; he will no more regard them: they respected not the persons of the priests, they favoured not the elders. As for us, our eyes as yet failed for our vain help: in our watching we have watched for a nation that could not save us. They hunt our steps, that we cannot go in our streets: our end is near, our days are fulfilled; for our end is come. Our persecutors are swifter than the eagles of the heaven: they pursued us upon the mountains, they laid wait for us in the wilderness. The breath of our nostrils, the anointed of the Lord, was taken in their pits, of whom we said, Under his shadow we shall live among the heathen.

We have here, (1.) The sins they are charged with, for which God brought this destruction upon them, and which serve to justify God in it; (v. 13, 14.) It is for the sins of her prophets, and the iniquities of her priests.
not that the people were innocent, no, they loved to have it so, (Jer. v. 31.) and it was to please them that the prophets and priests did as they did; but the fault is chiefly laid upon them who should have taught them better, should have reproved and admonished them, and told them what would be in the end the lot of the hands of those watchers who did not give them warning, will their blood be required. Note, Nothing ripens a people more for ruin, nor fills the measure faster, than the sins of their priests and prophets. The particular sin charged upon them is, persecution; the false prophets and corrupt priests joined their power and interest to shed the blood of the just in the midst of her folk; and of God's children, they to whom he had adhered to them: they not only shed the blood of their innocent children, whom they sacrificed to Moloch, but the blood of the righteous men that were among them, whom they sacrificed to that more cruel idol of enmity to the truth and true religion. This was that sin which the Lord would not pardon, (2 Kings xxiv, 4.) and which brought the last destruction upon Jerusalem; (Jam. v. 6.) Ye have condemned and killed the just. And the priests and prophets were the ringleaders in persecution, as in Christ's time the chief priests and scribes were the men that incensed the people against him, who otherwise would have persisted in their heresies. Now these are they that were blander as blind men in the streets; (v. 14.) they should not touch their garments, they thought every thing that is good, but to do evil they were quick-sighted. God says of corrupt judges, They know not, neither do they understand, they walk in darkness; (Ps. lxxxix. 5.) and Christ says of the corrupt teachers, They are blind leaders of the blind, Matt. xxv. 14. They have so polluted themselves with innocent blood, the blood of the saints, that men could not touch their garments; they themselves odious to all about them, so that good men were as shy of touching them as of touching a dead body, which contracted a ceremonial pollution; or of touching the bloody clothes of one slain, which tender spirits care not to do. There is nothing that will make prophets and priests to be abhorred so much as a spirit of persecution. The people's neighbours produced in evidence against them, both to convict them of sin, and to show the equity of God's proceedings against them. Some that are grown very impudent in sin, boast that they care not what people say of them; but God, by the prophet, would have the Jews to take notice of what people said of them, and what was the opinion of the standers-by concerning them; (v. 15, 16.) what they said, may, we may, they said unto them, especially to the corrupt priests and prophets, among the heathen. (1.) They upbraided them with their pretended purity, while they lived in all manner of real iniquity. They cried to them, Depart ye, it is uncleane. You were so precise, you would not touch a Gentile, but cried, Depart, depart, stand by thyself, I am holier than thou, Isa. lx. 7. You could not touch their garments, they went into the judgment-hall, lest they should be defiled. But can you now keep the Gentiles from touching you, when God has delivered you into their hands? When you fly away and wander, you will bid them stand off, and not touch you, because they are uncleane; but in vain, these serpents will not be charmed or enchanted thus, or, they will not retreat to the shelter of the priests, how could the elders, the most venerable persons will to them be despised. (2.) They upbraided them with their sins, and the anger of God against them for their sins, and the direful effects of that anger. They cried to them, Depart ye, it is uncleane; they all cried out shame on them, and could easily foresee that God would not long suffer so provoking a people to continue in so good a land. They knew their statutes and judgments were righteous, and expected they should be a wise and understanding people, Deut. iv. 6. But when they saw them quite otherwise, they cried, Depart, depart; they seen read their doom, that the land should be cursed for them, but it had done their predecessors, and when they saw the dispersed of Jacob fleeing and wandering, they told them of it. They said, Now the anger of the Lord has divided them, has dispersed them into all countries, because they respected not the persons of the priests, the pious priests that were among them, such as Zechariah the son of Jehoiada, Jer. remiah, and others; that the Lord had not despised them and their authority, when they went about to check them for their vicious courses; the very heathen foresaw this would ruin them. (3.) They triumph in their ruin as irrecoverable. They said, when they saw them expelled out of their own land, Now they shall no more sojourn there, they have had it a final farewell, never more to return to it, for God will no more regard them; and how then can they help themselves? Herein they were mistaken, God had not cast them off, for all this; yet thus much is intimated, that all about them observed them to be so very provoking to their God, that there was no reason to expect any other, than that they should be quite abandoned. 3. The despair which they themselves were almost brought to are in vain; God has in mind what they said concerning them among the heathen, let us now hear what they say concerning themselves; (v. 17.) As for us, we look upon our case to be in a manner helpless. Our end is near, (v. 18.) the end both of our church and of our state; we are just at the brink of the ruin of both; nay, our end is come, we are utterly undone, a fatal, final period is at hand, and all our comforts, the days of our prosperity are fulfilled, they are numbered and finished. Thus their fears concurred with the hopes of their enemies, that the Lord would no more regard them. For, (1.) The refuges they fled to disappointed them. They looked for help from this and the other powerfull ally, but to no purpose, it proved vain help, the succours they expected did not come in, or at least they were so incomparable as expected, and they waited for, and their eyes failed with looking to that which never came; (v. 17.) they watched in watching, they watched long, and with a great deal of earnestness and impatience, for a nation that promised them assistance, but failed them, and frustrated their expectations, they could not save them, they were too weak to contend with the Chaldean army, and therefore were retired. Help from creatures is vain help, (Ps. lx. 11.) and we may look for it till our eyes fail, till our hearts fail, and come short of it at last. (2.) The persecutors they fled from overtook them, and overcame them; (v. 18.) They hunt our steps, that we cannot go into our streets. When the Chaldeans besieged the city, they raised their batteries so high above the walls, that they could command all things, and put their hands at people as they went along the streets; they hunted them, and with their arrows from place to place. When the city was broken up, and all the men of war fled, their persecutors were swifter than the eagles of heaven when they fly upon their prey, (v. 19.) there was an escaping them; they pursued them upon the mountains, and when they thought they had got clear of them, they knew not how the hands of the three that laid wait for them in the wilderness, to cut off their retreat, and to pick up stragglers; may, the king himself, though he may be supposed to have all the advantages the exigence of the case would admit to favour his flight, yet he cannot escape, for divine vengeance pursues him with them, and then, (v.
20. The breath of our nostrils, the anointed of the Lord, was taken in their pits. Some apply it to Josiah, who was killed in battle by the king of Egypt; but it is rather to be understood of Zedekiah, who was the last king of the house of David, and who was pursued by the Chaldeans, and slain in the 5th year of Jehoahaz, Jer. xxxix. 5. He was the anointed of the Lord, heir of that family which God had appointed to the government; he was very much confided in by the Jewish state; they said, Under his shadow we shall live among the heathen; they promised themselves that the remnant which were left after Jeconiah's captivity, should, under the protection of his government, yet remain in a state of relative safety.

They thought, though they were so reduced that they could not think of reigning over the heathen, as they had done, yet they might make a shift to live among them, and not be insulted and pulled to pieces by them. Thus apt are sinking interests not only to catch at every twig, but to think it will recover them. Jerusalem died of a consumption, a flattering distemper; even when she was ready to expire she formed some hopeful symptoms to herself, and on them grounded a hope that she should recover; but what came of it? The shadow, under which they thought they should live, proved like that of Jonah's gourd, which withered in a night. He that was the anointed of the Lord, was taken in their pits, as if he had been but a beast of prey; so little account did they make of a person deemed sacred and not to be violated. Note, When we make any creature the breath of our nostrils, and promise ourselves that we shall live by it, it is just with God to stop that breath, and deprive us of the life we expected by it, for God will have the honour of being himself alone our Life, and the Length of our days.

21. Rejoice and be glad, O daughter of Edom, that dwellest in the land of Uz: the cup also shall pass through unto thee; thou shalt be drunken, and shall make thyself naked. 22. The punishment of thine iniquity is accomplished, O daughter of Zion; he will no more carry thee away into captivity: he will visit thine iniquity, O daughter of Edom; he will discover thy sins.

David's psalms of lamentation commonly conclude with some word of comfort, which is as life from the dead, and light shining out of darkness; so does this lamentation here in this chapter. The people of God are now in great distress, their aspects all dolorous, their prospects all frightful, and their ill-disposed neighbours the Edomites insult over them, and do all they can to exasperate their destroyers against them; such was their violence against their brother Jacob, (Obad. 10.) such their spleen at Jerusalem, of which they cried, Raze it, raze it, Ps. cxlvii. 7. Now it is here foretold, for the encouragement of God's people, 1. That an end shall be put to Zion's troubles; (v. 23.) 2. The punishment of thine iniquity is accomplished, O daughter of Zion; not the fulness of that punishment which it deserves, but of that which God has designed and determined to inflict, and which was necessary to answer the end, the glorifying of God's justice, and the taking away of their sin. The captivity, which is the punishment of thine iniquity, is accomplished, (Isa. xl. 2.) and he will no longer carry thee captive; so it may be rendered, as well, he will no more carry thee into captivity; he will turn again thy captivity; and work a glorious release for thee. Note, The troubles of God's people shall be continued no longer than till they have done their work for which they were sent.
deliver us out of their hand. 9. We gat our bread with the peril of our lives, because of the sword of the wilderness. 10. Our skin was black like an oven, because of the terrible famine. 11. They ravished the women in Zion, and the maidis in the cities of Judah. 12. Princes are hanged up by their hand: the faces of elders were not honoured. 13. They took the young men to grind, and the children fell under the wood. 14. The elders have ceased from the gate, the young men from their music. 15. The joy of our heart is ceased; our dance is turned into mourning. 16. The crown is fallen from our head: we are made as it were sacrifices to the heathen; we are delivered into their hand, to the spoil of our youth. 17. O Lord! Thou art just in all that is brought upon us, for we are a seed of evildoers, children of wrath, and heirs of the curse: we are sinful, and we have it by kind. Note, The sins which God looks back upon in punishing we must look back upon in repenting, and must take notice of all that will help to justify God in correcting us. They refer their reproaches to the sinfulness of God's people, and compare themselves with them. They say, "Lord, our fathers have sinned, and we justly smart for their sins: but they are not, they were taken away from the evil to come, they lived not to see and share in these miseries that are come upon us, and we are left to bear their iniquities; now, though herein God is righteous, yet it must be owned that our case is pitiful, and worthy of compassion." Note, If we be prevented from suffering what we deserve, the sins of our fathers, we may expect that he who punishes will pity, and will soon return in mercy to us. 11. They represent the reproach of trouble which they bear, in divers particulars, which tend much to their disgrace. 1. They are diseseied of that good land which God gave them, and their enemies have got possession of it, (v. 2.) Canaan was their inheritance, it was theirs by promise, God gave it to them and their seed, and they held it by grant from his crown; (Ps. cxxxvi. 21, 22.) but now, "It is turned to strangers, they possess it, who have no right to it, who are strangers to the commonwealth of Israel, and aliens to the covenants of promise, they dwell in the house that we built, and are our observers." In the hand of the Lord's enemies was the spiritual inheritance of God's people, but the heavenly Canaan is an inheritance that they cannot be dispossessed of, that shall never be turned to strangers. 2. Their state and nation are brought into a condition like that of widows and orphans; (v. 3.) "We are fatherless, helpless, we have none to protect us, to provide for us, to take any care of us, whether we are the father of the country, is cut off; nay, God our Father seems to have forsaken us and cast us off; our mothers, our cities, that were as fruitful mothers in Israel, are now as widows, are as wives whose husbands are dead, destitute of comfort, and exposed to wrong and injury, and this is our reproach; for we who made a figure, are now locked on with contempt." The common rejection and contempt of them put hard to it to provide necessaries for themselves and their families, whereas once they lived in abundance, and had plenty of every thing. Water used to be free and easily come by, but now, (v. 4.) We have drunk our water for money, and the saying is no longer true, Uxus commans aquarum—Water is free to all. So hardly did their oppressors use them, that they could not have a draught of fair water but they must purchase it either with money or with work! Formerly they had had too for the fetching; but now, "Our wood is sold to us, and we pay dear for every faggot." Now were they punished for employing their children to gather wood for fire, with which to bake cakes for the queen of heaven, Jer. vii. 18. They were condemned to labour for another; forbidden the use both of fire and water, according to the ancient form, Interdice tibi aqua et igni—I forbid thee the use of water and fire. But what must they do for bread? Truly that was as hard to come by as any thing, for, (1.) Some of them sold their liberty for it; (v. 5.) We have given the hand to the Egyptians and to the Assyrians, have made the utmost for we could, we would have given them, that we might be satisfied with bread. We were glad to submit to the meanest employment, upon the hardest terms, to get a sorry livelihood; we have yielded ourselves to be their vassals, have parted with all to them, as the Egyptians did to Pharaoh in the years of famine, that we might have something

6. All sorts of people, even they whose persons and characters were most inviolable, were abused and dishonoured. (1.) The women were ravished, even the women in Zion, that holy mountain, v. 11. The committing of such abominable wickedness is very prejudicial to all society, and most deplorable. (2.) The great magnificence were not only put to open shame, but also to ignominious deaths; Princes were hanged., if they were not themselves hanged, when they were slain with the sword, were hung up, as the bodies of Saul's sons, in disgrace to them, and as it were to extol the misery of their captivity, and show it to the world. They were shorn of their beauty, showed to magistrates, and those in authority; The faces of elders; elders in age, elders in office, were not honoured; this will be particularly remembered against the Chaldeans another day; (Isa. xlvi. 6.) Upon the ancient hast thou very heavily laid thy yoke. (4.) The tenderness of youth was no more considered than the gravity of old age; (v. 13.) They took the young men to grind at the hand-mills, may; perhaps, to grind the flour: and old men have carried the grist; so some; have carried the mill, or mill-stones, so others. They loaded them as if they had been beasts of burden, and so broke their backs when they were young, and made the rest of their lives the more miserable. Nay, they made the little children carry their wood home for fuel, and laid such burdens upon them, that they fell down under them. So very inhuman were these cruel taskmasters.

7. An end was put to all their gladness, and their joy was quite extinguished; (v. 14.) The young men, who used to be disposed to mirth, have ceased from their mirth, have hung their harps upon the willow-trees. It does indeed well become old men to cease from their music, it is time to lay it by with a gracious contempt, when all the daughters of music are brought low; but it speaks some great calamity upon a people, when their young men are made to cease from it. It was so with the body of the people; (v. 15.) The joy of their heart was ceased, they never knew what joy was since the enemy came in upon them like a flood, for ever since deep called unto deep, and one wave flowed in upon the neck of another, so that they were quite overspread; and this we have seen in our days; and this is the case of many in our days, and the time is come, it is the case of the whole church, the time is come when the Lord's vine was trodden under the feet of his enemies, and the Gospel, which once lay in all the world, was brought to nothing, and the time is come when we must be taken away from the earth, and the like things are happening in our times. But this was to be the doom of Judah; A servant of servants shall be he. They would not be ruled by their God, and by his servants the prophets, whose rule was gentle and gracious, and therefore justly are they ruled with rigour by their enemies and their servants. (3.) That they saw no probable way for the redress of their grievances; There is none that doth deliver us out of our captivity, but none to rescue us out of our captivity, but none to check and restrain the insolence of the servants that abuse us, and trample upon us; which one would think their masters should have done, because it was an usurpation of their authority; but, it should seem, they connived at it, and encouraged it, and as if they were not worthy of the correction of gentlemen, they are turned out of the factions to be spurned by them. Well might they pray, Lord, consider, and behold our reproach.

5. They who used to be feasted, are now famished; (v. 10.) Our skin was black like an oven, dried and parched too, because of the terrible famine, the storms of famine; (so the word is;) for though famine comes gradually upon a people, yet it comes very fast, and before all before it, and there is no resisting of it; and this very fasting, and hence we read of the reproach of famine, which in captivity they received among the heathen, Ezek. xxxvi. 30.

is righteous, for we have sinned." Note, All our ways are owing to our own sin and folly. If the crown of our head be fallen, (for so the words run,) if we lose our excellency, and become mean, we may thank ourselves, we have by our own iniquity profaned our crown, and laid our honour in the dust. 17. For this our heart is faint; for these things our eyes are dim, 18. Because of the mountain of Zion, which is desolate, the foxes walk upon it. 19. Thou, O Lord, remainest for ever; thy throne from generation to generation. 20. Wherefore dost thou forget us for ever, and forsake us so long time? 21. Turn thou us unto thee, O Lord, and we shall be turned; renew our days as of old. 22. But thou hast utterly rejected us; thou art very wroth against us.

Here, 1. The people of God express the deep concern they had for the ruins of the temple, more than for any other of their calamities; the interests of God's house lay nearer their hearts than those of their own; (v. 17. 18.) For this our heart is faint, and sinks under the load of its own heaviness; for these things our eyes are dim, and our sight is gone, as is usual in a dejection, or fainting fit; "It is because of the mountain of Zion, which is desolate, the holiest mountain, and the temple built upon that mountain. For other desolations our hearts grieve, and our eyes weep; but for this our hearts faint, and our eyes are dim." Note, Nothing lies so heavy upon the spirits of good people as that which threatens the ruin of religion, or weakens its interests; and it is a comfort if we can appeal to God, that that afflicts us more than any temporal affliction. 2. They comfort themselves with the doctrine of God's eternity, and his perpetual government; (v. 19.) But thou, O Lord, remainest for ever. This they are taught to do by that Psalm which is entitled, A Prayer of the afflicted, Ps. cii. 27, 28. When all our creature-contents are removed from us, and our hearts fail us, we may then encourage ourselves with the belief, (1.) Of God's eternity; Thou remainest for ever. What shakes the world gives no disturbance to him; and all the revolutions there are on earth, there is no change in the Eternal Mind; God is still the same, and remains for ever infinitely wise and holy, just and good; with him there is no variableness nor shadow of turning. (2.) Of the never-falling continuation of his dominion; Thy throne is from generation to generation; the throne of glory, the throne of grace, and the throne of government, are all unchanged and unchangeable; and this is matter of comfort to us when the crown is fallen from our head. When the thrones of princes, that should be our protectors, are brought to the dust, and buried in it, God's throne continues still; he still rules the world, and rules it for the good of his church. The Lord reigns, reigns for ever, even thy God, O Lord; and this is a matter of comfort to us when the crown is fallen from our head.

3. They humbly expostulate with God concerning the low condition they were now in, and the frowns of heaven they were now under; (v. 20.) "Wherefore dost thou forget us for ever, as if we were quite cast out of mind? Wherefore dost thou forsake us so long time, as if we were quite deprived of the tokens of thy presence? Wherefore dost thou defer our deliverance, as if thou hadst utterly abandoned us? Thou art the same, and, though the throne of thy sanctuary is demolished, thy throne in heaven is unshaken. But witt thou not be the same to us?" Not as if they thought God had forgotten and forsaken them, much less feared his formidable forsaking them for ever; but thus they express the value they had for his favour and presence, which they thought it long that they were deprived of the evidence and comfort of. The last verse may be read as such an expostulation, and so the margin reads it; "For wilt thou utterly reject us? Will thou be perpetually wrath with us; not only not smile upon us, and remember us in mercy, but not think upon us, and bring us any token of thy presence; not only not draw nigh to us, but cast us out of thy presence, and forbid us to draw nigh unto thee? How will this be reconciled with thy goodness and faithfulness, and the stability of thy covenant?" We read it, "But thou hast rejected us; thou hast given us cause to fear that thou hast, Lord, for how long shall we be in this temptation?" Note, Though we may not quarrel with God, yet we may plead with him; and though we may not conclude that he has cast us off, yet we may (with the prophet, Jer. xii. 1.) humbly reason with him concerning his judgments, especially the continuance of the desolations of his sanctuary.

4. They earnestly pray to God for mercy and grace; "Lord, do not reject us for ever, but turn us again to thee. O Lord, do not turn us away for ever, but turn us again to thee." If these words are not put last, yet the Rabbins, because they would not have the book to conclude with these melancholy words, (v. 22.) repeat this prayer again, that the sun may not set under a cloud, and so make these the last words, both in writing and reading this chapter. They here pray, (1.) For converting grace, to prepare and qualify them for mercy; and (2.) For mercy itself. They complained that God had forsaken and forgotten them, and then their prayer is not, Turn thou to us, but, Turn us to thee; which implies an acknowledgment that the cause of the distance was in themselves. God never leaves any till they first leave him, nor stands afar off any longer than while they stand afar from him; if therefore he turn away from them, it is because they have not come to him. If we have not thus been quick to return to him in a way of mercy. This agrees with that repeated prayer, (Ps. lxxx. 3, 17.) Turn us again, and then cause thy face to shine. Turn us from our idols to thyself, by a sincere repentance and reformation, and then we shall be turned. This implies a further acknowledgment of their own weakness and inability to turn themselves. There is in our nature a bent to backslide from God, but no disposition to return to him till his grace works in us both to will and to do. So necessary is that grace, that we may truly say, Turn us, or we shall not be turned, but shall wander endlessly; and so powerful and effectual is that grace, that we may as truly say, Turn us, and we shall be turned; for it is a day of power, almighty power, in which God's people are made a nation, Ps. cx. 3. (2.) For restoring mercy; Turn us to thee, and then renew our days as of old, put us into the same happy state that our ancestors were in long ago, and that they continued long in; let it be with us as it was at the first, and at the beginning, Isa. l. 26. Note, If God by his grace renew our hearts, he will be the same that made them; so he shall renew our youth as the eagle, Ps. cxvii. 5. They that repent, and do their first works, shall rejoice, and recover their first comforts. God's mercies to his people have been ever of old; (Ps. xxv. 6.) and therefore they may hope, even then when he seems to have forsaken and forgotten them, that the mercy which was from everlasting will be to everlasting.
AN EXPOSITION, WITH PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS, OF THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET EZEKIEL.

When we entered upon the writings of the Prophets, which speak of the things that should be hereafter, we seemed to have the same call that St. John had, (Rev. iv. 1.) Come up hither; but when we enter upon the prophecy of this book, it is as if the voice said, Come up higher, as we go forward in time; for Ezekiel prophesied in the captivity, as Jeremiah prophesied just before it; so we soar upward in discoveries yet more sublime of the divine glory. These waters of the sanctuary still grow deeper; so far are they from being fordable, that in some places they are scarcely fathomable; yet, deep as they are, out of them flow streams which make glad the city of our God, the holy place of the tabernacles of the Most High. As to this prophecy now before us, we may inquire,

I. Concerning the penman of it—it was Ezekiel; his name signifies, The strength of God; or one girt or strengthened of God. He girded up the loins of his mind to the service, and God put strength into him. Whom God calls to any service he will himself enable for it; if he gives commission, he will give power to execute it. Ezekiel's name was answered when God said, (and no doubt did as he said,) I have made thy face strong against their faces. The learned Selden, in his book De Dis Syris, says, that it was the opinion of some of the ancients, that the prophet Ezekiel was the same with that Nazerus Assyrian, whom Pythagoras (as himself relates) had for his tutor for some time, and whose lectures he attended; and it is agreed that they lived much about the same time. We have reason to think that many of the Greek philosophers were acquainted with the sacred writings, and borrowed some of the best of their notions from them. If we may credit the tradition of the Jews, he was put to death by the captives in Babylon, for his faithfulness and boldness in reproving them; it is stated that they dragged him upon the stones till his brains were dashed out. An Arabic historian says that he was put to death, and was buried in the sepulchre of Shem the son of Noah. So Hottinger relates, Thesaur. Philol. lib. ii. cap. 1.

II. Concerning the date of it—the place whence it is dated, and the time when. The scene is laid in Babylon, when it was a house of bondage to the Israel of God; there the prophecies of this book were preached, there they were written, when the prophet himself, and the people to whom he prophesied, were captives there. Ezekiel and Daniel are the only writing prophets of the Old Testament who lived and prophesied anywhere but in the land of Israel, except we add Jonah, who was sent to Nineveh to prophesy. Ezekiel prophesied in the beginning of the captivity, Daniel in the latter end of it; it was an indication of God's good will to them, and his gracious designs concerning them in their affliction, that he raised up prophets among them, both to convince them, when, in the beginning of their troubles, they were secure and unhumbled, which was Ezekiel's business, and to comfort them, when, in the latter end of their troubles, they were dejected and discouraged. If the Lord had been pleased to kill them, he would not have used such apt and proper means to cure them.

III. Concerning the matter and scope of it: 1. There is much in it that is very mysterious, dark, and hard to be understood; especially in the beginning and the latter end of it; which therefore the Jewish rabbins forbade the reading of to their young men, till they came to be thirty years of age, lest by the difficulties they met with there they should be prejudiced against the scriptures; but if we read these difficult parts of scripture with humility and reverence, and search them diligently, though we may not be able to unite all the knots we meet with, no more than we can solve all the phenomena in the book of nature, yet we may form, as from the book of nature, gather a great deal for the confirming of our faith, and the encouraging of our hope, in the God we worship. 2. Though the visions here be intricate, such as an elephant may swim in, yet the sermons are mostly plain, such as a lamb may wade in; and the chief design of them is to show God's people their transgressions, that in their captivity they might be repenting, and not repining. It should seem, he was constantly attended, for we read of their sitting before him as God's people sat to hear his words; (ch. xxxiii. 31.) and that he was occasionally consulted, for we read of the elders of Israel who came to inquire of the Lord by him, (ch. xiv. 1, 3.) And as it was of great use to the oppressed captives themselves to have a prophet with them, so it was a testimony to their holy religion against their oppressors, who ridiculed it and them. 3. Though the reproves and the threatening here be very sharp and bold, yet toward the close of the book very comfortable assurances are given of great mercy God had in store for them; and there, at length, we shall meet with something that has reference to gospel-times, and which was to have its accomplishment in the kingdom of the Messiah, of whom indeed this prophet speaks less than almost any of the prophets. But by opening the terrors of the Lord he prepares Christ's way; by the law is the knowledge of sin, and so it becomes our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ. The visions, which were the prophet's credentials, we have, ch. i.—iii. the reproaches and threatenings, ch. iv. —xxiv. and between the comforts we have in the latter part of the book we have messages sent to the nations that bordered upon the land of Israel, whose destruction is foretold, (ch. xxxv. —xxxv.) to make way for the restoration of God's Israel, and the re-establishment of their city and temple, which are foretold, ch. xxxvi. to the end. Those who would apply the comforts to themselves, must apply the convictions to themselves.

The Book of the Prophet EZEKIEL.

CHAP. I.

In this chapter, we have, 1. The common circumstances of the prophecy: new to be delivered, the time when it was delivered, (v. 1.) the place where, (v. 2.) and the person by whom, v. 3. 2. The uncommon introduction to it by a vision of the glory of God; 1. In his attendance and retinae in the upper world, where his throne is surrounded with angels, here called living creatures, v. 4.—14. 2. In his providences concerning the lower world, represented by the wheels and their motions, v. 15. —26. 3. In the face of Jesus Christ sitting upon the throne, v. 26. —28. And the more we are acquainted, and the more intimately we converse, with the glory of God in these three branches of it, the more commanding influence will divine revelation have upon us, and the more ready shall we be to submit to it, what the thing be. The whole of this in a résumé of this book with these visions. When such a God of glory speaks, it concerns us to hear with attention and reverence; it is at our peril if we do not.

1. Now it came to pass in the thirtieth year, in the fourth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I was among the captives by the river Chebar, that the heavens were opened, and I saw visions of God. 2. In the fifth day of the month, (which was the fifth year of king Jehoiachin's captivity,) 3. The word of the Lord came expressly unto Ezekiel the priest, the son of Buzi, in the land of the Chaldeans, by the river Chebar; and the hand of the Lord was there upon him.

The circumstances of the vision which Ezekiel saw, and in which he received his commission and instructions, are here very briefly related. But, as it is not done, that the narrative may appear to be authentic, and not romantic. It may be of use to keep an account when and where God has been pleased to manifest himself to our souls in a peculiar manner, that the return of the day, and our return to the place of the altar, (Gen. xiii. 4.) may revive the pleasing, grateful remembrance of God's favour to us. "Remember, O my soul, and never forget what communications of divine love thou didst receive at such a time, at such a place; tell others what God did for thee."

1. The time when Ezekiel had this vision, is here recorded. It was in the thirtieth year, v. 1. Some make it the thirtieth year of the prophet's age; being a priest, he was about that age; or the full execution of the priestly office, but being debarred from that by the iniquity and calamity of the times, now that they had neither temple nor altar, God at that age called him to the dignity of a prophet. Others make it to be the thirtieth year from the beginning of the reign of Nabophasser, the father of Nebuchadnezzar, from which the Chaldeans began a computation of time, as is also done from Nabonassar one hundred and twenty-three years before. Nabophasser reigned nineteen years, and this was the eleventh of his son, which makes the thirty. And it was proper enough for Ezekiel, when he was in Babylon, to use the computation they there used; as we in foreign countries date by the new style; and he afterwards uses the melancholy computation of his own country, observing, (v. 2.) that it was the fifth year of Jehoiachin's captivity. But the Chaldean Paraphrase fixes upon another era, and says that this was the thirtieth year after Nebuchadnezzar found the book of the law in the house of the sanctuary, at midnight after the setting of the moon, in the days of Josiah the king. And it is true, that this was just thirty years from that time; and that was an event so remarkable, (as it put the Jewish state upon a new trial,) that it was proper enough to date from it; and perhaps therefore the prophet speaks indefinitely of thirty years, as having an eye both to that event, and to the Chaldean computation, which were coincident.

It was in the fourth month, answering to our June, and in the fifth day of the month, that Ezekiel had this vision, v. 2. It is probable that it was on the sabbath day, because we read (ch. iii. 16.) that at the end of seven days, which we may well suppose to be the next sabbath, the word of the Lord came to him again. Thus John was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, when he saw the visions of the Almighty, Rev. i. 10. God would hereby put an honour upon his sabbaths, then when the enemies mocked at them, Lam. i. 7. And he would here thus encourage his people to keep up their attendance on the ministry of his prophets every sabbath-day, by these extraordinary manifestations of himself on some sabbath-days.

II. The melancholy circumstances he was in when God honoured him, and thereby favoured his people, with this vision. He was in the land of the Chaldeans, among the captives, by the river Chebar, and it was in the fifth year of king Jehoiachin's captivity. Observe,

1. The place of this vision it is now, some of them, captives in the land of the Chaldeins. The body of the Jewish nation yet remained in their own land, but these were the first-fruits of the captivity, and they were some of the best: for in Jeremiah's vision these were the good figs, whom God had sent into the land of the Chaldeans for their good; (Jer. xxiv. 5.) and that it might be for their good, God miss'd a prophet among them, to teach them out of the law, then when he chastened them, Ps. xcv. 12. Note, It is a great mercy to have the word of God brought us, and a great duty to attend to it diligently when we are in affliction. The word of instruction and the rod of correction may be of great service to us, in concert and concurrence with each other: the word to explain the rod, and the rod to enforce the word; both together give wisdom. It is happy for a man, when he is sick and in pain, to have a messenger with him, an interpreter, one among a thousand, if he have but his ear open to discourse, Job. xxxiii. 23. One of the quarrels God had with the Jews, when he sent them into captivity, was for mistaking his messenger and misusing his prophets; and yet when they were suffering for this sin, he favoured them with this for his mercy. It were ill with us if God did not sometimes graciously thrust upon us those means of grace and salvation which we have foolishly thrust from us. In their captivity they wanted ordinary helps for their souls, and therefore God raised them up these extraordinary ones; for God's children, if they be hindered in their education one way, shall have it made up another way. But observe, It was in the fifth year of the captivity, that Ezekiel was raised up among them, and not before. So long God left them without any prophet, till they began to lament after the Lord, and to complain that they saw not their signs, and there was none to tell them how long; (Ps. lxxiv. 9.) and then they would know how to value a prophet, and God's discoveries of himself to them by him would be the more acceptable and comfortable. The Jews were pleased that he said there was a land and had Jeremiah with them, those that were gone into captivity had Ezekiel with them; for wherever the children of God are scattered abroad he will find out tutors for them. 1. The prophet was himself among the captives, those of them that were posted by the river Chebar; for it was by the rivers of Babylon that they sat down and wept over their captivity. Note, Among the captives by that river Ezekiel was, and himself a captive. 2. He heard the voice of God; (v. 1.) The word of the Lord came expressly to him, and what he saw was designed to prepare him for what he was to hear. The expression is emphatical, Esendo fuit verbum Dei—The word of the Lord was really as it was to him; there was no mistake in it; it came to him in the fulness of its light and power, in the evidence and demonstration of the Spirit; it came close to him, may, it came into him, took possession of him, and dwelt in him richly: it came expressly, or accurately, to him; he did himself clearly understand what he said, and was abundantly satisfied of the truth of it. The essential Word, (so we may take it,) the Word who is, who what he is, came to Ezekiel, to send him on his errand. 3. He felt the power of God opening his eyes to see the visions, opening his ear to hear the voice, and opening his heart to receive both; The hand of the Lord was there upon him. Note, The hand of the Lord goes along with the word of the Lord, and so it becomes effectual; these only understand and believe the report, to whom the arm of the Lord is revealed. The hand of God was upon him, as upon Moses to cover him, that he should not be overcome by the dazzling light and lustre of the visions he saw, Exod. xxxiii. 22. It was upon him, (as upon St. John, Rev. i. 17.) to revive and support him, that he might bear up, and not faint, under these discoveries. That he might neither be lifted up nor cast down with the abundance of the revelations, God's grace is sufficient for him, and, in token of that, his hand is upon him. 4. And I looked, and behold, a whirlwind came out of the north, a great cloud, and a fire infolding itself, and a brightness was about it, and out of the midst thereof, as the colour of amber, out of the midst of the fire. 5. Also out of the midst thereof came the likeness of four living creatures. And this was their appearance; they had the likeness of a man. 6. And every one had four faces, and every one had four wings. 7. And their feet were straight feet, and the sole of their feet was like the sole of a calf's foot; and they sparkled like the colour of burnished brass. 8. And they had the hands of a man under their wings, on their four sides; and they four had their faces and their wings. 9. Their wings were joined one to another; they turned not where they went; they went every one straight forward. 10. As for the likeness of their faces, they four had the face of a man, and the face of a lion on the right side; and they four had the face of an ox on the left side; they four also had the face of an eagle. 11. Thus were their faces: and their wings were stretched upward; two wings of every one were joined one to another, and two covered their bodies. 12. And they went every one straight forward: whither the spirit was to go, they went; and they turned not when they went. 13. As for the likeness of the living creatures, their appearance was like burning coals of fire, and like the appearance of lamps: it went up and down among the living creatures; and the fire was bright, and out of the fire went forth lightning. 14. And the living creatures ran and returned as the appearance of a flash of lightning.

The visions of God which Ezekiel here saw, were very glorious, and had more particulars than those which other prophets saw. It is the scope and intention of these visions, to show the prophet's mind with very great and high and honourable thoughts of that God by whom he was commissioned, and for whom he was employed. It is the likeness of the glory of the Lord that he sees, (v. 28.) and from hence he may infer that it is his honour to serve him, for he is one among angels serve: he may serve him with safety, for he has power sufficient to bear him out in his work; it is at his peril to draw back from his service, for he has power to pursue him, as he did Jona; so great a God as this must be served with reverence and godly fear; and with assurance may Ezekiel foretell what this God will do, for he is able to make his words good.

2. To strike a terror upon the sinners who remained in Zion, and those who were already come to Babylon, who were secure, and bid defiance to the threatenings of Jerusalem's ruin, as we have found in Jeremiah's prophecy, and shall find in this, many did; “Let those who said, We shall have peace, though we go on, know that our God is a consuming Fire, whom they cannot stand before.”

That this vision had a reference to the destruction of Jerusalem, seems plain from ch. xlvii. 3. where he says that it was the vision which he saw when he came to destroy the city, to prophesy the destruction of it.

3. To speak comfort to those that feared God, and trembled at his word, and humbled themselves under his mighty hand: “Let them know that though they are captives in Babylon, yet they have God nigh unto them; though they have not the glory of the sanctuary to be the bliss he saw when he came to destroy the city, to prophesy the destruction of it.” Dr. Lightfoot observes, “Now that the church is to be planted for a long time in another country, the Lord shows a glory in the midst of them, as he had done at their first constituting into a church in the wilderness, and out of a cloud and fire, as he had done there, he showed himself, and from between living creatures, as from between the cherubims, he gives his oracles.” This put an honour upon them, by which they might value themselves when the Chaldeans insulted over them; and this might encourage their hopes of deliverance in due time.

Now, to answer these ends, we have in these verses the first part of the vision, which represents God as attended and served by an innumerable company of angels, who are all his messengers, his ministers, doing his commandments, and hearkening to the voice of his word; this denotes his grandeur; as it magnifies an earthly prince to have a splendid retinue, and numerous armies at his command: thus they are led to trust in him, and his enemies to fear him.

I. The introduction to this vision of the angels is very magnificent and awakening, v. 4. The prophet, observing the heavens to open, looked, looked up, (as it was time,) to see what discoveries God would make to him. Note, When the heavens are opened, it concerns us to have our eyes open. To clear the way, behold, a whirlwind came out of the north, which would drive away the intermists of this lower region; fair weather comes out of the north, and then the wind comes that drives away rain. God can by a whirlwind clear the sky and air, and produce that serenity of mind which is necessary to our communion with Heaven. Yet this whirlwind was attended with a great cloud; when we think that the clouds which arise from this earth are dark and sordid, and we can see beyond them, yet still there is a cloud which heavenly things are wrapped in, a cloud from above, so that we cannot order our speech concerning them by reason of darkness. Christ here descended, as he ascended, in a cloud. Some by this whirlwind and cloud understand the Chaldean army coming out of the north against the land of Judah, bearing down all before them; but this is a type of the greater strength, that which was signified by one of the first of Jeremiah's visions, (Jer. i. 14.) Out of the north an evil shall break forth; but I take it here as an introduction rather to the vision than to the sermons. This whirlwind came to Ezekiel, as that to Elijah, (1 Kings xix. 11.) to prepare the way of the Lord, and to demand attention, He that has eyes, that has ears, let him see, let him hear.

II. The vision itself. A great cloud was the vehicle of this vision, in which it was conveyed to the prophet; for God's pavilion in which he rests, is darkness and thick clouds; (Ps. xviii. 11.—iv. 3.) thus he holds back the face of his throne, lest its dazzling light and lustre should overpower us, by spreading a cloud upon us.

1. The cloud is accompanied with a fire, as upon mount Sinai, where God resided in a thick cloud; but the sight of his glory was like devouring fire, (Exod. xxiv. 16, 17.) and his first appearance to Moses was in a flame of fire in the bush; for our God is a consuming Fire. This was a fire infolding itself, of his own self, being his own Consi, his own Rule, and his own End, if he be as a fire, he is as a fire infolding itself, or as some read it, kindled by itself. The fire of God's glory shines forth, but it quickly infolds itself, for he lets us know but part of his ways; the fire of God's wrath breaks forth, but it also quickly infolds itself, for the divine patience suffers not all his wrath to be stirred up. Wherefore is a fire thus infolding itself, O Lord, who shall stand?

2. The fire is surrounded with a glory; A brightness was about it, in which it infolded itself, yet it made some discovery of itself. Though we cannot see into the fire, cannot by searching find out God to perfection, yet we see the brightness that is round about it, the reflection of this fire from the thick cloud. Moses might see God's back parts, but not his face; we have some light concerning the nature of God, from the brightness which encompasses it, though we have not an insight into it, by reason of the cloud spread upon it. Nothing is more easy than to determine that God is; nothing more difficult than to describe what he is. When God displays his wrath as fire, yet there is a brightness about it; for his holiness and justice appear very illustrious in the punishment of sin and sinners: even about himself he exhibits a brightness of his unsearchable light, which glorified saints will forever admire.

3. Out of this fire there shines the colour of amber; we are not told who or what it was that had this colour of amber, and therefore I take it to be the whole frame of the following vision, which came into Ezekiel's view out of the midst of the fire and brightness; and the first thing he took notice of before he viewed the pillar, but for the brightness of the colour of amber, or the eye of amber, it looked as amber does to the eye, of a bright flaming fiery colour, the colour of a burning coal; so some think it should be read. The living creatures which he saw coming out of the midst of the fire, were seraphims—burners, for he maketh his angels spirits, his ministers a flaming fire.

That which comes out of the fire, of a fiery amber colour, when it comes to be distinctly viewed, is the likeness of four living creatures: not the living creatures themselves, (angels are spirits, and cannot be seen,) but the likeness of them, such as a hieroglyphic, or representation, as God saw fit to make use of for the leading of the prophet, and us with him, into some acquaintance with the world of angels, (a matter purely of divine revelation,) so far as we are requisite to possess us with an awful sense of the greatness of that God who has angels for his attendants, and the goodness of that God who has appointed them to be attendants on his people; The likeness of these living creatures came out of the midst of the fire; for angels derive their being and power from God, they are in themselves, and to us, what he is pleased to make them, their glory is a ray of his. The prophet himself explains this vision. (ch. x. 20.) I know that the living creatures were the cherubims, which is one of the names by which the angels are known in scripture. To Daniel was made known their numbers, ten thousand times ten thousand, Dan. vii. 10. But though they are many, yet they are one, and that is made known to Ezekiel here; they are one in nature and operation, as sons of a living God, and set in a holy of holies to be a body of men. We have here an account of,

(1.) Their nature; they are living creatures, they are the creatures of God, the work of his hands, their being is derived, they have not life in and of themselves, but receive it from him who is the Fountain of life. As much as the living creatures of this lower world exceed the vegetable that are the ornaments of the earth, so much do the angels, the living creatures of the upper world, exceed the sun, moon, and stars, the ornaments of the heavens. The sun, say some, is a flame of fire inflowing itself, but it is not a living creature, as angels, those flames of fire, are. Angels are living creatures, living beings, emphatically so; men on earth are dying creatures, dying daily, (in the midst of life we are in danger,) to which end their likeness is given them, that they live indeed, live to good purpose, and when saints come to be equal unto the angels, they shall not die any more, Luke xx. 36.

(2.) Their number; they are four, so they appear here, though they are innumerable; not as if these were four particular angels set up above the rest, as some have fondly imagined, Michael and Gabriel, and Uriel and Raphael; for it is certain, by what they say in Ps. lxxxiv. 5., that there are four faces they put on, and to intimate their being sent forth toward the four winds of heaven; (Matth. xxvii. 31.) Zechariah saw them as four chariots going forth, east, west, north, and south, Zech. vi. 1. God has messengers to send each way; for his Kingdom is universal, and reaches to all parts of the world.

3. Their qualifications, by which they are fitted for the service of their Maker and Master. These are set forth figuratively and by similitude, as is proper in visions, which are parables to the eye. Their description here is such, and so expressed, that I think, the prophet does not want an exact idea of them in our fancies, or with the pencil, for that would be a temptation to worship them; but the several instances of their fitness for the work they are employed in, are intended in the several parts of this description. Note, It is the greatest honour of God's creatures to be in a capacity of answering the end of their creation; and the more ready we are to every good work, the nearer we approach to the dignity of angels.

These living creatures are described here,

[1.] By their general appearance; They had the likeness of a man, they appeared, for the main, in a human shape. First, To signify that these living creatures are reasonable creatures, intelligent beings, who have that spirit of a man, which is the essence of the Lord. Secondly, To put an honour upon the nature of men, which, though they are but a little lower than the angels, in the very next rank of beings below them; when the invisible intelligences of the upper world would make themselves visible, it is in the likeness of man. Thirdly, To intimate that their delights are with the sons of men, as their Master's are, (Prov. viii. 31.) that they do service to men, and may have spiritual communion with them by faith, hope, and by love. Fourthly, The angels of God appear in the likeness of man, because in the fulness of time the Son of God was not only to appear in that likeness, but to assume that nature; they therefore show this love to it.

[2.] By their faces; every one had four faces, looking four several ways. In St. John's vision, which has a near affinity with this, each of the four living creatures has one of these faces here mentioned; (Rev. iv. 7.) here each of them has all four, to intimate that they have all the same qualifications for service, though, perhaps, among the angels of heaven, as among the angels of the churches, some excel in one gift, and others in another, but all for the common service. Let us contemplate their faces till we learn how we may form some image, that we may do the will of God as the angels do it in heaven. They all four had the face of a man; (for in that likeness they appeared, v. 5.) but, beside that, they had the face of a lion, an ox, and an eagle, each masterly in his kind; the lion among wild beasts, the ox among tame ones, and the eagle among fowls, v. 16. Does God make use of them for the executing of judgments upon his enemies? They are fierce and strong as the lion and the eagle in tracing their prey. Does he make use of them for the good of his people? They are as oxen, strong for labour and inclined to serve. And in both they have the understanding of a man.

The scattered perfections of the living creatures on earth meet in the angels in heaven. They have the same excellency, and the same likeness of one another, as Christians have, one to another, in some things in which man is excelled even by the inferior creatures, they are therefore compared to some of them; they have the understanding of a man, and such as far exceeds it; they also resemble man in tenderness and humanity; but, First, A lion excels man in strength and boldness, and is much more formidable; therefore the angel has the face of a lion. Secondly, An ox excels man in diligence and patience, and painstaking, and an unwearied discharge of the work he has to do; therefore the angels, who are constantly employed in the service of God and the church, put on the face of an ox. Thirdly, An eagle excels man in quickness and piercing-sight of all, and it soaring high; and therefore the angels, who seek things above, and see far into divine mysteries, put on the face of a flying eagle.

[3.] By their wings: Every one had four wings, v. 6. In the vision Isaiah had of them, they appeared with six, now with four; for they appeared above the throne, and had occasion for two to cover their faces with them, as the angels and elders with God's throne. Whatever business God sends them upon, they lose no time. Faith and hope are the soul's wings, upon which it soars upward; pious and devout affections are its wings on which it is carried forward, with vigour and alacrity. The prophet observes here, concerning their wings, First, That they were joined one to another, (v. 9.) and again, v. 11. m. because use of their wings for flying, as some birds do, there is no contest among the angels, God makes peace, perfect peace, in his high places; but their wings were joined in token of their perfect unity and unanimity, and the universal agreement there is among them. Secondly, That they were stretched upward, extended and ready for use, not folded up or flagging. Let an angel receive the least intimation of the hand, he has nothing to seek, but is upon the wing immediately; while our poor, dull souls are like the ostrich, that with much difficulty lifts up herself on high. Thirdly, That two of their wings were made use of in covering their bodies, the spiritual bodies they assumed. The clothes that cover us, are our hinderance in work; angels need no other covering than their own wings. They cover their bodies from us, so forbidding us needless inquiries concerning them; ask not after them, for they are wonderful, Judg. xiii. 18. They cover them before God, so directing us, when we approach to God, to see to it that we be so clothed with Christ's righteousness, that the shame of our nakedness may not appear.

[4.] By their feet, including their legs and thighs; They were straight feet; (v. 7.) they stood straight, and firm, and steady, no barrier of service could make their legs to bend under them. The spouse makes this part of the description of her beloved, that his legs were as pillars of marble set upon sockets of fine gold; ( Cant. v. 13.) such are the angels in this their heavenly line; (Isa. xlv. 1.) the calf's foot, which divides the hoof, and is therefore clean; as it were the sole of a round foot, (as the Chaldee words it,) they were ready for motion any way. Their feet were winged; (so the Seventy;) they went so swiftly, that it was as if they flew. And their very feet sparkle like the colour of burnished brass; not only their faces, but the very feet, of every creature, as that of their feet is lovely, (Ezek. xxxi.) every step the angels take is glorious. In the vision John had of Christ, it is said, His feet were like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace, Rev. i. 15.

[5.] By their hands; (v. 8.) They had the hands of a man under their wings on their four sides; an arm and a hand under every wing. They had not only wings for motion, but hands for action on his eye are quick, who are not active; they hurry about a great deal, but do nothing to purpose, bring nothing to pass; they have wings, but no hands; whereas God's servants, the angels, not only go when he sends them, and come when he calls them, but do what he bids them. They are the hands of a man, which are wonderfully made, and fitted for service; which are guided by reason and understanding; for what angels do, they do intelligently and with judgment. They have calves' feet; this denotes the swiftness of their motion; (the cedars of Lebanon are said to skip like a calf, Ps. xxxix. 6.) but they have a man's hand; this denotes the niceness and exactness of their performances; as the heavens are said to be the work of God's fingers. Their hands were under their wings, which concealed them as they did the rest of their bodies. Note, The agency of angels is a secret thing, and their work is carried on in an invisible way. In working for God, though we must not, with the sluggard, hide our hand in our bosom, and let our hand go out to seek after what is dead and lost, yet we are left to know what our right hand doeth. We may observe, that where these wings were, their hands were under their wings; wherever their wings carried them, they carried hands along with them, to be still doing something suitable, something that the duty of the place requires.

[4.] Their motions. The living creatures are moving beings, and though their happiness is fixed, yet their happiness sits still, and do nothing, but to be always well employed, and we must reckon ourselves then best, when we are doing good; doing as the angels do it, of whom it is here observed.

[1.] That whatever service they went about, they went every one straight forward, (v. 9, 12.) which intimates, First, That they sincerely aimed at the glory of God, and had a single eye to that, in all they did; their going straight forward supposes that they looked straight forward, and never had any sinister intentions in what they did. And if thus our eye be single, our whole body will be full of light; the singleness of the eye is the sincerity of the heart. Secondly, That they were intent upon the service they were employed in, and did it with seriousness and zeal. They used not their work, for what their hand found to do, they did it with all their might, and did not loiter in it. Thirdly, That they were unanimous in it; they went straight forward, every one about his own work, they did not thwart or justle one another, did not stand in one another's light, in one another's way. Fourthly, That they perfectly understood their business, and were thoroughly well of it, so that they needed not to stand still to pause or hesitate, but they pursued their work with readiness, as those that knew what they had to do, and how to do it. Fiftihly, They were steady and constant in their work; they did not fluctuate, did not tire, did not vary, but were of a piece with themselves; they moved in a direct line, and so went the nearer, and the more successful were they in their work. When we go straight, we go forward, when we serve God with one heart, we rid ground, we rid work.

[2.] They turned not when they went, v. 9, 12. First, They made no hudders or mistakes, which would give them occasion to turn back to rectify them; their work needed no correction, and therefore they needed not to be gone over again. Secondly, They minded no diversions; as they turned not back, so they turned not aside, to trifle away with anything that was foreign to their business.

[3.] They went whither the Spirit was to go; (v. 12.) either, First, Whither their own spirit was disposed to go; thieth their own spirit was disposed to go; that thieth their spirit was disposed to go; thieth their spirit was disposed to go; yet the flesh is weak, and cannot keep pace with it, so that the good which we would do, we do it not; but angels and glorified saints labour under no such impotency, whatever they incline or intend to do, they do it, and never come short of it. Or, rather, Secondly, Whithersoever the Spirit of God would have them go; thieth they went; though they had so much wisdom of their own, yet in all their motions and actions they subjected themselves to the conduct and government of the divine will; whithersoever the divine providence was to go, they went, to serve its purposes, and to execute its orders. The Spirit of God (says Mr. Greenhill) is the great Agent that sets angels to work, and it is their honour that they are led, they are easily led, by the Spirit. See how quickly and universally they were disposed to work. Whosoever the Spirit is to go, they go immediately, with all possible alacrity. Note, Those that walk after the Spirit, do the will of God as the angels do it.

[4.] They ran and returned like a flash of lightning, v. 14. This intimates, First, That they made haste; they were quick in their motions, as quick as lightning; whatever business they went about, they despatched it immediately, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. Happy they that have no bodies to retard their motion in holy exercises! And happy shall we be when we come to have spiritual bodies for spiritual work! Satan falls like lightning into his own ruin, Luke x. 18. Angels fly like lightning in their Master's work, the angel Gabriel flew swiftly. Secondly, That they made haste back; they ran, and returned; ran to do their work, and execute their orders, and then returned to give an account of what they had done, and receive new instructions, that they might be always doing. They ran into the lower world, to do what was to be done there; but when they had done it, they returned like a flash of lightning to the upper world again, to the beatific vision of their God, which they could not live to enjoy, if they were longer from than their service did require. Thus we should be in the affairs of this world as out of our element; though we run into them, we must not repose in them, but ourselves must quickly return like lightning to God their Rest and Centre.

Lastly, We have an account of the light by which the prophet saw these living creatures, or the looking-glass in which he saw them, v. 13. [1.] He saw them by their own light, for their appearance was like burning coals of fire; they are seraphim-burners; denoting the ardour of their love to God, their fervent zeal in his service, their splendour and brightness, and their terror against God's enemies. When God employs them to fight his battles, they are as coals of fire, (Ps. xlviii. 12.) to devour the adversaries as lightnings shot out to disco'ert them. [2.] He saw them by the light of some lamps, which went up and down among them, the shining whereof was very bright. Satan's works are works of darkness, he is the ruler of the darkness of this world; but the angels of light are in the light, and though they conceal their working, they show their work, for it will bear the light. But we see them and their works only by candle-light by the dark light of the lamps, that go up and down among them, when the day breaks, and the shadows flee away, we shall see them clearly. Some make the appearance of these burning coals, and of the lightning, that issues out of the fire, to signify the wrath of God, and his judgments, that were now to be executed upon Judah and Jerusalem for their sins, in which angels were to be employed: and see how often we find after this the scattering upon the city, or its determination, which were fetched from between the cherubins, ch. x. 2. But by the appearance of the lamps then, we may understand the light of comfort which shone forth to the people of God in the darkness of this present trouble. If the ministry of the angels is to be a consuming fire to God's enemies, it is as a rejoicing light to his own children. To this our soul is a rejoicing and refreshing; to the other, out of the fire comes fresh lightning to destroy them. Note, Good angels are our friends or enemies, according as God is.

The appearance of the wheels and their work was like unto the colour of a beryl; and they four had one likeness: and their appearance and their work was as it were a wheel in the middle of a wheel. 17. When they went, they went upon their four sides; and they turned not when they went. 18. As for their rings, they were so high, that they were dreadful; and their rings were full of eyes round about them four. 19. And when the living creatures went, the wheels went by them; and when the living creatures were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up. 20. Whithersoever the spirit was to go, they went, thither was their spirit to go; and the wheels were lifted up over against them: for the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels. 21. When those went, these went; and when those stood, these stood; and when those were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up over against them: for the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels. 22. And the likeness of the firmament upon the heads of the living creature was as the colour of the terrible crystal, stretched forth over their heads above. 23. And under the firmament were their wings straight, one toward the other; every one had two, which covered on this side, and every one had two, which covered on that side, their bodies. 24. And when they went, I heard the noise of their wings, like the noise of great waters, as the voice of the Almighty, the voice of speech, as the noise of a host: when they stood, they let down their wings. 25. And there was a voice from the firmament that was over their heads; when they stood, and had let down their wings.

The prophet is very exact in making and recording his observations concerning this vision. And here we have,

1. The notice he took of the wheels, v. 15.—21. The glory of God appears not only in the splendour of his retina in the upper world, but in the steadiness of his government here in this lower world. Having seen how God doth according to his will in the armies of heaven, let us now see how he doth according to his will among the inhabitants of the earth; for there, on the earth, the prophet saw the wheels, v. 15. As he beheld the living creatures, and was contemplating the glory of that vision, and receiving instruction from it, as the prophet saw it, he preventative view. Note, Those who make a good use of the discoveries God has favoured them with, may expect further discoveries; for to him that hath shall be given. We are sometimes tempted to think there is nothing glorious but what is in the upper world, whereas, could we with an eye of faith discern the beauty of Providence, and the wisdom, power, and goodness, which shine in the administration of that kingdom, we should see, and say, Verily he is a God that judgeth in the earth, and acts like himself. There are many things in this vision which gives us some light concerning the Divine Providence.

1. The dispensations of Providence are compared to wheels, either the wheels of a chariot, in which the conqueror rides in triumph, or, rather, the wheels of a clock or watch, which all contribute to the regular motion of the machine. We read of the wheels, in Job xxvi. 6, which are here set before us as under the direction of the God of nature. Wheels, though they move not of themselves, as the living creatures do, are yet made moveable, and are almost continually kept in action. Providence, represented by these wheels, produces changes; sometimes one spoke of the wheel is uppermost, and sometimes another; but the motion of the wheel, however changed, that of the wheel above, is very regular and steady. The motion of the wheels is circular; by the revolutions of providence things are brought to the same posture and pass which they were in formerly; for the thing that is, is that which has been, and there is no new thing under the sun, Eccl. i. 9, 10.

2. The wheel is said to be by the living creatures, which extended it to direct its motion; for the angels are employed as the ministers of God's providence, and have a greater hand in directing the motions of second causes to serve the divine purpose than we think they have. Such a close connexion is there between the living creatures and the wheels, that they moved and rested together. Were angels busily employed? Men were busily employed, as instructor, ready to surrount in their own nature, and although they themselves were not aware of it. Or, Are men active to compass their designs? Angels at the same time are acting to control and overrule them. This is much insisted on here: (v. 19.) When the living creatures went, to bring about any business, the wheels went by them; when God has work to do by the ministry of angels, second causes are all found, or main, ready to concur in it; and (v. 21.) when those stood, these stood; when the angels had done their work, the second causes had done theirs. If the living creatures were lifted up from the earth, were elevated to any service above the common course of nature, and out of the ordinary road, as supposed in the working of miracles, the dividing of the water, the standing still of the sun, the angels, contrary to their own nature, or course, which is toward the earth, move in concert with them, and are lifted up over against them; this is thrice mentioned, v. 19.—21. Note, All inferior creatures are, and move, and act, as the Creator, by the ministration of angels, directs and influences them. Visible effects are managed and governed by invisible causes.

3. The reason given of this, is, because the spirit of the living creatures was in the wheels; the same wisdom, power, and holiness of God, the same will and counsel of his, that guides and governs the angels, and all their performances, does, by them, order and dispose of all the motions of the creatures in this lower world, and the events and issues of them. God is the Soul of the world, and animates the whole, both that above, and that beneath, so that they move in perfect harmony, as the upper and lower parts of the natural body do; so that whithersoever the Spirit is to go, whatever God wills and purposes to be done and brought to pass, thither their spirit is to go; the angels, knowingly and designedly, set themselves to bring it about, and the Spirit is in the wheels, which are therefore lifted up over against them; both the powers of nature and the wills of men, are all made to serve the intention, which they infallibly and irresistibly effect, though perhaps they mean not so, neither doth their heart think so, Isa. x. 7. Mic. iv. 11, 12. Thus, though the will of God's precept be not done on earth, as it is done in heaven, yet the will of his purpose and counsel is, and shall be.

4. Their appearance and their work are said to be like the colour of a beryl, (v. 16.) the colour of Tarshish, (so the word is,) that is, of the sea; the beryl is of that colour, sea-green; blue Neptune we call it. The nature of things in this world is like that of the sea; its creatures are amazing, there is a constant coherence and succession of its parts. There is a chain of events which is always drawing one way or other. The sea ebbs and flows, so does providence in its dispositions, but always to the stated, appointed times and measures. The sea looks blue, as the air does, because of the shortness and fineness of our sight, which can see but a little way of either; to that colour therefore are the appearance and work of Providence fitly compared, because we cannot find out that which God does from the beginning to the end, Eccl. iii. 11. We see but parts of his ways, (Jeb xxvi. 14.) and all beyond looks blue, which gives us to understand no more concerning it, but that in truth we know it not, it is far above out of our sight.

5. Their wheels and their work are likewise said to be as it were a wheel in the middle of a wheel. Observe here again, Their appearance to the prophet is designed to set forth what their work really is; men's appearance and their work often differ, but the appearance of God's providence and its work agree; if they seem to differ, it is through our ignorance and mistake. Now both were as a wheel in a wheel, a lesser wheel moved by a greater; we pretend not to give a mathematical description of it; the meaning is, that the dispositions of Providence seems to us intricate, perplexed, and unaccountable, and yet that they will appear in the issue to have been all wisely ordered for the best; so that though what God does we know not now, yet we shall know hereafter, John xiii. 7.

The motion of these wheels, like that of the living creatures, was steady, regular, and constant; They returned not when they went, (v. 17.) because they never went amiss, nor otherwise than they should do. God, in his providence, takes his work before him, and he will have it forward; and it is going on even then when it seems to us to be going backward. They went as the Spirit directed them, and therefore returned not. We should not have occasion to return back as we have, and to undo that by repentance which we have done amiss, and to do it over again, if we were but led by the Spirit, and followed his conduct. The Spirit of life (so some... read it) was in the wheels, which carried them on with ease and evenness, and then they returned not when they went.

7. The rings, or rims, of the wheels were so high, that they were dreadful, v. 13. They were of a vast circumference, so that when they were reared, and put in motion, the prophet was even afraid to look up upon them. Note, The vast compass of God's thought, and the vast reach of his design, are really astonishing; when we go about to describe the circle of Providence, we are struck with amazement, and are even swallowed up. O the height and depth of God's counsels! The consideration of them should strike an awe upon us.

8. They were full of eyes round about. This circumstance is a mysterious symbol of actual and yet most significant, plainly denoting that the motions of Providence are all directed by infinite wisdom. The issues of things are not determined by a blind fortune, but by those eyes of the Lord, which run to and fro through the earth, and are in every place, beholding the evil and the good.

Note. It is a great satisfaction to us, and ought to be so, that, though we cannot account for the springs and causes of events, yet they are all under the cognizance and conduct of an all-wise, all-seeing God.

If the notice he took of the firmament above, the heads of the living creatures. When he saw the living creatures moving, and the wheels by them, he looked up, as it is proper for us to do when we observe the various motions of providence in this lower world; looking up, he saw the firmament strecked forth over the heads of the living creatures, v. 22. What is done on earth is done under the heaven, (as the scripture often speaks,) under its inspection and influence.

Observe. 1. What he saw; The firmament was as the colour of the terrible crystal, truly glorious, but terribly so; the vastness and brightness of it put the prophet into an amazement, and struck him with an awful reverence. The terrible ice, or frost, (so it may be read;) the colour of snow congealed, or as mountains of ice in the northern seas, which are very frightful. Daring sinners ask, Can God judge through the dark cloud? Job xxi. 13. But that which we take to be a dark cloud, is to him transparent as crystal, through which, from the place of his habitation, he looks upon all the in habitants of the earth, Ps. xxxiii. 14. Under the firmament, the head of the living creature is erect; (v. 23.) when they pleased, they used them either for flight or for covering, or two for flight, and two for covering. God is on high, above the firmament, the angels are under the firmament, which denotes their subjection to God's dominion, and their readiness to fly on his errands in the open firmament of heaven, and to serve him unanimously.

2. What he heard. (1.) He heard the noise of the angels wings, v. 24. Bees and other insects make a great noise with the vibration of their wings; here angels do so, to awaken the attention of the prophet to that which God was about to say to him from the firmament, v. 25. Angels, by the providences they are employed in, sound God's alarms to the children of men, and stir them up to hear his voice; for that is that is true in the church, and is heard and understood by the men of wisdom. The noise of their wings was loud and terrible as the noise of great waters, like the roar or roaring of the sea; and as the noise of a host, the noise of war; but it was articulate and intelligible, and did not give an uncertain sound; for it was the voice of speech; nay it was as the voice of the Almighty; for God, by his providences, speaks once, yea twice; if we could but perceive it; (Job xxxii. 14.) the Lord's voice cries, Mic. vi. 9.

(2.) He heard a voice from the firmament, from him that sits upon the throne there, v. 25. When the angels moved, they made a noise with their wings; but when with that they had roused a careless world, they stood still, and let down their wings, that there might be a profound silence, and so God's voice might be the better heard. The voice of Providence is designed to open men's ears to the voice of the gospel, and to draw the ear, who with a loud voice charges silence while the voice passes sentence, He that has ears to hear, let him hear. Note. Noises on earth should awaken our attention to the voice from the firmament; for how shall we escape, if we turn away from him that speaks from heaven?

26. And above the firmament that was over their heads was the likeness of a throne, as the appearance of a sapphire-stone: and upon the likeness of the throne was the likeness as the appearance of a man above upon it. 27. And I saw as the colour of amber, as the appearance of fire round about within it; from the appearance of his loins even upward, and from the appearance of his loins even downward, I saw it as it were the appearance of fire, and it had brightness round about. 28. As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about. This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord. And when I saw it, I fell upon my face, and I heard a voice of one that spake.

All the other parts of this vision were but a preface and introduction to this. God in them had made himself known as Lord of angels, and supreme Director of all his affairs of this lower world, whence it is easy to infer that whatever God by his prophets either promises or threatens to do, he is able to effect it; angels are his servants, men are his tools. But now that a divine revelation is to be given to a prophet, and by him to the church, we must look higher than the living creatures of the wheels, and must expect that from the eternal Word, of whom we have an account in these verses. Ezekiel, hearing a voice from the firmament, looked up, as John did, to see the voice that spake with him, and he saw one like unto the Son of man, Rev. i. 12, 13. The second Person sometimes tried the fashion of a man, occasionally, before he clothed himself with it for good and all; and the spirit of prophecy is called the Spirit of Christ, (1 Pet. i. 11.) and the Testimony of Jesus, Rev. xix. 10.

1. This glory of Christ that the prophet saw, was above the firmament that was over the heads of the living creatures, v. 26. Note. The heads of angels themselves are under the feet of the Lord Jesus; for the firmament that is over their heads, is under his feet; angels, principalities, and powers, are made subject to him, 1 Pet. iii. 22. This dignity and dominion of the angels by their incarnation magnify his condescension in his incarnation, when he was made a little lower than the angels, Heb. ii. 9.

2. The first thing he observed, was a throne; for divine revelations come backed and supported with a royal authority: we must have an eye of faith to God and Christ as upon a throne. The first thing that John discovered in his visions was a throne set in heaven, (Rev. iv. 2.) which commands reverence and subjection. It is a throne of glory, a throne of grace, a throne of triumph, a throne of government, a throne of judgment. The Lord has prepared his throne in the heavens, has prepared it for his Son, whom he has set King on his holy hill of Zion.

3. On the throne he saw the appearance of a man.

This is good news to the children of men, that the throne above the firmament is filled with one that is not ashamed to appear, even there, in the likeness of man. Daniel, in vision, saw the kingdom and dominion given to one like the Son of man, who therefore has authority given him to execute judgment, that he might rend the nations (John v. 27.) so appearing in these visions.

4. The prophet sees him as a Prince and Judge upon this throne; though he appear in fashion as a man, yet he appears in more than human glory, v. 27.

(1.) Is God a shining Light? So is he: when the prophet saw him, he saw as the colour of amber; that is, a brightness round about; for God dwells in light, and covers himself with light as with a garment. How low did the Redeemer stoop for us, when, to bring about our salvation, he suffered his glory to be eclipsed by the veil of his humanity!

(2.) Is God a consuming Fire? So is he: from his loins, both upward and downward there was the appearance of fire. The fire above the loins was round about within the amber, it was inward and inward; that below the loins was more outward and open, and yet that also had brightness also round about. Some make the former to signify Christ's divine nature, the glory and virtue of which are hidden within the colour of amber; it is what no man has seen, or can see; the latter they suppose to be his human nature, the glory of which there were those who saw; the glory of the Only-begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth, John i. 14.

He had raiment and girdle about him, and he stood before the throne of his power, Hab. iii. 4.

4. The fire in which the Son of man appeared here, might be intended to signify the judgments that were ready to be executed upon Judah and Jerusalem, coming from that fiery indignation of the Almighty, which devours the adversaries. Nothing is more dreadful to the most daring sinners than the wrath of God.

5. The throne is surrounded with a rainbow; (v. 28.) it is so in St. John's vision; (Rev. iv. 3.) the brightness about it was of divers colours, as the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain; which, as it is a display of majesty, and looks very great, so is a pledge of mercy, and looks very kind; for it is a confirmation of the gracious promise God has made, that he will not drown the world again; and he has said, I will look upon the bow, and remember the covenant, Gen. ix. 16. This intimates that he who sits upon the throne, is the Mediator of the covenant; and he, in particular, is for that reason the object of our destruction; that he interposes between us and the judgments our sins have deserved; and that all the promises of God are in him yea and amen. Now that the fire of God's wrath was breaking out against Jerusalem, bounds should be set to it, and he would not make an utter destruction of it, for he would look upon the bow, and remember the covenant, as he did then, Ps. cvi. 9, 10. Ezek. v. 15.

Lastly, We have the conclusion of this vision:

(1.) What notion the prophet himself had of it; This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord. Here, as all along, he is careful to guard against all gross, corporeal thoughts of God, which might derogate from the transcendent purity of his nature. He does not say, This was the Lord, (for he is invisible,) but, This was the glory of the Lord, in which he was pleased to manifest himself a glorious Being; yet it is not the glory of the Lord, but the likeness of that glory, some faint resemblance of it; nor is it any adequate likeness of the glory, but only the appearance of that likeness, a shadow of it, and not the very image of the thing.

Heb. x. 1.

(2.) What impressions it made upon him; Where I saw it, I fell upon my face. [1.] He was overpowered by it, the dazzling lustre of it conquered him, and threw him upon his face; for who is able to stand before this holy Lord? Or, rather, [2.] He prostrated himself, in an humble sense of his own unworthiness of the honour now done him, and of the infinite distance which he now, more than ever, perceived to be between him and God; he fell upon his face, in token of that holy awe and reverence of God which his mind was possessed and filled with. Note, The more God is pleased to make known of himself to us, the more low should we be before him. He fell upon his face, to adore the majesty of God, to implore his mercy, and to deprecate the wrath he saw ready to break out against the children of his people.

(3.) What instructions he had from it; all he saw was only to prepare him for that which he was to hear, for faith comes by hearing: he therefore heard a voice upon one that spake; for we are taught by words, not merely by hieroglyphics. When he fell on his face, ready to receive the word, then he heard the voice of one that spake; for God delights to teach the humble.

CHAP. II.

What our Lord Jesus said to St. Paul, (Acts xxvi. 16.) may fitly be applied to the prophet Ezekiel, to whom the same Jesus is here speaking, Rise, and stand upon thy feet, for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister. We have here Ezekiel's ordination to his office which the vision was designed to fit him for; not to entertain his curiosity with uncommon speculations, but to put him into business. Now here, I. He is commissioned to go as a prophet to the house of Israel, now captives in Babylon, and to deliver God's messages to them from time to time, v. 1-5. II. He is cautioned not to be afraid of them, v. 6. III. He is instructed what to say to them, and has words put into his mouth, signified by the vision of a roll, which he was ordered to eat, (v. 7-10.) and which, in the next chapter, we find he did eat.

1. And he said unto me, Son of man, stand upon thy feet, and I will speak unto thee. 2. And the spirit entered into me when he spake unto me, and set me upon my feet, that I heard him that spake unto me. 3. And he said unto me, Son of man, I send thee to the children of Israel, to a rebellious nation that hath rebelled against me; they and their fathers have transgressed against me, even unto this very day. 4. For they are impudent children, and stiff-hearted: I do send thee unto them, and thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God. 5. And they, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear, (for they are a rebellious house,) yet shall know that there hath been a prophet among them. The title here given to Ezekiel, as often afterwards, is very observable; God, when he speaks to him, calls him, Son of man, (v. 1, 5.) Son of Adam, Son of the earth, Daniel is once called so, (Dan. viii. 17.) and but once; the compulsion is used to no other of the prophets, but to Ezekiel all along. We may take it, 1. As an humble, diminishing title; lest Ezekiel should be lifted up with the abundance of the revelations, he is put in mind of this, that still he is a son of man, a mean, weak, mortal creature. Among other things made known to him, it was necessary he should be made to know this, that he was a son of man, and not God. And therefore he was made to know that it was the counsel of God, that he was to be put forth, thus to manifest himself to him. Now he is among the living creatures, the angels; yet he must remember that he is himself a man, a dying creature. What is man, or the son of man, that he should be thus visited, thus dignified? Though God had here a splendid retinue of holy angels about his throne, who were ready to go on his errands, yet he passes them all by, and pitches on himself, to be his messenger to the house of Israel; for we have this treasure in earthen vessels, and God's messages sent us by men like ourselves, whose terror shall not make us afraid, nor their hand be heavy upon us. Ezekiel was a priest, but the priesthood was brought low, and the honour of it laid in the dust: it therefore became him, and all of his order, to humble themselves, and to lie low, as some men, called ministers, are employed as a prophet, God's ambassador, and a ruler over the kingdoms, (Jer. i. 10,) a post of great honour, but he must remember that he is a son of man, and whatever good he did, it was not by any might of his own, for he was a son of man, but in the strength of divine grace, which must therefore have all the glory. Or, 2. We may take it as an honourable, dignifying title; for it is one of the titles of the Messiah in the Old Testament; (Dan. vii. 13.) I saw one like the Son of man come with the clouds of heaven, from whence Christ borrows the title he often calls himself by, The Son of man. The prophets were types of him, as they had near access to God, and great authority among men; and therefore as David the king is called the Lord's anointed, or Christ, so Ezekiel the prophet is called son of man.

1. Ezekiel is here set up, and made to stand, that he might receive his commission, v. 1, 2. He is set up,

1. By a divine command; Son of man, stand upon thy feet. His lying prostrate was a posture of great reverence, but his standing up would be a posture of greater readiness and fitness for business. Our adorings of God must shut us up more than the quaking angels, to the expressings of God. He fell on his face in a holy fear and awe of God, but he was quickly raised up again; for they that humble themselves shall be exalted. God delights not in the dejections of his servants, but the same that brings them low, will raise them up; the same that is a Spirit of bondage will be a Spirit of adoption. Stand, and I will speak to thee. Note, God is graciously pleased to work that in us which he requires of us. He will raise us from the dust. We must stir up ourselves, and then God will put strength into us; we must work out our salvation, and then God will work in us. He observed that the Spirit entered into him then when Christ spake to him; for Christ conveys his Spirit by his word as the ordinary means, and makes the word effectual by the Spirit. The Spirit set the prophet upon his feet, to raise him up from his dejections, for he is the Comforter. Thus, in the like case, Daniel was strengthened by a divine touch, (Dan. x. 18.) and John was raised by the right hand of Christ laid upon him, Rev. i. 17. The Spirit set him upon his feet, made him willing and forward to do as he was bidden, and then he heard him that spake to him. He heard the voice before, (ch. i. 28.) but now he heard it more distinctly and clearly, heard it, and submitted to the message, by inclining our will to our duty, and thereby dispose the understanding to receive the knowledge of it.

II. Ezekiel is here sent, and made to go, with a message to the children of Israel; (v. 3.) I send thee to the children of Israel. God had for many ages been sending to them his servants the prophets, rising up betimes, and sending them, to make them acquainted with captivity for abusing God's messengers: and yet even there God sends this prophet among them, to try if their ears were open to discipline, now that they were held in the cords of affliction. As the supports of life, so the means of grace, are continued to us after they have been a thousand times forfeited. Now observe,

The rebellion of the people to whom this ambassador is sent; he is sent to reduce them to their allegiance, to bring back the children of Israel to the Lord their God; let the prophet know that there is occasion for his going on this errand, for they are a rebellious nation, (v. 3.) a rebellious house, v. 5. They are called children of Israel: they retain the name of their pious ancestors, but they are wickedly degenerated, they are become a rebellious nation. Note, the word rebellious is commonly used for the Gentiles; the children of Israel are become as the children of the Ethiopians, (Amos ix. 7.) for they are rebellious; and rebels at home are much more provoking to a prince than enemies abroad. Their idolatries and false worshipes were sins which, more than any other, denominated them a rebellious nation; for thereby they set up another prince in opposition to their rightful Sovereign, and did homage and paid tribute to the usurper, which is the highest degree of rebellion that can be.

1. They had been all along a rebellious generation, and had persisted in their rebellion; They and their fathers have transgressed against me. Note, Those are not always in the right, that have antiquity and the fathers on their side; for there are crimes of old standing, which are to be rejected. They had fallen far from being an excuse for walking in a bad way, that our fathers walked in it, that it is really an aggravation, for it is justifying the sin of these that have gone before us. They have continued in their rebellion even unto this very day; notwithstanding the various means and methods that have been made use of to reclaim them, to this day, when they are under divine rebukes for their rebellion, when they continue rebellious; many among them, like Ahab, even in their distress, trea^shet yet more; they are not the better for all the changes that have befal/en them, but still remain unchanged.

2. They were now hardened in their rebellion. They are impudent children, brazen-faced, and cannot blush; they are stiff-hearted, self-willed, and cannot bend, cannot stoop; neither can God, by their sins, they will not be wrought upon by the sense either of honour or duty. We are willing to hope this was not the character of all, but of many, and those perhaps the leading men. Observe, [1.] God knew this concerning them, how infeasible, how incorrigible, they were. Note, God is perfectly acquainted with every man's true character, whatever his pretensions and professions may be. [2.] He told the prophet this, that he might know how better to deal with them, and what handle to take them by. He must rebuke such men as those sharpely, cuttingly; must deal plainly with them, though they call it dealing roughly. God tells him this, that it might be no surprise or stumbling-block to him, if he found that his preaching should not make that impression upon them, which he had reason to think it would.

2. The dominion of the Prince by whom this ambassador is sent. (1.) He has authority to command him whom he sends; "I do send thee unto them, and therefore thou shalt say thus and thus unto them," v. 4. Note, It is the prerogative of Christ to send prophets to the ministry, and to enjoin them to declare his sayings. (2.) He has authority to command those to whom he sends him; Thou shalt say unto them, The word of the Lord; this must be spoken in God's name, enforced by his authority, and delivered as from him. Christ delivered his doctrines as a Son; Verily, verily, I say unto you; the prophets, as servants. Thus saith the Lord God, our Master and yours. Note, The writings of the prophets are the word of God, and so are to be regarded by every one of us. (3.) He has authority to command him whom he sends his ambassadors. Whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear, whether they will attend to the word, or turn their backs upon it, they shall know that there has been a prophet among them, shall know by experience. [1.] If they hear and obey, they will know by comfortable experience, that the word which did good was brought by one that had a commission from God, and a divine power going along with him in the execution of it. Thus they who were converted by St. Paul's preaching, are said to be seals of his apostleship, 1 Cor. ix. 2. When men's hearts are made to burn under the word, and their wills to bow to it, then they know and hear the witness in themselves, that it is not the word of men, but of God. [2.] If they forbear, if they turn a deaf ear to the word, (as it is to be feared they will,) for they are a rebellious house, yet they shall be made to know that he whom they slighted was indeed a prophet, by the reproaches of their own consciences, and the just judgments of God upon them for refusing him; they shall know it to their cost, know it to their confusion, know it by sad experience, what a people they were that would not hearken unto the word of God, and a divine power going along with him in the execution of it. Thus they who were converted by St. Paul's preaching, are said to be seals of his apostleship, 1 Cor. ix. 2. When men's hearts are made to burn under the word, and their wills to bow to it, then they know and hear the witness in themselves, that it is not the word of men, but of God. [3.] If they forbear, if they turn a deaf ear to the word, (as it is to be feared they will,) for they are a rebellious house, yet they shall be made to know that he whom they slighted was indeed a prophet, by the reproaches of their own consciences, and the just judgments of God upon them for refusing him; they shall know it to their cost, know it to their confusion, know it by sad experience, what a people they were that would not hearken unto the word of God, and a divine power going along with him in the execution of it. Thus they who were converted by St. Paul's preaching, are said to be seals of his apostleship, 1 Cor. ix. 2. When men's hearts are made to burn under the word, and their wills to bow to it, then they know and hear the witness in themselves, that it is not the word of men, but of God. [4.] If they forbear, if they turn a deaf ear to the word, (as it is to be feared they will,) for they are a rebellious house, yet they shall be made to know that he whom they slighted was indeed a prophet, by the reproaches of their own consciences, and the just judgments of God upon them for refusing him; they shall know it to their cost, know it to their confusion, know it by sad experience, what a people they were that would not hearken unto the word of God, and a divine power going along with him in the execution of it. Thus they who were converted by St. Paul's preaching, are said to be seals of his apostleship, 1 Cor. ix. 2. When men's hearts are made to burn under the word, and their wills to bow to it, then they know and hear the witness in themselves, that it is not the word of men, but of God.

6. And thou, son of man, be not afraid of them, neither be afraid of their words, though briers and thorns be with thee, and thou dost dwell among scorpions: be not afraid of their words, nor be dismayed at their looks, though they be a rebellious house. 7. And thou shalt speak my words unto them, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear; for they are most rebellious. 8. But thou, son of man, hear what I say unto thee; Be not thou rebellious like that rebellious house; open thy mouth, and eat that I give thee. 9. And when I looked, behold, a hand was sent unto me; and, lo, a roll of a book was therein; 10. And he spread before me: and it was written within and without; and there was written therein lamentations, and mourning, and wo.

The prophet, having received his commission, here receives a charge with it. It is a post of honour to which he is advanced, but withal it is a post of service and work, and it is here required of him, I. That he be bold. He must act in the discharge of this trust with an undaunted courage and resolution, and not be either driven off from his work, or made to droop on heavily, by the difficulties and oppositions that he would be likely to meet with in it; Son of man, be not afraid of them, v. 6. Note, Those that will do any thing to purpose in the service of God, must not be afraid of the face of man; for the fear of men will bring a snare, which will be very entangling to us in the work of God. I. God tells the prophet what was the character of the message he should deliver, and to whom he should deliver it. They are briers and thorns, scratching, and tearing, vexing a man, which way soever he turns. They are continually teasing God's prophets, and entangling them in their talk; (Matth. xxii. 15.) they are prickling briers and grieveing thorns. The best of them is as a brier, and the most upright sharper than a thorn-hedge, Mic. vii. 4. Thorns and briers are the fruit of sin and the curse, and opposite to all peace; They are briers and thorns, scratching, and tearing, vexing a man, which way soever he turns. They are continually teasing God's prophets, and entangling them in their talk; (Matth. xxii. 15.) they are prickling briers and grieveing thorns. The best of them is as a brier, and the most upright sharper than a thorn-hedge, Mic. vii. 4. Thorns and briers are the fruit of sin and the curse, and opposite to all peace; and the enmity between the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent. Note, Wicked men, especially the persecutors of God's prophets and people, are as briers and thorns, which are hurtful to the ground, choke the good seed, hinder God's husbandry, are vexatious to his husbandmen; but they are nigh unto cursing, and their end is to be burned; yet God makes use of them sometimes for the correction and instruction of his people, as Gideon taught the men of Succoth with thorns and briers, Judg. vili. 16. Yet this is not the worst of their character, they are scorpions, venomous and malignant; the sting of a scorpion is a thousand times more hurtful than the scratch of a brier. Persecutors are a generation of vipers, are of the serpent's house, the children of the same mother; they are the venomous thorns of the thicket; and they are more subtle than any beast of the field. And, which makes the prophet's case the more grievous, he dwells among these scorpions; they are continually about him, so that he cannot be safe or quiet in his own house; these bad men are his bad neighbours, who thereby have many opportunities, and will let slip none to do him a mischief. God takes this matter with him in the case, he names the angel of one of the churches; (Rev. ii. 13.) I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is. Ezekiel had been in vision, conversing with angels, but when he comes down from this mount, he finds he dwelleth with scorpions. He tells him what would be their conduct towards him, that they would do what they could to frighten him with their looks and their words; they would hector him and threaten him, would look scornfully and spitefully at him, and do their utmost to face him down, and put him out of countenance, that they might drive him off from being a prophet, or at least prevent them from their factions, and then attempt to use the judgments of God; or, if they could not prevail in this, that they might vex and perplex him, and disturb the repose of his mind. They were now themselves in subjection, divested of all power, that they had not other way of persecuting the prophet than with their looks and their words; and so they did persecute him. Behold, thou hast spoken with men: are not evil things even spoken in vain? If they had had more power they would have done more mischief. They were now in captivity, smarting for their rebellion, and particularly their misusing of God's prophets; and yet they are as bad as ever. Though thou say a fool in a mortar, yet will not his foolishness depart from him: no provisones will of themselves humble and reform men, unless the grace of God work with them. But, how malicious soever they were, Ezekiel must not be afraid of them, nor dismayed, he must not be deterred from his work, or any part of it, nor be disheartened or dispirited in it by all their menaces, but go on in it with resolution and cheerfulness, assuring himself of safety under the divine protection.

II. It is required that he be faithful, v. 7. 1. He must be faithful to Christ who sent him; Thou shalt speak my words unto them. Note, As it is the honour of prophets, that they are intrusted to speak God's words, so it is their duty to cleave closely to them, and speak nothing but what is agreeable to the words of God; ministers must always speak according to that rule. 2. He must be faithful to the souls of those to whom he was sent: whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear, he must deliver his message to them, and he shall receive it. He must bring them to comply with the word, and not study to accommodate the word to their humours. "It is true, they are most rebellions, they are rebellion itself; but, however, speak my words to them, whether they are pleasing or unpleasing." Note, The untractableness and unpredectableness of people under the word, are no good reasons why ministers should leave the plain and evident word of God, to incorporate and conduce to the way by which good may be done, though we have a great deal of reason to think no good will be done.

III. It is required that he be obedient to his instructions.

1. Here is a general intimation what the instructions were, that were given him, in the contents of the book which was spread before him. His instructions were large, for the roll was written within and without, on the inside and on the outside of the roll; it was as a sheet of paper written on all the four sides. One side contained their sins, the other side contained the judgments of God coming upon them for those sins. Note, God has a great deal to say to his people when they are degenerate and become rebellious. (2.) His instructions were merely, he was sent to a sad errand; the matter contained in the book was, lamentations, and mourning, and woe. The idea of his message is taken from the impression it would make upon the minds of those that carefully attended to it; it would set them a weeping and crying out, Woe, and Alas! Both the discoveries of sin and the denunciations of wrath would be matter of lamentation. What could be more lamentable, more mournful, than to see a holy, happy people sunk into such a state of sin and misery, as it appears by the prophecy of this book the Jews were at this time? Ezekiel echoes to Jeremiah's lamentations. Note, Though God is rich in mercy, yet iniminent sinners will find there are even among his words lamentations and woe.

2. Here is an express charge: given the prophet to observe his instructions, both in receiving his message and delivering it. He is now to receive it, and is here commanded.

(1.) To attend diligently to it; Son of man, hear what I say unto thee, v. 8. Note, Those that speak from God to others, must be sure to hear from God themselves, and be obedient to his voice; "Be not thou rebellious; do not refuse to go on this errand, or to deliver it; do not fly off, as Jonah did, for fear of disobliging the counsel of God. They call a rebellious hand among whom thou livest; but be not thou like them, do not comply with any thing that is evil. If ministers, who are reprovers by office, comine at sin, and indulge sinners, either show them not their wickedness, or show them not the fatal consequences of it, for fear of displeasing them, and getting their ill-will, they hereby make themselves partners of their guilt, and are rebellious like them. If people will not do their duty in reforming, yet let ministers do theirs in reproving, and they will have the comfort of it in the reflection, whatever the success be, as that prophet had; (Isa. i. 5.) The Lord God has opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious. Even the best men, when their lot is cast in bad times and places, have need to be cautioned against the worst crimes.

(2.) To take it in his own hand, and by an experience of the favour and power of it; "Do not only hear what I say unto thee, but often thy mouth, and eat that I give thee. Prepare to eat it, and eat it willingly, and with an appetite." All God's children are content to be at their heavenly Father's finding, and to eat whatever he gives them. That which God's hand reached out to Ezekiel, was, a roll of a book, or the volume of a book, or scroll of paper or parchment full written, and rolled up. Divine revelation comes to us from the hand of Christ, he gave it the prophets, Rev. i. 1. When we look at the roll of the book, we must have an eye to the hand by which it is sent to us. He that brought it to the prophet, spread it before him, that he might not swallow it with an implicit faith, but might fully understand the contents of it, and receive it; but he, Be not rebellious, says Christ, but eat what I give thee. If we receive not what Christ in his ordinances and provissions allots for us, if we submit not to his word and rod, and reconcile not ourselves to both, we shall be accounted rebellions.

CHAP. III.

In this chapter we have the further preparation of the prophet for the work to which God called him. 1. His calling of the roll that was presented to him in the close of the foregoing chapter, v. 1. 2. His further instructions and encouragements given him to the same purport with those in the foregoing chapter, v. 3. to 11. III. The mighty impulse he was under, with which he was carried to those that were to be his hearers, v. 12. 15. IV. A further explication of his office and business as a prophet, under the similitude of a roll of a book, and of the restraining work resting of the prophet's liberty of speech, as God pleased, v. 22. 27.

1. Moreover, he said unto me, Son of man, eat this roll, and go speak unto the house of Israel. 2. So I opened my mouth, and he caused me to eat that roll. 3. And he said unto me, Son of man, cause thy belly to eat, and fill thy bowels with this roll that I give thee. Then did I eat it; and it was in my mouth as honey for sweetness.
be said unto me, Son of man, go, get thee unto the house of Israel, and speak with my words unto them. 5. For thou art not sent to a people of a strange speech, and of a hard language, but to the house of Israel: 6. Not to many people of a strange speech, and of a hard language, whose words thou canst not understand: surely, had I sent thee to them, they would have hearkened unto thee. 7. But the house of Israel will not hearken unto thee; for they will not hearken unto me: for all the house of Israel are impudent and hard-hearted. 8. Behold, I have made thy face strong against their faces, and thy forehead strong against their foreheads. 9. As an adamant, harder than flint, have I made thy forehead: fear them not, neither be dismayed at their looks, though they be a rebellious house. 10. Moreover, he said unto me, Son of man, all my words that I shall speak unto thee receive in thy heart, and hear with thine ears. 11. And go, get thee to them of the captivity, unto thy people, and speak unto them, and tell them, Thus saith the Lord God, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear. 12. Then the spirit took me up, and I heard behind me a voice of a great rushing, saying, Blessed be the glory of the Lord from his place. 13. I heard also the noise of the wings of the living creatures that touched one another, and the noise of the wheels over against them, and a noise of a great rushing. 14. So the spirit lifted me up, and took me away, and I went in bitterness, in the heat of my spirit; but the hand of the Lord was strong upon me. 15. Then I came to them of the captivity at Telabib, that dwelt by the river of Chebar, and I sat where they sat, and remained there astonished among them seven days.

These verses are fully joined by some translators to the foregoing chapter, as being of a piece with it, and a continuation of the same vision. The prophets received the words from God, that they might deliver them to the people of God; furnished themselves, that they might furnish them, with the knowledge of the mind and will of God. Now here the prophet is taught,

1. How he must receive divine revelation himself; v. 1. Christ (whom he saw upon the throne, ch. i. 26.) said to him, "Son of man, eat this roll; admit this revelation into thine understanding, take it, take the meaning of it, understand it aright, admit it into thy heart, apply it, and be affected with it; imprint it in thy mind, ruminate and chew the cud upon it; take it as it is entire, and make no difficulty of it, may, take a pleasure in it: as thou dost in thy meat, and let thy soul be nourished and strengthened by it; let it be meat and drink to thee, and as thy necessary food; be full of it, as thou art of the meat thou hast eaten." Thus ministers should in their studies and meditations take in that word of God, which they are to preach to others: Thy words were found, and I did eat them, Jer. xv. 16. They must be both well acquainted and much affected with the things of God, that they may speak of them both clearly and warmly, with a great deal of divine light and heat. Now observe,

1. How this command is inculcated upon the prophet. In the chapter before, Eat what I give thee, and hear the word of the Lord; and here, (v. 1.) Eat that thou finerst, that which is presented to thee by the hand of Christ. Note, Whatever we find to be the word of God, whatever is brought to us by him who is the Word of God, we must receive without disputing. What we find set before us in the scripture, that we must eat. And again, (v. 3.) Cause thy belly to be emptied, and fill thy bowels with this roll; do not eat it and say nothing of it again, as that which is nauseous, but eat it, and retain it, as that which is wholesome and grateful to the stomach. Feast upon this vision till thou be full of matter, (as Elisha was, Job xxxii. 18.) Let the word have a place in thee, the innermost place. We must take pains with our own hearts, that we may cause them duly to receive and entertain the word of God, that every faculty may partake of it, in order to the due digesting of the word of God. 2. As thou dost eat of the sanguineum into blood and spirits. We must empty ourselves of worldly things, that we may fill our bowels with this roll.

2. How this command is explained; (v. 10.) All my words that I shall speak unto thee, to be spoken unto the people, thou must receive in thine heart, as well as hear with thine ears, receive them in the love of them. Let them sink into your ears, Luke ix. 44. Christ demands the prophet's attention not only to what he now says, but to all that he shall at any time hereafter speak; Receive it all in thine heart, meditate on these things, and give thyself wholly to them, 1 Tim. iv. 15.

3. How this command was obeyed in vision. He opened his mouth, and Christ caused him to eat the roll, v. 2. If we be truly willing to receive the word into our hearts, Christ will by his Spirit bring it into them, and cause it to dwell in us richly. If he that opens the roll, and by his Spirit, as a Spirit of revelation, spreads it before us, did not also open our understanding, and by his Spirit, as a Spirit of wisdom, give us the knowledge of it, and cause us to eat it, we should be for ever strangers to it. The prophet had it to fear that the roll would be an unpleasant morsel and a sorry dish to make a meal of, but it proved to be in his mouth as honey for sweetness. Note, Gracious souls can receive those truths of God with great delight, which speak most terror to wicked people. We find St. John let into some part of the revelation by such a sign as this, Rev. x. 9. 10. He took the book out of the angel's hand, and ate it up, and it was, as thus here, in his mouth sweet as honey; but it was bitter in the mouth, Mark viii. 19; and yet it was to the prophet as honey for sweetness. Note, Gracious souls can receive those truths of God with great delight, which speak most terror to wicked people. We find St. John let into some part of the revelation by such a sign as this, Rev. x. 9. 10. He took the book out of the angel's hand, and ate it up, and it was, as thus here, in his mouth sweet as honey; but it was bitter in the mouth, Mark viii. 19; and yet it was to the prophet as honey for sweetness. Note, Gracious souls can receive those truths of God with great delight, which speak most terror to wicked people. We find St. John let into some part of the revelation by such a sign as this, Rev. x. 9. 10. conceal the words of the Holy One, (Job vi. 10.) for that is burying a talent which was given us to trade with. He must go, and speak to the house of Israel, for it is their privilege to have God's statutes and judgments made known to them; as the giving of the law, (the lively oracles,) so prophecy, (the living oracle,) pertains to them. He is not sent to the Chaldeans to represent them for their sins, but to the house of Israel, to represent them for theirs; for the father corrects his own child if he do amiss, not the child of a stranger.

The instructions given him in speaking to them are much the same with those in the foregoing chapter.

(1.) He must speak to them all that, and that only, which God spake to him. He had said before, (v. 11.) Thou shalt speak my words to them; here he says, (v. 4.) Thou shalt speak with my words unto them; or, in my words. He must not only say that which for substance is the same that God had said to him, but as near as may be in the same language and expressions. Blessed Paul, though a man of a very happy invention, yet speaks of the things of God in the words which the Holy Ghost teaches, (1 Cor. ii. 7.) and his interpreter, the house of Israel, and in Scripture-language, their native dress; and how can we better speak God's mind than with his words?

(2.) He must remember that they are the house of Israel, whom he is sent to speak to; God's house, and his own; and therefore such as he ought to have a particular concern for, and to deal faithfully and tenderly with; they were such as he loved time enough to take to be among his own countrymen, their companion in tribulation; they and he were fellow-sufferers, and had lately been fellow-travellers, in very melancholy circumstances, from Judea to Babylon, and had often mingled their tears, which could not but knit their affections to each other. It was well for the people that they had a prophet who knew experimentally how to sympathize with them, and could not but be touched with the feeling of their infirmities; it was well for the prophet that he had to do with those of his own nation, not with a people of strange speech and a hard language; deep of lip, so that they could not fathom their meaning, and heavy of tongue, whom it is intolerable and impossible to converse with. Every strange language seems to us to be deep and heavy. Thou art not sent to many such people, whom thou couldst neither speak to nor hear from, neither understand nor be understood amongst, but by an interpreter. The apostles indeed were sent to many people of a strange speech, but they could not have done any good among them if they had not had the gift of tongues; but Ezekiel was sent only to one people, those but a few, and his own, whom, having acquaintance with, he might hope to find acquaintance with.

(3.) He must remember what God had already told him of the bad character of those to whom he was sent, that if he met with discouragement and disappointment in them, he might not be offended. They are impudent and hard-hearted; (v. 7.) no convictions of sin would make them blush, no demurrings of wrath would make them tremble. Two things retarded their obstinacy; [1.] They were more obstinate than their neighbours would have been, if the prophet had been sent to them. Had God sent him to any other people, though of a strange speech, surely they would have hearkened to him, they would at least have given him a patient hearing, and showed him that respect which he could not obtain of his own countrymen. The Ninivites were wrought upon by Jonah's preaching, when the house of Israel, that was compa,rd, but with so great a cloud of prophets, was unhumbled and unreformed. But what shall we say to these things? The means of grace are given to those that will not improve them, and withheld from those that would have improved them. We must resolve this into the divine sovereignty, and say, Lord, thy judgments are a great deep. [2] That they were obstinate against God himself; They will not hear my words unto thee, and no marvel, for they will not hear when we regard the word of the prophet, for they will not regard the rod of God, by which the Lord's voice cries in the city. If they believe not God speaking to them by a minister, neither would they believe though he should speak to them by a voice from heaven; may, therefore they reject what the prophet says, because it comes from God, whom the carnal mind is enmified against. They are accused against the law of God, and for that reason turn a deaf ear to his prophets, whose business it is to enforce his law.

(4.) He must resolve to put on courage, and Christ promises to sted him with it, v. 8, 9. He is sent to such as are impudent and hard-hearted, who will receive no impressions, nor be wrought upon in the manner by which the prophet, who will take a pride in affecting God's messengers and confounding the message. It will be a hard task to know how to deal with them; but [1.] God will enable him to put a good face on it; I have made thy face strong against their faces, ended thee with all the firmness and boldness that the case calls for. Perhaps Ezekiel was naturally bashful and timorous, but if God did not find him fit, yet by his grace he made him fit, to accomplish the great and glorious work. The more impudent wicked people are in their opposition to religion, the more openly and resolutely should God's people appear in the practice and defence of it. Let the innocent stir up himself against the hypocrite, Job xvii. 8. When vice is daring, let not virtue be sneaking. And when God has work to do, he will spirit men for it, and give them strength according to the day. If there be occasion, God can and will by his grace make the foreheads of faithful ministers as an adamant, so that the most threatening powers shall not dash them out of countenance. The Lord God will help me, therefore have I set my face like a flint, Isa. I. 7. [2.] He is therefore commanded to have a good heart on it, and to go on in his work with a holy security, not valuing himself too much." Fear not, neither be dismayed at their threats, let not the menaces of their impotent malice cast either a damp upon thee, or a stumbling-block before thee." Bold sinners must have bold reprovers; evil beasts must be rebuked cuttingly, (Tit. i. 12, 13.) must be saved with fear, Jude 23. Those that keep close to the service of God, may be sure of the favour of God, and then they need not be dismayed at the proud looks of men. Let not the anguish and countenance that drives away a backbiting tongue, give any check to a reproving tongue.

(5.) He must continue instant with them in his preaching, whatever the success was, v. 11. He must go to them of the captivity, who, being in affliction, it was to be hoped would receive instruction; he must look upon them as the children of his love, that he might not slight them for their obstinacy. "Fear not, neither be dismayed at their threats, let not the menaces of their impotent malice cast either a damp upon thee, or a stumbling-block before thee." Bold sinners must have bold reprovers; evil beasts must be rebuked cuttingly, (Tit. i. 12, 13.) must be saved with fear, Jude 23. Those that keep close to the service of God, may be sure of the favour of God, and then they need not be dismayed at the proud looks of men. Let not the anguish and countenance that drives away a backbiting tongue, give any check to a reproving tongue. are some so good, that we do not need to speak to them, or, "Here are others so bad, that it is no purpose to speak to them;" but, however it be, deliver thy message faithfully, tell them, the Lord God saith so and so, and let them reject it at their peril.

Full instructions being thus given to the prophet, pursuant to his commission, we are here told,

[1.] With what satisfaction this mission of his was applauded by the holy angels, who were very well pleased to see one, of a nature inferior to their own, thus honourably employed and intrusted. He heard a voice of a great rushing, (v. 12.) as if the angels were arranged and crowning him with their presentation of a prophet; for to them is known by the church, that is, by reflection from the church, the manifold wisdom of God, Eph. iii. 10. They seemed to strive who should get nearest to this great sight. He heard the noise of their wings that touched, or, as the word is, kissed, one another; denoting the mutual affections and assistances of the angels. He heard also the noise of the wheels of Providence moving over against the angels, and in concert with them. All this was to engage his attention, and to convince him that the God who sent him, having such a glorious train of attendants, no doubt had power sufficient to bear him out in his work. But all this noise ended in the voice of praise; he heard them saying, Blessed be the glory of the Lord from heaven, and the glory of the Lord upon earth; whence his glory was now in vision descending, or whether perhaps it was now returning. Let the innumerable company of angels above join with these employed in this vision, in saying, Blessed be the glory of the Lord. Praise ye the Lord from the heavens. Praise him, all angels, Ps. cxlvii. 1, 2. Secondly, From the temple, his place on earth, wherein he appeared, or from the place where they departed, at the departure of the glory, but adore the righteousness of God in it: however it be, yet God is blessed and glorious, and ever will be so. The prophet said, he heard God thus praised when he received his commission; (Isa. vi. 3.) and a comfort it is to all the faithful servants of God, when they see how much God is praised in his lower world, to think that so much he is admired and glorified in the upper world. The glory of the Lord has many snares from our place, but many praises from his place.

[2.] With what reluctance of his own spirit, and yet with what a mighty efficacy of the Spirit of God, the prophet was himself brought to the execution of his office. The grace given to him was not in vain; for

First. The Spirit led him with a strong hand. God bid him go, but he stirred not till the Spirit took him up. The Spirit of the living creatures that was in the wheels, now was in the prophet too, and took him up; first to hear more distinctly the acclamations of the angels, (v. 12.) but afterward, (v. 14.) first Lord up, strong. God had to break him, which he was backward to, being very loth either to bring trouble upon himself, or foretell it to his people. He would gladly have been excused, but must own, as another prophet does, (Jer. xx. 7.) Thou wast stronger than I, and hast prevailed. Ezekiel would willingly have kept all he heard and saw to himself, that it might go no further, but the hand of the Lord was heavy upon him, and God overpowered him; he was carried on contrary to his own inclinations by the prophetic impulse, so that he could not but speak the things which he had heard and seen, as the apostles, Acts iv. 20. Note, Those whom God calls to the ministry, as he furnishes their heads for it, so he bows their hearts to it.

Secondly. He followed with a sad heart; The Spirit took me away, says he, and then I went, but it was in bitterness, in the heat of my spirit. He had perhaps seen what a hard task Jeremiah had at Jerusalem when he appeared as a prophet, what pit of he took, what opposition he met with, how he was abused by hand and tongue, and what ill treatment he met with, and all to no purpose: "And" (thinks Ezekiel) "must I be set up for a mark like him?" The life of a captive was bad enough; but what would the life of a prophet in captivity be? Therefore he went in this fight, and under this discomposure. Note, There may in some cases be a great reluctance of corruption even there where there is a manifest herd of sin before us. I mourn, not disobedient to the heavenly vision, or shrinking from the work, as Nahum, but I went in bitterness, not at all pleased with it. When he received the divine revelation himself, it was to him sweet as honey, (v. 3.) he could with abundance of pleasure have spent all his days in meditating upon it; but when he is to preach it to others, he, who foresees, will be hardened and exasperated by it, and have their condemnation aggravated, than he goes in bitterness. Note, It is a great grief to faithful ministers, and makes them go on in their work with a heavy heart, when they find people untractable, and hating to be reformed. He went in the heat of his spirit, because of the discouragements he foresaw he should meet with; but the hand of the Lord was upon him, and the Spirit urged his way, but to fit him for it, to carry him through it, and animate him against the difficulties he would meet with; (so we may understand it,) and when he found it so, he was better reconciled to his business, and applied himself to it; Then he came to them of the captivity, (v. 15.) to some place where there were many of them, together, and there the Spirit was, to quicken them, to say, and continued among them seven days, to hear what they said, and observe what they did; and all that time he was waiting for the word of the Lord to come to him. Note, Those that would speak suitably and profitably to people about their souls, must acquaint themselves with them, and with their case; must do as Ezekiel did here, must sit where they sit, and speak familiarly to them of the things of God, and put themselves into their condition, yea, though they sit by the rivers of Babylon. But observe, He was there astonished, overwhelmed with grief for the sins and miseries of his people, and overpowered by the pump of the vision he had seen; he was there desolate; (so some read it;) God showed him no visions men made him no visitation, but he was left to digest his grief, and come to a better temper, before the word of the Lord should come to him. Note, These whom God designs to exalt and enlarge, he first humbles and straitens for a time.

16. And it came to pass, at the end of seven days, that the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, 17. Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel: therefore hear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from me. 18. When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life: the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity: but his blood will I require at thy hand. 19. Yet if thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness, nor from his wicked way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul. 20. Again, when a righteous man doth turn from his righteousness, and commit iniquity, and lay a stumbling-block before him, he shall die: because thou hast not given him warning, he shall die in his sin, and his righteousness which he hath done shall not be remembered; but his blood will I require at thy hand. 21. Nevertheless, if thou warn the righteous man, that the righteous sin not, and he doth sin, he shall surely live, because he is warned: also thou hast delivered thy soul.

These further instructions God gave to the prophet at the end of seven days, that is, on the seventh day after the vision he had; and it is very probable, that both that and this were on the sabbath-day, which the house of Israel, even in their captivity, observed as well as they could in those circumstances: we do not find that their conquerors and oppressors tied them to any constant service, as their Egyptian taskmasters had formerly done, but that they might observe the sabbath-rest, for a sign to distinguish between them and their neighbours; but for the sabbath-work, they had not the convenience of temple or synagogue, only it should seem they had a river side, where prayer was wont to be made (as Acts xvi. 13.) there they met on the sabbath-day, there their enemies upbraided them with the songs of Zion; (Ps. cxxxvii. 1, 3.) there Ezekiel met them, and the word of the Lord then and there came to him. He that had been musing and meditating on the things of God all the week, was fit to speak to the people in God’s name on the sabbath-day, and disposed to hear God speak to him.

This sabbath-day Ezekiel was not so honoured with visions of the glory of God as he had been the sabbath before; but is plainly, and by a very common similitude, told his duty, which he is to communicate to the people. Note, Raptures and transports of joy are not the daily bread of God’s children, but the mystery and secret of a few upon special occasions, and may be expected to be scarce with them. We must not deny that we have truly communion with God, (1 John i. 3.) though we have it not always so sensibly as at some times. And though the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven may sometimes be looked into, yet ordinarily, it is plain preaching that is most for edification.

God here tells the prophet what his office was, and what the duty of that office; and this (we may suppose) he was to tell the people, that they might attend to what he said, and improve it accordingly. Note, It is good for people to know and consider what a charge their ministers have of them, and what an account they must shortly give of that charge. Observe,

What the office is to which the prophet is called; Son of man, I have made thee a watchman to the house of Israel, v. 17. The vision he saw astonished him, he knew not what to make of that, and therefore God used this plain comparison, which served better to lead him to the understanding of his work, and so to reconcile it to him. He sat among the captives, and said little, but God comes to him, and tells him that will not do, he is a watchman, and has something to say to them; he is appointed to be as a watchman in the city, to guard against fire, robbers, and disturbances of the peace; as a watchman over the flock, to guard against thieves and beasts of prey; but especially as a watchman in the camp, in an invaded country or a besieged town, that is to watch the motions of the enemy, and to sound an alarm upon the approach, now, upon the first appearance, of danger. This supposes the house of Israel to be in a military state, and exposed to enemies, who are subtle and restless in their attempts upon; yes, and each of the particular members of that house to be in danger, and concerned to stand upon their guard. Note, Ministers are watchmen upon the church’s walls, (Isa. xiii. 6.) watchmen that go about the city, Cant. iii. 3. It is a toilsome office; watchmen must keep awake, be they ever so sleepy, and keep abroad, be it ever so cold; they must stand all weathers upon the watch-tower, (Isa. xxi. 8. Gen. xxvi. 40.) it is a dangerous office; sometimes they cannot keep their post, but are in peril of death from the enemy, who gain their point if they kill the sentinels; and yet they dare not quit their post upon pain of death from their general; such a dilemma are the church’s watchmen in; men will curse them if they be faithful, and God will curse them if they be false. But it is a needful office; the house of Israel cannot be safe without watchmen, and yet, except the Lord keep it, the watchman watcheth but in vain, Ps. cxxxvii. 1, 2.

11. What is the duty of this office. The work of a watchman is to take notice, and to give notice. 1. The prophet, as a watchman, must take notice of what God said concerning this people, not only concerning the body of the people, to which the prophecies of Jeremiah and other prophets had most reference, but concerning the thoughts and sentiments of the people, according as their character was; he must notice, as other watchmen, look round to spy danger, and gain intelligence, but he must look up to God, and further he need not look; Hear the word at my mouth, v. 17. Note, Those that are to preach, must first hear; for how can they teach others, who have not first learned themselves.

2. He must give them notice of what he heard: as a watchman must have eyes in his head, so he must have a tongue in his head: if he be dumb, it is as bad as if he were blind, Isa. lvi. 10. Thou shalt give them warning from me, sound an alarm in the holy mountain; not in his own name, or as from himself, but in God’s name, and from him. Ministers are God’s mouth to the children of men. The use of their offices is to give forth God’s word; By them is thy servant warned, Ps. xix. 11. But because that which is delivered verum vere—by the living voice, commonly makes the deepest impression, God is pleased, by men like ourselves, who are equally concerned, to enforce upon us the warnings of the written word.

Now the prophet, in his preaching, must distinguish between the wicked and the righteous, the precious and the vile, and in his applications must suit his alarms to each, giving every one his portion; if he did this, he should have the comfort of it, whatever the success was, but if not, he was accountable.

(1.) Some of those he had to do with, were wicked, and he must warn them not to go on in their wickedness, but to turn from it, v. 18, 19. We may observe here,

[1.] That the God of heaven has said, and does say, to every wicked man, that if he go on still in his trespasses, he shall surely die; his iniquity shall undoubtedly be his ruin, it tends to ruin, and will end in ruin. Dying thou shalt die, thou shalt die so great a death, shall die eternally, be a Corruption, and never die. The wicked man shall die in his iniquity, shall die under the guilt of it, die under the dominion of it.

[2.] That if a wicked man turn from his wickedness, and from his wicked way, he shall live, and the ruin he is threatened with shall be prevented; and that he may do so, he is warned of the danger
he is in. The wicked man shall die if he go on, but shall live if he repent. Observe, He is to turn from his wickedness, and from his wicked way. It is not enough for a man to turn from his wicked way by an outward reformation, which may be the effect of his sins leaving him, rather than of his leaving his sins, but he must turn from his wickedness, from the love of it, and the inclination to it, by an inward regeneration; if he do not so much as turn from his wicked way, there is little hope that he will turn from his wickedness.

[5.] That it is the duty of ministers both to warn sinners of the danger of sin, and to assure them of the consequence of repentance; to set before them how miserable they are if they go on in sin, and how happy they may be if they will but repent and reform. Note, The ministry of the word is concerning matters of life and death, for those are the things it sets before us, the blessing and the curse, that we may escape the curse, and inherit the blessing.

[4.] That though ministers do not warn wicked people as they ought of their misery and danger, yet that shall not be admitted as an excuse for those that go on still in their trespasses; for though the watchman did not give them warning, yet they shall die in their iniquity; for they had sufficient warning given them by the providence of God and their own consciences; if they would have taken it, they might have saved their lives.

[5.] That ministers are to be faithful to their trust. If they do not warn sinners of the fatal consequences of sin, but suffer them to go on unreproved, the blood of those that perish through their carelessness, will be required at their hand; it shall be charged upon them in the day of account, that it was owing to their unfaithfulness that such and such persons or families perished; many suppose, if they had had fair warning given them, they might have fled in time from the wrath to come. And if it contract so heinous a guilt as it does to be accessory to the murder of a dying body, what is it to be accessory to the ruin of an immortal soul?

[6.] That if ministers do their duty in giving warning to sinners, though the warning be not taken, yet they may have this satisfaction, that they are clear from their blood, and have delivered their own souls, though they cannot prevail to deliver theirs. Those that are faithful, shall have their reward, though they be not successful.

[2.] Some of those he had to deal with were righteous, at least he had reason to think, in a judgment of charity, that they were so; and he must warn them not to apostatize and turn away from their righteousness, ver. 20, 21. We may observe here,

[1.] That the best men in the world have need to be warned against apostasy, and to be told of the danger they are in of it, and the danger they are in by it. God's servants must be warned, (Ps. xix. 7.) but the wicked will not hearken to God's service. One good means to keep us from falling is, to keep up a holy fear of falling, Heb. iv. 1. Let us therefore fear; and (Rom. xi. 20.) even those that stand by faith, must not be high-minded, but fear, and must therefore be warned.

[2.] There is a righteousness which a man may turn from, a seeming righteousness; from which if men are turned by those who appear to be true apologists for it, it appears that it was never sincere, how passable, may how plausible soever, it was; for if they had been of us, they would have doubt have continued with us, 1 John ii. 19. There are many that begin in the spirit, but end in the flesh; that set their faces heavenward, but look back; that had a first love, but have lost it, and turned from the right way.

[3.] When men turn from their righteousness, they soon learn to commit iniquity. When they grow careless and remiss in the duties of God's worship, neglect them, or are negligent in them, they become an easy prey to the tempter. Omissions make way for commissions.

[5.] When men turn from their righteousness, and commit iniquity, it is just with God to day stumbling-blocks before them, that they may grow worse and worse, till they are ripened for destruction. When Pharaoh hardened his heart, God hardened it. When sinners turn their back upon God, desert his service, and so cast a reproach upon it, he does, in a way of righteous judgment, not only withdraw his restraining grace, and give them up to their own hearts' last, but order them by his providence into such circumstances, and offer them such occasions, as will bring them to ruin on their ruin. There are those to whom Christ himself is a Stone of stumbling and a Rock of offence, 1 Pet. ii. 8.

[5.] The righteousness which men relinquish, shall never be remembered to their honour and comfort; it will stand them in no stead in this world or the other. Apostates lose all that they have wrought, their services and sufferings are all in vain, and shall never be brought to an account, because not continued in. It is a rule in the law, Factum non dictur, quod non perseveravit.—We do that, and that only, which we do perseveringly, Gal. iii. 3, 4.

[6.] If ministers do not give fair warning, as they ought, of the weakness of the best, their aptness to apostasy, their passable danger, the possibility of their being taken in, and the fatal consequences of apostasy, the ruin of those that do apostatize will be laid at their door, and they shall answer for it. Not but that there are those who are warned against it, and yet turn from their righteousness; but that case is not put here, as was concerning the wicked man; but, on the contrary, that a righteous man, being warned, takes that warning, and does not turn aside from it, (ver. 21.) for if you give instruction to a wise man, he will be yet wiser. We must not only not flatter the wicked, but not even flatter the righteous, as if they were perfectly safe anywhere on this side heaven.

[7.] If ministers give warning, and people take it, it is well for both; nothing is more beautiful than a wise reversion upon an obedient ear; the one shall live because he is warned, and the other has delivered his soul. What can a good minister desire more than to save himself, and those that hear him? 1 Tim. iv. 16.

22. And the hand of the Lord was there upon me; and he said unto me, Arise, go forth into the plain, and I will there talk with thee. 23. Then I arose, and went forth into the plain; and, behold, the glory of the Lord stood there, as the glory which I saw by the river of Chebar; and I fell on my face. 24. Then the spirit entered into me, and set me upon my feet, and spake with me, and said unto me, Go, shut thyself within thy house. 25. But thou, O son of man, behold, they shall put bands upon thee, and shall bind thee with them, and thou shalt not go out among them: 26. And I will make thy tongue cleave to the roof of thy mouth, that thou shalt be dumb, and shalt not be to them a reprover; for they are a rebellious house. 27. But when I speak with thee, I will open thy mouth, and thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God, He that heareth, let him hear; and he that forbeareth, let him forbear: for they are a rebellious house.

After all this large and magnificent discovery, which had filled his heart with alarm of himself to the prophet, and the full importations he had given him how to deal with those to whom he sent him with an ample commission, we should have expected presently to see him preaching the word of God to a great congregation of Israel; but here we find it quite otherwise. His work here, at first, seems not at all proportionable to the pomp of his call.

I. We have him here required for further learning. By his unwillingness to go, it should seem as if he were not so thoroughly convinced as he might have been of the ability of him that sent him to bear him out; and therefore, to hearten him against the difficulties he foresaw, God will favour him with another vision of his glory, which (if any thing) would put life into him, and animate him for his work. In order to this, God calls him out to the plain, (v. 22.) and there he will have some talk with him. See and admire the condescension of a God in conversing thus familiarly with a man, a son of man, a poor captive, nay, with a sinful man, who, when God sent him, went in bitterness of spirit, and was at this time out of humour with his work! And let us own ourselves for ever indebted to the mediation of Christ for this blessed intercourse and communion between God and man, between heaven and earth.

See here the benefit of solitude, and how much it befriends contemplation! It is very comfortable to be alone with God, withdrawn from the world for converse with him; to hear from him, to speak to him; and a good man will say, I am never less alone, than when thus alone.

Ezekiel went forth into the plain more willingly than he went among them of the captivity; (v. 15.) for he knew that he was to converse with God, with God, cannot but prefer that before any converse with this world, especially such as is commonly met with. He went out into the plain, and there he saw the same vision that he had seen by the river of Chebar; for God is not tied to places. Note, Those who follow God shall meet with his consolations, wherever they go. God called him out to this plain, and he did see something in it that showed him his glory, v. 23. We are not now to expect such visions, but we must own that we have a favour done us no way inferior, if we so by faith behold the glory of the Lord, as to be changed into the same image, by the Spirit of the Lord; and this honour have all his saints. Praise ye the Lord, 2 Cor. iii. 18.

II. We have him here restrained from further teaching for the present. When he saw the glory of the Lord, he fell on his face, being struck with an awe of God’s majesty, and a dread of his displeasure; but the Spirit entered into him to raise him up, and then he recovered himself, and got upon his feet, and heard what the Spirit whispered to him, which is very surprising. One would have expected that God should send him directly to the chief place of concourse, should give him favour in the eyes of his brethren, and make him and his message acceptable to them; that he should have a wider door of opportunity opened to him, and that God should give him a door of utterance to open his mouth boldly; but what is here said to him is the reverse of all this.

But instead of sending him to a public assembly, he orders him to confine himself to his own lodgings. Go, shut thyself within thy house, v. 24. He was not willing to appear in public, and when he did, the people did not regard him, nor show him the respect he deserved, and, as a just rebuke both to him and them, to him for his shyness of them, and to them for their coldness toward him, God forbids him to appear in public. Note, Our choice is often made our punishment; and it is a righteous thing with God to remove teachers into corners, when they, or their people, or both, grow indifferent to solemn assemblies. Ezekiel might have thought, if he might give signs of the besieging of Jerusalem, in which the people should be closely shut up as he was in his house, and which he speaks of in the next chapter. He must shut himself within his house, that he might receive further discoveries of the mind of God, and might abundantly furnish himself with something to say to the people when he sent abroad. Ezekiel finds that the claims of Judah visited him, and sat before him, sometimes in his house, (ch. vii. I.) to be witnesses of his ecstasies; but it was not till ch. xi. 25, that he spoke to them of the captivity all the things that the Lord had showed him. Note, Those that are called to preach must find time to study, and a great deal of time too; must often shut themselves up in their houses, that they may give attendance to reading and meditation, and so their profiting may appear to all.

2. Instead of securing him an interest in the esteem and affections of those to whom he sent him, he tells him that they shall put bands upon him, and bind him, (v. 25.) either, (1.) As a criminal; they shall bind him in order to the further punishing of him as a disturber of the peace; though they were themselves sent into bondage in Babylon for persecuting the prophetic people, yet they might persecute them; or, rather, (2.) As a distracted man; they would go about to bind him one beside himself; for to that they imputed his violent motions in his raptures. The captains asked John, Wherefore came this mad fellow into thee? Festus said to Paul, Thou art beside thyself; and so they said of our Lord Jesus, Mark iii. 21. Perhaps this was the reason why they might keep within doors, that otherwise they would bind him, under pretence of his being mad, and therefore he must not go out among them. Justly are prophets forbidden to go to those that will abuse them.

3. Instead of opening his lips, that his mouth might show forth God’s praise, God silenced him, made his tongue cleave to the roof of his mouth, and gave him no power to speak. The priests captives in Babylon used this imprecation upon themselves, that if they should forget Jerusalem, their tongue might cleave to the roof of their mouth, Ps. cxxxvii. 6. Ezekiel remembers Jerusalem more than any of them, and yet his tongue cleaves to the roof his mouth; and he that can speak best is forbidden to speak at all; and the reason given is, because they are a rebellious house to whom he is sent, and they are not worthy to have him for a reprover. He shall not give them instructions and admonitions, for they are lost and thrown away upon them. He is before commanded to speak boldly to them, because they are most rebellious; (ch. vi. 7.) but since that proves to no purpose, he is now for that reason enjoined silence, and shall not speak at all to them. Note, Those whose hearts are hardened against conviction, are justly deprived of the means of conviction. Why should not the reprovers be dumb, if, after long trials, it be found that the reproved resolve to be deaf? If Ephraim be joined to idols, let him alone. Thou shalt be dumb, and not be a reprover; implying, that unless he were dumb, he would be reproving; if he could speak at all, he would witness against the wickedness of the wicked.

But when God speaks with him, and designs to speak by him, he will open his mouth, v. 27. Note, Though God’s prophets may be silenced awhile, there will come a time when God will give them the opening of the mouth again. And when God speaks to his ministers, he not only opens their ears to hear what he says, but opens their mouth to return an answer. Moses, who had a veil on his face when he went down to the people, took it off when he went up again to God, Exod. xix. 12.

4. Instead of giving him assurance of success when he should at any time speak to the people, he here leaves the matter very doubtful, and Ezekiel must not perplex and disquiet himself about it, but let it be as it will: He that heareth, let him hear, and he is welcome to the comfort of it; let him hear, and his soul shall live; but he that forbears, let him forbear; and take care with himself; for if thou sayest, thou shalt not hear it, neither God nor his prophet shall be any losers by it; but the prophet shall be rewarded for his faithfulness in proving the sinner, and God will have the glory of his justice in condemning him for not taking the reproof.

CHAP. IV.

Ezekiel was now among the captives in Babylon, but they there had Jerusalem still upon their hearts; the pious captives looked toward it with an eye of faith, (as Daniel, ch. vi. 10.) the presumptuous ones looked towards it with an eye of pride, and flattened themselves with a conceit that they should shortly return thither again; they that remained corresponded with the captives, and, it is said, Babylon is and with hopes that all would well yet, as long as Jerusalem was standing in its strength; and perhaps upbraided those with their folly who had surrendered at first; therefore, to take down this pride, he lays before them the prophet's signs, a very clear and affecting foresight of the besieging of Jerusalem by the Chaldean army, and the calamities which would attend that siege. Two things are here represented to him in vision. 1. The fortifications that should be raised against the city; this is signified by the prophet's laying siege to the portraiture of Jerusalem, (v. 1-3.) and lying first on one side, and then on the other side, before God, (v. 4, 5.) that should rage within the city; this is signified by his casting very coarse fare, and confining himself to a little of it, so long as this typical representation lasted, v. 9-17.

1. Thou also, son of man, take thee a tile, and lay it before thee, and pourray upon it the city, even Jerusalem:

2. And lay siege against it, and build a fort against it, and cast a mount against it; set the camp also against it, and set battlements around it round about. Moreover, take thou unto thee an iron pan, and set it for a wall of iron between thee and the city, and set thy face against it, and it shall be besieged, and thou shalt lay siege against it. This shall be a sign to the house of Israel.

4. Lie thou also upon thy left side, and lay the iniquity of the house of Israel upon it: according to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon the years of their iniquity, according to the number of the days, three hundred and ninety days: so shalt thou bear the iniquity of the house of Israel. And when thou hast accomplished them, lie again on thy right side, and thou shalt bear the iniquity of the house of Judah forty days: I have appointed thee each day for a year. Therefore thou shalt set thy face toward the siege of Jerusalem, and thyine arm shall be uncovered, and thou shalt prophesy against it.
understand to mean the close besieging of that city, and people would be flocking in daily, some for curiosity, and some for conscience, at the hour appointed, to see it, and to make their different remarks upon it.

His being found constantly on the same side, as if bands were laid upon him, (as indeed they were by the divine command,) so that he could not turn himself from one side to another till he had ended the days of the siege, did plainly represent the close and constant constancy of the besiegers about the city during that number of days, till they had gained their point.

IV. He was ordered to prosecute the siege with vigour; (v. 7.) Thou shalt set thy face toward the siege of Jerusalem, as wholly intent upon it, and resolved to carry it; so the Chaldeans would be, and neither bribed nor forced to withdraw from it. Nebuchadnezzar's remonstrances of Zedekiah's treachery, breaking his league with him, made him very furious in pushing on this siege, that he might chastise the insolence of that faithless prince and people, and this army promised themselves a rich booty of that pompous city, so that both set their faces against it, for they were very resolute. Nor were they less active and industrious, exerting themselves to the utmost in all the operations of the siege, which the prophet was to represent by the uncovering of his arm, or, as some read it, the stretching out of his arm: for such an instance he gives of Zedekiah's unfaithfulness, that he might be made a type of the faithless, etc. When God is about to do some great work, he is said to make bare his arm, Isa. lii. 10. In short, the Chaldeans will go about their business, and go on in it, as men in earnest, who resolve to go through with it.

Now, I. This is intended to be a sign to the house of Israel, (v. 2.) both to them in Babylon, who were there, and to those also who remained in their own land, who would hear the report of it. The prophet was dumb, and could not speak; (ch. iii. 26.) but as his silence had a voice, and upbraided the people with their deafness, so even God then left not himself without witness, but ordered him to make signs, as dumb men used to do, and as Zacharias did when he was dumb, and by them to make known his mind, that, is, the mind of God, to the people. And thus likewise the people were upbraided with their stupidity and dulness, that they were not capable of being taught as men of sense are, by words, but must be taught as children are, by pictures, or as deaf men are, by signs. Or, perhaps, they are hereby upbraided with their malice against the prophet: had he spoken in words at length what was signified by these figures, they would have entangled him in a web of words, and that work, the talk, would have indicted him for treasonable expressions, for they knew how to make a man an offender for a word; (Isa. xxix. 21.) to avoid which he is ordered to make use of signs. Or, the prophet made use of signs for the same reason that Christ made use of parables, that bearing they might hear, and not understand, and seeing they might see, and not perceive; (Matt. x. 16.) for we cannot understand what is plain, and therefore shall be taught by that which is difficult; and herein the Lord was righteous.

2. Thus the prophet prophesies against Jerusalem; (v. 7.) and there were those who not only understood it so, but were the more affected with it by its being thus represented; for images to the eye commonly make deeper impressions upon the mind than words can; and for this reason sacraments are instituted to represent divine things, that we might see and believe, might see and be affected with those things; and we may expect this benefit by them, and a blessing to go along with them, while (as the prophet here) we make use only of such signs as God himself has expressly appointed, which, we must conclude, are the fittest. Note, The power of imagination, if it be rightly used, and kept under the direction of reason and faith, may be of good use to kindle and excite the affections, as it was here to Ezekiel and his attendants.

3. This whole transaction has that in it which the prophet represented as if with a good colour of reason, have hesitated at, and excepted against, and yet, in obedience to God's command, and in execution of his office, he did it according to order. (1.) It seemed childish and ludicrous, and beneath his gravity, and there were those that would ridicule him for it; but he knew the divine appointment put honour enough upon that which otherwise seemed mean, to save his reputation in the doing of it. (2.) It was tedious and tiresome to do as he did; but our ease and credit must be sacrificed to our duty, and we must never call God's service in any instance of it a hard service. (3.) It could not but be very much against the grain with him to appear thus against Jerusalem, the city of God, the holy city, to act as an enemy against a place to which he was so good a friend; but he is a prophet, and must follow his instructions, not his affections, and must bluntly preach the ruin of a sinful place, though its welfare is what he passionately desires, and earnestly prays for.

4. All this that the prophet sets before the children of his people concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, is designed to bring them to repentance, by showing them sin, the provoking cause of this destruction, sin, the ruin of that once flourishing city, and those all that may be affected to make them hate sin, and turn from it; while he thus in lively colours describes the calamity with a great deal of pain and unseasonableness to himself, he is bearing the indignity of Israel and Judah; "Look here," (says he,) "and see what work sin makes, what an evil and bitter thing it is to depart from God; this comes of sin, your sin and the sin of your mother; let that therefore be the daily matter of your sorrow and shame now in your captivity, that you may make your peace with God, and he may return in mercy to you." But observe, It is a day of punishment for a year of sin; I have appointed thee each day for a year. The siege is a calamity of three hundred and ninety days, in which God reckons for the indignity of three hundred and ninety years; justly therefore do they acknowledge that God had punished them less than their indignity deserved, Ezra ix. 13. But let insufficient sinners know that though now God is long-suffering toward them, in the other world there is an everlasting punishment. When God laid bands upon the prophet, it was to show them how they were bound with the cords of their own transgression, (Lam. i. 14.) and therefore they were never made more like the children of a most rebellious. But we may well think of the prophet's case with compassion, when God laid upon him the bands of duty, as he does on all his ministers, 1 Cor. ix. 16. Necessity is laid upon me, and we unto me if I preach not the gospel; and yet men laid upon him bands of restraint; (ch. iii. 25.) but under both it is satisfaction enough that they are serving the interests of God's kingdom among men.

9. Take thou also unto thee wheat, and barley, and beans, and lentiles, and millet, and fitches, and put them in one vessel, and make thee bread thereof according to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon thy side; three hundred and ninety days, shalt thou eat thereof. 10. And thy meat which thou shalt eat shall be by weight, twenty shekels a-day: from time to time shalt thou eat it. 11. Thou shalt drink also water by measure, the sixth part of a hin: from time to time shalt thou drink. 12. And thou shalt eat it as barley-cakes, and thou shalt bake it with dung that cometh out of man, in their sight. 13. And the Lord said, Even thus shall the children of Israel eat their defiled bread among the Gentiles, whither I will drive them. 14. Then said I, Ah Lord God! behold, my soul hath not been polluted; for from my youth up, even till now, have I not eaten of that which dieth of itself, or is torn in pieces; neither came there abominable flesh into my mouth. 15. Then he said unto me, Lo, I have given thee cow's dung for man's dung, and thou shalt prepare thy bread therewith. 16. Moreover he said unto me, Son of man, behold, I will break the staff of bread in Jerusalem; and they shall eat bread by weight, and with care; and they shall drink water by measure, and with astonishment: 17. That they may want bread and water, and be astonishèd one with another, and consume away for their iniquity.

The best exposition of this part of Ezekiel's prediction of Jerusalem's desolation is Jeremiah's lamentation of it, Liii. 4, 5, 8c. and ch. v. 10. where he pathetically describes the terrible famine that was in Jerusalem during the siege, and the sad effects of it. The prophet here, to affect the people with the foresight of it, must confine himself for 390 days to coarse fare and short commons, and that ill-dressed, for they should want both food and fuel.

I. His meat, for the quality of it, was to be of the worst bread, made of but little wheat and barley, and the rest of beans, and lentiles, and millet, and fitches, such as we feed horses or faint hogs with, and this is mixed, as millock, or as that in the beggar's bag, that has a dish full of one sort of corn at one house, and of another at another's house; of such corn as this must the prophet's bread be made, while he underwent the fatigue of lying on his side, and needed something better to support him, ver. 9. Note, It is our wisdom not to be too fond of dainties and pleasant bread, because we know not what hard meat we may be tied to, nay, and may be glad of, because it is more wholesome, than what we desire, and therefore must not be despised or wasted, nor must those that use it be looked upon with disdain, because we know not what may be our own lot.

II. For the quantity of it, it was to be of the least that a man could keep alive with; to signify that the burden should be reduced to short commons and want, and should hold out till all the bread in the city was spent, Jer. xxxvii. 21. The prophet must eat but twenty shekels weight of bread a day, (ver. 10.) that was about one ounces; and he must drink but the sixth part of a hin of water, that was half a pint, about eight ounces, ver. 11. The sinit of the Egyptian diet is fourteen ounces of meat, and sixteen of drink. The prophet in Babylon had bread enough and to spare, and was by the river-side, where there was plenty of water; and yet, that he might confirm his own prediction, and be a sign to the children of Israel, God obliges him to live thus sparingly, and he submits to it. Note, God's servants must learn to endure hardness, and to deny themselves the use of lawful delights, when they may thereby serve the glory of God, evidence the sincerity of their faith, and express their sympathy with their brethren in affliction. The body must be kept under, and brought into subjection; nature is content with a little, grace with less, but lust with nothing. It is good to stint ourselves of choice, that we may the better enjoy it if we have it. It would be well were we thus learns necessity. And in times of public distress and calamity, it ill becomes us to make much of ourselves, as those that drank wine in bowls, and were not grieved for the affliction of Joseph, Amos vi. 4-6.

III. For the dressing of it, he must bake it with man's dung, (ver. 12.) that must be dried, and serve for fuel to heat his oven with; the thought of it would almost turn one's stomach; yet the coarse bread, thus baked, he must eat as barley-cakes, as freely as if it were the same bread he had been used to. This nauseous piece of cookery he must exercise publicly in their sight, that they might be the more affected with the calamity approaching, which was signified by it; that in the extremity of the famine they should not only have coarse, but ill-dressed, and battered, and defiled, and beastly food to eat, but that of the loathsome kind; for he was a large and honourable man, and must be covered with earth, that God might see no unclean thing in their camp, Deut. xxviii. 13, 14. And must he go gather a thing so offensive, and use it in the dressing of his meat in the sight of the people? "Ah Lord God," says he, "behold, my soul hath not been polluted, and I am afraid lest by this it be polluted." Note, The pollution of the soul by sin is what good people dread more than any thing else; and yet sometimes tender consciences fear it without cause, and perplex themselves with scruples about lawful things, as the prophet here, who had not yet learned that it is not that which goes into the mouth that defiles the man, Matt. xv. 11. But observe, He does not plead, "Lord, from my youth I have been brought up delicately, and never used to any thing but what was clean and nice;" (and there were those who were so brought up, who in the siege of Jerusalem did embrace dunghills, Lam. iv. 5.) but that he had been brought up conscientiously, and had never eaten any thing that was forbidden by the law, that died of itself, or was torn in pieces; "And therefore, Lord, do not put this upon me now." Thus Peter pleaded, (Acts xiv. 13.) Lord, I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean. Note, It will be comfortable to us, when we are reduced to hardships, if our hearts can witness for us that we have always been careful to abstain from sin, even from little sins, and the appearances of evil. Whatever God commands us, we may be sure is good; but if we be put upon any thing that he approved not, and are forced to do it against our will, from this consideration, that heither we have preserved our purity—and shall we lose it now? Now, because Ezekiel with a manifest tenderness of conscience made this scruple, God dispensed with him in this manner. Note, Those who have power in their hands, should not be rigorous in pressing their commands upon those that are dissatisfied concerning them, yea, though their dissatisfactions be groundless, or arising from education and long usage, but should recurce from them rather than give or offend the weak, or put a stumbling-block before them; in conformity to the example of God's condescension to Ezekiel, though we are sure his authority is incomprehensible, and all his commands wise and good. God allowed Ezekiel to use care's dunge instead of man's dung, v. 15. This is an implied reflection upon man, as intimating that, he being polluted with sin, his filthiness is more nauseous and odious than that of any other creature. How much more abominable and filthy is man! Job xv. 16.

Now this sign is particularly explained here; it signifies:

1. That those who remained in Jerusalem should be brought to extreme misery for want of necessary food; all supplies being cut off by the besiegers, the city would soon find a want of the country, for the king himself is served of the field, and thus the staff of bread would be broken in Jerusalem, v. 16. God would not only take away from the bread its power to nourish, so that they should eat, and not be satisfied, (Lev. xxvi. 26.) but would take away the bread itself, Isa. iii. 1. So that what little remained should be eaten by weight, so much a-day, so much a-head, that they might have no equal share, and might make it last as long as possible. But to what purpose when they could not make it last always: and the besieged must be tired out before the besiegers? They shall eat and drink with care, to make it go as far as might be, and with astonishment, which is more than hunger, they shall be afraid, so it may not last, and be a way to look for a recruit. They shall be astonished one with another; whereas it was to be some alleviation of a calamity to have others share with us in it, (Solamen miseris socias habuisse doloris,) and some case to the spirit to complain of the burden, it should be an aggravation of the misery, that it was universal, and their complaining to one another should but make them all the more uneasy, and increase the astonishments; and the event shall be as bad as their fears; they cannot make it worse than it is, for they shall consume away for their iniquity; multitudes of them shall die of famine, a lingering death, worse than that by the sword; (Lam. iv. 9.) they shall die so as to feel themselves die, and it is sin that brings all this misery upon them; They shall consume away for their iniquity; and shall die by the sword. They shall continue hardened and impenitent, and shall die in their sins, which is more miserable than to die on a dunghill.

Now, (1.) Let us see here what woful work sin makes with a people, and acknowledge the righteous-ness of God herein. Time was when Jerusalem was filled with the finest of the wheat; (Ps. cxlvii. 14.) but now it would be glad of the corner, and could have it, in abundance for bread, as it was one of Jerusalem's mercies, so it became one of her sins, Ezek. xvi. 49. The plenty was abused to luxury and excess, which was therefore thus justly punished with famine. It is a righteous thing with God to deprive us of those enjoyments which we have made the food and fuel of our lusts.

(2.) Let us see what reason we have to bless God for the fruits of the earth, but for the freedom of commerce, that the husbandman can have money for his bread, and the tradesman bread for his money; that there is abundance not only in the field, but in the market, that those who live in cities and great towns, though they sow not, neither do they reap, are yet fed from day to day with bread.

2. It signifies, that those who were carried into captivity should be forced to eat their defiled bread among the Gentiles, (v. 13.) to eat meat made up by Gentile hands, otherwise than according to the law of the Jewish church, which they were always taught to call defiled, and which they would eat as great an aversion to as a man would have to bread prepared with dung, that is, (as perhaps it may be understood,) kneaded and moulded with dung. Daniel and his fellows confined themselves to pulse and water, rather than they would eat the portion of the king's meat assigned them, because they opposed it; (Dan. i. 8.) or, they should be forced to eat defiled meat, such as their oppressors would allow them in their slavery, and such as formerly they would have scorned to touch. Because they served not God with cheerful-ness in the abundance of all things, God will make them serve their enemies in the want of all things.

CHAP. V.

In this chapter we have a further, and no less terrible, denunciation of the judgments of God, which were coming with all speed and force upon the Jewish nation, which would utterly ruin it; for when God judges he will overcome. This destruction of Judah and Jerusalem is here, 1. Represented by a sign, the cutting, and burning, and scattering of hair, v. 1-5. II. That sign is expounded, and applied to Jerusalem. 1. Sin is charged upon Jerusalem as the cause of this destruction; contempt of God's law, (v. 5-7.) and profanation of his sanctuary, v. 11. 2. Wrath is threatened, great wrath, (v. 1-6.) a variety of miseries, (v. 12, 16, 17.) such as should be their reproach and ruin, v. 13, 15.

1. And thou, son of man, take thee a sharp knife, take thee a barber's razor, and cause it to pass upon thy head, and upon thy beard; then take thee balances to weigh, and divide the hair. 2. Thou shalt burn with fire a third part in the midst of the city, when the days of the siege are fulfilled; and thou shalt take a third part, and smite about it with a knife; and a third part thou shalt scatter in the wind: and I will draw out a sword after them. 3. Thou shalt also take thereof a few in number, and bind them in thy skirts. 4. Then take of them again, and cast them into the midst of the fire, and burn them in the fire: for thereof shall a fire come forth into all the house of Israel.

We have here the sign by which the utter destruc- tion of Jerusalem is set forth; and here, as before, the prophet is himself the sign, that the people might see how much he affected himself with, and interested himself in, the case of Jerusalem, and how near it lay to his heart, even then when he foresaw the desolation as the judgment of God, and about it as to take what was done to it as done to himself, so far was he from desiring the woful day.

1. He must shave off the hair of his head and beard, (v. 1.) which signified God's utter rejecting and abandoning of that people, as a useless, worthless generation, such as could well be spared, nay, such as it would be his honour to part with; and yet, in a sense, it was confessed that it was in the hands of those who cut them off, were this sharp knife; and this razor, that were proper to be made use of, and would do execution. Jerusalem had been the head, but, being degenerated, was become as the hair, which, when it grows thick and long, is but a burden which a man wishes to get clean of, as God did the sinners in Zion; And I will make me of mine own ad-

2. Ezekiel must not cut off that hair only which was superfluous, but cut it all off, denoting the full end that God would make of Jerusalem. The hair that would not be trimmed and kept neat and clean by the admonitions of the prophets, must be all shaven off by an utter destruction. Those will be ruined that will not be reformed.

2. He must weigh the hair, and divide it into three parts. This intimates the very exact directing of God's judgments according to equity, (by him men and their actions are weighed in the unerring balance of truth and righteousness,) and the proportion which divine justice observes in punishing some by one judgment and others by another; one way or other, they shall all be met with. Some make the shaving of the hair to denote the loss of their liberty and of their honour: it was looked upon as a mark of ignominy, as in the disgrace Haman put on David's ambassadors; he denotes also the loss of their name, for they shall carry their heads upon occasion of great mourning; I may add the loss of their Nazarite, for the shaving of the head was a period to that vow, (Num. vi. 18.) and Jerusalem was now no longer looked upon as a holy city.

3. He must dispose of the hair so that it might all be destroyed or dispersed, v. 2. (1.) One third part must be burnt in the midst of the city, denoting the multitudes that should perish by famine and pestilence, and perhaps many in the congregation of the city, when the days of the siege were fulfilled; or the laying of that glorious city in ashes might well be looked upon as a third part of the destruction threatened. (2.) Another third part was to be cut in pieces with a knife, representing the scattering of some one way and some another, like loose hairs in the wind. But lest they should think that this dispersion would be their escape, God adds, I will draw out a sword after them, so that, wherever they go, evil shall pursue them. Note, God has variety of judgments wherewith to accomplish the destruction of a sinful people, and to make an end when begins.

4. He must preserve a small quantity of the third sort that were to be scattered in the wind, and bind them in his skirts, as one would bind that which he is very mindful and careful of, v. 3. This signified perhaps that little handful of people which were left under the government of Gedaliah, who, it was hoped, would keep possession of the land where the body of the people was carried into captivity. Thus God would have done well for them if they would have done well for themselves. But these few that were reserved, must be taken, and cast into the fire, v. 4. When Gedaliah and his friends were slain, the people that put themselves under his protection were scattered, some gone into Egypt, others carried off by the Chaldeans, and in short the land was totally cleared of them; then this was fulfilled, for out of those combustions a fire came forth into all the house of Israel, who, as soon as the fire, kindled and consumed one another. Note, It is ill with a people when those are taken away in wrath that seemed to be marked for monuments of mercy, for then there is no remnant or escaping, none shut up or left.

5. Thus saith the Lord God, This is Jerusalem: I have set it in the midst of the nations and countries that are round about her. And she hath changed my judgments into wickedness more than the nations, and my statutes more than the countries that are round about her; for they have refused my judgments and my statutes, they have not walked in them. They therefore thus saith the Lord God, Because ye multiplied more than the nations that are round about you, and have not walked in my statutes, neither have kept my judgments, neither have done according to the judgments of the nations that are round about you; 8. Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I, even I, saith the Lord, and will execute judgments in the midst of thee, in the sight of the nations. And I will do in thee that which I have not done, and whereunto I will not do any more the like; because of all thine abominations. Therefore the fathers shall eat the sons in the midst of thee, and the sons shall eat their fathers; and I will execute judgments in thee, and the whole remnant of thee will I scatter into all the winds. 11. Wherefore, as I live, saith the Lord God, Surely, because thou hast defiled my sanctuary with all thy detestable things, and with all thine abominations, therefore will I also diminish thee; neither shalt thou have eye spare, neither will I have any pity. 12. A third part of thee shall die with the pestilence, and with famine shall they be consumed in the midst of thee; and a third part shall fall by the sword round about thee; and I will scatter a third part into all the winds; and I will draw out a sword after them. 13. Thus shall mine anger be accomplished, and I will cause my fury to rest upon them, and I will be comforted: and they shall know that I the Lord have spoken it in my zeal, when I have accomplished my fury in them. 14. Moreover, I will make thee waste, and a reproach among the nations that are round about thee, in the sight of all that pass by. 15. So it shall be a reproach and a taunt, an instruction and an astonishment, unto the nations that are round about thee, when I shall execute judgments in thee, in anger and in fury, and in furious rebukes. I the Lord have spoken it. 16. When I shall send upon them the evil arrows of famine, which shall be for their destruction, and which I will send to destroy you: and I will increase the famine upon you, and will break your staff of bread. 17. So will I send upon you famine, and evil beasts, and they shall bereave thee; and pestilence and blood shall pass through thee; and I will bring the sword upon thee. I the Lord have spoken it.

We have here the explanation of the foregoing similitude: This is Jerusalem. Thus it is used in scripture-language to give the name of the thing signified to the sign; as when Christ said, This is my body. The prophet's head was not to be shaved, signified Jerusalem, which by the judgments of God was now to be stripped of all its ornaments, to be emptied of all its inhabitants, and to be naked and bare to be invaded with strange nations, says Isa. xlii. 2. The head of one that was a priest, a prophet, a holy person, was fittest to represent Jerusalem the holy city. Now the contents of these verses are much the same with what we have often met with, and still shall, in the writings of the prophets. Here we have,

1. The privileges Jerusalem was honoured with, (v. 3.) I have set it in the midst of the nations one country, and over it; and shall have dominion over her, and those, famous nations, and very considerable. Jerusalem was not situated in a remote, obscure corner of the world, far from neighbours, but in the midst of kingdoms that were populous, polite, and civilized, famed for learning, arts, and sciences, and which then made the greatest figure in the world. But there seems to be more in it than this. 1. Jerusalem was set in the midst of the nations, and of all the nations around her; it was set in the midst of them as excelling them all; this holy mountain was exalted above all the hills, Isa. ii. 2. Why leap ye, ye high hills? This is the hill which God desires to dwell in. Ps. lxxxvii. 16. Jerusalem was a city upon a hill, conspicuous and illustrious, and which all the neighbouring nations had an eye upon, so the prophet describes it, Jer. ii. 1. Jerusalem was designed to have a good influence upon the nations and countries round about, as it was set in the midst of them as a candle upon a candlestick, to spread the light of divine revelation, which she was blessed with, to all the dark corners of the neighbouring nations, that from them it might diffuse itself further, even to the ends of the earth. Jerusalem was set in the midst of the nations, to be as the heart in the body to invigorate this dead world with a divine life, as well as to enlighten this dark world with a divine light, to be an example of every thing that was good. The nations that observed what excellent statutes and judgments they had, concluded them to be a wise and understanding people, (Deut. iv. 6.) fit to be consulted as an oracle, as they were in Solomon's time, 1 Kings iv. 34. And Solomon described this city, as it was built for a light of the Gentiles to shine upon and to be a right use of it, what a blessing had Jerusalem been to all the nations about! But, failing to be so, the accomplishment of this intention was reserved for its latter days, when out of Zion went forth the gospel-law, and the word of the Lord Jesus from Jerusalem, and there repentance and remission began to be preached, and thence the preachers of the same went forth into all the world. And when that was done, Jerusalem was levelled with the ground. Note. When places and persons are made great, it is with design that they may do good, and that those about them may be the better for them; that their light may shine before men.

II. The provocations Jerusalem was guilty of. A very high charge is here drawn up against that city, and proved beyond contradiction sufficient to justify God in taking away its privileges, and putting it under military execution.

1. She had not walked in God's statutes, nor kept his judgments; (v. 7.) may, they had refused his judgments and his statutes, (v. 6.) they did not do their duty, may they would not; they sinned that they would not; those statutes and judgments which their neighbours admired, they despised; with their faces, which were turned before their faces, they cast behind their back. Note. A contempt of the word and law of God opens a door to all manner of iniquity. God's statutes are the terms on which he deals with men; they that refuse his terms, cannot expect his favours.

2. She had changed God's judgments into wickedness, (v. 6.) a very high expression of their profaneness, that they had not only broken God's laws, but had so perverted and abused them, that they had made them the excusals and colour of their wickedness; they introduced those inapplicable customs and usages of the heathen, instead of God's institutions; this was changing the truth of God into a lie, (Rom. i. 25.) and the glory of God into shame, Ps. iv. 2. Note. Those that have been well educated, if they live ill, put the highest affront imaginable upon God, as if he were the Patron of sin, and his judgments are mereturned into wickedness.

3. She had been worse than the surrounding nations, to whom she should have set a good example; She has changed my judgments, by idolatries and false worship, more than the nations, (v. 6.) and she has multiplied idols and altars, gods and temples, multiplied those things the unity of which was their praise, more than the nations that were round about. Israel's God is one, and his name one, his altar one; but they, not content with this one God, multiplied their gods to that degree, that according to the number of their cities so were their gods, and their altars as heaps in the furrows of the field, so that they exceeded all their neighbours in having gods many and lords many. They corrupted revealed religion more than the Gentiles had corrupted natural religion. Note. If those who have made a profession of religion, and have had a particular education, apostatize from it, they are commonly more profane and vicious than those who never made any profession; they have seven other spirits more wicked.

4. She had not done according to the judgments of the nations; (v. 7.) they had not acted toward their God, though he is the only true God, as the pros and idlers toward their gods, who were false gods; they were not so observant of him, nor so constant to him. Has a nation changed their gods, or slighted them, so as they have? Jer. ii. 11. Or, it may refer to their morals; instead of reforming their neighbours, they came short of them; and many who were of the uncircumcision kept the righteousness of the law better than those who were circumcised, Rom. iv. 25. Those who had the light of nature, and did not act according to the judgments of many who had only the light of nature. Note. Those are who are called Christians, who in the great day be condemned by the better tempers and better lives of sober heathens.

5. The particular crime charged upon Jerusalem is, profaning the holy things, which she had been both intrusted and honoured with; (v. 11.) Thou hast defiled my sanctuary with all thy detestable things, with thine idols and idolatries. The images of their pretended deities, and the groves erected in honour of them, were brought into the temple; and the ceremonies used by idolaters were brought into the worship of God; thus every thing that is sacred was polluted. Note. Idolats are detestable things anywhere, but more especially so in the sanctuary.

III. The punishments that Jerusalem should fall under for these provocations: Shall not God visit for these things? No doubt he shall. The manner of the sentence here passed upon Jerusalem is very dreadful, and the manner of expression makes it yet more so; the judgments are various and the threatenings are successively dilated, so that one may say well, Who is able to stand in God's sight when once he is angry?

1. God will take this work of punishing Jerusalem into his own hands; and who knows the power of his anger, and what a fearful thing it is to fall into his hands! Observe what a strong emphasis is laid upon it, (v. 8.) I even, I am against thee. God had been for Jerusalem, to defend and save it; but miserable is its case when he is turned to be its Enemy, and fights against it. If God be against us, the whole creation is at war with us, and nothing can be for us so as to stand us in any stead; *you think it is only the Chaldean army that is against you, but they are God's hand, or rather the staff in his hand; it is I, even I, that am against thee; not only to speak against thee by prophets, but to act against thee by providence. I will execute judgments in thee, (v. 10.) in the midst of thee, (v. 11.) and round about thee, even in the heart of the city; not only in the borders, and in the bowels of the country." Note, Those who will not observe the judgments of God's mouth, shall not escape the judgments of his hand; and God's judgments, when they come with commission, will penetrate into the midst of a people, will enter into the soul, into the bowels like water, and like oil into the bones; I will execute judgments. Note, God himself undertakes to execute his own judgments, according to the true and full intent of them; whatever are the instruments, he is the principal Agent.

2. These punishments shall come from his displeasure. As to the body of the people, it shall not be a correction in love, but he will execute judgments in anger, and in fury, and in furious retribution; (v. 13.) and upon the earth, and upon the bowels of the earth, (v. 14.) and upon the daughters of any nation, (v. 15.) and upon the inmost parts of the city; not only in the borders, and in the bowels of the country. Note, (v. 13.) "Mine anger, which has long been withheld, shall now be accomplished, and I will cause my fury to rest upon them; it shall not only light upon them, but lie upon them, and fill them as vessels of wrath fitted by their own wickedness to destruction; and, justice being hereby glorified, I will be comforted, I will be entirely satisfied in what I have done. As I was exalted with much wrath by the sins of men, he is said to be grieved, (Ps. xev. 10.) so when he is honoured by their destruction, he is said to be comforted. The struggle between mercy and judgment is over, and in this case judgment triumphs, triumphs indeed; for mercy that has been so long abused, is now silent, and gives up the cause, has not a word more to say on the behalf of such an ungrateful, incorrigible people; Mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have any pity, v. 11. Divine compassion defers the punishment, or mitigates it, or supports under it, or shortens it, but here is judgment without mercy, wrath without any mixture or alloy of pity. These expressions are thus sharpened and heightened, perhaps with design to look further, to the vengeance of eternal fire, which shall be the destruction we read of in judgment; and that they were fit expressions of the tenor of the punishment were typical of, and particularly that of Jerusalem; for surely it is no where on this side hell that this word has its full accomplishment, Mine eye shall not spare, but I will cause my fury to rest. Note, Those who live and die impenitent, will perish for ever unpitied; there is a day coming when the Lion will not spare.

3. For the judgment shall be public and open; I will execute these judgments in the sight of the nations; (v. 8.) the judgments themselves shall be so remarkable, that all the nations far and near shall take notice of them; they shall be all the talk of that part of the world, and more for the conspicuosity of place and people, so far as they are inflicted. Note, Public sins, as they call for public reproofs, (Them that sin rebuke before all,) so, if these prevail not, they call for public judgments. He strikes them as wicked men in the open sight of others, (Joh. xxxiv. 26.) that he may maintain and vindicate the honour of his government, for (as Grotius descants upon it here) would he suffer it to be said, see what wicked things they lead one another into, but that be the worshippers of the only true God! And as the publicity of the judgments will redound to the honour of God, so it will serve, (1.) To aggravate the punishment, and to make it lie the more heavy, Jerusalem, being made waste, becomes a reproach among the nations, in the sight of all that passes by, (v. 18.) They are a reproach to the nations, and the more peculiar any have been in the destruction of Jerusalem, the greater disgrace attends their fall; and that was Jerusalem's case. The more Jerusalem had been a praise in the earth, the more it is now a reproach and a taunt, v. 15. This she was warned of as much as any thing when her glory commenced, (1 Kings ix. 8.) and this was lamented as much as any thing when it was laid in the dust, Lam. ii. 15. (2.) To teach the nations to fear before the God of Israel, when they saw what a jealous God he is, and how severely he punishes sin, even in those that are nearest to him. It shall be an instruction to the nations, v. 15. Jerusalem should have taught her neighbours the fear of God by her piety and virtue, but she not doing that, God will teach it them by her ruin; for they have reason to say, If this be done by the green tree, what shall be done in the dry? when judgment begin at the house of God, where will it end? If they be thus punished, who only had some idolaters among them, what will become of us who are all idolaters? Note, The destruction of some is designed for the instruction of others. Malefactors are publicly punished, in terrorem—that others may take warning.

4. These punishments, in the kind of them, shall be very severe and grievous. (1.) They shall be such as have no precedent or parallel. Their sins being more provoking than those of others, the judgments executed upon them should be uncommon, (v. 9.) "I will do in thee that which I have not done in thee before, though thou hast long since deserved it; any, that which I have not done in any other city. Note, God's judgments are always to be greater than that of Sodom, (Lam. iv. 6.) which was the severest of all that went before it; any, it is such as I will not do any more the like, all the circumstances taken in, to any other city, till the like come to be done again to this city, in its final overthrow by the Romans. This is a rhetorical expression of the most grievous judgments, like that character of Hezkiah, that there was none like him, before or after him. (2.) They shall be such as will force them to break the strongest bonds of natural affection to one another, which will be a just punishment of them for their wilful breaking of the bonds of their duty to God; (v. 10.) The fathers shall eat the sons, and the sons shall eat the fathers, and all the other members of the family, or all those whom they thought to be greater than that of Sodom, (Lam. iv. 6.) shall be destroyed by them, and shall be cut off by their barbarous conquerors. (3.) There shall be a complication of judgments, any one of them terrible enough, and desolating; but what then would they be when they came all together, and in perfection? Some shall be taken away by the plague; (v. 12.) the pestilence shall pass through thee, (v. 17.) sweeping all before it, as the destroying angel; others shall be consumed with famine, or shall gradually waste away as men in a consumption; (v. 12.) this is again insisted on; (v. 16.) I will send upon them the evil arrows of famine; hunger shall make them pine, and shall pierce them to the heart, as if arrows, evil arrows, poisoned darts were shot into them; God has many arrows, evil arrows, in his quiver; when some are discharged, he has still more in reserve. I will increase the famine upon you; a famine in a bereaved country may decrease, as fruits spring forth; but a famine in a besieged city will increase of course; yet God speaks of it as his act; * I will increase it, and will break your staff of bread; will take away the necessary supports of life, will disappoint all of you that which you depend upon, so that there is no remedy, but you must die of hunger. Life is fixed, it is sequestered, is thinned, so that, if it have not daily bread for its staff to lean upon, it cannot but sink, and is on gone if that staff be broken. Others shall fall by the sword round about Jerusalem, when they escape from the besiegers; it is a sword, which God will bring, v. 17. The sword of the Lord, that was used to be drawn for Jerusalem’s defence, is changed for destruction. Others are devoured by evil beasts, which will make a prey of those that fly for shelter to the deserts and mountains; they shall meet their ruin where they expected refuge, for there is no escaping the judgments of God, v. 17. And lastly, those who escape shall be scattered into all parts of the world, into all the winds, (so it is expressed, v. 10, 12.) Intimating that they should not only be dispersed, but hunted, and tossed, and driven from place to place, until they are last of mankind, and as chaff before the wind. Nay, and Cain’s curse (to be fugitives and vagabonds) is not the worst of it neither, their restless life shall be cut off by a bloody death; I will draw out a sword after them, which shall follow them wherever they go. Evil pursues sinners; and the curse shall come upon them, and overtake them.

3. The punishments will prove their ruin by degrees; they shall be diminished, (v. 11.) their strength and glory shall grow less and less; they shall be bereaved, (v. 17.) emptied of all that was their joy and confidence. God sends these judgments on purpose to destroy them, v. 16. The arrows are not sent (as those which Jonathan shot) for their direction, but for their destruction. For God will accomplish his fury upon them, (v. 13.) the day of God’s patience is over, and the ruin is remediless. Though this prophecy was to have its accomplishment now quickly, in the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, yet the executioners not being named here, but the criminal only, (This is Jerusalem,) we may well suppose that it looks further, to the final destruction of that greatness by the Romans, when God made a fall out of the Jewish nation, and caused his fury to rest upon them.

6. All this is ratified by the divine authority and veracity; I the Lord have spoken it, (v. 15.) and again, v. 17. The sentence is passed by him that is Judge of heaven and earth, whose judgment is according to truth, and the judgments of his own according to the judgments of men. If he has spoken it, who can do it, for with him nothing is impossible. He has spoken it, who will do it, for he is not a man that he should lie. He has spoken it, whom we are bound to obey and heed; whose word commands the most serious attention and submissive assent: And they shall know that I the Lord have spoken it, v. 13. There were those who thought it was in the prophet’s power to make it in his delirium; but God will make them know, by the accomplishment of it, that he has spoken it in hisNeal. Note, Sooner or later, God’s word will prove itself.

CHAP. VI.

In this chapter, we have, I. A threatening of the destruction of Israel for their idolatry, and the destruction of their idols with them, v. 1-7. II. A promise of the gracious return of a remnant of them to God, by true repentance and reformation v. 8-10. III. Directions given to the prophet and others, the Lord’s servants, to foment both the iniquities and the calamities of Israel, v. 11-14.

1. And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, 2. Son of man, set thy face toward the mountains of Israel, and prophesy against them. 3 And say, Ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord God; Thus saith the Lord God to the mountains and to the hills, to the rivers, and to the valleys, Behold, I, even I will bring a sword upon you, and I will destroy your high places; 4. And your altars shall be desolate, and your images shall be broken; and I will cast down your slain men before your idols. 5. And I will lay the dead carcases of the children of Israel before their idols; and I will scatter your bones round about your altars. 6. In all your dwelling-places the cities shall be laid waste, and the high places shall be desolate; that your altars may be laid waste and made desolate, and your idols may be broken and cease, and your images may be cut down, and your works may be abolished. 7. And the slain shall fall in the midst of you; and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

Here, 1. The prophecy is directed to the mountains of Israel, (v. 1, 2.) the prophet must set his face toward them; if he could see so far off as the land of Israel, the mountains of that land would be first and furthest seen; toward them therefore he must look, and look boldly and steadfastly, as the judge looks at the prisoner, and directs his speech to him, when he passes sentence upon him. Though the mountains of Israel be ever so high and ever so strong, he must set his face against them, as having judgments to denominate, that should shake their foundation. The mountains of Israel had been holy mountains, but now that they had polluted them with their high places, God sets his face against them, and therefore the prophet must, as some do in the pulpit, but for the whole land. The mountains are called upon to hear the word of the Lord, to shame the inhabitants that would not hear. The prophets might as soon gain attention from the mountains as from that rebellious and gain-saying people, to whom they all day long stretched out their hands in vain. Hear, O mountains, the Lord’s controversy; (Mic. vii. 1, 2.) for God’s case will have a hearing, whether we hear it or no. But from the mountains the word of the Lord echoes to the hills, to the rivers, and to the valleys; for to them also the Lord God speaks; intimating that the whole land is concerned in what is now to be delivered, and shall be witnesses against this people, that they had fair warning given them of the judgments coming, but they would not hear it. They are hereby commanded to persecute the messengers, so that God’s prophets might more safely and comfortably speak to the hills and mountains than to them.

2. That which is threatened in this prophecy, is the utter destruction of the idols and the idolaters, and both by the sword of war. God himself is commander in chief of this expedition against the mountains of Israel; it is he that says, Behold, I, even I will bring a sword upon you; (v. 3.) the sword of the Chaldeans is at God's command, goes where he sends it, comes where he brings it, and lights as he directs. In the desolations of that war,
(1.) The idols and all their appurtenances should be destroyed. The high places, which were on the tops of mountains, (v. 3.) these shall be levelled, and made desolate, (v. 6.) they shall not be beautified, shall not be frequented as they had been; the altars, on which they offered sacrifice and burnt offering to strange gods, shall be broken down; the images and idols shall be defaced, shall be broken and cease, and be cut down, and all the fine costly works about them shall be abolished, v. 4, 6. Observe here, [1.] That war makes woful desolations, which those persons, places, and things, that were esteemed most sacred, cannot escape; for the sword devours one as well as another. [2.] That God sometimes rains idolatries, even by the hands of idolaters, for such the Chaldeans themselves were; but, as if the deity were a local thing, the greatest admirers of the gods of their own country were the greatest despisers of the gods of other countries. [3.] It is just with God to make that a desolation, which we make an idol of; for he is a jealous God, and will not bear a rival. [4.] If men do not, as they ought, destruction is sure to come on them first or last; but they have time to do it. When Josiah had performed the high places, altars, and images, with the sword of justice, they set them up again; but God will now destroy them with the sword of war, and let us see who dares re-establish them.

(2.) The worshippers of idols and all their adherents should be destroyed likewise; as all their high places shall be laid waste, so shall all their dwellers, v. 6. They that profane God's dwelling-place as they had done, can expect no other than that he should abandon theirs, ch. v. 11. If any man defile the temple of God, him will God destroy, 1 Cor. iii. 17. It is here threatened, that their shame shall fall in the midst of them; (v. 7.) there shall be abundance slain, even in those places which were thought most safe, but it is added as a remarkable circumstance, that they shall fall before their idols, (v. 4.) that their dead carcases shall be laid, and their bones scattered, about their altars, v. 5. [1.] Thus their idols should be polluted, and those places profaned by the dead bodies, which they had had in veneration. If they will not defile the covering of their graven images, God will, Isa. xxix. 22. The throwing of the cast lots among the Jews was, as upon the dung-hill, to make sure that they were but dunghill deities. [2.] Thus it was intimated that they were but dead things, unfit to be rivals with the living God; for the carcases of dead men, that, like them, have eyes and see not, ears and hear not, were the fittest company for them. [3.] Thus the idols were upbraided with their inability to help, and idolaters unshunnable with the folly of trusting in them; for, it should seem, they fell by the sword of the enemy then when they were actually before their idols, imploring their aid, and putting themselves under their protection. Senacharib was slain by his sons then when he was worshiping in the house of his god. [4.] The sin might be read in this circumstance to be unprofitable worship; the souls were before the idols, to show that therefore they are slain, because they worshipped those idols: see Jer. viii. 2. Let the survivors observe it, and take warning not to worship images: let them see it, and know that God is the Lord, that the Lord he is God, and he alone.

8. Yet will I leave a remnant, that ye may have some that shall escape the sword among the nations, when ye shall be scattered through the countries. 9. And they that escape of you shall remember me among the nations, whither they shall be carried captives, because I am broken with their whorish heart, which hath departed from me, and with their eyes, which go a whoring after their idols: and they shall loathe themselves for the evils which they have committed in all their abominations.

10. And they shall know that I am the Lord, and that I have not said in vain that I would do this evil unto them.

Judgment had hitherto triumphed, but in these verses mercy rejoices against judgment: a sad end is made of this provoking people, but not a full end; the ruin seems to be universal, and yet will I leave a remnant, a little remnant, distinguished from the body of the people, a few of many; such as are left when the rest perish; and it is God that leaves them. This intimates that they deserved to have been cut off with the rest, and had been cut off if God had not left them. See Isa. i. 9. And it is God who by his grace works that in them which he has an eye to in sparing them.

It is a privilege to this remnant, saved from the ruin which the body of the nation is involved in; (v. 8.) that ye may have some who shall escape the sword. God said, (ch. v. 12.) that he would draw a sword after them who were scattered, that destruction should pursue them in their dispersions; but here is mercy remembered in the midst of that wrath, and a promise that some of the Jews of the dispersion, as they were afterward called, should escape the sword. None of those who were to fall by the sword about Jerusalem, shall escape, for they trust to Jerusalem's walls for security, and shall be made ashamed of that vain confidence; but some of them shall escape the sword among the nations, where, being deprived of all other stays, they stay themselves upon God only. They are said to have these who shall escape; for they shall be the seed of another generation, out of which Jerusalem shall flourish again.

II. It is a penitent remnant; (v. 9.) They who escape of you, shall remember me. Note, To those whom God designs for life, he will give repentance unto life: they are reprieved, and escape the sword, that they may have time to return to him. This gives God's patient, long-suffering heart, an encouragement to sinners to repent, and is an encouragement to sinners to repent. Where God designs grace to repent, he allows space to repent; yet many who have the space want the grace; many who escape the sword, do not forsake the sin, as it is promised that these shall do. This remnant, here marked for salvation, is of a type of the remnant reserved out of the body of mankind, which are made safe in the same way that these were, by being brought to repentance. Now observe here,

1. The occasion of their repentance, and that is a mixture of judgment and mercy; judgment, that they were carried captives; but mercy, that they escaped the sword in the land of their captivity; they were driven out of the land of the living, not chased out of the world, as others were, and they deserved to be. Note, The consideration of the just retributions of Providence we are under, and yet of the mercy mixed with them, should engage us to repent, that we may avail ourselves of God's grace to us in both. And true repentance shall be accepted of God, though we are brought to it by our trouble, sorrow, or suffering; such repentations often prove means of conversion, as to Manasseh.

2. The root and principle of their repentance: They shall remember me among the nations. They who forgot God in the land of their peace and prosperity, waxed fat and kicked, were brought to remember him in the land of their captivity. The prodigal son never bethought himself of his father's house till he was ready to perish for hunger in the far country. Their remembering of God was the first step they took in returning to him. Note, Those who return to God from whoring, as from an unclean spirit, when they begin to think of him whom they have sinned against, and to inquire, Where is God my Maker? Sin takes rise in forgetting God, Jer. iii. 21. Repentance takes rise from the remembrance of him, and of our obligations to him. God says, They shall remember me, that, "I will give them grace to do so;" otherwise for this they would forever forget him. This grace comes to them wherever they are, and by bringing God to their mind shall bring them to their right mind. The prodigal, when he remembered his father, remembered how he had sinned against heaven, and before him; so do these penitents.

(1.) They remember the base affront they had put upon God by their idolatries, and this is that which an ingenious repentance fastens upon, and made them see how very they were defiled to idols, and given that honour to pretended deities, the creatures of men's fancies, and the work of men's hands, which they should have given to the God of Israel. They departed from God, from his word, which they should have made their rule; from his work, which they should have made his business; their hearts departed from him. The heart, when any thing has taken possession upon it, and it will not be displaced, either bodily exercise profits nothing; the heart, which should be set upon him, and carried out toward him, when that departs from him, is as the treacherous clepeomen of a wife from her husband, or the rebellious revolt of a subject from his sovereign. Their eyes also go after their idols; they doted on them, and had great expectations from them. Their hearts followed their eyes in the choice of their gods; they must have gods that they could see, and then their eyes followed their hearts in the adoration of them. Now the malignity of this sin is, that it is spiritual whoredom; it is a whorish heart that departs from God; and they are eyes that go a whoring after their idols. Note, Idolatry is spiritual whoredom; it is the breach of a marriage contract, and of an alliance, and of the dealings upon that which is a rival with him, and the indulgence of a base lust, which deceives and defiles the soul, and is a great wrong to God in his honour.

(2.) They remember what a grief this was to him, and how he represented it. They shall remember that I am broken with their whorish heart, and their eyes that are full of this spiritual adultery; not only theyحمد at it, but grieved, as a husband is at the lewdness of a wife whom he dearly loved, grieved to that degree, that he is broken with it; it breaks his heart to think that he should be so disingenuously dealt with; he is broken as an aged father is with the unfruitful behaviour of a rebellious and disobedient son, which sinks his spirits, and makes him to stoop. Forty years long he was carried away with his generation. Ps. xcv. 10. God's measures were broken; so some; a stop was put to the current of his favours toward them, and he was even compelled to punish them. This they shall remember in the day of their repentance, and it shall affect and humble them more than any thing; not so much that their peace was broken long, but it was broken, as that God was broken by their sin. Thus they shall look up him whom they have pierced, and shall mourn, Zech. xii. 10. Note, Nothing grieves a true penitent so much as to think that his sin has been a grief to God, and to the Spirit of his grace.

3. The product and evidence of their repentance; They shall loathe themselves for the evils which they have committed in all their abominations. Thus God will give them grace to qualify them for pardon and deliverance. Though he had been broken by their whorish heart, yet he would not quite cast them off. See Isa. lxx. 17, 18. Hos. ii. 13, 14. His goodness is better than life itself, and appears in manifold ways to appear the more illustrious. Note, (1.) True penitents are sin to be an abominable thing, that abominable thing which the Lord hates, and which makes sinners, and even their services, odious to him, Jer. xiv. 4. Isa. i. 11. It defiles the sinner's own conscience, and makes him, unless he be past feeling, an abomination to himself. An idol is particularly called an abomination, Isa. xiv. 19. These gratifications which the hearts of sinners were set upon as delectable things, the hearts of penitents are turned against as detestable things. (2.) There are many evils committed in these abominations, many included in them, attendant on them, and flowing from them; many transgressions in one sin, Lev. xvi. 21. In their idolatries they were sometimes guilty of whoredom, as in the worship of Peor; and sometimes spiritual whoredom, as in their abominations; these were evils committed in their abominations. Or, it denotes the great malignity there is in sin; it is an abomination that has abundance of evil in it. (3.) Those that truly loathe sin, cannot but loathe themselves because of sin; self-hating is evermore the companion of true repentance. Penitents quarrel with themselves, and can never be reconciled to their former sins. Many things are brought to acknowledge: both the equity and the efficacy of the word of God, particularly the threatenings of the word, and to justify God in them, and in the accomplishment of them.

4. The glory that will redound to God by their repentance; (v. 10.) They shall know that I am the Lord; they shall be convinced of it by experience, and shall be ready to own it, and that I have not said in vain that I would do this evil unto them, finding that what I have said is made good, and made to work for good, and to answer a good intention, and that it was not without just provocation that they were thus threatened and thus punished. Note, (1.) One way or other, God will make sinners to know and own that he is the Lord, either by their repentance or by their ruin. (2.) All true penitents are brought to acknowledge both the equity and the efficacy of the word of God, particularly the threatenings of the word, and to justify God in them, and in the accomplishment of them.

11. Thus saith the Lord God, Smite with thy hand, and stamp with thy foot, and say, Alas, for all the evil abominations of the house of Israel! for they shall fall by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence. 12. He that is far off shall die of the pestilence; and he that is near shall fall by the sword; and he that remaineth and is besieged shall die by the famine: thus will I accomplish my fury upon them. 13. Then shall ye know that I am the Lord, when their slain men shall be among their idols round about their altars, upon every high hill, in all the tops of the mountains, and under every green tree, and under every thick oak, the place where they did offer sweet savour to all their idols. 14. So will I stretch out my hand upon them, and make the land desolate, yea, more desolate than
The wilderness toward Diblah, in all their habitations; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

The same threatenings which we had before in the foregoing chapter, and in the former part of this, are here repeated, with a direction to the prophet to lament them, that those he prophesied to might be the more affected with the foresight of them.

1. He must by his gestures in preaching express the deep sense he had both of the iniquities and of the calamities of the house of Israel; (v. 1.) Smiteth with thy hand, and stampeth with thy foot. Thus he must make it to appear that he was in earnest in what he said to them, that he firmly believed it, and laid it to heart; thus he must signify the just displeasure he had conceived at their sins, and the just dread he was under of the judgments coming upon them. Some would reject this use of these gestures, and call them auntie and ridiculous; but God bids him use them because they might help to enforce the word upon some, and give it the setting on; and those that know the worth of souls, will be content to be laughed at by the wits, so they may but edify the weak. Two things the prophet must thus lament: (1.) National sins. Also, for all the evil abominations of the house of Israel! Note, The sins of sinners are the sorrows of God's faithful servants, especially the evil abominations of the house of Israel, whose sins are more abominable, and more meet to be the sins of others. Also, What will be in the end hereof? (2.) National judgments. To punish them for these abominations, they shall fall by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence. Note, It is our duty to be affected not only with our own sins and sufferings, but with the sins and sufferings of others; and to look with compassion upon the miseries that wicked people bring upon themselves, as Christ beheld Jerusalem, and wept over it.

2. He must incalculately what he had said before concerning the destruction that was coming upon them.

(1.) They shall be run down and ruined by a variety of judgments which shall find them out, and follow them wherever they are; (v. 12.) He is fair, and thinketh himself out of danger, because out of the reach of the Chaldeans' arrows, shall find himself not out of the reach of God's arrows, which fly day and night; (Ps. xcii. 5.) he shall die of the pestilence; he that is near a place of strength, which he hopes will be to him a place of safety, shall fall by the sword, before he can retreat; he that is so cautious as not to venture out, but remains in the city, there he shall die by the famine, the saddest death of all. Thus will God accomplish his fury; do all that against them which he had purposed to do.

(2.) They shall read their sin in their punishment; for their slaying shall be among their idols, round about their altars, as was threatened before, v. 5.—7. There, where they had prostituted them out, and humour of their idols, God will lay them dead, to their own reproach, and the reproach of their idols. They lived among them and shall die among them. They had offered sweet odours to their idols, but there shall their dead carcases send forth an offensive smell, as it were to atone for that misplaced incense.

(3.) The country shall be all laid waste, as before the cities; (v. 6.) I will make the land desolate. That fruitful, pleasant, populous country, that has been as the garden of the Lord, the glory of all lands, shall be desolate, more desolate than the wilderness toward Diblah, v. 14. It is called Diblah, lathaim, (Numb. xxxiii. 46.—lviii. 22.) that great and terrible wilderness, which is described, Deut. viii. 15. wherein were fiery serpents and scorpions. The land of Canaan is at this day one of the most barren, desolate countries in the world. City and country are thus depopulated, that the altars may be laid waste, and made desolate, v. 6. Rather than their idolatrous altars shall be left standing, both town and country shall be laid in ruins. Sin is a desolating thing; therefore stand in awe, and sin not.

CHAP. VII.

In this chapter, the approaching ruin of the land of Israel is most particularly described, affecting expressions often repeated, that if possible they might be awakened by repentance to prevent it. The prophet must tell them, v. 2. That it will be a final ruin, a complete, utter destruction, which would make an end of them, a miserable end, v. 1.—6. II. That it is an approaching ruin, just at the door, v. 7.—10. III. That it is an unavoidable ruin, because they had by sin brought it upon themselves, v. 10.—13. IV. That their strength and wealth should be no fence against it, v. 16.—19. V. That the temple, which they trusted in, should itself be ruined, v. 20.—22. VI. That it should be a universal sin, the sin that brought it having been universal, v. 23.—27.

1. Moreover, the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, 2. Also, thou son of man, thus saith the Lord God unto the land of Israel, An end, the end is come upon the four corners of the land. 3. Now is the end come upon thee, and I will send mine anger upon thee, and will judge thee according to thy ways, and will recompense upon thee all these abominations. 4. And mine eye shall not spare thee, neither will I have pity: but I will recompense thy ways upon thee, and these abominations shall be in the midst of thee; and ye shall know that I am the Lord. 5. Thus saith the Lord God, An evil, an only evil, behold, is come. 6. An end is come, the end is come; it watcheth for thee; behold, it is come. 7. The morning is come unto thee, O thou that dwellest in the land: the time is come, the day of trouble is near, and not the sounding again of the mountains. 8. Now will I shortly pour out my fury upon thee, and accomplish mine anger upon thee; and I will judge thee according to thy ways, and will recompense thee for all these abominations. 9. And mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity: I will recompense thee according to thy ways, and these abominations that are in the midst of thee; and ye shall know that I am the Lord that smitest. 10. Behold the day, behold, it is come; the morning is gone forth; the rod hath blossomed; pride hath budded. 11. Violence is risen up into a rod of wickedness: none of them shall remain, nor of their multitude, nor of any of theirs; neither shall there be waiting for them. 12. The time is come, the day draweth near: let not the buyer rejoice, nor the seller mourn: for wrath is upon all the multitude thereof. 13. For the seller shall not return to that which is sold, although they were yet alive: for the vision is touching the whole multitude thereof, which shall not return; neither shall any strengthen himself in the iniquity of his life. 14. They have blown the trumpet, even to make all ready; but none goeth to the battle: for my wrath is upon all the multitude thereof. 15. The sword is without, and the pestilence in the city; be that is in the field shall die with the sword; and he that is in the city, famine and pestilence shall devour him.

We have here fair warning given of the destruction of the land of Israel, which was now hastening on apace. God, by the prophet, not only sends notice of it, but will have it incarnated in the same expressions, to show that the thing is certain, that it is near, that the prophet is himself affected with it, and desires they should be so too, but finds them deaf, or rather stupidly affected. Where the town is on fire, men do not seek for fine words and quaint expressions, in which to give an account of it, but cry about the streets, with a loud and lamentable voice, "Fire, fire." So the prophet here proclaims, An end, an end, it is come, it is come, behold, it is come. He that has ears to hear, let him hear.

13. An end is come, the end is come, (v. 2.) and again, (v. 3, 6.) Now is the end come upon thee; the end which all their wickedness had a tendency to, and which God had often told them it would come to at last, when by his prophets he had asked them, What will ye do in the end thereof? The end, which all the foregoing judgments had been working toward, as means to bring it about; their ruin shall now be completed; or, the end, that is, the period of their state, the final destruction of their nation, as the deluge was the end of all flesh, Gen. vi. 13. They had flattered themselves with hopes that they should shortly see an end of their troubles; "Yea," says God, "An end is come, but a miserable one, not the expected end," (which is promised to the pious remnant among them, Jer. xxix. 11.) "it is the end, that end which you have so often warned of; that last end, which Michtam prophesied, (Ps. civ. 13.) and which because Jerusalem remembered not, therefore she came down wonderfully," Lam. i. 9. This end was long in coming, but now it is come. Though the ruin of sinners comes slowly, it comes surely. "It is come, it watches for thee, ready to receive thee." This perhaps looks further, to the last destruction of that nation by the Romans, which that by the Chaldeans was an earnest of, and still further, to the final destruction of the world of the ungodly. The end of all things is at hand; and Jerusalem's last end was a type of the end of the world, Matt. xxiv. 3. O that we could all see that end of time and days very near, and the end of our own time and days much nearer, that we may secure a happy lot in the end of the days! Dan. xii. 13. This end comes upon us from a far country, and last it shall be full, so shall it be total; no part of the land shall escape; no, not that which lies most remote; such will be the destruction of the world be; all these things shall be dissolved; such will the destruction of sinners be; none can avoid it. O that the wickedness of the wicked might come to an end, before it bring them to an end.

2. An evil, an only evil, behold, is come, v. 5. So is an evil, an only evil, an evil of evil do in it; it is the worst of evils; but this is spoken of the evil of trouble; it is an evil, one evil; and that one shall suffice to effect and complete the ruin of the nation, there needs no more to do its business; this one shall make an utter end, affliction needs not rise up a second time, Nah. i. 9. It is an evil without precedent or parallel, an evil that stands alone, you cannot produce such another instance. It is to the imminent of evil, an only evil, it hardens their hearts, and irritates their corruptions; whereas there were those to whom it was sanctified by the grace of God, and made a means of much good; they were sent into Babylon for their good, Jer. xxiv. 5.

The wicked have the dregs of that cup to drink, which to the righteous is full of mixtures of mercy, Ps. lxvi. 8. The same affliction is to us either a means of grace, or an evil, according as we consider ourselves under it, and make use of it. But when an end, the end, is come upon the wicked world, then an evil, an only evil, comes upon it, and not till then. The sorest of temporal judgments have their allays, but the torments of the damned are an evil, an only evil.

3. The time is come, the set time, for the infliction of this only evil, and the making of this full end; for to all God's purposes there is a time, a proper time, and that prefixed, in which the purpose shall have its accomplishment; particularly the time of reckoning with wicked people, and rendering to them according to their deserts, is fixed; the day of the revelation of the righteous judgment of God; and he sees, whether we see it or no, that his day is coming. To them are here told of a day and time which they had not seen, and whereof it was not written, (v. 10.) Behold, the day, that has lingered so long, is come at last, behold, it is come. The time is come, the day draws near, the day of trouble is near, v. 7, 12. Though threatened judgments may be long deferred, yet they shall not be dropped; the time for executing them will come. Though God's patience may put them off; nothing but man's sincere repentance and reformation will put them by. The morning is come unto thee, (v. 7.) and against the day of trouble dawns, the day of destruction is already begun. The morning discovers that which was hidden; they thought their secret sins would never come to light, but now they will be brought to light. They used to try and execute malefactors in the morning, and such a morning of judgment and execution is now come, in the evening of the world, (Jer. xlix. 29.) and because Jerusalem remembered not, therefore she came down wonderfully. See how stupid these people were, that, though the day of their destruction was already begun, yet they were not aware of it, but must be thus told of it again and again! The day of trouble, real trouble, is near, and not the sounding again of the mountains, not a mere echo or report of troubles, as they were willing to think it was, nothing but a groundless surmise, as if the men that came against them were but the shadow of the mountains, (as Zebul suggested to Gaal, Judg. ix. 36.) and the intelligence they received were but an empty sound, reverberated from the mountains. No, the trouble is not a fancy, and so you will soon find.

4. All this comes from God's wrath, not alloyed, as sometimes it has been, with mixtures of mercy. If it be the judgment of God, which all these calamities flow; and this is the wormwood and the gall, in the affliction and the misery, which makes it bitter indeed; (v. 9.) I will send mine anger upon thee. Observe, God is Lord of his anger; it does not break out but when he pleases, nor fasten upon any but as he directs it, and gives it commission. The expression rises higher, (v. 8.) Aew will I shortly pour mine anger upon them, and dry up mine anger, all the purposes and all the products of it, upon thee. This wrath does not single out here and there one to be made examples, but it is upon all the multitude thereof; (v. 12, 14.) the
1. The body of the nation is become a vessel of wrath, fitted for destruction. God does sometimes in wrath remember mercy, but now he says, Mine eye shall not spare thee, neither will I have pity, (v. 4.) and again, (v. 9.) They shall have judgment without mercy, who made light of mercy when it was offered them.

6. All this is the just punishment of their sins, and is what is to be done by their own feet, brought upon themselves. This is much insisted on here, that they might be brought to justify God in all he had brought upon them. God never sends his anger but in wisdom and justice; and therefore it follows, "I will judge thee according to thy ways, v. 3. I will examine what thy ways have been, compare them with the law and then deal with thee according to the merit of them, and recom pense them to thee," v. 4. Now, by the nearest judgments God inflicts upon sinners, he does but recompense their own ways upon them; they are beaten with their own rod. And when God comes to reckon with a sinful people, he will bring every precaution to account; "I will recompense upon thee all thine abominations;" (v. 3.) and now thine iniquity shall be found to be hateful, (v. 4.) and God shall bring upon thee all thine abominations shall be in the midst of thee; (v. 4.) the secret wickedness shall now be brought to light, and that shall appear to have been in the midst of thee, which before was not suspected; and thy sin shall now become an abomination to thyself. So the abomination of iniquity will be, when it comes to be an abomination of desolation, Matt. xxiv. 15. Or, These abominations, the punishments of them, shall be in the midst of thee, they shall reach to thy heart, See Jer. iv. 18. Or, Therefore God will not spare, nor have pity, because even then when he is recompressing their ways upon them, yet in their distress they trespassed yet more; their abominations are still in the midst of them, indulge and harboured in their hearts. It is repeated again, (v. 6, 8.) I will judge thee, I will recompense thee.

Two sins are particularly specified as provoking God to bring these judgments upon them; pride, and oppression. (1.) God will humble them by his judgments, for they have magnified themselves. The rod of affliction has blossomed, but it was pride that budded, v. 10. What buds in sin, will blossom in some judgment or other. The pride of Judah and Jerusalem appeared as high as the degrees of men, as buds upon the tree in spring. (2.) Their enemies shall deal hardly with them, for they have dealt hardly with one another; (v. 11.) Violence is risen up into a rod of wickedness; their injuriousness to one another is protected and patronized by the power of the magistrate. The rod of government was become a rod of wickedness; to such a degree of impudence was violence risen up, saw the place of judgment, that wickedness was there, Ezek. iii. 16. Isa. v. 7. Whatever are the fruits of God's judgments, it is certain that our sins is the root of them.

6. There is no escape from these judgments, nor fence against them, for they shall be universal, and shall bear down all before them, without remedy. 1. The earth and the heavens shall be de- scended triumphantly, both in town and in country, both within the city and without it, v. 15. Men shall be safe no where, for he that is in the field shall die by the sword, every field shall be to them a field of battle; and he that is in the city, though it be a holy city, yet it shall not be his protection, but famine and pesti lence shall devour him. Sin had abounded both in city and in country, and therefore the vengeance of God shall abound both in city and country. in the city and the country both, and therefore the vengeance of God shall abound both in city and country. in the city and the country both, and therefore the vengeance of God shall abound both in city and country.

2. None of those that are marked for death shall escape; there shall none of them remain; none of these proud oppressors that did violence to their poor neighbours with the rod of wickedness, none of them shall be left, but they shall be all swept away by the desolation that is coming; (v. 11.) None of their multitude, of the rabble, whom they set on to do mischief, and to confound them in doing it; to see them all destroyed, not only on the destruction of any; none of them shall remain, nor any of their; their families shall all be destroyed, and neither rest nor branch left them; this multitude, this mob, divine vengeance will in a particular manner lasten upon; for wrath is upon all the multitude thereof; (v. 12.) And the vision was touching the whole multitude thereof; (v. 13.) the bulk of the sellemen; the people. The judgments coming shall carry them away by wholesale, and they shall neither secure themselves nor their masters, whose creatures and tools they were. God's judgments, when they come with mission, cannot be overpowered by multitudes. Though hand join in hand, yet shall not the wicked go unpunished.

3. Those that fall shall not be lamented; (v. 11.) There shall be no mourning for them, for there shall be none left to bewail them, but such as are hastening pace after them. And the times shall be so bad, that men shall rather congratulate than lament the death of their friends, as reckoning those happy that are taken away from seeing these desolations, and sharing in them, Jer. xvi. 4, 5.

4. (1.) They shall not be able to make any resistance. The decree is gone forth, and the vision concerning them shall not return, v. 13. God will not recall it, and they cannot defeat it; and therefore it shall not return to infect—without having accomplished any thing, but shall accomplish that for which it sends it. God's word will take place, and then, (1.) Particular persons cannot make their part good against God; no man shall strengthen himself in the iniquity of his life; it will be to no purpose for sinners to set God and his judgments at defiance as they used to do; none ever hardened his heart against God, and prospered. Those that strengthen themselves in their wickedness, will be found not only to weaken but to ruin themselves, Ps. liii. 7. [2.] The multitude cannot resist the torrent of these judgments, nor make head against them; (v. 14.) These are God's soldiers, they call their soldiers together, and to animate and encourage those whom they have got together, and thus they think to make all ready; but all in vain, none enlist themselves, and those that do have not courage to face the enemy. Note, If God be against us, none can be for us, to do us any service.

5. They shall have no hope of the return of their prosperity, with which to support themselves in their adversity; they shall have given up all for gone; and therefore, "Let not the buyer rejoice that he is increasing his estate, and is become a purchaser; nor let the seller mourn that he is lessening his estate, and is become a bankrupt," v. 12. See the vanity of the things of this world, and how worthless they are—that in a time of trouble, when they have no value at all, they are the means to bring the least account of them. They that have sold are the more easy, having the less to lose; and they that have bought have but increased their own cares and fears. Because the fashion of this world passes away, let those that buy be as though they possessed not, because they know not how soon they may be despoised, 1 Cor. vii. 28. It is added, (v. 13.) They that have sold themselves in the days of jubile, to that which is sold, according to the law, though he should escape the sword and pestilence, and live till that year comes; for no inheritances shall be enjoyed here, till the seventy years be accomplished, and then men shall return to their possessions, shall claim and have their own again." In the belief of which, Jeremiah about this time, bought his uncle's field, yet, according to the charge, the buyer did not re-price, but complain, Jer. xxxvii. 25.

Lastly, God will be glorified in all. "Ye shall know that I am the Lord, (v. 4.) that I am the Lord that smiteth, v. 9. You look at second causes, and think it is Nebuchadnezzar that smites you, but you shall be made to know he is but the staff, it is the hand of the Lord that smiteth you; and who knows the weight of his hand?" Those who would not know it was the Lord that did them good, shall be made to know it is the Lord that smiteth them; for, one way or other, he will be owned.
